And just as in war there is no form of treason more clear than the treachery of giving aid and comfort to the enemy, so a man can be sure in the presence of any of these problems that the course which will give aid and comfort is sure to be the course he ought not to follow. And that is why I know that no man ought to be allowed to divide the Presbyterian Church to-day and no more schisms should be brought into any Christian community. What pleases the enemy better to-day than to see our mass broken in fragments and against all the opposition and antagonism that he brings to bear against us, the Christian Church unable to bring to operate against him the overwhelming, crushing mass of all its resources and power?

When one turns away from the task that we are set to accomplish in the world, is not the lesson of which I am speaking made more clear and convincing still? I heard two wise men analyzing the great need of our time. One was a young college president from one of the western States, and one of the ablest of our younger educational leaders. He said there were three great needs in the nation. One was the Christian conception of God as the basis of all our ideals. A second was a discernment of the presence of God; and the third was a courageous acceptance of these two as the law of life and progress. The other man was telling us about the three great problems concerning the whole Christian life. He said we have three great tasks to-day. First, the mobilizing of our forces, secondly the deepening of their spiritual efficiency. He spoke of old Dr. John Clifford, who was consecrating the last years of his life to leading such a crusade as used to be identified with the name of Dr. Henry Clay Trumbull, the passing beyond the great machinery of the programs of the organized Church and trying to awaken individual Christians to the old passion of personal and individual evangelism. One of the wisest statesmen of the Church was saying to-day the great central need of British Christianity is laying aside all other tasks to find again the central elementary quality. He said the third great problem was to find men courageous enough to accept and apply all the social implications of Christianity. There are many sermons in those quotations from those two men who sought in these broad general terms to characterize the great problems we are confronting now. You cannot segregate problems like those and break them up in sections and say that this section belongs to this Christian denomination and that section to another. There are great common tasks that will go unassailed and unachieved so long as we break them up into fractions and array ourselves against them in divided forces, and until we find a way to bring the whole mass to bear on this great common and indivisible responsibility.

I can analyze the thing more accurately than these two men did. We are facing here in America the most colossal problem of religious education that any nation awake to its problems ever was confronted with. Dr. Athearn has taught us all what the magnitude and difficulty and appealing emergence of that problem is. No denomination is dealing adequately with the religious education of its own young people, and no single religious denomination ever will deal adequately with the religious education of its young people, not even our Lutheran friends, cleanly as they have organized their whole system to deal with this, and that simply for the reason that it can never be dealt with in that way. You cannot isolate young life in these groups. They are indivisibly interwoven. Great tides of common influence are bearing down upon them all. There is no way of dealing with the problem of religious education in this land, unless we find some method by which we can attack that problem with all our forces massed. Take this issue of race. What is it? It is simply the tainting of life by a class division, by group separation. The color element, language element, and all other elements are simply secondary. Fundamentally it is nothing but group alienation. Can you deal with that by the remedy of group alienation? If we deal fundamentally with that issue at all, we must realize that this branch of the Christian Church alone cannot deal with it, neither can that branch. It is one colossal indistinguishable question that we never can deal with until we find a way of massing the men and the separate resources of our whole common evangelical Christianity against one common and indissoluble task. Take the problem of our world relationship. Any Christian denomination stultifies itself that tries to deal with great national issues involving the whole honor and integrity of national spirit, all by itself. No group can ever cope with this. We have to find a way to bring the great central, common Christian ideals against them. No secular formulas will solve them. These end in some kind of taint and poison. You are not going to solve any human problem by any formula like "100 per cent American." There was a merchant who put up a sign "I am 200 per cent American. I hate everybody." We shall only condemn ourselves to impotence and helplessness. Or take this problem of bringing all life under the lordship of Christ. How many of our contemporary issues we would pass by if we could realize that after all that is our only problem. People debate whether this, that or the other thing is the business of the Christian Church, whether this, that or the other area of human life may be entered by the Christian Church. We answer, "How great a Lord is Christ?" Is there any area of human life of which He is not to be Lord? How ample is the witness of the Christian Church? Is there any element of the lordship of Christ that is alien to the witness of the Christian Church? You cannot take those problems and make out of them definite issues for any one branch of the Christian Church to set itself to.

There are great common tasks that we must approach together. Personally I believe that even this simplest of all, which we think any Christian can deal with just by himself, the task of making Jesus Christ known to his fellow men—can he ever do that in any efficient way, save as we altogether take up that problem? In any American community an attempt to bring Christ home to human life is a travesty so long as only a single group of Christians are awake to the responsibility of it. That is a real responsibility of every Christian, of every name, and he bears it equally with every other, and we never shall convince the world that we believe adequately in Jesus Christ our Lord, so long as we bear our testimony in little segregated groups, and try to carry it home into the life of men by spasms, this group now and that group then. When once we bring into our great massed assault all that faith and love and conviction of the Christian Church, bringing it to bear on these great problems, they will melt away as the snow before the sun. Looking out over our world now, with its problems to be solved, over the world suffering more pain and anguish than ever before, one wonders where are the men who will do now what these men did two decades ago, who set our feet in the way of bringing our common forces to bear on the great common tasks. We should have learned some great lesson in this matter, in the dark years that have gone by. We are taught clearly that there were certain separations that could never be effected. No branch of the Christian Church could free itself from the consequences of the action of any other branch of the Christian Church. We could deny ourselves the gains of cooperative effort, but we could not free ourselves from the blunder of any single group. I believe that is true across the whole life of the Christian Church. We are bound up in one common responsibility. Whatever error any body of Christians make, all of us have got to pay the penalty, and the price of it. If we are bound up in one great common responsibility, why should we not deal with it in a great community effort and judgment? It is not a matter of obligation that we cannot escape. It is a matter of great joy that we ought to enjoy. Dr. Stevenson was speaking of the experience through which our own Church has just passed. I think it has been the richest experience of the last generation. I think the meaning of it is this, that the Church has arisen above every separating divisive thing and has been bound together in a glowing warmth and eagerness of a great common loyalty to duty. There is no joy like that. Our Lord is waiting now to have us pass over into a larger and richer experience of this joy. One comes to believe more and more that there is no better way in which a man or a Church can spend life than in the effort to fulfill what clearly was and is the great purpose and desire of Christ that they all may be one.

"That they all may be one" are the old, familiar words. I suppose as simple words as could be spoken, monosyllables every one of them. You say that if ever language could be indisputably plain, it would be this: "That they may be one." And yet I suppose there is no language over which man has divided as much as over the inescapable, simple meaning of those last words in the last prayer of our Lord.

Well, here to-night, knowing him to be in the midst of us; unable to distinguish one from another in the sincerity and the warmth of our loyalty to him; in the fact of the world which one is tempted to think needs Christ more than any other generation in human history, was there ever a clearer call to those who believe that Christ is adequate to save the world, to find the way in which now—not far off—but now, oh my friends, that can be done?

11. THE UNITED BRETHREN CHURCH

Wallace MacMullen, Chairman of the Committee on the Reception of Fraternal Delegates:

MR. PRESIDENT AND MEMBERS OF THE CONFERENCE: By your action last week you ordered as an order of the day at this hour the reception of the messenger from the United Brethren in Christ. With that Church we have historical and religious connections. Our historic point of contact is sentimental. Francis Asbury and William Philip Otterbein were friends. Asbury requested Otterbein to help Dr. Coke and the other elders in his ordination and consecration. William Otterbein, more than any other man, was the founder of the United Brethren. Between the two churches, theirs and ours, there is slight difference. We are alike in our doctrinal positions and in our ecclesiastical methods. We are so much alike that a keen sighted New England historian said that the differences between the two bodies could be discerned only by those inside them, and not by any outside. The Board of Bishops of the United Brethren in Christ have honored us in sending as their representative their senior Bishop. Your committee has great pleasure in helping to welcome and in presenting to you Bishop William M. Bell, of the United Brethren in Christ.

FRATERNAL ADDRESS OF BISHOP WILLIAM M. BELL

TO THE PRESIDING BISHOP, AND TO THE BISHOPS THAT ARE ON THE PLATFORM, AND TO THE MEMBERS OF THE GENERAL CONFERENCE OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH: I come into your presence, as has been announced, because our Board of Bishops asked a few weeks ago that this should become a part of the pleasant privileges of my life, and I was commissioned to come. They wanted me to come, growing out of the fact that we have recognized for years the kindredship ties that bind us, and the very uniform common passion which controls the life of your great denomination as it does ours.

I must be forgiven, if forgiveness is necessary, for saying a few things that are rather personal as to the road over which your speaker has come, and I speak cordially because I am chairman of our Standing Commission on Church Cooperation, Federation and Union. Early in the history of Northern Indiana, Methodism and the Church of the United Brethren in Christ were quite parallel in their activities. They are parallel to this day as to their membership. That is one of the sections in which our own denomination is strong. And my earliest recollections in life go back to the period when I was very well acquainted, as a child, with ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church and ministers in our own Church. It so occurred that in our County of Whitley, the brethren of the United Brethren came with their alluring message of Jesus Christ, which touched my boyhood, so that I entered into Christianity, and I entered into that denomination. I accompany that statement with the other, that in my early teens it was my great privilege to go to a great interdenominational meeting which was held each August at Warsaw, to which platform came your great Dr. John S. Inskip, and your great Dr. William McDonald, and your great Dr. Foote.

These men from your Methodism joined with several of our bishops in holding that great interdenominational campmeeting at Warsaw. I shall be happy to the end of my career here on earth for the fact that my path led me to this great meeting. And whatever of vigor and courage and faith figures in my soul to-day, is a great tribute of obligation to these wonderful occasions that seasoned forever in my thinking the matter of my obligation for the great doctrines that are common in the two Churches. When my Church called me to be a missionary secretary, I was immediately in contact with that great Methodist statesman, Dr. A. B. Leonard, also with the then secretary, afterward bishop, Charles C. McCabe. I shall always carry the memory of the fine fraternity with which they greeted me when as a crude missionary secretary I came into contact with them in studying the problems of making the Christian conquest of the world as nearly complete as we could. Some of the deepest furrows of grief that I carry, caused by what death does in robbing us of those who are as dear as life itself, I carry because of the loss of Methodist friends. I grieved for days when Bishop Matt. S. Hughes was called into eternity. I had pictured, over the years to come, fellowship between him and my soul. I wrote to his brother when he was gone, expressing my profound sorrow; and he answered back "Yes, it is difficult for me to think of living in a world with brother away." I have shared in that sense of bereavement. I am allured toward the better world to-day as it looms larger in my horizon, because of these great and splendid men who have enriched its gracious inheritances and have served to stimulate our interest in our own ultimate destiny.

Now, speaking immediately of what I regard as occasioning my coming to you, I beg to say that we have grown increasingly interested in the fact that our two Churches were born in the common current of revival passion and interest. A week ago last Sunday I spoke in our old Otterbein church in Baltimore. It was the 150th anniversary of Bishop Otterbein's founding of that Church. We recall the memory of your sainted Bishop Asbury. There came into that meeting a number of fine Methodist people, who touched us all most profoundly by registering their appreciation of the unity of interest which belongs to us because of these associations in the days of our beginning. Once in a while a Methodist says to me, "Remember, you are essentially a Methodist." I say, "Yes, and remember that you are essentially United Brethren;" and immediately I say, "We are both right." I heard last night, in this wonderful meeting of yours here, the announcement of what Methodism is ambitious to do for the world. As a result of the fellowship in that meeting last night, I have new light on your great, radiant, denominational passion. Methodism is tremendously in earnest for the registering itself on the front line of conquest of Christian approach to the conquest of the world. That ambition grows more tremendous with the growth you have in property, in wealth, in numbers, in scholarship, and in your numbers everywhere. So that I am saying to myself this morning, as never before, "The passion of Methodism is not essentially a passion for itself. It is a passion to put world service into the ends of the earth through Methodist channels, and the Kingdom of God is the exalted and ultimate objective in your thinking, through and through." I do not believe you have any difficulty in reaching that opinion. I know that for my part you immediately pulled to the bottom of my sensibility when you announce that purpose and passion and platform. I have been a party to two or three conferences in which our denomination has taken up the matter of a Church merger with kindred bodies. Some of these have not been successful. Our grief is to-day that a minority can file its dissent to such a merger. One of the sad things these days is that still there survives that danger, whenever a Protestant denomination raises the question of a merger or union, that a minority, persistent in its own view and extremely devoted to its own denominational name, will make trouble with regard to the question of a Church union or merger. It can make much trouble in such a case. This week, in the county adjoining that in which I live, in Lebanon County, there is a trial in the courts because a small minority are so determined that they will not consent to a merger of their body with another that they have organized a rebellion against what was recently done in bringing together the two wings of one of the denominations of this country. That practical difficulty faces us, so far as that is concerned.

I am sure we are all in sympathy with the growing, dominant passion to be loyal to Christ and to set him opposite any distemper affecting the social order or any peril involving the well-being of the race. We unite in saying that Christ, opposite to any unwelcome phase of human character and destiny, is the final solution. So we are saying to-day that we are going to listen to the voice of Christ; and what he shall bid us speak, and feel and do, we shall more and more be inclined to do.

I think I ought to say this further word. The difficulties that lie in the way are in part overcome immediately when we have entered into such cooperative action as you have already foreshadowed. I should like to have you know that for the moment, and for such time as may be necessary, until God may order otherwise, we are your allies, standing fast and firm in a purpose to emphasize the holy passion that surged through the soul of Otterbein and the soul of Asbury and surges through the common life of our two great Churches to-day. We pledge to you our hearty good will, and admiration for your world-wide services. You encourage us by your fervor. We admire your high calling. We hail most joyously your achievements in soul-winning and character-building, and in ministry to our disturbed civilization in these days. Because you are courageous, it is easier for us to have courage and heart. So accept it from the word of your unworthy speaker to-day that we hail with glad anticipation the future cooperation which as Churches we shall render. We shall stand at attention for what God Almighty may indicate in realigning the total forces of Protestant American Christianity. We believe, in absolute candor, that it is the will of God to carry our civilization beyond this present united program. It is in the providence of God to restore us from our distracted times and bring us into an era of unity and harmony and fellowship and readiness and preparation for the incomplete task of Christianizing the social order in America, of taking the tiger's teeth out of world conditions, of building a future of international justice and good will, and building especially a mighty passionate devotion to Christ which shall make him Lord of lords and King of kings through the whole earth.

BISHOP NICHOLSON: I am sure that I speak your sentiment when I thank Bishop Bell for coming and for these gracious words. For myself, living as I did for a number of years in Ohio, where I was in constant intercourse with men of the United Brethren Church, I came to have for some of those United Brethren the same kind of a feeling that Bishop Bell has described for certain of our Methodist leaders. And I confess to you that I always found it practically impossible to distinguish, in type of Christian character, and ideals, and all that goes to make up a Christian, between a United Brother and a Methodist. It always seemed to me that we were one. We thank you for coming and for your gracious words.

Wallace MacMullen, Chairman of the Committee on the Reception of Fraternal Delegates:

MR. PRESIDENT AND BRETHREN OF THE CONFERENCE: In connection with the motion just passed, it is interesting that I am able to present two men who are to appear to-night at the reception scheduled for the Fraternal Delegates of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, and the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church. These delegates are present here this morning and I ask the privilege of presenting them; Bishop J. Arthur Hamlett, the fraternal delegate from the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church.

Bishop Hamlett was presented.

Wallace MacMullen: I ask the further privilege of presenting the Rev. Sandy Simmons, representative from the African Methodist Episcopal Church, a pastor in Charleston, South Carolina.

The Rev. Sandy Simmons was introduced.

BISHOP JONES: BROTHERS AND SISTERS: The story of the colored Methodist Churches in America is an inspiring one. These our brothers have carried forward their work over the years, organizing not only their churches, but organizing their schools, and doing missionary work in foreign lands. It is a fine example of self-support, of self-direction, of self-reliance, and of self-government. The Methodist Episcopal Church seeks to give every possible encouragement to these our brothers of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, and the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, and the African Methodist Episcopal Church; and we are to have fraternal greetings from those churches to-night. I have great pleasure in asking Dr. Wallace MacMullen to present the fraternal delegates from those churches.

WALLACE MACMULLEN: MR. PRESIDENT AND BRETHREN OF THE CONFERENCE: May I be permitted for your committee to say a few general words about the pleasure we have in receiving to-night the delegated messengers of these Colored Methodist Churches? I particularly enjoyed, as you did if you were here to hear it the other morning, the devotional address of Bishop Jones, with its emphasis upon individual religious experience. That which lies down at the basis of all social experience for which we plead in these days. I think that our colored friends have an unusual capacity for personal and passionate religion which to me certainly is very, very refreshing. We have in our New York Conference four colored churches. They are all in my district, and I count it a means of grace whenever I have the privilege of visiting those churches and feeling the heat of their religious life. We enjoy these brethren of ours for many reasons. For one, their gentleness, which is a very striking characteristic; and for their courtesy, which is very unusual; and for their courage. We do not forget the experiences of that colored regiment in the war, the regimental colors of which were decorated with the croix de guerre, so that there might be no danger of overlooking the individual courage of every hero. The chaplain of that regiment was one of my preachers, and the white colonel of that fighting black regiment told me very recently that the influence of that chaplain was so great upon the troops in that regiment that when he was refused permission to go to France with the regiment, because he was getting dull of hearing and had some other physical disqualifications, the regiment absolutely refused to have another chaplain elected in his stead, and for one whole year the colonel himself conducted religious services for that regiment. That is a very high tribute, but it was paid to a remarkable man, a remarkable preacher, a remarkable organizer, an inspiring leader of his race.

I have real personal pleasure in this opportunity of introducing these representatives of these colored church bodies. First of all we have Bishop Hamlett. I will read his credentials:

BOARD OF BISHOPS OF THE COLORED METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, 116 SOUTH SHANNON STREET, JACKSON, TENNESSEE, MAY 7, 1924.

To the Bishops and Members of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Springfield, Massachusetts.

DEAR FATHERS AND BRETHREN: Pursuant to a custom of long standing and in consonance with the spirit of Christian fellowship, the Bishops of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church have elected one of their number, Bishop James Arthur Hamlett, Master of Arts, and Bachelor of Divinity, fraternal messenger to your honorable body.

Bishop Hamlett is a brother beloved among us. He has served as Editor of the Christian Index, our official organ, and has done constructive work along other lines in the Church.

We recall with very great pleasure, the visit to our General Conference in 1922, of Doctor Pesavia O'Connell, your Fraternal Delegate. The eloquent message of Doctor O'Connell made a deep and lasting impression, and his statesmanlike deliverance still lives with us and bears its fruits.

We are the sons of God and followers of Wesley, whose mission is to give the whole Christ to the whole world—the Christ of the Virgin Birth, the Christ of the shameful crucifixion, the Christ of the triumphant resurrection, the Christ of the glorious ascension, and the Christ of the blessed intercession, our High Priest.

May you as a family of the militant hosts of our blessed Lord, built upon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets and contending earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the Saints, share abundantly of His Grace, and rejoice in the presence and power of the Holy Spirit, which shall guide you in all truth.

By the order and in behalf of the Bishops of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church.

(Signed) N. C. CLEAVES, Secretary.

The Colored Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1870. It was by the authorization of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1866 that this action was taken. Their bishops, pursuant to the action of that General Conference, organized Annual Conferences, which presently came together and formed a new ecclesiastical group known as the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church. It took the Articles of Religion and the form of government of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and since the time of its organization has had the friendly oversight and counsel of that Church. It is with real pleasure that I introduce Bishop Hamlett.

The Conference rose as Bishop Hamlett was introduced, and greeted him very cordially.

FRATERNAL ADDRESS OF BISHOP JAMES ARTHUR HAMLETT

MR. PRESIDENT, FATHERS AND BRETHREN: It gives me great pleasure to stand before you at this glad hour as the authorized representative of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, and present the greetings of that body of Christian workers to the great Methodist Episcopal Church, in General Conference assembled, with its bishops and delegates gathered from the four quarters of the earth. The deep sense of my inability to measure up to the duty of this hour is attenuated by the inspiration which has come to me by the contact with a world Church which my coming has afforded these few days. For no one could stand in this august presence, witness the deliberations of a world Church, with a world vision, a world program, shot through with the spirit of Jesus Christ see the delegates gathered from Europe, Asia, Africa and the Americas and listen to reports of such glorious achievements without having his heart stirred to gratitude and his lips moved to praise. The greeting I bring is no mere formality but the candid expression of genuine appreciation which our Church has for yours, the high regard in which we hold you, and the undying hope which has been kindled in our hearts by evidences of your spirit of fraternalism and brotherhood toward us to which able sons of yours have so eloquently testified in the messages they have brought to our General Conferences through the years, the latest of which was ably and earnestly delivered by your scholarly Dr. O'Connell. Dr. Tobias, who bore our fraternal message to your General Conference four years ago, came back thrilled and heartened by the very generous entertainment you extended him and the cordial fashion in which you received his message.

The history of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church has been brief but full of faithful endeavors of the noble fathers who have had large part in making it. The Church had its beginning as a separate organization in 1870, in Jackson, Tennessee. When the Church was organized we had five Annual Conferences, about forty thousand members, led by two bishops consecrated by the bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. To-day I bring you greetings from ten bishops, thirty-six Annual Conferences, a dozen connectional officers, a few more than three thousand pastors and equally as many local preachers, and approximately three hundred and fifty thousand members. This Church through its leaders, its various departments, Financial, Publication, Education, Missionary, Evangelism, Sunday School, Epworth League, Church Extension and Superannuated Preachers, with its five colleges and seven normal schools, and with its connectional organs, is endeavoring to enlighten and Christianize the people.

For years our Church activities were confined almost wholly to the South. And while this was the cause of much unfavorable criticism by our sister churches we made no apology for it, for there we found sufficient work to tax our resources and equipment. The South, while presenting its peculiar problems, likewise presents great opportunities for Christian service. But in recent years our Church has prosecuted a program of expansion in response to the challenge which came from the North, East and West, that stirred our leaders and membership to meet a situation created by the migration of our people. And so to-day we have large and aggressive churches in the North, East and West as well as in the South. It is not my purpose to burden you with statistics and detailed accounts to indicate the progress our Church has made. You would probably be more interested in a word which might convey the attention which our Church is giving to the problems that vex people to-day; for it occurs to us that the Church cannot claim a place in the confidence and loyalty of the people merely upon its past achievements, nor upon its inheritance from the past. The Church must justify its continued existence and claim upon the allegiance of the people by its vision and grasp of the present day problems that distract and confuse the people, and by its capacity and courage to lead through those problems. So I shall mention some of the problems confronting our people and indicate the attitude and approach of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church toward them.

RACE RELATIONS

I will mention first the problem of race relations. This is an old problem, and at times a very vexing one. But constant study and earnest efforts by the leaders of both races in all sections of the country have brought light and understanding out of which have come suggestions and methods of dealing with the problem that have been applied with amazing success and increasing hope. Many of the elements that have made this problem so vexing and so difficult of solution have been eliminated, but it seems that while they retired others have come. To the impatient ones this has not been very reassuring, while to the more optimistic it has not been strange, especially when it is remembered that this is a world where changes are constantly taking place—changes which call for new ways of thinking, new attitudes and new approaches to old questions as well as new ones. It seems difficult to find a solution to the problem of race relations that will be satisfactory to all sections of our country and to all groups of our citizenship. The difficulty may not lie wholly in the problem itself, but rather in the attempt to solve it upon the wrong basis, and to solve it without due consideration of the viewpoint of all who are affected by the problem and all who must be affected by its solution. Hence, like all other great problems, this one seems to require an occasional restatement and a new interpretation to meet the mental attitude and social habits and customs of varying sections of our country and groups of our citizenship. But in the face of all the difficulties with which the problem is attended, we have not become weary in well doing, because somehow we believe that in due season we shall reap if we do not faint. The kingdom of God is at hand, and it is our conviction that all who enter into it must repent of their sins—sins of racial hate and bitterness, sins of groundless prejudice and arrogance; and the love of God, expressed in Jesus Christ, must be allowed to do a perfect work among us all. We believe that the application of the principles embodied and exemplified by Jesus Christ will ultimately solve this problem. And this belief grows stronger as we observe the results of the permeating and saving influence of the gospel of Christ wherever it has really and truly been tried. And so, “Amid the maddening maze of things,

When tossed by storms or flood;
To one fixed trust our spirit clings,
We know that God is good.”

If there be areas of our citizenship not yet permeated by the gospel of Christ which is so big with the idea of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, it is to us no signal for despair but a challenge for the continued exhibition of other elements of the same gospel; namely, perseverance against great odds, love in the face of hatred, forgiveness under gross mistreatment, patience under bitter persecution; and

"A faith that will not shrink,
Though pressed by every foe,
That will not tremble on the brink,
Of any earthly woe.

"That bears unmoved, the world's dread frown,
Nor heeds its scornful smile,
That seas of trouble cannot drown
Nor Satan's art beguile."

The problem has been accentuated during the last few years by the migration of our people from one section of the country to the other. Up until a few years ago only a relatively small number of our people lived elsewhere than in the South, but the migration spell has scattered them by the thousands in every direction, with, perhaps, the main drift toward the North. The causes have been grouped under two categories, namely, attractive and repellent. In this migration our people have been both drawn and driven to break the ties which bound them to their respective localities. The migration movement has had its blessings, but not without its perils. And both its blessings and perils have affected both sections of our country as well as the migrants themselves. Among the Southern white people it has awakened a larger appreciation for the economic value of the race, and has inspired a fresh, serious and more genuinely Christian study of the whole race situation. On the other hand it has presented to the Northern white people a big opportunity to put into practice some of the broad Christian ideals which they have held regarding the rights of Negro people, an opportunity to make more effective their suggested program of racial cooperation by giving concrete examples of how white people can be as fair, as honest, as just and as Christlike in the treatment of black people when living next door to them as when living hundreds and thousands of miles away. Meantime, it has given the Negro people a chance to see whether or not there is any fundamental difference between the place they occupy in the thought and religion of the white people of one section and the place they occupy in the thought and religion of the white people of any other section. Whether or not deep down in the hearts of white people, in the matter of meting out justice to black people, the righteousness of one section of the country exceeds that of another; or whether or not, unless every section repents of its treatment of the Negro, every section will likewise perish. Some light will be thrown upon a question which Negro people have for a long time been raising, namely, "Can white people anywhere in the presence of a large number of black people rise to the full measure of their opportunity and duty, imposed upon them by centuries of advantages and training, and give to the Negro an honest-to-goodness square deal with regard to economic opportunity, political freedom, educational facilities and civic justice?" That there are individual white men and women in every section of the country who believe in giving to black people full justice in every particular has been proven over and over again; but the capacity and courage to do so as a race of people, boasting of their superiority, would be an interesting and encouraging demonstration. The migration will also help the Negro people to see that the mere change of location will not by any means solve all their problems; and that white people whether North or South are not wholly to blame for all the ills which come to them. After all, we must believe that the relations between the races are growing better.

"For there glimpses on our sight
Through present wrong eternal right,
And step by step since time began
We see the steady gain of man."

We deceive ourselves if we judge the course of a river by the swirls and eddies on the surface, for we must judge it by the deep and steady sweep of its current. We lose nothing by a grateful recognition of what has already been accomplished, and we gain nothing by the failure to express the conviction that much remains yet to be attempted and accomplished before God's will shall be done on earth as it is done in heaven.

FUNDAMENTALISM VS. MODERNISM

I shall refer next to the problem of unrest and confusion created by the controversy between what has been called modernism on the one hand and fundamentalism on the other. I mention it not because there has been any appreciable disturbance on account of it in the rank and file of our Church ministry and membership, certainly not by that phase of it which deals with doctrines, but because the problem exists, and it seems that no Church organization will be able to escape its effect, and none will wish to be denied whatever benefits that may come from it. And in working out the problems which more immediately affect us as a race as well as a Church we must deal with the same public mind that is being confused, being made and remade by the controversy between fundamentalists and modernists. It behooves us, therefore, to watch the process even if we do not take much part in the actual conflict. It seems to us no credit to a people to boast of being soundly asleep while a storm rages, even if the house they live in be not at all affected by the storm impact. We have no fears, for the house will be reassured by the knowledge that it has passed through the storm intact. We have no fears for the fundamentals of the Christian faith and life. We believe that in the midst of new discoveries in the field of science, and the new interpretations of truth in the fields of philosophy, whatever is worth while will endure; whatever is true and essential to life and growth will abide. We recall that in the bewildered and excited moments of Mary on that resurrection morning in the long ago she declared, "They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him." We do not question the sincerity of Mary's devotion to her Lord; we do not question the honesty of her utterance in that hour of confusion and uncertainty; she is entitled to full credit for all the zeal which she possessed; but with it all, she was mistaken about what she said; for nobody had taken away her Lord. He was a living, vital presence, very near her, and even speaking to her in that very hour. And so we are not afraid that higher criticism nor lower criticism, evolution nor revolution, will take out of our experience the consciousness of a dynamic Christ, living in us and helping us to become sons and daughters of God. While all this is true, we cannot pin our faith to, nor stake our all upon, anything that cannot, under the searchlight of investigation, reveal its own value and worth in the program of human betterment and human perfection. And so if the Philistines should destroy the ark of God, we are very, very sure that they can never destroy the God of the ark. And if the destruction of the ark will bring to us a clearer vision of God and a deeper sense of our dependence upon him, their work will have proven a blessing. We cannot trust fanatical and irrational tendencies as our guides in a day like this. We feel deeply the need of clear thinking and sound reasoning if we are to proceed with the serious business of living, for we pass along this way but one time. The tasks we face to-day cannot be met by arrogant and pretentious ignorance. We know that Methodism, in order to function, must not lose her evangelical fervor, but there is great danger of it being lost unless it is backed up by broad and thorough scholarship. Zeal, no matter how holy, cannot take the place of sound judgment in vital matters based upon wide and accurate knowledge of facts and an honest adequate interpretation of the same. On the other hand we are not easily carried away by discoveries of new phases of truth and brilliant argument unless, indeed, they be reinforced by that which only living testimony can supply. Mere dogmatism on the one hand, or radicalism on the other, is not enough for a torn, bleeding, distracted, bewildered world. The world wants to see and hear men believe and teach that which will make them the kind of men they ought to be; and to believe and teach it strong enough that it may bear fruit for the kingdom in their own lives. And in all this we need constantly to remind ourselves that, while the truth is eternal, it must be preached to-day to twentieth century life with its peculiar environments, viewpoint, prejudices and limitations. The Church is charged with a sacred duty which is performed, not merely by preaching the truth, but by preaching it effectively. And if there is a way that this can be done without clothing the message in living speech and interpreting it in terms of present-day thought, we shall be in debt to whoever points out that way.

ORGANIC UNION OF METHODISTS

On the question of organic union I beg to venture the suggestion that it must be a stupid Church that cannot feel the pull which the exigencies of the time make for closer fellowship and larger co-operation of Christian bodies. Already it is becoming more and more difficult to explain to the people the necessity for the continued existence of so many different denominations, especially those that have a common origin, a common heritage, a common purpose, a common hope; and which preach the same doctrines and act according to the same polity. It has been strongly felt that the leadership which world crises have given Christianity an opportunity to exert has been feeble, if not at times wholly lacking. One of the causes of this impotence has been charged to the disunity which characterizes the Protestant forces. The staggering problems which seem at times to almost crush humanity, the torn and distracted social order, the economic strifes and bitterness, manifestations of political demoralization, all present a challenge to Christianity that makes inevitable the elimination of so much disunity among Christian forces. Even where organic union is not immediately practicable the multiplicity of Church voices might through earnest federation and vigorous co-operation be fused into one mighty voice, wise enough, positive enough, courageous enough and vigorous enough to make itself heard and felt on all great questions which affect the well-being of the peoples of the world. I may say that the effort to achieve organic union between the three Negro Methodist churches has been no more rapid than the effort among white Methodists. We have had one plan submitted that was overwhelmingly approved by all three churches in their General Conferences, but which did not stem the tide of opposition in the Annual Conferences within the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church. But its slow progress instead of spelling defeat challenges greater faith in its coming. And so while you and your noble sister to the South are seeing the need for more union between Methodists, and while you are thoughtfully, prayerfully, patiently and yet persistently set to the task of bringing it about, evidenced by the overwhelming vote with which you passed the plan now before you and the enthusiasm with which the news was received by the people of your sister Church, I beg you to know that the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church is greatly in love with the same ideal, and thousands of our members are consumed with the same passion for union between all Negro Methodists. Our dream is that out of the combined wisdom and Christian passion of the leaders of both races some way will be found for white Methodists and Black Methodists to be gathered at least occasionally in one great family to wait in prayer that they might hear the voice of God speaking over the mountains and across the seas, bidding united Methodism the world over to march forward preaching by word and by deeds the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION

With regard to prohibition I beg to say that the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church has contributed its part toward the creation of sentiment that has taken the form of the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution, and stands to-day for the enforcement of all laws that will make prohibition a reality from one end of this country to the other. Our pulpit and press are committed to a program of strengthening the sentiment of the country so that the Eighteenth Amendment shall be more than a dead letter. We are aware of the fact that disrespect for any part of the Constitution paves the way for other parts of it to be ignored at will; and that any program of enlightenment which seeks to build up respect for any part of the Constitution without a vigorous effort to have all parts respected will betray its own lack of sincerity and break down. We firmly believe that years of open disregard for the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments, with less vigorous effort on the part of the Christian churches to create a national conscience on that matter than on other questions, has done much to fix the habit which now creates a serious problem in enforcing the Eighteenth Amendment, namely, to make the Constitution and laws of the land subservient to the whims and prejudices of organized lawlessness.

ABOUT WAR

Much has been said during recent months about war, its horrors, its staggering cost in money and in precious human lives, and a harvest of hatred and bitterness created between nations. Our people are greatly encouraged by signs of what may be interpreted as a serious determination on the part of Christian forces with regard to this brutal business of war. As has been expressed by a fearless advocate of more Christian ways of settling international difficulties, "The conviction grows that we cannot reconcile Jesus and war; that the Christian Church should claim as her own the great moral issue of our time, and lift a clear standard against the paganism of the present world."

CONCLUSION

I think I have said enough to indicate some of the common problems which confront Methodism and all Christian forces. We face a world that is debt-ridden by reason of war, disturbed by social upheavals, torn by economic strife, racial bitterness, international suspicions, jealousies and hatreds, and defied by organized lawlessness. We face a time when faith and doubt both battle for the stage, when militarism is in desperate conflict with pacifism, when the battle rages between capital and labor, when nationalism is arrayed against internationalism, when race consciousness stands in the way of brotherhood, when mere age struggles against utility as a test of things fundamental to a vital spiritual life. Out of this uncertainty and chaos the Church must lead. The Church must mould the world's thought and make the world's character. And the Church must undertake this sacred duty with the understanding that leading is serious and courageous business. It is more than merely protesting, mere holding out danger signals; it means more than waiting on the state, mere polite bowing to public sentiment. The function of leadership is to teach the right things and guide in the right direction. It means to get in front and point the way out of darkness into light, out of bondage into freedom. This cannot be done by platitudes, no matter how charming; but by specific declarations vigorously made and courageously supported by concrete deeds. And may I say in closing that your great Church, with its history, polity and doctrines, your membership, not only large and widely distributed over the world but composed of all races and related to all classes, your education and wealth, your relation to other Christian bodies, your impact upon great political and industrial organizations and governments of the world, your noble Christian ideals and consistent recognition of a brotherhood which includes all races—all these elements make you a mighty factor in God's hand for bringing this old world under his sway.

Permit me, therefore, to record the appreciation of our Church for the noble part you are playing in the solution of these great problems and to express our confidence in the vision which still leads you onward, and in the Christian vigor with which you are carrying forward a world program. Mr. President: Your great Church is contributing magnificently in the making of the world's ideals, in supplying the world's motives, and interpreting Christ to present day life. If there be those who magnify means at the expense of glorious ends, you will keep the goal of world redemption before the people. If there be those who feel it their chief duty to safeguard ancient institutions, you will be the voice of Christ to speak again to the world that institutions were made for man and not man for institutions. If others should be provincial in outlook and reactionary in attitude, you, while being cautious and prudent, will keep the world outlook and the progressive attitude. You will not be a victim to either excessive conservatism nor foolish radicalism. If others be concerned chiefly with saving themselves, you will exemplify the spirit of our Master about whom it was said in derision, but in truth, "He saved others, himself he could not save." If others feel called upon to preach that this is a white man's world, you will speak a message from history, from the word of God, from the experience of those who live in fellowship with him, "That God is no respecter of persons, that God does not show partiality, that God has no favorites, but he who reverences him and lives a good life in any race or nation is acceptable to him." If others should say that there are superior and inferior races, you will still preach that "Of one blood God created all races to dwell together upon the earth."

13. THE AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH

SEE JOURNAL, PAGES 337, 340

Wallace MacMullen, Chairman of the Committee on the Reception of Fraternal Delegates.

BISHOP JONES: A representative from the African Methodist Episcopal Church—I shall not say from the oldest body of Colored Methodists, because that is a controverted question; but from a group of Negro Methodists, a group that has carried its work more largely into the other parts of the world. It is my pleasure to ask Dr. MacMullen to introduce the representative of the African Methodist Episcopal Church.

WALLACE MACMULLEN: MR. CHAIRMAN AND BRETHREN OF THE CONFERENCE: The African Methodist Episcopal Church dates back to 1818. In 1844 they formed a missionary society. They have in their Discipline a doctrinal department called the Catechism of Faith, made up from quotations from Wesley's Works. They give us an interesting illustration of ecclesiastical democracy in the fact that they have bishops and other general officers of their Church as members of their General Conference. I have the privilege of presenting as their chosen messenger Rev. S. Simmons, one of their pastors from Charleston, South Carolina.

As the Rev. Mr. Simmons was introduced, the Conference rose and greeted him very cordially.

FRATERNAL ADDRESS OF REV. S. SIMMONS

REVEREND FATHERS IN GOD, OFFICERS AND MEMBERS OF THE GENERAL CONFERENCE OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH: Greetings: Methodism's oldest daughter, through her Bishops, in solemn conclave assembled, has conferred upon us the signal honor of bearing Fraternal Greetings to the largest and most distinguished body of Methodists in the world. It is an honor that no sane man would refuse. We feel keenly the responsibility, as well as the honor conferred. It is no small matter to appear upon this platform that is graced by some of the greatest and brightest minds the country has. Before and around us we see those who, by scholastic training, as well as Christian piety, are the peers of the best of any country, age or clime.

In appearing before your honorable body this day we are not forgetful of the fact that it was you, the mother of American Methodism, that originated the custom of sending greetings of Christian fellowship and brotherly love to those of other organizations of like belief. Out of the fullness of your hearts you reached out the hand of fraternity, helping all who are willing to follow your lead, to higher plains, and a sacred nearness to Him who died that members of the human family might be restored to the kingdom of grace and glory.

We come to you as the representative of three quarters of a million followers of Christ who have enrolled under the banner of African Methodism. You, no doubt, have been told, that, contrary to our denominational name, our communicants are not confined to members of the African race and their descendants. Like you, our doors are open to all seekers of Truth, who are desirous to find what the Roman governor of Judea, Pontius Pilate, knew nought of; and did not wait to get an answer from Him who was the source of that which his pagan religion could not give. We keep before us the utterance of our common founder, "The world is my parish." For 108 years we have been preaching the Gospel of "The Man of Galilee," who laid so broad and deep the foundation upon which we have all builded our superstructure, which is destined to last until the archangel's trump shall sound, marshalling the forces of the conquering King upon the heavenly Armageddon, where they will study war no more. There they will have no need to beat their swords and spears into plowshares and pruning-hooks; because there will be no more war, nor planting and harvesting. The laborers and warriors from the field of the world's various activities will assemble around the throne above and receive from his hand the victors' crowns.

On the banks of the Nile can be seen the crumbling remains of a past civilization in the form of obelisks, pyramids and ruins of magnificent temples. Rome, seated upon her seven hills, issued orders, and the world obeyed. But the senate chamber where Julius Cæsar died and Cicero drove from thence the traitor Catiline is no more; Greece, the intellectual center of the ancient world, now has only the remnants of the Acropolis to show to those who live in modern times the glory that was hers. All those civilizations have lost their pristine glory. They were old before the humble Joseph and Mary, descendants of David, the friend of God, journeyed to Bethlehem in obedience to the August One who ruled alone on the Palatine Hill; but really in accordance to prophecy (Mic. 5. 2). They had begun their downward trend; and, as the religion of Calvary advanced, they, in turn, rapidly passed away, only leaving their footprints upon the pages of history, to be read by each succeeding generation.

So busy was the Roman government with the task of keeping in subjection conquered nations; and the Jewish rabbis with their struggle to throw off their temporal yoke, and reestablish a kingdom that would rival David's in war-like achievements, and Solomon's in wealth and wisdom, that the one spoken of in the prophets came suddenly to his Temple; and the sons of Levy, whose business it was to admonish the world of his approach, were astonished at his advent. This Child that was born in a manger, in the stable of the inn, because they could not find room for him in the inn proper, came to revolutionize the religious world: and he has done so. Before the onward march of Christianity all other creeds and dogmas have begun to fail and weaken. Slowly, but none the less surely, they are either being driven from the stage, or else they are changing to conform to the dictates of the religion of David's illustrious Son.

In modern times, after the Christian religion had gained a firm hold upon the hearts of men, like the ancient Jewish teachers, those entrusted with the propagation of religion soon began teaching for Truth the traditions of men; and form an outward ceremonies entered, and the hearts of men became fascinated with outward pomp; and became the seat of all that was vile and ungodly. God about that time sent Martin Luther to bring them to their senses. After Luther the reformers needed reforming; and God sent our great founder, the immortal Wesley; and the result is this great Church, teaching the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

We have been sent to greet you, sirs, because of the wonderful work you have done and are doing for humanity. The world stands at attention when the name of the Methodist Episcopal Church is mentioned. In every walk in life your followers have been and are now found. You have had one of your distinguished communicants to occupy the White House as the nation's head; which position he filled for one term with credit to himself, and honor to you, and started upon his second term; when the assassin's bullet brought to an end a worthy and useful life, and who went to his grave universally loved, not alone by his fellow Americans, but by the whole civilized world. We refer to the Hon. William McKinley. So, from the White House to hovel, from the zenith to nadir of the social, religious and political fabric, the teachings of the Wesleys have been carried by you.

We come to greet you, Reverend Fathers in God, and members of this most august body, because we are not so ungrateful as to forget what you did in 1844. The Church that sent us here, composed of the descendants of those whom you protected in the days of the long ago, when they were powerless, says to you, through us, that the ones who were direct beneficiaries, and those of us who are following in their footsteps, never forgot, nor never will forget, that you befriended us when we needed befriending most. Since then, we have tried, and are still trying to prove to the world that we are men like other men.

We greet you because of the splendid work you are doing in the missionary and educational fields. The saying is that the sun never sets on English soil. The same can almost be said of your great Church. In almost every clime, where the human race is found, the disciples of Wesley have gone, carrying the Bible and hymnbook, telling them of the wonders of Bethlehem's manger; the Mount of Transfiguration; Gethsemane's Garden; Pilate's Judgment Hall, and Golgotha's bloody height. Nearer home, we felt your helping hand. As soon as God's instrument, Abraham Lincoln, issued his Proclamation, breaking the chains of bondage from the limbs of human chattels, you sent your missionaries, consecrated men and godly women, who left their homes of comfort and journeyed to the Southland, carrying the spelling book, as well as the Bible, to a people who gave to America two hundred and fifty years of unrequited toil. Do you think we can ever forget the ones who helped us in our dark hour of need?

The people of our race in America are not the only ones who have felt the influence of your benevolence and love for humanity. In far off China, Japan, India and other foreign fields they are being taught by you, that, instead of ancestors, Shinto and image worship, they should worship God, who alone can save their souls. The Bible is being taught them instead of the Veda or Koran. Instead of being taught that "God is God, and Mahomet is his prophet," they are learning to say God is God alone, and Christ is the Redeemer of the world. You, the followers of Wesley, are sending men and women to the remotest parts of the earth, who are going cheerfully with the cry on their lips, "I seek my brethren."

We are thankful to you that the seeking of your brethren is not confined to the members of your race. Since the organization of this Church by the Wesleys, Messrs. Morgan, Kirkham, Ingham, Broughton, Hervey; all students of Oxford, England, afterward joined by the eloquent Whitefield; your work has been among the children of men, seeking the lost, and directing them to the Lamb of God.

We come to extend congratulations to you for the splendid work you have done during the quadrennium just closing. The world looked with amazement and adoration upon the program you have put over for the good of those less fortunate beings who are within and without your fold. Your educational drive has been marvelous, and marvelously carried out. As is customary with you, you did not confine the beneficiaries to the members of your own race. All races have been benefited. We rejoice with the members of our race who are within the confines of your Church. Their advancement means our advancement. If they go down, we must of necessity go down with them.

We have been also interested in the subject of unification. Naturally we remembered 1844. The same rock of offense that caused the disruption is still in existence: only with this modification; it has grown larger and has become a more powerful factor for good. They have not only tasted, but have drunk deeply from the "Pierian Spring." They are not what their fathers were in those trying times. We looked, read, and wondered what would the answer be. True to form, with the love of God in your hearts, and the spirit of Wesley guiding you, you have spoken, and with no uncertain sound. You have invited all of your children to come to the banquet on equal terms. Like your Redeemer, you have said to them, "Drink and eat ye all of this."

We have followed carefully, step by step, the controversy going on between the so-called fundamentalists and the modernists. While many of those of different beliefs from us have been wrangling concerning the divinity of Christ and the Virgin birth, we have gone calmly on our way preaching the Gospel and telling the simple story of the Cross. In this day of doubting God's word, it behooves us, as ambassadors of the King of glory, to teach the plain Gospel truths, and leave the issue to Him who said that he came to the lost sheep of the House of Israel. We as a nation, are to be thankful that peace reigns within our borders. The country has about recovered from the results of the recent war that did so much to set civilization back into the "Dark Ages," or to the days of Imperial Rome, when Caligula and the cruel Nero held sway. If it were not for the religion of Christ, as preached by you and those who believe as you do, no one can tell what the dire consequences would have been by now.

The unscrupulous politician, the grafter, the criminal of every known grade are with us. You, as Christians, have fought evils from all sides. With your wealth and influence, much has been expected of you; and you have come up to the expectations of the most critical. You have not worked for the plaudits and hand-clap of the galleries; nor did you wait to see which way the popular wind was blowing before you acted; but where duty called, there you were found, whether it was pleasant or otherwise. You are one of the world's greatest factors for good. We, of the African Methodist Episcopal persuasion, are proud of you. We are not envious of our colored brethren who are with you. We say to them, be loyal to the Church that has done so much for you and fought and will fight your battles before the world. Through them you have been heard; and will be again. In spite of the great disadvantages of race and American prejudice that they have to come in contact with and overcome, the Methodist Episcopal Church stands before the powers that be and demands a fair and square deal for all men.

I quote from the Episcopal Address as delivered before this General Conference soon after the beginning of your present session:

"Much of the talk to-day about race consciousness is an unconscious recrudescence of the spirit that Jesus came to destroy, and leads straight to new hostilities. It flows from the feeling of superiority. We have repudiated election as applied to individuals and largely restrained it as applied to race. But our church must this day cry out in Christ's name that in Christ there is neither Jew nor Greek, barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free, that no men and no races are at the mercy of their environment or heredity.

"All false sense of superiority and inevitable advantage must be educated out. Intensified race consciousness tends all the time away from brotherhood; all the time toward strife and hostility. But the Church, facing the yellow races, the black races, the white races, must now speak her master word and follow her creative method, the method of the teacher rather than the method of the fighter or the reformer. The Church holds the ideas, the ideals and the principles of Jesus. She must remake the mind of the world for humanity.

"Let us repent, therefore, of race pride, race prejudice, the race bitterness; repent in America, repent in Asia; repent in Africa, repent in Europe. The Kingdom of Heaven is at hand. This is our gospel. We will not lose heart in it. Blood is thicker than water and the human family is of one blood. We will labor everywhere to make a unity of spirit in the races of the whole world. A house divided against itself cannot stand united."

your hospitable fold, sends us to tell you that you need not be ashamed of her. Though she ran away before she became of age, her subsequent history is one of which we are proud. Since setting up housekeeping for ourselves, in our humble way and through great troubles within and fightings without, we have succeeded so far. From one Conference of sixteen members, we have to-day eighty-five Conferences in America, and fifteen in foreign fields; namely, Africa, South America, Canada and the West Indies.

In 1816, when we held our first General Conference in the city of Philadelphia, there were only sixteen members to answer the roll-call. Now, our present Conference, now in session in the city of Louisville, is composed of over 700 members from America and foreign fields. In 1816 we had one bishop, no general officers, and, of course, no college presidents. To-day we have twenty living bishops, eleven general officers, sixteen colleges with as many presidents, and twelve seminaries, headed by as many deans, for the disseminating of religious knowledge. Aside from the colleges in America, we have one on the West coast of Africa, in Monrovia, and one in South Africa. From one church in Philadelphia, we now have churches of various grades and sizes; from the missions in the back woods of the Carolinas to the magnificent churches in Metropolitan centers such as Philadelphia, Washington, D. C., Baltimore, New York, Chicago, Boston and Atlanta.

Starting from the State of Pennsylvania we now have them in almost every State in the Union. From the extreme everglades of Florida to the frozen region of the Dominion of Canada: from the tempestuous waters of the Atlantic, to the shores gently washed by the calm Pacific. We have them from Texas on the Rio Grande to the balmy confines of sunny California. Since the migration of our people, we have followed them wherever they have gone, and have established churches in the cities of the great Northwest, where the African Methodist Episcopal Church was a stranger a few years ago.

We consider it no disgrace to tell you that we have patterned after you. Your policy has been to establish a church in every community where there is no church life, or one of your particular faith. With your wealth and influence, it is an easy thing for you to do; but with us it means sacrifice of the hardest kind. But we have tried to meet the issue; and, by the help of God, we have been, to an extent, successful.

In this quadrennium that is facing us, we, like you, are preparing to meet the issues as they come. Our young people must be kept within our fold, regardless of the sacrifices we will be called upon to make. The Church of to-day is passing, and we are passing with it. The children of to-morrow must take our places, just as we took the places of those fathers of yesteryear. We are confronted by the same problems that cause you to plan for the future generation. There are those who are endeavoring to make inroads upon us. We have to guard well our fold, in order to keep the wolf, in the shape of the so-called higher criticism; which is only another name for infidelity, from carrying off our lambs, and destroying them in the camp of the freethinker. Russia, to-day, has fallen to where she is because she has banished religion from within her borders. France came near being destroyed by Germany, because she, too, had about banished religion from her confines. She recovered in time: but it is a warning to her, as well as to any other nation that the nation that knows not God will be destroyed. We have come to let you know that, though we are too weak in certain respects to do your Connection any physical good; yet we are with you in spirit, and will continue to pray for, and carry you to a throne of grace, where God has promised to heed the prayers of those who call upon him earnestly. Upon that common ground we can join hands as well as hearts, and ask the Father of us all to help us put our program over, and save our young for the future Church.

Another formidable antagonist we have to combat is the drink evil. The demon rum is carrying his thousands downward yearly. It seems as though the earthly government is powerless to stem the tide; or else there is great laxity on its part. Wherever the fault lies, the Church of God must enter the breach, sword of the Spirit in hand, and do valiant battle for our King, if we expect victory to perch upon our banners. Coupled with the drink habit, is its twin brother, the drug habit. This insidious monster comes within the fold of the select of the earth. Where drink fears to enter, he sends his brother, who yearly carries to the grave his thousands. The statistics of the government alarm us when they show the thousands of promising young men and women, some from the best and most aristocratic families of the land, who are destroyed each year. Many are filling paupers', suicides' and murderers' graves, because of this curse, drug habit. Some are moral and physical wrecks; the mere flotsam and jetsam on the sea of life. We have come to tell you that we are with you in our prayers, as we hope you are with us in yours, in trying to save the Church of to-day, in order that the Church of to-morrow may be free from the blight of these fell destroyers of youths.

What we have accomplished through adversities and poverty of all kinds, will stand the test of the critics of the ages. We have come far, but not as far as you. We have made many mistakes; and who have not made them? None save Him who walked upon the sea, and bade the blind receive their sight. "It is human to err, and divine to forgive," is an old and true saying. Institutions, as well as individuals, have made mistakes.

So why not our Connection? But we are trying to profit by the mistakes of the past.

We have been sent to bear these greetings to you, and express our sincere hope that the quadrennium that is about to begin with you will hold out for you undreamed-of success. With continued faith in Christ, and the love of humanity that has characterized you from the beginning of your denominational existence, what is to prevent you from reaping a rich monetary harvest? But, knowing you as we do, we are satisfied that you will not be content with that: but you will be, like the emperor Titus, if you miss a day which you cannot look back upon as having done no kind act of humanity, you will exclaim as he did: "Oh, friends, we have lost a day."

Before the next roll-call of your General Conference, perhaps many who are members of this, will have been summoned to the courts above. But, those who shall be left, we wish for them and this Church of Wesley, all the blessings that can come from Him whose bounty cannot be measured. We wish for you such success in the missionary field, that before the next quadrennium shall come to a close, hundreds in China shall have put aside ancestral worship; hundreds in Japan their Shinto worship; hundreds in India their Brahmin. Then, when the spirit of Wesley, hand-in-hand with the spirit of Allen, shall stand at some vantage point in glory, and see the millions coming from all parts of the world, marching under the banner that was unfurled in the University of Oxford, perhaps he, too, shall be astonished; if there be such a thing as astonishment in heaven; and exclaim, in the language of one of old, "What hath God wrought."

In conclusion: When the ebb and flow of human hopes have forever ceased; when the terrestrial door of opportunity to reach the acme of noble endeavor has been finally closed; when the silver fringe of hopeful anticipation has been merged into the golden sun of gladsome realization; when the mist which veils the hilltops of unselfish endeavor has been penciled by the scintillations of eternity's morn into a rainbow of promises fulfilled; when the wheel of human activities no longer revolves; when the shuttle of patient toil is heard no more; when the din of sentiment, strife, and battle gives place to songs of everlasting joy; when the grand army of the world's burden bearers is summoned by the recording angel to answer to their names; out of the bosom of God's love, may each one of us in this assembly be able to respond, "Here am I; a sinner saved by grace."

14. THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH— WESTERN DIOCESE OF MASSACHUSETTS

THE SECRETARY: The following resolution was unanimously and heartily adopted this morning at the Annual Meeting of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Diocese of Western Massachusetts, now in session at St. Peter's Church, Buckingham Street, Springfield, Massachusetts:

The Twenty-third Annual Meeting of the Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Western Massachusetts extend to the Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church now in session in Springfield, their fraternal greetings and assurance that the work of this great Christian Communion has been remembered in their prayers.

BISHOP WALDORF: Rev. John H. Nolan of St. Peter's Protestant Episcopal Church of this city brought this communication. Would you like him presented?

A DELEGATE: I so move.

The motion was duly seconded and unanimously prevailed.

BISHOP WALDORF: I have great honor in presenting Dr. Nolan.

GREETINGS AS PRESENTED BY REV. JOHN H. NOLAN

I was delegated to bring down that communication. I was not delegated to make a speech, but I wish I had been; I am just in a good mood for making a speech with such a crowd as this before me. But I am not allowed to do that because I was not sent here for any such purpose. I will not bother you. I just want to say this much: That I have been attending this Conference, practically everyone of the meetings, and I want to express my own gratitude to this Conference for having provided me, so far, I think with about a year's sermons in advance.

BISHOP WALDORF: May I say for you that this body feels highly honored by this communication and by the presence of this distinguished Christian gentleman and minister of the gospel.

J. M. ARTERS (Maine): I move you, Mr. Chairman, that our Committee on Fraternal Delegates, be instructed to reply to this communication and provide a representative of this Conference to attend the evening session of the Annual Meeting of the Diocese of Western Massachusetts.

15. THE SALVATION ARMY IN THE UNITED STATES

Wallace MacMullen Chairman of the Committee on the Reception of Fraternal Delegates:

MR. CHAIRMAN AND MEMBERS OF THE CONFERENCE: The Salvation Army is the militant field force of the armies of God, the almoner of the bounties of God, the champion and the advocate of the poor. Its commander in America is Miss Evangeline Booth whom it is a very great honor to introduce.

MISS EVANGELINE BOOTH: MR. CHAIRMAN: I cannot address this distinguished audience in any other way than as my dear friends. I cannot say in words, I cannot express to you how deeply I appreciate this great honor that has been conferred upon me in giving me the opportunity to meet with this very distinguished audience. I have only a few minutes, seven or eight minutes, to speak, but how much I wish that it was my added pleasure to listen to the words of some others here rather than to be speaking myself, the words of those who are, perhaps, a little further along the journey than I have traveled, the words of those who have probably most likely, had a far greater, vaster experience. It would indeed have made me happy if this could have been so, but the Conference, which has given me this invitation and tendered me this great courtesy, in the interests, I am confident, of the work I have the honor to represent, has decided otherwise. Therefore, I appreciate deeply the opportunity of bringing to you the greetings of the Salvation Army and assurances of their continued remembrance of you in the great work in which you are engaged, and also the promise of their prayers.

You know something of the Salvation Army. You know the character of the organization, the peculiar character of our activities. You know that we operate under a military system which gives to the movement the great advantage of uniting and thus augmenting all our activities, from the larger down to the smaller. You also know that our movement is of an international nature and that through the grace of God and the great favor of his blessing we have unfurled our blood and fire flag with its strivings of liberty, hope, and peace, for the common people, under eighty different skies, and that with the blessing of God we preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ in almost all the languages of the earth.

I believe you also know the deeply religious nature of all our teachings; that our standards are very, very high. We ask, nay, we claim, that sacrificial devotion shall be the controlling impetus of every service. We ask that our members should consecrate themselves, their gifts, their time, their strength, to the forwarding, the advancing, of the interests of the kingdom of God. But above all, I think, the Salvation Army is known for its purpose, the world-wide purpose that brought us into being, the all-absorbing purpose, that purpose which has given a passion to our organization, that purpose which has given a fire to our operations, that purpose which has given an earnestness, a sincerity, an unction, to the utterances of our most ordinary members, those the least tutored, the least learned, the least educated, which has made us a most potential factor in our work for the uplift of mankind in whatever nation and whatever city we have operated, our purpose to take the tidings of the Gospel to those who are down and have little chance, to the forgotten masses, to the unthought of, to the lost in darkness, the lost in misery, the lost in circumstances, so adverse to righteousness and purity that it indeed covers them and keeps them beyond the thought and recollection of the majority of good people.

Our sacrifice, our service, our devotion, our lives, our organization, collectively as an organization and individually, have been laid upon this altar, the altar of man, the altar of fallen manhood, that we might lift up the people. This was the purpose that brought the Salvation Army into being.

My father, the founder of the organization, when standing in the presence of King Edward at an interview which was granted him, said in his concluding remarks: "Your Majesty, some men's passion is art, some men's passion is fame; Your Majesty, some men's passion is gold, but my passion is man." That has been the flame that has ignited like fires in the breasts of all his followers. That has been the altar upon which we have laid our sacrifice, out of love for God. That is how our love for man has found expression. We have gone down into the dark and hidden places—we know them—with the Gospel of Jesus Christ. We have sought in the language of the common people to repeat the old, old story that has come down through the ages and has not lost its significance in nineteen centuries. We have gone down into the lowest places and have sought to present Jesus Christ again in the flesh, touching and healing the wounds of the people. We have sought to adapt our teachings to their mental status, to their knowledge, to their simple education, to their simple knowledge of things and affairs. But we have not trusted to knowledge. Our faith has not been placed in the wisdom of man. Our faith has been placed in the power of Jesus Christ and we have looked to and trusted and witnessed the miracle again and again, ten thousand times over, the miracle of revelation, the miracle of faith that waits not for science, that waits not for knowledge, that waits not for understanding, but faith that rather favors not understanding, for where science and reason stop, faith begins. So we have seen it, as no other people perhaps, under any skies. We have seen it with the heathen, we have seen it with the convict, we have seen it with the pauper, we have seen it with the ugly, we have seen it with the depraved, we have seen it with the debauched, we have seen it with those who have seemed never to walk in normal intelligence, we have seen it with the most degraded, we have seen the most loathsome and depraved wretch that ever crawled out of the ditch of his abomination, looking unto Him for mercy. We have seen him to be found an all-pardoning Redeemer, over and over again.

Our faith has not altered, it has not changed, it has not lessened. Our work has grown, we have come up from one single street meeting to unfurling our flag under every sky, to a great mighty host gathered from the homes and culled from all the nations of the earth until it stands as a mighty bulwark for civilization and against Barbarism such as never before has been known. But, we have not changed, our teaching has not changed. Did I not see him, did I not hear him, my own father, at the age of eighty-four, three weeks only before he passed to his reward, before the old soldier, the old warrior, dropped the sword to receive the Crown; did I not see him standing in London before a multitude of 13,000; did I not see him, eighty-four years of age, erect, his illumined countenance, his silver-crowned head, his long symmetrical hands, as he threw them out, in the presence of that vast multitude; did I not hear him at the age of eighty-four years, as he lifted his mortal blindness—for he was blind in both eyes—as he lifted his mortal blindness and got immortal vision; did I not see the light that seemed to come from far above the sun reflected upon his countenance; and did I not hear him with a voice that reached the uttermost corners of that great building, say to those people in the City of London, "Behold, behold, one hope for the world, one panacea for all its ills, one solace for all its wounds, one consolation for all its sorrows, one pardon and redemption for all its sins." "Behold," he said, "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world."

Eighty-four years of age! The first text he preached on when a boy of fifteen in the streets of Nottingham, the town in which he was born. He had not changed. Persecution and stones and sticks had not made him waver, and in later years worship by the world, and favor, and compliment, and the admiration of rulers of every nation, the greatest applause perhaps that could ever come to a man, coming to my father could not make him change. He did not compromise. He left his people with an example that we can never, never close our eyes to. He left us with a hope that could never be driven from our hearts, and with the thought inscribed in letters of imperishable light across our souls that there was one hope for the world, the power of God unto salvation.

We have sought as an organization to follow in his footsteps, the footsteps of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. This is our success with the poor. This is what has gathered the multitudes. This is what has picked them up from the lowest depths, enabling us to see men reformed. You know the story. You have seen the same thing, only perhaps the course led down for us, took us down to lower and more desperate depths. We have sought and are seeking and will ever seek, as an organization, to love mercy, to do justly, to carry ourselves in humility and charity, the predominating characteristics of the divine author of our salvation.

I am so grateful to have this opportunity just to speak these few words and ask your continuance in prayer for us. Think of us now and again. We have many troubles, many burdens. Our path is often so difficult. Our trials are often so many. And if we could know that you pray for us and remember us, and when you can, by word of lip or touch of hand or small kindness make our battle a little easier, and help the Salvation Army forward with a swifter speed, then I think, as you in this great crowd know so well, it will come back as bread cast upon the waters, blessing your own work and life.

Because I am not only the child of the founder of the Salvation Army, but am the child of that one who started his ministry as a Methodist minister, do not think I am presuming if I say to this crowd this morning, let us hold to our faith. Let us hold to the whole and complete Bible. We must not compromise. We must not trim and cut. We must not give anything away to please the critics. My mother said, "As you look back over your career, my children, all that will matter will be how little you have wavered in life. Not how many literary mistakes you have made, not how many grammatical mistakes you have made, not how sometimes you got the thing a little twisted; but all that will matter will be, when the chill waves of the last river play about your feet and final crossing is to be made, and the final reckoning is approaching—it will be how little you have wavered in trusting God and his Word, and how strongly you have held to faith in the whole gospel of God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost."

BISHOP NUELSEN: I am sure this Conference wants me to say to Miss Booth, in just a word, that we appreciate very much not only her coming to us, but her giving us this message; and she has seen from the faces of all these men and women that we are helped and blessed by the words she has spoken to us. She has taken us to those places where we have seen not only the face of her father whom we revere and love, but the face of Him who was the strength of her father, the face of Jesus Christ. I am sure I express the sentiment not only of this Conference but of the whole Church when I say to Miss Booth that the prayers of this body and the prayers of the whole Methodist Church ascend to the throne of grace that God may abundantly bless the work of the Salvation Army, and may abundantly bless Miss Booth.

MISS BOOTH: I do thank you. It seems very wonderful to me that you should honor me in this way. Of course, I know it is not myself, I know it is my father, and I know it is the work of the Salvation Army. But to me it does seem like a crown. What little I have been able to give personally from my life, from the age of a little girl ever seeking to follow in my parental footsteps, I have been able to give to God. And I do thank you. If the saints in glory can know the thing that could not help adding gladness to their hearts if they were on earth, then I believe my father knows of this gathering here just now. And I cannot help thinking, because he was of such a practical turn of mind, that he will arrange for some blessing to come down upon your heads and your souls because of the blessing you have sought to bring to his child and his great organization. I would like to say, please forgive me, that when I opened my remarks I did not include the ladies. I had supposed that this was going to be a kind of a little Conference that I was coming into, and I could not see the ladies. I should have felt so much better if I could have seen them, because in my public work, I have tried to avoid addressing gentlemen only. I feel that the influence of women's presence is always so helpful. However, I know your heart is with me and my heart is with you all. You send me from you with a hope and an uplift which will never pass away.

16. THE ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE OF AMERICA

Wallace MacMullen, Chairman of the Committee on the Reception of Fraternal Delegates:

BRETHREN OF THE CONFERENCE: Your committee asks the privilege of presenting at this time, not for the purpose of hearing messages from them, much as we would like that, but for your reception of them, Dr. F. Scött McBride, of the United Presbyterian Church, who is now General Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League.

Rev. Dr. McBride came forward and was cordially and enthusiastically greeted by the Conference.

WALLACE MACMULLEN: Dr. McBride, as you will remember, is the successor of our own Dr. Baker. Your committee asks also the privilege of presenting Dr. Howard H. Russell, of the Congregational Church, who was the founder of the Anti-Saloon League of America.

Rev. Dr. Russell came forward and was cordially and enthusiastically greeted by the Conference.

17. THE NAVY CHAPLAINS OF THE UNITED STATES

SEE JOURNAL, PAGE 311

BISHOP LEETE: The order of the day is the introduction of the speaker who comes to represent the Navy. I recognize Dr. Wallace MacMullen.

J. R. EDWARDS: A question of privilege. I move that we request J. W. Edel, the father of Chaplain Edel, who is to speak to us, to introduce his son after Dr. MacMullen has made his statement.

Wallace MacMullen, Chairman of the Committee on the Reception of Fraternal Delegates;

We are highly honored in having sent to us as a regularly accredited delegate a representative of the Corps of Navy Chaplains. There are eighty members in that group, and of them we have nine from our Church, and nine from the Church, South. Chaplain W. W. Edel, as representing the Navy Chaplains, becomes a representative to us from the United States Government. I have very great pleasure in introducing his father, an honored layman of the Baltimore delegation, to present his son.

J. W. EDEL: The Methodist Episcopal Church has signally honored me many times. First, in that it gave me to a Methodist father and mother. Secondly, in that it gave me to a Methodist woman. Thirdly, in that it gave to me a Methodist boy. And I can do no more in return than to give this boy to the Methodist Church. I have done that, in that he first gave himself to the Methodist Church. I could do nothing else, because you know in this age in the world, the parents do not decide for the children; but the children decide for the parents. Now comes another honor to me the honor of standing before you and introducing to you my boy. If I were to say all that I might say about him you would think me supremely proud: so I will not say what I think of him, but let his speech represent what he has been for me.

The Conference rose to greet Chaplain Edel of the U. S. Navy, and the bishop said: "I have the honor to present to you Chaplain Edel of the United States Navy and the Methodist Church."

FRATERNAL ADDRESS OF CHAPLAIN W. W. EDEL

BISHOP LEETE, AND GENTLEMEN OF THE CONFERENCE: I bring you the heartiest greetings of the corps of chaplains of the United States Navy to the greatest deliberative body of Protestantism. There are many phases of opinion to-day about war, its desirability, the possibility of permanent international peace, and the means to achieve amity among nations. You and I may have different opinions about the manner in which to achieve permanent peace. This Church has placed itself again and again as a strong protagonist of international peace, and I give place to no man in my upholding of that same strong desire that the nations may know war no more and that the peoples of this world may dwell together in harmony and in concord. However, I am not a thorough-going pacifist. I believe in the ideal of peace, and yet I believe in using common sense methods to achieve that ideal. I believe in making, as far as we possibly can, our nation safe for the keeping of the peace for the whole wide world. I believe that America must stand definitely and completely and concretely for peace at all times. But yet I, with our President, believe that we want no competitive armament but at the same time we want no weakness that invites aggression. Whatever our differences of opinion might be on the manner of achieving peace, I represent to-day the spiritual work among 150,000 young men who wear the uniform. Talk about your youth movement. The United States Navy is a youth machine, because the men of the navy are young men. There are nine Methodist Episcopal chaplains in the navy, doing work among 150,000 young men. And there are nine of our Southern Methodist chaplains also. And I am glad to feel that the men of the navy are willing to place themselves as a living bulwark between their land and any aggressor which tries to overrun that land. I believe in a war for defense if that is necessary. I want to walk with my head in the clouds of a glorious optimism. I want to believe in peace. Still I want to keep my feet, as Jesus Christ did, on the solid rock of sound, sanctified, Christian common sense. Gentlemen, if you are going to cut the Church of John Wesley away from the men in military service, you are going to leave 150,000 young men to live like beasts without Christian inspiration and to die like dogs without Christian consolation. Methodism cannot do that. Gentlemen, if Methodism has no message to these men, if there is nothing in the words of Wesley that we can say to them, if we as Methodists cannot speak to the men of our navy, Methodism would better close her doors, haul down her banners, and say that Wesley was a pious fanatic when he said, "The world is my parish."

Let me tell you what the navy chaplain does. He may have any number of different types of work. He may, first, be in charge of a battleship with a floating parish of anywhere from 600 to 1,600 young men. He may as their pastor speak to them week by week. He may be chaplain to a shore station, where his work is comparable to that of a large city parish, with its manifold activities, its pastoral work, and its various types of Christian ministry. He may be on the foreign field, and have a place among the natives of Samoa, or Guam, or the Philippines, or the Virgin Islands, and do a work which is entirely missionary in its aspect. He may be in educational work, as three chaplains now are, giving their entire time to educational work, one in Samoa, one in Guam, and one for the entire United States navy. The navy chaplain does these various types of work. Hear me about what you can do for the navy chaplain.

You can place behind him the united front of the Methodist Church. You can let him know that you will not cut him loose, you can let him know that you are behind him and will support him at every hour. You can let him know that Methodism is not going to recede from the position that she occupies as a ministering body, to the men of the United States Navy. You can give him, not financial assistance—he does not ask that—but you can give him your moral assistance, the spiritual fervor that you have and the passion for the souls of men, you can give him that and he can use that when he goes out in his work.

Hear me for one more minute about what the navy chaplain can do for Methodism. The navy chaplain is the unofficial ambassador for Christ in all the cities of all the countries of the world. It may not have occurred to you that when the episcopal area rule went into effect, the navy chaplain took over one of the duties of the Bishop, but the fact is that he travels at large throughout the connection. In the last quadrennium, I have traveled over 200,000 miles, many thousands of miles on land and water, and many miles by air. I have looked into the missionary stations of Methodism in many lands. The navy chaplain is a disinterested observer of all missionary effort. Men who will not talk to a minister will talk to the chaplain, and through your organization, he can speak to your missionary board, and tell the missionary and the board what these people think about missions, and he can give you constructive suggestions about your program. Come to him and ask him for his assistance where he can give it, and he will be glad to give it wherever he can be of assistance to his church.

Members of the General Conference, I esteem it a very high privilege to have been chosen to speak to you. It is not often that a fraternal delegate can speak with love more than fraternal as he speaks to you, but I can, for I am not only a member of the Baltimore Conference of this great Church, but I have a Methodist father and a Methodist mother, who are both here to-day; and I have two Methodist girls, who some day I will bring into the Church myself, and I am Methodist all the way through. Now, I say that for this reason, because so many times we have heard that the navy chaplain gives up his denomination when he enters the service, or stultifies himself, or closes his mouth, or is not able to speak his message. I tell you, despite what others may say, the navy chaplain can be an ambassador these days, and can speak a message worthy of him at any time. I am a navy chaplain, but first and beyond that I am a Methodist, and intend to remain so to the very end of my days.

I thank you for the courtesy of your hearing. I thank you for the honor that you have paid both to myself and my father at this hour. I thank you in the name of the corps of chaplains of the United States Navy, for the assurance of support in their work the whole wide world around.

18. THE ARMY CHAPLAIN OF THE UNITED STATES

Wallace MacMullen, Chairman of the Committee on the Reception of Fraternal Delegates:

Introduced Chaplain Frank M. Thompson. By your own action last week you voted ten minutes at this time to receive the accredited representative of the Army Chaplains of the United States. Their representative is Captain Frank Thompson, a member of the Baltimore Conference. I have very great pleasure in introducing him.

The Conference rose to receive the Chaplain.

FRATERNAL ADDRESS OF CHAPLAIN FRANK M. THOMPSON

I beseech your sweet sympathy. I was with an artillery regiment in France, but I never stood in the presence of so many big guns. I come as a man of peace, not as a man of war. I come not to advocate a material preparedness but spiritual preparedness. We who knew war will gladly welcome the time when "The war drums shall throb no longer and the battle flags are furled, In the parliament of man, the federation of the world."

The chaplains greet you. They thank you for those resolutions recommending an increase in their number, for the placing of the chaplain on the same basis as the medical corps in the U. S. Army. But I speak not so much for the chaplains as for the men to whom the chaplains minister. One of the sad things connected with the aftermath of the world war was the change of public feeling toward the men who went forth to defend their country. Kipling well describes the American feeling, as well as the British feeling, in his Tommy Atkins,

"O it's Tommy this, and Tommy that,
And 'Throw him out, the brute.'
But, it's 'Thank you, Mr. Atkins,'
When the guns begin to shoot."

We must never forget the men who served, many under the spell of a mighty ideal, many because duty called, some because they could not do otherwise; but they all served. That is the thing we must not forget, for the nation that forgets her benefactors forgets the source of her greatness, and in that hour sows the seed of decay and death. The doughboys, your boys, came with laughing eyes and white teeth from hill and valley and plain in a never ending stream to the great camps of the world's war. They crowded like sheep deep down in the hold of ships. They landed like knights of old on a foreign shore. They trudged through sunshine, rain, snow, mud, until the time came to go over the top or out into the dark. They went uncomplainingly and unafraid.

"They packed up their troubles in their old kit bag
And smiled, smiled, smiled."

The men who wear the uniform to-day are made out of the same stuff. For them we appeal for your hearty appreciation. There may come a time when we shall no longer sing those glowing lines:

"In the beauty of the lilies, Christ was born across the sea,
With the glory in his bosom that transfigures you and me.
As he died to make men holy, let us die to make men free."

But perhaps we shall sing it with a new significance. Surely there is a way into a warless world without in any way reflecting on the devotion, the patriotism, the sacrifice of those who died and those who would die in order that the old flag might never touch the ground.

The chaplain from the navy told you of the magnificent work of the navy chaplains. Our work is like unto his, so we need say little along that line, except that in the last fiscal year, the attendance of officers and enlisted men at divine services conducted by the chaplains was 1,500,000. It might be interesting for you to know that out of that 125 chaplains in the regular army, thirty of them belong to the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of the 786 chaplains in the reserve corps, 150 are Methodists. It seems that some Methodist preachers are in accord with the Irishman who would have peace if he had to fight for it.

The navy chaplain also called attention to the wide-flung field of his itinerancy. We invite you to join the army and see the world. In my short tour I have sailed across the great blue Atlantic, fought cooties in the dug-outs in France, sailed the blue waters of the Mediterranean, plucked flowers on the summits of the Alps, watched the passing shows on the Champs Elysée in Paris, sipped the sweet milk of the cocoanuts in the jungles of Panama, rode 400 miles on horseback along the Mexican border and fished in the Rio Grande, whose waters are so muddy that the catfish swim backward to keep the mud out of their eyes.

But, men of this Conference, in all my travel I have never experienced such a thrill as the one I now experience as I stand before this great Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, composed of the finest body of men God's blue sky ever shone upon. I thank you.

1. BISHOP WILSON SEELY LEWIS

READ BY REV. FRANK D. GAMEWELL

In my office in Shanghai I have a book which tells some of the inner secrets of the great World War. On the fly-leaf of this book Bishop Lewis wrote: "I read this book August 21-27, 1920. The helplessness of humanity, either individual or group, to lift itself, or alone to save itself, is writ large on every page. We shall perish unless Jesus Christ save us."

This conviction deep and abiding was the motive power of Bishop Lewis' life, a life that began in Russell, New York, July 17, 1857, and was finished on earth August 24, 1921, at Sioux City, Iowa, a period of a little over sixty-four years.

My first acquaintance with Bishop Lewis dates back a little over twenty years, when he was President of Morningside College, Sioux City, Iowa. I had heard much about President Lewis through our mutual friend, Dr. J. B. Trimble, a brother of Miss Lydia Trimble and one to whom Foochow Conference, and Hwa Nan College in particular, owes much.

As a rule one who has carried the heavy duties of a College President during the year plans for some degree of rest during the summer. Morningside College was in a precarious condition financially when President Lewis assumed control. During the summer instead of taking needed rest, he filled the important pulpit of Hanson Place Methodist Episcopal Church, Brooklyn, N. Y. This work, in addition to the good his deeply spiritual preaching achieved, gave him contact with those who could advance the interests of the College. President Lewis emerged into the vision of the world at large through the splendid work he accomplished at Morningside.

By unflagging energy and well-directed effort he lifted Morningside College to a place where it received the recognition of the General Education Board, which is assumed to be as exacting a test as has yet been applied to our American institutions.

I was at the General Conference in Baltimore in 1908 when Bishop Lewis was elected to the episcopacy. He had never been to a General Conference until he went to Baltimore. For years he had been interested in a scheme to bring into close cooperation the five Methodist Colleges in Iowa, and he was not attracted to the episcopacy. As his vote mounted higher and higher he consulted Dr. J. M. Buckley regarding withdrawing his name. Dr. Buckley convinced him that his duty was to abide by the decision of the General Conference and he was elected and assigned to China.

Bishop Lewis was built in a big mold. He was incapable of pettiness. A widely advertised tri-State Convention was held in Sioux City and he was to have filled an important place on the program. In some way the schedule became belated and he passed the word to those of us who were responsible for the Convention that his address should be omitted and that was done. The action indicated the character of the man. He was incapable of any concern as to whether or not he received due consideration.

Those charged with administrative responsibility must at times perform disagreeable duties and accept the consequences. I remember on one occasion when some of the consequences of administration were coming his way, he turned to me and said in a big-hearted good-natured way, "Well, what are we here for if it is not to be pounded at times?"

Bishop Lewis was one of the greatest-hearted men I have ever known and one whose family affection was very strong. Once we were traveling together down the Yangtze River. His son John, then unmarried, was stationed at Ningkwofu, a place south of Wuhu. The down river boats reach Wuhu at 4 A. M. At breakfast I asked the Bishop if he had slept well. He said fairly well, but told me he had gotten up at Wuhu and gone outside and peered wistfully over the hills in the darkness to the place where his boy was, adding, "He is no longer a boy. He is a man. But it is wonderful how a father's love and concern follow a child always."

Bishop Bashford, whose eager mind always searched for the "why" of men and things, sought to discover the source of Bishop Lewis' power. Of course the ultimate source of all power is in God, but there are various channels through which that power works and expresses itself. That is to say, each life has its overshadowing type. After Bishop Lewis had been in China some time, one day Bishop Bashford said to me: "I have it. I know the secret of Bishop Lewis' power. Bishop Lewis knows God. Bishop Lewis walks with God."

Bishop Lewis was preeminently a man of prayer. He prevailed in prayer. He used to come to my office in New York and we would talk over his problems of the College, and those connected with the home base and the foreign areas of the mission fields, and then, before he would leave I would turn the key to my door and together we would kneel in prayer for the interests we had been discussing. A few years before his death he was called to Peking for an important meeting. Later I met one who was in attendance, a man who measures his words, and in discussing the meeting and the Bishop's visit, he said: "He made a wonderful prayer at the opening of the meeting. That prayer alone would have justified his trip to Peking." I remember on one occasion in New York, after we had had a committee meeting, he said, "We have been talking together all day. I do not need an evening meal. I will go now and talk with God about these things." And he told me next day that he had spent a good part of the night in prayer.

Bishop Lewis keenly felt and was powerfully influenced by the death of Bishop Bashford. I heard his addresses on Bishop Bashford at most of the Annual Conferences in China in 1919, and at Des Moines in 1920. He said to me repeatedly that more and more his consuming desire was to spend what was left of life preaching the Gospel and seeking to bring men to Jesus Christ.

Thank God for the life and triumphant faith of Bishop Lewis. May the lesson of his great-souled, self-effacing devotion sink deep into our hearts and lives.

2. BISHOP M. C. HARRIS

READ BY REV. H. B. JOHNSON

At sunset, Sunday, May 8, 1921, after forty years of missionary service for the Japanese in Japan and the United States, and at the ripe age of nearly seventy-five, Bishop Meriman Colbert Harris died in Aoyama, Tokyo, Japan, in the beautiful home which had been presented to him by a host of Japanese friends.

The outline of his honored life may be compressed into one paragraph, but the beauty and richness of that life cannot be expressed in a volume. He was born at Beallsville, Ohio, July 9, 1846, served three years with the Twelfth Ohio Cavalry during the Civil War, and joined the Pittsburgh Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1869. He graduated from Allegheny College in 1873, and the same year went to Japan as one of the first five Methodist missionaries, soon after being united in marriage with Miss Flora Lydia Best of Meadville, Pa. Subsequently his Alma Mater conferred upon him three higher degrees—Master of Arts in 1880, Doctor of Divinity in 1887, and Doctor of Laws in 1904.

His first missionary work was in Northern Japan, where he and his young wife were the first Protestant missionaries, where he baptized many who became leading Japanese Christians, and where he also served his country as Vice-Consul and Acting Consul. In 1886 he returned to America on account of the illness of his wife and was appointed to Japanese work in San Francisco. During the next eighteen years he established the Japanese work of the Methodist Episcopal Church on the Pacific Coast and in Hawaii, becoming the first Superintendent of the Pacific Japanese Mission in 1900.

At the Los Angeles General Conference in May, 1904, he represented the California Conference and was elected and ordained Missionary Bishop for Japan and Korea, and during the next twelve years he was particularly active both in Korea and Japan with residences at Seoul and Tokyo. These were very trying years, particularly in Korea, but he was especially helpful in adjusting delicate situations.

He was three times decorated by the Emperor of Japan for meritorious services: In 1898 with the Order of the Rising Sun, Fifth Class; in 1905 with the Third Class of the Order of Sacred Treasure; and in 1916 with the Second Class of the same order. This last was on the occasion of a great gathering in his honor in Tokyo when he was about to return to America to ask retirement at the General Conference at Saratoga. This request was granted, and suitable resolutions of appreciation were passed.

Bishop Harris was proud of membership in several organizations; the Ohio Society of California, the Grand Army of the Republic, the Asiatic Society of Japan and the Japan Societies of America and London, but he was particularly gratified with his connection with the Christian ministry. It is noteworthy that Bishops Harris and Thoburn were raised not far apart, that they graduated from the same college, and that they were both elected Missionary Bishops for Asia after many years of efficient missionary service. It is thought that young Harris was prompted to give himself for service in Eastern Asia through the letters of Thoburn written from India.

Mrs. Harris passed away in 1909 and was laid to rest at Aoyama Cemetery, Tokyo, beside their little daughter who died at sea when they were en route to Japan the second time. Ten years after her passing, in 1919, he was married to her cousin, Miss Elizabeth Best of Philadelphia, the daughter of the Rev. Wesley C. Best of the Philadelphia Conference. She accompanied him to Japan and now survives him at Philadelphia.

His twelve years as an effective Bishop were during most trying times, but his faith in the people, both Koreans and Japanese, dominated his every act. His faith in the Japanese and his love for them was never stronger than during his last years. His nature was essentially spiritual, and his children in the Gospel are innumerable. Multiplied thousands were influenced for good through his life and labors. He scattered sunshine everywhere. His faith accounted for his joy and optimism. Another said of him, "At once his gracious personality, his self-effacing persistency in service, his Christian sympathy and brotherly love for those among whom he had come to live and labor commended him to people of all classes." He is still with us in spirit, and his influence will continue to abide.

3. BISHOP J. M. THOBURN

READ BY REV. BRENTON THOBURN BADLEY

James Mills Thoburn for more than sixty years held the heart of the Methodist Episcopal Church because he planted his feet in the footprints of our Christ. The challenge and inspiration of his life and labors is before us to-day, and will be as long as his divine Master is loved and obeyed.

To know Thoburn was to get an interpretation of Jesus Christ. No man ever gave to Asia a truer or more complete idea of the Christian life than did Thoburn. Christ never had a more devoted, brilliant, or farseeing ambassador in Asia. The output of his life was phenomenal because its intake was extraordinary. His spiritual experiences were so deep and abiding that his activities were amazing, both in their extent and significance.

Like many other great men, he made famous the almost unknown place of his birth. St. Clairsville, Ohio, has gone down in the annals of the Methodist Episcopal Church as a place of outstanding significance, and the year 1836 is indelibly inscribed on the pages of Methodist history.

Brought up in a home where prayer abounded and the kingdom of God was the supreme issue, Thoburn early received the divine call to preach. He heard no word, but needed none. He says: "The commission could not have been more specific and clear had the visible Son of God said to me, 'Go preach my Gospel.' From that hour I could preach with or without visible results. A foundation of adamant had glided under my feet." At twenty-three, he was on his way as a missionary to India. He always said of his call to India: "That hour stands in my life as the burning bush must have stood in the memory of Moses."

It was in 1859, only three years after William Butler had landed in India, that Thoburn, in company with the Parkers, Waughs and Downeys, arrived at Calcutta. His first appointments were to Naini Tal and Pauri. Subsequently he gave several years to Moradabad and Lucknow, at the latter place, in 1871, becoming the first editor of the "Indian Witness." In 1873 he went to Calcutta to follow up the work of the great evangelist, William Taylor, and from that time till 1888, he made that great city the center of his activities.

From Calcutta Thoburn was led in a most remarkable way to, Rangoon, Burma, then to Singapore on the equator, and finally to Manila, beginning new chapters of spiritual triumphs in each place. The opening of the work in Singapore, he used to declare, was "the crowning adventure" of his missionary career.

In 1888 Thoburn was elected India's first Missionary Bishop, and from that year till 1900 he gave Methodism in India a leadership that could not have been excelled by any man, and at the same time put India on America's heart as none other had ever done. Thoburn became between India and America a link of such strength that for generations to come its binding power will be in evidence.

In 1900 Bishop Thoburn's health was severely shaken, and while he continued an effective relationship till 1908, he was, for the most part, in America, and did not carry much of the burden. He returned to India in 1906, and was a prominent figure in the Jubilee of Indian Methodism at Bareilly in the early part of 1907. He bore a decreasing share of the work till 1908, and at the General Conference of that year, after twenty years in the Missionary Episcopacy, retired from active work. His remaining fourteen years were spent in America, mostly at Meadville, Pennsylvania, where on November 28, 1922, his "weary feet" passed through the wide-open portal of Heaven, and trod the golden streets of the "city that hath foundations," and of whose glories he had so often spoken.

Probably the most striking thing about Bishop Thoburn was the way in which he combined the spiritual and supernatural elements with the practical and business qualities of life. This combination was in his case so perfect that it gave to his life a symmetry and value altogether unusual. In the counsels of the Church, whether in America or on the foreign field, Bishop Thoburn was pre-eminently the man of vision. His awareness of the spirit world was remarkable, yet he gave no "uncanny" feeling to those who met him. He was mystical to an unusual degree, yet he kept his feet always on the earth, talking of spiritual things as one who holds them in this present life for the fullest possible use.

Back of this unusual combination of characteristics there was a very inner experience of Divine things. Early in life he established a contact with Jesus Christ that never ceased. The "Man of Calvary" was always "at his side." Bishop Thoburn did not think of himself as sometimes working with God, and sometimes just venturing forth alone to try his hand in the way of experiment. He was always working at God-appointed tasks, with his Lord at his side to direct and empower. This led him in all the long years of his preaching to place a value on the presence and power of the Holy Spirit that constituted the main emphasis of his life.

Faith was an essential part of Thoburn's equipment. He also "endured as seeing Him who is invisible." The faith that Moses needed for his desert experience was of the type that Thoburn depended on in his missionary career. Obstacles he believed were made only to be surmounted, distances existed just to be overcome, and trials were sent merely to stiffen our fiber for the severest tests. The powers of darkness and the enticements of the lower nature are helpless before such a man.

In the heart of Bishop Thoburn existed a Christian empire, the product of his faith. What had been born there he knew could be established in India and the world. He was willing that this should take as long as God willed and planned, but he was not content to let the coming of that day be delayed by any lack of zeal or faithfulness on his own part.

Bishop Thoburn's life was one of prayer. It was his means of communication with God. He never cut his communications, nor did he permit anyone or anything else to do so. If you dealt with Thoburn, you had also to deal with Christ. The two were inseparable: for him to "live was Christ." Thoburn did not "agonize" much in prayer. He lived in a generation when such a thing was common; but for him the more reasonable attitude in prayer was to ask, believing, and to take it for granted that God had heard and would answer. His prayers were short, definite and direct. He knew what he wished to ask for, he knew how to put it into words, and he did so with a sincerity and conviction that presupposed the truth and faithfulness of his "God and Father." His communion was of the type we expect between those who are on intimate terms and where no shadow of a doubt exists on either side. To hear Thoburn pray was to know that God was listening. Such words were never thrown to the winds, or sent forth in a vague hope that somewhere in the universe there might be an ear to take them in.

Bishop Thoburn was essentially a prophet. This aspect of his life escaped no one who knew him intimately. He saw great things ahead, and did not hesitate to give expression to his visions.

Bishop Thoburn's thought moved in spacious realms. There was a largeness of conception about him that made him a striking character in any Christian gathering in the world. He "thought in totals," not in "items." His spiritual daring was both challenging and contagious. Speaking at the ecumenical missionary conference at New York in 1900, he declared: "If this Conference and those whom it represents will do their duty, within the first decade of the new century, ten million souls might be gathered into the Church of Christ." The Church as a whole never caught his vision. Have we caught it yet? Thoburn, under God, became the leader of the Church in the great "mass movements" that have brought countless thousands of India's lowly ones into the folds of the Church. The millions that he foresaw are still to come. For them the spirit of the translated Thoburn still pleads, and the watchman cries, "The morning breaketh."

What brought the greatest fame to Bishop Thoburn was his preaching and his missionary addresses. Bishop Merrill said that Thoburn was the greatest preacher of Methodism. Probably he has not been surpassed as a speaker on the theme of Missions. Nor was his eloquence the only greatness displayed by him on the platform. Even more commanding was the spiritual power of his utterances and the way in which they took hold of the hearts of men, and women, young and old. He not only touched, but he transformed them, shaping them in the interests of Christ whose love ever "constrained" him. His preaching was simple and direct, but clear and compelling in its thought. He was a master of illustration, and brought to his preaching a high order of thought. His mind was such as to admit him into any intellectual circle of the world. He might have been a famous lawyer, a great mathematician, a supremely successful teacher, a keen business man, a statesman of national influence. Instead, he was a missionary, simple in life and habits to the end. Some men achieve great results in the service of God with only ordinary mental and social abilities. Thoburn had great endowments and put them all to marvelous use.

Such a life has meaning for the entire Church. Thoburn did not live to himself and did not die to himself. His life and words spoke to the Christian world: his example speaks still. He is speaking to us to-day, to those who were his colleagues for many years, to those whom he ordained to the ministry, to those who in many lands heard him in the pulpit and on the platform, swayed by the Spirit, prophetic in utterance and radiant with love, and to those who never saw, or met him, but who recognize in him the life and power of the regnant Christ.

The years will not dim his memory nor tarnish his fame. He exalted Christ, and Christ has exalted him. Wherever Thoburn is honored Christ will be revered.

"Were a star quenched on high,
For ages would its light
Still traveling downward from the sky
Shine on our mortal sight;
So when a great man dies
For years beyond our ken,
The light he leaves behind him lies
Upon the paths of men."

4. BISHOP JOHN E. ROBINSON

READ BY BISHOP JOHN W. ROBINSON

Of English parentage, born in Ireland, educated and called to the ministry in the United States, John Edward Robinson gave forty-seven years of faithful and fruitful service to the work of establishing the kingdom of Christ among non-Christian people.

On the invitation of the open doors of opportunity that beckoned him to America, as a lad of sixteen he left the land of his birth. From his youth a devout Christian, in New York at the age of twenty-four he accepted the insistent call that set him aside as a preacher of the gospel, and entered Drew Theological Seminary in search of such preparation as would make him a more effective minister of Jesus Christ.

It was after he had completed this course of preparation that he offered himself for the foreign field and was accepted for the self-supporting work of William Taylor in India. In that land, to which he went in 1875, the first five years were spent in the English-speaking work in the Deccan. Then he was sent, and without financial support, to open up the work in Burma, and for five years he laid broad and deep foundations on which others have since built up an entire mission field. In succession came his appointment to Simla, to the enormous Bombay district, which then included almost all that is now embodied in the Bombay area, to the editorship of the Indian Witness, and to numerous other activities involving administrative activities. It was while he was yet editor of the Indian Witness, week by week voicing the sentiments not of Methodism alone but of all the forces seeking the uplift of that empire, that he was called to a further service of the Church as a missionary bishop. As a missionary bishop, for sixteen years his varied abilities, his tireless energy and his consecration found full expression. At the General Conference of 1920, indicated alike by the time limit law of the Church, and by his failing health, he relinquished the office to which his brethren had chosen him. But to the day of his death, February 15, 1922, with such strength as was vouchsafed to him, he faithfully obeyed the call of his Master to preach the Gospel of Christ. To his colleagues and to all his fellow-workers, and to the great number who were benefited by his ministry in that land beyond the sea, his memory is precious; his works do follow him.

In his consecration to the work of the ministry the versatile abilities of John Edward Robinson were all included. He loved the work of the pastorate, and to him the preaching of the gospel was a passion. With a fervor of spirit and with a directness of presentation that was unusual, he sought the conversion of every member of his congregations, with results that were immediate and abundant. Nor was his fervor limited to the presentation of his public message. Indeed his greater effort was in personal work, and everywhere and at all times he had the word in season for those he met on any byway of life.

The literary abilities of Bishop Robinson were quite equal to those he devoted to the pastorate. His brethren early recognized his power to present truth beautifully and appealingly through the printed word, and they chose him for eight years to be editor of the Indian Witness, the official organ of our Church and the chief mouthpiece of all Christian sentiment in India. Much of the leaven of the Kingdom that is now agitating that land and aiding in bringing in the Christian conscience and the Christian order, was scattered broadcast during the time he occupied that seat of power.

As an administrator Bishop Robinson was tactful, forceful, indefatigable. He never spared himself, and in his leadership there was an inspiration and an urge and a confidence that led to best results. It was the success of his work as a presiding elder and his administrative abilities shown in every work committed to him, coupled with their admiration and love for him as a Christian man, that led his fellow-missionaries to urge his election to the missionary bishopric in 1904. In this election no mistake was made, for in the higher office he continued to show all those beauties of character and those capabilities of Christian leadership that had commended him for it. During the sixteen years he administered this authority, his field was chiefly southern and western India and Burma, but for two years following the death of Bishop Eveland of beloved memory the field that had been assigned the latter, Malaysia, Netherlands Indies and the Philippine Islands, had Bishop Robinson's care. The institutions he established and the work he fostered are the best monuments to his memory; the people he touched and influenced and the workers he developed and inspired all rise up to call him blessed.

In that eastern world, for forty-seven years, by his words, by his work, and by his character as he walked among us, he taught us how to live. When sickness and age laid their hand upon these activities, by his rest of faith, by his confidence of hope, by his testimony of victory, he taught us how to die. The name of John Edward Robinson, his memory and his influence, remain as a precious heritage to the Church he helped found in India, and likewise to the Church in America he so faithfully and worthily served and represented.

5. MRS. EDITH JACKSON FISHER

READ BY MRS. H. LESTER SMITH

Loyalty, love, devotion; around these lofty and enduring qualities centered the life of Edith Jackson Fisher. Although her life on earth was short, her influence spread far and wide, touching many lives, molding and transforming them.

She was born in Greencastle, Indiana, May 12, 1880. After graduation from high school, she entered New England Conservatory of Music, in Boston, Mass. She became a talented musician, and dedicated this gift to the service of the Church. She married the Rev. Frederick B. Fisher in 1903, and the following year went with him to India.

After two years of service in Agra, she was compelled by ill-health to leave India. She never forgot this land, and it became the dream of her life that some day she might return to it.

When her husband was elected to the Episcopacy in 1920, and appointed to India, she willingly accompanied him to that land. Her heart was full of plans for the work, but she was not permitted to see those plans brought to fruition, for in six months she was called to her Heavenly Home.

On the fifth of June, 1921, in Darjeeling, India, she quietly passed beyond the veil, into the presence of the Master.

She joined the Church in childhood, and from that time she was devoted to it, and gave to the Church her best. The interest begun in childhood grew and developed until the interests of the Kingdom were the dominant note of her life. Her love for the womanhood of the world was manifest in the various activities to which she devoted years. As President of the Auxiliary of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, and then as Secretary of Young People's Work in the New England Branch, she sought to minister to the women and children of the world.

Mrs. Fisher was given to hospitality. She lovingly extended it to lonely young men and women. No service was too great, nothing too difficult to be undertaken for the needy one. With an understanding and sympathetic heart she looked beyond the mere service, and saw possibilities in their lives when redeemed and inspired by Christ. She sought the best for the poorest, and with untiring zeal and devotion, gave herself to kindly ministry. The homeless were at home with her. Without fear the heart could be unburdened to her, knowing that the confidence would be held sacred. Her love and sympathy made others stronger, truer, and more noble.

Her last earthly home in a sheltered cliff on the mountaintop was fragrant with hospitality. During the last month of her life she entertained there the Bishops of India, the District Superintendent of Bengal, and when stricken with her last illness she was entertaining a Conference of India men. No one who was there during that month could forget the rich and cordial friendship which made the home a place of delight. During that last month she ministered to all who came in a loving spirit. Friends of different nationalities met here in social fellowship. She longed to show that Christian hospitality knows no color, no nation, no creed. In the midst of the Conference for Indian men she was stricken, and though every effort was made to save her life God took her to be with him.

They speak of her often in India. The fragrance of her life still abides to inspire others to love as she loved, to serve as she served.

6. MRS. JANE FIELD BASHFORD

READ BY REV. GEORGE L. DAVIS

Jane M. Field was of New Hampshire stock that early migrated to the West, so that she was one of the young women to matriculate in the first class under the newly established regime of coeducation in Wisconsin State University.

The opposition to the new innovation was very great. Not only the students and alumni but also the teachers were fearful lest the standards of scholarship should be lowered. Jane Field graduated with the highest honors in her class, composed of both men and women, in 1874. The member of the faculty who had opposed her most bitterly apologized profusely.

James W. Bashford had already graduated from the same university with the highest honors in his class and was an instructor in the university at that time. Those who have seen him as the president of a great university, with all the burdens resting upon his shoulders, or working to reorganize the intricate work of the Conferences in China, can never forget the evening when the summer moon was playing across the China sea, and the very witchery of the night as they sat on the missionary veranda seemed to draw the great administrator out of the present and turn his mind to the past, and he told with all the enthusiasm of youthful lover the story of how at that time a fellow teacher, a young man of wealth and great social graces, came to him to consult as to whether his teacher should propose to Jane Field or not. A great temptation came to Bashford, for he knew that the man trusted his judgment so implicitly that if he told him not to try he would let the opportunity pass, and in that moment Bashford knew that the beautiful, cultured, brilliant girl was the one thing that he wanted more than anything else. But he told his friend that he would certainly be a fortunate man if he could win her, and the man tried and failed, and later Bashford won her.

Their beautiful married life dates from 1878, the first year of his ministry. She shared his burdens and responsibilities in charges large and small, and her intellectual and spiritual growth kept pace with his own. She was a dignified and gracious President's wife at Ohio Wesleyan. She was interested in all the students, but those from foreign countries were objects of her special care, and many a lonely boy and girl far from home and parents, in a strange land, has been cheered to take up the burdens of school work because of the influence of her kindly home. She could call the students by name that her great husband only knew as one of the group.

"At the General Conference held in Los Angeles in 1904 the vote for Bishops was carrying James W. Bashford close to election; Dr. Bashford was doubtful about accepting it, should it come, and was at the point of rising and withdrawing his name, when Mrs. Bashford said to him, 'James, be careful: this may be of the Lord.' That gave to the church a great Bishop, and the world a new China."

She went with him to China and traveled with him all over that great land. She spared herself none of the hardships in travel, for whether it was a small native boat or a bouncing chair or a rolling steamer she went fearlessly with the Bishop, and was able, from the information that she gathered, to assist the Bishop in solving many of his hardest problems. She was a wise counselor and a shrewd adviser. She usually presided at the Woman's Conferences in China, and she was very acceptable, for she was most sympathetic and yet practical, and brought a message of the Christ that led all nearer to the ideal and away from dust and grind of the world. She was a perfect angel of light in the little far off mission stations, for she was not trying to solve world problems but how their weekly prayer meeting should grip and how they in turn, who were always giving, should be filled.

She joined gladly with her husband in the sacrificial use of their private financial means to meet the emergencies which they were constantly facing on the field, and she took entire charge of their own affairs, so that the Bishop could give himself entirely to the duties of the church.

In 1915 her health failed so that she did not return to China after the General Conference of 1916, and after a short stay in China Bishop Bashford returned to take care of her, but she soon recovered and he preceded her to that better land. There were no children to bless this happy couple, but all over the world the young people that have been blessed and educated are carrying on the message that they have laid down, for Mrs. Bashford kept her love for China and the world until the end, and how the angels must have smiled when they heard the man with smiling face say, "Jeanie dear, you have come; it has been a long wait."

7. MR. EDWIN R. GRAHAM

READ BY REV. JOHN H. RACE

One of the poets has beautifully pictured for us the contest between Life and Death:

"From morn to eve they struggled—Life and Death.
 At first, it seemed to me that they in mirth
 Contended, and as foes of equal worth,
 So firm their feet, so undisturbed their breath.
 But when the sharp red sun cut through its sheath
 Of western clouds, I saw the brown arms girth
 Tighten and bear that radiant form to earth,
 And suddenly both fell upon the heath.
 And then the wonder came—for when I fled
 To where those great antagonists down fell,
 I could not find the body that I sought,
 And when and where it went I could not tell;
 One only form was left of those who fought,
 The long dark form of death—and it was dead."

To-day it is my solemn privilege to speak of my former colleague and friend Edwin R. Graham, who after seventeen years of devoted service as Publishing Agent of The Methodist Episcopal Church, fell on sleep, February 19, 1921.

Born in a Christian home, the son of a Methodist minister, his whole life was lived in an atmosphere of faith and love and service; for he consecrated his young manhood to the highest ideals and founded his home upon the basic principles of Christian belief and practice. Through all his years, and in his contacts in business and social life, he showed forth those attributes which are the outcome of a life devoted to the highest and the best.

Both by nature and by habit, Dr. Graham was a gentleman. Well do we recall his courtly bearing, his sympathetic understanding, his gracious consideration. Never aggressive, never ostentatious—he was bravely tenacious for the right, and never, in his darkest moments, did he lose his simple and childlike faith in God. Perhaps he could not better be characterized than as a friendly and a loyal man—for friendliness and loyalty sum up his attitude toward people, and give the keynote to his life. In loyalty to his home, his family, his friends, his business interests, his country, his God—Edwin R. Graham stood foursquare. And all through Methodism, and outside—are hosts of those who are proud to say—"He was my friend."

Tenderly devoted to his home and family, there came to him a crushing sorrow in the death of his beloved wife—the radiant Mary Dolliver Graham. Yet, though bowed in sorrow, his steadfast spirit reached out to his God; as his own strength weakened, his hold on the eternal verities grew stronger. His last days were made peaceful in the knowledge of a life well spent, and in the hope of a glad reunion in the City of his God.

Therefore, we do not say, we cannot say, our Brother is dead. Rather do we say—he lives! For though no longer we see his stalwart form, nor hear his kindly voice, we feel his presence in loving memory, and in communion of spirit, believing wholly that sentiment so well expressed by one who himself has entered the larger life:

"This body is my house—it is not I.
Triumphant in this faith I live, and die."

8. MR. JOHN G. CRABBE

READ BY REV. W. T. SCOTT

Those who have lived in Kentucky, and those who have lived in Ohio, and those who have lived in Colorado, know something of his great influence. He was a man who twice was elected as President of the American Teachers' State Association, an unprecedented thing as far as I now recall. His influence was so great that even in a tax-supported institution men from other States sent their sons and daughters there for the religious influence there would be about them. We who have lived in Colorado and have felt the greatness of the man have declared that no man connected with our intellectual institutions and educational societies has exercised a greater influence for the moral and spiritual uplift of the State and adjacent States, than did J. G. Crabbe.

I was his pastor. I knew what his life was. I never failed as a pastor on the Sunday morning to see his face if he were in town. I never failed on Sunday night to find him present. Every Sunday morning a great Sunday-school class of more than one hundred would greet him as teacher. Every Sabbath Day he spoke the word of God as it came to him as a Christian man, much in prayer and in communion with the highest things. He was absolutely loyal to the Church. There was no phase of Church life that he was not interested in. At one time when great financial depression had reached out and touched him and he had lost pretty much the savings of his life, when the missionary call came to all the churches, he was the first to respond with a doubling of his subscription which at that time was perhaps the largest in that church.

He was an idealist. He never wanted to compromise. Whatever the Church said was right, whatever advance movement the Church entered upon he stood by it. He was loyal to his pastor. He felt that the pastor's advice ought to be consulted in everything looking forward to the extension of the Kingdom of Jesus Christ. He was true in all these relations to the Church, and to all organizations that sought the uplift of the community. We found great joy in his fellowship. When the death angel was hovering, the pastor was by his side much of the time, and he would frequently say, "Let us pray," and always there was the spirit of thanksgiving when the prayer was finished. And when the end came we who knew him well and loved him much felt that one of the great influences for good not alone of the state or church or city, but one of the great influences that spoke for good everywhere, had gone on. And yet his life was still living in the hearts of men.

9. MR. MELVIN E. SUMMERS

READ BY REV. J. W. MOULTRIE

Melvin Eugene Summers was born in a Methodist parsonage at Reevesville, S. C., October 16, 1880, and died December 14, 1924, at the age of forty-four. He attended the public schools of his native country, entered Claflin University, Orangeburg, S. C., in his youth, and graduated in the class of 1903. He entered the Railroad Mail Service in 1906, and remained faithful to the service until death. For eighteen years he handled the mail and never received a demerit. His employers said of him: "Summers was straightforward and worthy—nothing against him."

Mr. Summers moved to Augusta, Ga., having married a good wife, who was devoted to him, and shared the blessings of a useful but brief life together. To this union was born one daughter who survives him. He was a good citizen and faithful friend. Our Church in Augusta regarded him her chief adviser and helper. As trustee, Sunday School Superintendent, Epworth League President, and choir member, he cheerfully accepted all these duties and never shirked. He loved to represent his local Church, and was a useful layman and strong advocate of our Methodism in the Savannah Conference, where he served as the President of the Conference Laymen's Association, always cooperating with his District Superintendent and Pastor, in any task to which he was committed.

Mr. Summers was thrice honored by the laymen of his Conference as their representative to the General Conferences at Saratoga, Des Moines, and Springfield. He did his work so well at the last General Conference that the Atlanta Area elected him as their lay representative on the Council of Boards of Benevolence, which place he creditably filled until his death.

A Christian who won disciples to Jesus by his daily life and conduct; a true friend and respected citizen; a tall, consecrated workman, Melvin E. Summers won his medal for service early, and left a good pattern for us all. He was stricken suddenly and lived scarcely a week thereafter. His heart was warm and mind clear, when with a radiant smile, which characterized his life, he beckoned wife and friends to meet him in heaven. Our brother, beloved, did not answer the roll call here—his membership being in the Greater Conference, and reward "everlasting life." In the wake of the new morning we shall see him again.

10. MEMORIAL ADDRESS BY BISHOP W. F. OLDHAM

This is a significant and impressive hour. Summoned by the memories of those we "have loved long since and lost awhile," we assemble here to pay our tributes of respect and affection and from the lives so nobly lived, so surely crowned, to get incentive and inspiration for the brief span that yet remains to us.

When he was asked to take the place that is his on this program, your speaker's first impulse was to speak a quick refusal, for he knows of many a better equipped man here present who might well have guided our thoughts during this sacred hour. But again he remembered that these in whose memory we meet were among his nearest and dearest friends and that there can be but few, if any, so related to the whole group as he—Robinson, Pastor; Thoburn, friend, inspirer, fellow Bishop; Harris, fellow collegian and missionary Bishop. To me, standing in the presence of these, two great matters of the soul receive illumination and emphasis: the value of the mystic quality in religious experience, in securing practical results, the overwhelming truth of personal immortality. For these men and women were mystics—and they demonstrate that the mystic mind carries farther in the larger affairs of life than any mere so-called "practical" programming temper. What dreamers they were! And have not all the larger conquests been achieved by the dreamers. When God's time came to lift Christianity from a Syrian cult to a world-religion, was it not a dreamer that in his dream saw a figure and heard a voice summoning him to come over into Macedonia? And out of his dream, gathering that the Lord "had called him to preach the gospel" to those whom the dream figure represented, did not St. Paul cross over into Europe and begin the evangelization of that continent, not ceasing till he preached to "them that were at Rome also?" And later when added continents were needed to extend the borders of the advancing Kingdom and give it freer scope for fuller developments, was it not another dreamer that sailing unknown seas found, without meaning to do so, ample lands and richer opportunities than any India of his dreams? The larger findings are ever those of the dreamers.

Was it not so with Thoburn? What a mystic he was! From earliest childhood the unseen was ever open to his eyes. How manifestly was he chosen of God for India, that land of supreme mystic quality. For how shall any but a dreamer understand that brooding, sensitive, spiritual minded people that throng the land from the golden strand of the southern seas to where the silver-crowned Himalayas lift their heads? He sat down among them, he dreamed with them. The Unknown God, whom among the myriad gods they ceaselessly sought, he eagerly discovered to them—and out of it all came the most significant movement of millions toward Christ and his Church modern missions anywhere record. The mystic temper did not preclude the great program, indeed it made it possible. If Thoburn had not seen into the heart of oppressed India, if he had not felt the agony of spirit and the constriction of life that was the cause of it, he would never have understood the tides that were ready to set in towards the compassionate God revealed in Jesus Christ, and the great program of the “mass movement” would not have been so simply made nor so greatly executed. One of the most compelling factors in the formulation of the greatest missionary program of the past half century was the instinctive apprehension of the spiritual moods of India, by this great mystic.

While practically all the more prosaic minds were uttering their warnings and lifting up their voices against the folly of “mass baptisms,” Thoburn kept on dreaming of a “nation to be born in a day,” and out of his dreams came his daring labors and the beginning of India’s larger day.

And what of Lewis? Was there ever a man who so confidently counted upon the invisible allies in life—upon the power of prayer to accomplish the impossible? When with fine self-denial he turned, with Bashford’s consent and approval, from his own needy China to the saving of Goucher College, his associates there were profoundly moved by this man of God who spent hours in prayer and then came from these long vigils of the spirit to such labors and successes as filled them with surprise and ardent admiration. One can best see Lewis by putting him alongside of his companion idealist Bashford. Jointly they labored—devoted friends, independent thinkers—both almost fused into one personality by their common idealism and deep devotion to the same cause, yet each very markedly a “person.” The China that Bashford saw, Lewis saw. And Bashford’s China was never a fractional China. He saw not a part but the whole. His was never a part of China. His was not Foo-chow, nor Nanking, nor Peking, nor Cheng-tu—his dream covered China—and so his plans, growing out of his dreams, were nation-wide—and his very presence helped to create a national consciousness everywhere and when even the physical integrity of China was threatened, how he planned and how quickly and effectively this idealist, helped to prevent China’s spoliation—let those who know, tell. Bashford saw, Lewis saw. The China that Lewis ceaselessly carried before God in prayer—Bashford also held up in arms of faith. In life they were one and in death not long divided.

When I name Lewis, indeed I am naming another Bashford—for these two men were knit together in closest bonds of love.

They were hand in glove, and sometimes Bashford was the hand and sometimes Lewis was the hand giving form to the glove, for Bashford relied on Lewis's spiritual intuitions. He said to me, "When Lewis has had time to pray, I greatly hesitate to oppose him. That man talks with God and God with him."

And what of Harris of Japan? His idealism was beautiful to see in his contacts with Japan and the Japanese. He saw below the surface—and thus he saw not the grasping material—sin of which others accuse her—but deeper than all that he saw the soul of this people and its longings for progress and beauty and goodness, and valuing it highly, he wrought hard to win that soul for Christ. Do you wonder Japan loved him and took him closer to her heart than perhaps any foreigner of his generation?

Such are the men of prayer and mystic other-worldliness from whom the greater programs come.

And what women these were! It can safely be said Bashford's dream and programs alike were intimately shared by his life-long companion, Jeannie Bashford. So slight and frail she seemed, but how he leaned on her and never failed to find not only sympathy but sound judgment and courageous advice. With hesitation, lest we renew the hurt, let it be said of Mrs. Fisher's home-going, great as is our love, and great our loss, sincerely as she is mourned both here and in India, her going has driven a plowshare of sorrow through the heart of her husband. But is not a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, after the fashion of the Master, the only man that can really understand and come near to the great sorrowing heart of India—is not the Church beholding the rise among us of another great-heart, successor to Thoburn and Bashford and Lewis, and are not the mystic touch of a vanished hand and the mystic sound of a voice that is still, helping to mold that great heart? The eyes that have seen most clearly the blue of the heavens above and hearts that have responded most readily to the whispers of the Unseen, have ever seen most deeply into the heart of earth's great spiritual problems and have thrown themselves into their solution with a courage and cheer that have accomplished amazing results. So far from religious mysticism being a vain and empty thing merely breeding enthusiasts whose impact upon our everyday life is negligible, if not mischievous, these mighty workers whose far-seeing plans and great projects will occupy the best attention and will call for the largest energies of the church for many a year to come, leave the record of their felt companionship with the Unseen as the source of their inspiration and energy for those great matters in which they so gallantly led the church and in which their memory still leads. While the sainted dust lies here and in the far off land do not they themselves belong to that choir invisible of these immortal dead, who live again in minds made better by their presence and so make undying music in the world?

In this solemn hour may the great lesson come home to the Church in her program making that the greatest of her builders have ever been the men and women who walked consciously in the company of the Unseen ever alive and responsive to the urge of the invisible.

Dwelling in the presence of the Most High they not only endured but achieved and obtained "a good report through faith." Well might the cry of the church be—let the plan of every tabernacle that is to be built be revealed in the Mount of God to some waiting soul before it is sought to be erected on the plains of life.

And now we come to the other great truth suggested by our memories of those gone on before, and that is, that they are not dead. They have just moved on a little ahead. "Death is but a suburb of the fields Elysian," for our God is a good workman and a good workman wastes nothing. Taking the centuries in pre-preparation and then 60 to 70 years in producing a Thoburn, or a Lewis, or a Robinson, will he then let the failure of the physical envelope extinguish the values, the worth and the glow of these great spirits? Such waste is unthinkable. Nowhere in all the physical world is there waste at all. All energy is conserved everywhere. The form under which it appears may change, but nowhere does it cease to be. Shall the most valuable of all God's products, the fashioned, disciplined, developed souls of such as these, drop into nothingness and cease to be? Every instinct of our nature cries out against such folly and waste. A God of Parsimony in lesser things cannot consent to the extinction of these who had grown into much of his own likeness and quality. It is not strange that all mankind has felt this and that no people has ever had a religion that did not express the pull of immortality upon the imagination, the hope, the very soul of man. "If a man die will he live again?"—the question has been asked by every tribe and race of men of whom we have any record and always the reply of the human spirit has been one of more or less lively anticipation of a life beyond. Such universal desire and expectation produce at least a great presumption with regard to immortality.

But what moves us much in this hour is that these great, pure souled, deep hearted comrades of ours held strong persuasions in this matter. The most eloquent sermon I ever heard Bishop Robinson preach was when I was a youth. He spoke on Christ's great saying, "Because I live ye shall live also." And the living earnestness and deep assurance of his tones are in my ears and in my heart after more than forty years. I sat with Bishop Bashford one day in Foochow. A young Chinese preacher of the North had been with him telling the Bishop through an interpreting missionary, all about his father's fate at the hands of the "Boxers." They had literally cut him to pieces and at intervals stopped to inquire whether he would not deny Jesus—the foreign God—and be saved from further mutilation. Steadily and persistently the martyr refused, continuing while life lasted and his tongue was left, to acknowledge and proclaim Jesus, the Son of God, the Lord of Life. Telling me this story, the tears streaming down his cheeks, Bishop Bashford said to me, "Oh what recompense to have been true to his best self, to have strengthened the confidence of the Church Universal and then to have heard from His Lord, 'Well done, good and faithful servant, . . . enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.'" I told Lewis of this and with profound feeling he replied . . . "Christ is confessing him now before his Father and the holy angels." Years after this, said Bashford to me, "Lewis strengthens my confidence in the immortal life of the soul every time he prays with me."

As for Thoburn, he would have considered any attempt to approach a demonstration of immortality as utterly unnecessary. . . . To him the great doctrines of his faith were self-attesting. Whatever others might think, for himself he knew—and he never argued the methods of his knowing. I heard him once at a great gathering in Meridian Street Church in Indianapolis say to the audience, "Immortality! How do I know there is such a thing? I have tasted it." The utterance galvanized his hearers. It is one thing to hear the words repeated, it was totally another to see this prophet of God glowing with spiritual fervor and hear him in the quiet, yet thrilling accents of assured spiritual certainty say—"Immortality—I have tasted it." A solemn awe was upon us, for this man was no mere enthusiast—behind him stretched the years of largest accomplishment, in his hands were great enterprises, entrusted to him by a church that knew at once his fidelity and his power to bring things to pass. Here we have not only the thrust of the universal mind of man into strong likelihood and longing for something beyond his mortal life, but added to this, these are the assured anticipations and grounded beliefs of some of the most outstanding spiritual seers and prophets that the Christian Church has ever produced—and if noting the universal prepossession of the mass of humanity, whatever its religious classification, regarding the assurance of life beyond the grave, Sir Oliver Lodge says, "I do not believe that it is given to man to have thoughts nobler and loftier than the real truth of things," still more decidedly do we refuse to believe that God breathes upon our dust and raises great spiritual beings like these our brothers and sisters, only to disappoint their utmost longings after his eternal companionship and to blast the confident hopes and profoundest expectations of these unselfish souls. Well might

Saint Paul cry, "If in this world only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable" because of the betrayal of firmest, fondest hopes. "But," adds he, "now is Christ risen from the dead . . . even so in Christ shall all be made alive. . . . Therefore, my brethren be ye steadfast, unmovable."

The last time I worshiped with Lewis in private, it was in his room at a hotel and he read, "Ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions. If it were not so I would have told you—I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." Oh beloved—you set your heart and hopes on him—and he neither mocks nor disappoints. Where he is, you are there also, and your going makes our coming easier and more homelike.

A little time ago Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, the British Prime Minister, lost a dear friend as we have for a while lost these; writing to a mutual friend he said:

"What can we do but comfort each other? A day will come when we, too, shall lie down and not get up again. And the world will pass away from us as though it were not, and we shall have passed to where beyond these voices there is peace. And men will come and go, and yearn and toil, and the years also will come and go, and the mysteries of life and death and accomplishment will trouble the human heart. One thing which death does is good. It makes the unseen something other than a foreign land when those who have clung 'round our hearts, or 'round whom our hearts have clung, go. It is easier for us to go, too. The attraction (so to speak) of death increases with the years, until so many have gone that we, too, want rest and peace. Since last month a new meaning has been given to the words, "I go to prepare a place for you." My boy has gone, my mother has gone, but I feel somehow as though they had just crossed the sea to some new land whither I shall go in due time, and find them familiar with a new life."

"These, too, have gone, and we shall go in due time and clasp glad hands where there is 'no more death.' Does not the contemplation fill us with rapture so we at once enter Handel's mood when he ranges up the soprano, the contralto, the tenor and the bass and has them sing one after the other 'He shall reign, King of Kings, and Lord of Lords,' while all join in 'For ever and ever' closing with a joyous crash: Alleluia! Alleluia! He lives! and they live; and we shall live with them forever and ever. Alleluia!"

EPISCOPAL REPORTS

1. UNITED STATES

ATLANTA AREA

ERNEST G. RICHARDSON, RESIDENT BISHOP

The work of the Atlanta Area during this quadrennium has been very much easier because of the faithful labors of my predecessor. On the foundation that he laid during the eight years that he resided in Atlanta we have been able to build securely during these four years. The Episcopal residence in Atlanta during the last twelve years has been of great advantage to our whole work in this section of our country.

It is hard to see how the work of the Church could have been done in the Atlanta Area without the assistance that was made possible by our Centenary movement. The Board of Home Missions and Church Extension, the Board of Education, and the Board of Education for Negroes were all enabled to contribute largely to our work. Without these very considerable contributions we would have been terribly handicapped. We have shown our appreciation of the assistance given to us by the Centenary by our giving to the Centenary. The Conferences of the Atlanta Area have contributed up to January 1, 1924, $610,000 to our missionary program. During the last two years of diminishing payments to the Centenary from our Church at large the receipts from the Atlanta Area have increased. This was due to the faithful leadership of district superintendents and pastors. In the colored Conferences of the Area especially, the increase was made in spite of the handicaps of poor crops and northward migration.

The three schools that our Church is conducting for white children in this Area have all made decided advances in the last four years. Our material equipment at John H. Snead Seminary, Boaz, Alabama, has been doubled in this time. As has been true for a number of years, this school is accommodating all it can possibly hold and turning many away. At Epworth seminary, Epworth, Georgia, and Mt. Zion Seminary, Mt. Zion, Georgia, both the material and scholastic conditions have been very greatly bettered. Our Board of Education has given increased aid that has assisted very largely in accomplishing the results named.

The schools under the Board of Education for Negroes have made really remarkable increases. Property valuations for these schools have increased $600,000 during the quadrennium. The total amount given to us in the past four years by the Board of Education for Negroes for the schools of this Area has been over $500,000. The attendance at the schools has greatly increased. The personnel of the faculties has been very considerably strengthened.

Gammon Theological Seminary continues to do very valuable work for the Negro preachers of our own and other Churches. About one-sixth of all of the Negro ministers of our Church have received training in this Seminary. The influence of this school on the Negro ministry and membership of our Church is incalculable.

The Woman's Home Missionary Society is doing a valuable work of education in the Atlanta Area. In several of our schools it maintains Homes where girls are taught housekeeping duties. It also maintains three schools where most excellent work is being done. In addition to this the Woman's Home Missionary Society conducts a hospital which does a very humanitarian work. The self-sacrificing spirit of the workers in these Homes and schools is greatly to be commended.

All over the Area the quadrennium has been characterized by many building enterprises. In many cases the inspiration to the building came from a Home Missionary grant. It is safe to say, however, that the amount of money we received from the Board of Home Missions has been multiplied many times by local giving. In the state of Florida our property has more than doubled in value in the last quadrennium.

The state of Florida offers us a wonderful opportunity for usefulness and future development. Multiplied thousands of our members now live within that state. With every passing year thousands more move into the state. If our work there is wisely administered in the immediate future, we will have before very long not only a strong, self-supporting Church, but one that will be able to contribute largely to the missionary and benevolent program of our Church. The St. Johns River Conference led all the English-speaking Conferences in the entire Church in its per capita giving to the Centenary for several years. This is only a foretaste of what will happen in the future if our work in Florida is properly fostered in the growing years just ahead of us. We have attempted to administer in Florida in the last quadrennium with this future in mind. No one Church can take care of the rapid development of that state. We can take all the advance steps that are possible without interfering in any way with other now existing Churches.

According to the 1924 Year Book the membership of the Atlanta Area is about 4,000 less than it was at the beginning of the quadrennium. In many of the churches of the Area, both in the white and colored Conferences, the records of membership are very poorly kept. In a number of cases the membership reported is purely guess work. Little credence can be given to the figures under these circumstances. When we recall that in the last three years several hundred thousand Negroes have migrated from the South to the North, thousands of whom were members of our Church, the above figures are not disheartening. All over the Area revivals have been held every year. Large numbers of converts are reported at every Conference session. When we are confident that souls are being won to Christ and the Church, we are not greatly concerned if they do not stay with us, but go to strengthen our Church and other Churches elsewhere.

I have been treated with the utmost kindness all over the Area. I cannot recall a single discourtesy on the part of any minister or layman in any one of the eight Conferences of the Area. I thank them most heartily for their courtesy and consideration.

BOSTON AREA

EDWIN H. HUGHES, RESIDENT BISHOP

To the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to be held at Springfield, Mass., May, 1924:

DEAR FATHERS AND BRETHREN:

The Boston Area greets a General Conference within these New England borders for the first time in 72 years. If our delegates could travel extensively throughout these states, this report would be scarcely necessary; for on all sides they would find evidences of the growing strength of Methodism.

Our work here is never understood without a general knowledge of its history. We should remember that when Jesse Lee, the stately Virginian, arrived here and gave out the Hymn which proclaimed that the Year of Jubilee had come, there were already four fairly established denominations on hand, one of them being virtually a state church. For a considerable period our people were taxed to support that state church. Even now our older members will sometimes show civil tickets which their grand-parents or great-grand-parents had to secure, showing that they were supporting Methodist worship, ere they could escape the church tax. This was the second stage. In addition our people bore many persecutions, some physical and more social. But they felt that they had a gospel for New England, and here they threw themselves boldly against the theology of Jonathan Edwards, whose ministry was largely spent within a few miles of this city of Springfield.

In general, we report to you that they have won their victory; and that the family and denominational descendants of our early persecutors are now our yoke-fellows in the name of Christ. More particularly, the part that New England Methodism has played more widely has been duly made known in the advance literature of this gathering; and we may trust that our boasting has been of the permitted and Pauline sort.

The outstanding features of the work of New England Methodism in the quadrennium now closing may be summarized as follows:

I. On the financial side—Boston University has had a campaign which still continues, and which will undoubtedly add several million dollars to the endowment of the Institution. We have been striving to secure one million dollars for the School of Theology which is our peculiar interest and which has rendered such wonderful service to the Church as its oldest theological seminary—a service constantly deepening and widening under the leadership of Dean James A. Beebe. More than $700,000 have been pledged: and we are going forward for the larger sum. Beyond this, it should be reported that Boston University has now the largest attendance among all our New England colleges—about 11,000 students being enrolled. Her last graduating class numbered almost 1,000. The advances under the presidency of Dr. Lemuel H. Murlin have been marvelous indeed, while the two presidents emeriti, Warren and Huntington, survive to see the edifice rising upon the solid foundations laid by them.

A campaign for our Deaconess Hospital, which is now regarded as one of the finest of those blessed institutions known among the French as the Hotels of God, likewise resulted in increasing the capital funds to the extent of $600,000. Perhaps, most remarkable of all, was the raising of almost $200,000 in the Bangor and Rockland Districts of the Maine Conference—partly for Boston University School of Theology; partly for the Wesley Foundation at Orono, Maine; but mostly for the historic academy at Bucksport. Eastern Maine Methodists surely did a noble and generous thing and deserve the applause of the Church.

II. In spite of the fact that the giving of our people has been mostly for the Centenary, I record that we have had some magnificent buildings added to our equipment. The signal instances are, in this City, two, Liberty and Trinity-Grace; First Church, Manchester, N. H.; South Manchester, Conn.; New London, Conn.; Park Avenue, Somerville; Newtonville; and the new church at Belmont, a prosperous suburb of Boston, where we are having a most gratifying growth. There is also a section, north of Boston, where in a number of towns like Beverly and Swampscott, our cause is easily twice as strong as it was four years ago, owing to property readjustments. Ere long we shall build at Worcester, as the result of the union of Trinity and Grace Churches, one of the finest religious plants in this Eastern land. Other building enterprises might justly be mentioned; but the angel of the record will put into the book of life what we must here omit for lack of space.

III. In the support of the general ministry and of the benevolences our Boston Area people do well. They stand in the first three Areas in the per cent of support of the Episcopacy. They stand easily first in the per cent of the Disciplinary claim paid to the Conference Claimants. They stand third in the amount paid per capita to the Centenary. Considering that we were not here a pioneer church, and that our people have deliberately chosen their church not for its great wealth or social prestige, we are sure that our brethren from other sections will feel that we have done well our part.

IV. We confess gratification, also, over our increase of members in this four-year period. Let it be noted that some of our territory has rapidly changed from native to foreign, and likewise that in many agricultural regions where we have had our work there has been a big decrease in population. I traveled around a typical region in Maine, in a 60-mile circle where hindering rivers did not prevent, and found that there were far more abandoned farms than there were occupied farms. Yet even in that general section, increased in foreign peoples and decreased in native peoples, we have actually more members than we had in former days. The table of increases for the four years is as follows:

Conferences	1920	1924	Increase
Maine	24,448	26,040	1,592
New England	54,855	61,431	6,576
New England Southern	26,319	28,119	1,800
New Hampshire	16,010	16,339	329
Vermont	12,627	13,311	684
Total	134,259	145,240	10,981

I submit these figures with no little pride and as a splendid testimony of the faithful work done by our preachers. Your praise for this accomplishment would be more readily given if you knew, as well as do those who are familiar with the field, some of the difficulties in spite of which these successes have been won.

V. But, beyond all this, dear Fathers and Brethren, we report a certain solidifying of our interests that cannot be put into figures; and we are certain, as well, that year by year New England Methodism wins larger respect from the people of this historic section. We sometimes think, too, that there is here developing a theological situation of which Methodism will be the residuary legatee, charged with an ever-enlarging evangelical mission for these hills and valleys. If we remain true to the heart of that throbbing gospel that was brought here by our spiritual forefathers, God has still for us a wonderful mission.

We greet with pride all our delegates and visitors from other Areas of our world-wide church; and we sincerely trust that you may take home with you some congratulations on what your New England Methodist Episcopal comrades have been able to accomplish.

God bless this session of the General Conference! God bless you all!

REPORT OF THE BUFFALO AREA

WILLIAM BURT, RESIDENT BISHOP

It was a very gracious Providence that twelve years ago, on my return from Europe, assigned me as resident bishop of the Buffalo Area. I can never cease to thank God for this wonderful kindness. After so many years of absence in the foreign field, I felt not a little embarrassed as to how I might fit in at home. I could not have been sent to a better area or to a more loyal people. The more intimately and the longer we have known each other, the sweeter has grown our fellowship in Christian work. There may be other areas larger or more extensive in territory, but none more desirable nor more efficient than this which I have sought to serve. Notwithstanding three months of rather severe weather in winter, its location is one of the most desirable. It is fertile and productive from one extreme to the other. It contains magnificent rural territory and some of the most prosperous cities of our country. My only regret in retiring is that I must leave these delightful surroundings and these loyal people. They have all become mine through love, and "love can never lose its own."

At first there were a few people in Buffalo to whom I was persona non grata because of the influence of the Papacy. They, however, paid me such high compliments in their press that they drove the people over to me in patriotic fervor. Now I know that in spite of their venomous denunciations I have a warm place in the hearts of the Buffalonians. During the twelve years I have been resident bishop, I have assisted in building and dedicating twelve beautiful new churches in that city alone. Yes, Buffalo may be saved from the blight of Romanism if Protestants will be true and uncompromising. When, however, evangelical Christians shall go into political alliances or compromises with the Roman hierarchy, our Protestant faith is doomed.

Personally, I hope that the episcopal residence of the Area will remain in Buffalo, where a beautiful home has been provided. I could say much on this subject, but will refrain until the Committee on Episcopacy might wish to ask me questions.

In the Buffalo Area we have three of our best equipped seminaries—Cazenovia, Lima and Poultney, all three doing excellent work, and we are convinced that in all our history there never was greater need of these fine preparatory schools than now.

Dr. Charles E. Hamilton writes: "Cazenovia Seminary during the last eight years has greatly enlarged its campus and holdings. We are now building a hundred thousand dollar dormitory and service building. The permanent funds have been practically doubled during this time. The faculty is of the highest type. Every year about thirty young men are in training for the Christian ministry." Dr. Hamilton has had a wonderfully prosperous quadrennium.

At Poultney Dr. C. L. Leonard resigned and Dr. R. L. Thompson was elected to take his place. Poultney is progressing splendidly, with an especially strong faculty and a fine body of students. It ought to have the generous support of all the members of the Troy Conference, and especially of its alumni, wherever they may be.

At Lima also there has been a change of presidents by the return to the pastorate of Dr. Shepard and the election of Dr. Frank MacDaniel, who brought to the school a rich experience acquired at other similar institutions. The school has had its trials and set-backs, but is now reacquiring its old-time prestige and success.

In addition to these preparatory schools, we have in the Buffalo Area Syracuse University, one of the greatest educational institutions in connection with our Church. We can never think or speak of Syracuse University without recalling to mind that giant man, Chancellor James R. Day. For ten years we enjoyed each other's confidence, fellowship, and co-operation. At his death Dr. Charles Wesley Flint was invited to Syracuse and elected Chancellor of the University. This I regard as the one outstanding event of the quadrennium—the event of the largest meaning to the Buffalo Area and to the Methodist Episcopal Church. To follow Dr. Day we needed a man built on the physical, mental, and moral scale of Dr. Charles Wesley Flint. He has been called to one of the most difficult tasks that the Methodist Episcopal Church has ever entrusted to any man. We should not ask him to report at any very early date because time will be one of the essential elements necessary to his success. He must overcome and reconstruct on a large scale. The outstanding events of the past quadrennium in the University have been the resignation of Chancellor Day and the inauguration of Chancellor Flint, the attempted drive to clear the University of indebtedness, the advent of Dean Raper of the College of Business Administration and of Dean Butler of the College of Fine Arts, the appointment of an assistant dean of women, a more compact organization of the alumni, the beginning of hospital organization under Dr. Young, the financial survey of the General Education Board, women's athletic field, celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the University. What a source of power Syracuse might become if ten millions of dollars could very soon be added to its endowment. This should come, and I believe it will come.

We will not here attempt to give the statistical report of the Area in detail, but simply call attention to some encouraging figures. If we could command sufficient space, it would be for us a genuine pleasure to give due credit to the sixteen devoted and heroic district superintendents, who by their loyal co-operation have made possible our achievements. I am really disappointed that I cannot do this, because what they have done makes an intensely interesting record.

The Northern New York Conference is one of the most heroic and efficient Conferences in our whole connection. Here are a few samples of the work done. Black River District, seven new churches, three enlarged, seven new parsonages, and three community houses, at a total cost of $325,000. Mohawk District, one new church, nine new parsonages, five community houses, and an Italian Church, at a total cost of $277,000. On the Ontario District two new churches, seven new parsonages, one new community house, and one new Sunday-school building, total $120,700. The St. Lawrence District has expended $205,888 for these purposes. I have been greatly pleased to note the fine work being done in this district through the week-day religious schools, which promise excellent results, especially at Gouverneur, Potsdam, Massena, Norwood, Malone, Brushton, Racket River and Norfolk. Such schools ought to receive our attention in connection with all of our churches.

Central New York Conference: Elmira District has built two new churches at a cost of $7,000. Geneva District, four new churches and two new parsonages, at a cost of $310,500. Syracuse East District, eight new churches, one remodeled, and has secured $110,000 toward another new church, the total for the district being $872,000. This includes the magnificent University Church at Syracuse. Syracuse West District has built two new churches, four new parsonages, seven new community houses, at a total cost of $149,200.

In the Genesee Conference, on the Buffalo District, there have been built sixteen new churches, twenty new parsonages, and three community houses, at a total cost of $953,000. To this must be added the episcopal residence, costing $40,000, the Good Will Industries, costing $60,000, together with the Polish, Indian, and Italian missions. In the Corning District, seven new churches, five new parsonages, and one community house have been erected at a total cost of $360,000. In the Olean District, five new churches, seven new parsonages, and two community houses, at a total cost of $218,000. To this should be added the purchase of the Epworth Inn property at Silver Lake at a cost of $50,000. On the Rochester District, seven new churches and six new parsonages, at a total cost of $316,500. To this summary for the Genesee Conference should be added new organs, costing $80,000.

Troy Conference, Central District, five new churches, two parsonages, costing $133,500. Eastern District, three new churches, one new parsonage, one community house, a lot for a new church at Rutland, total $79,000. To this must be added a new building for Troy Conference Academy, costing $39,000. Northern District, two new churches, four new parsonages, two community houses, costing $62,600. Southern District, twelve new churches, twelve new parsonages, nine new community houses, at a total cost of $455,800.

The total for the period of my administration, 85 new churches, 86 new parsonages, and 34 community houses.

That the Centenary did not hinder the enterprises of church building and improvements is shown by the fact that in 1912 our church property in the Buffalo Area was valued at $12,995,372; in 1924, $20,121,644; an increase of $7,126,272; but of this increase more than half—namely, $4,118,194—has been during the past quadrennium.

The various Conferences of the Area received the Centenary quotas with loyalty and with a measure of enthusiasm. Under the inspiring leadership of Dr. (now Bishop) Frederick T. Keeney, as Area Secretary, the quota of $7,798,865 was not only received, but fully subscribed. In a few districts there was an over-subscription.

In some instances the support from the Centenary for rural sections is no longer needed. These places can not only now provide for themselves, but are becoming contributors to help other more needy places. Here, too, it is simply a question of local leadership.

The average pastor's salary has gone up from $1,022 to $1,690. The average salary of the district superintendents has increased from $2,355 to $4,270. The contributions for Conference claimants have increased from $38,602 to $135,602, an increase of $97,000. There has been a steady, healthy advance year by year for the entire period in the amounts paid to benevolences and ministerial support.

The contrast in payments for the various benevolent enterprises of our church are remarkable. In the year 1912 the Area gave for the various boards of our Church $214,499; in the year 1923, $1,124,257; for all benevolent purposes in 1912, $383,574; in 1923, $1,854,842; a total gain of $1,471,268 for the year 1923 over the year 1912. An increase of approximately 500 per cent in the yearly giving for the Area is a matter for profound thanksgiving to Almighty God.

The Area has led Methodism in the per capita giving of the Centenary period. Up until the first of March the Area registered a per capita of $6.25. We certainly expect to exceed a per capita of $6.50 for the five-year period. This, however, is but the starting point for the new quadrennium. Our hope and endeavor has been to bring the Area to one hundred per cent payment of its quota. This has been the ideal constantly held before our ministers and people. We are hoping that by the end of May our total payments will register at least seven millions of dollars, or ninety per cent of the Centenary askings, plus.

WOMEN'S WORK

In keeping with the advance along all other lines, the two great Woman's Missionary Societies have been prosecuting their work with their usual devotion and enthusiasm. Both societies have witnessed a very marked advance in the growth of their membership and in the contributions made for the Kingdom. In 1912 the receipts of the Area for the Woman's Home Missionary Society were $43,771; in 1923 that society received $97,883. In 1912 the receipts of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society were $52,992; while in 1923 the receipts were $128,764.

In lay membership there has been a net gain of 36,000. Sunday-school scholars, officers, and teachers, a gain of 24,423. We are sorry to report a slight decrease in the number of Epworth Leaguers, but a marvelous increase in their efficiency and in the quality of the work being done, especially through the summer and winter institutes.

EVANGELISM

We have had some very successful meetings in the Area, conducted by local leaders, and in a number of places under the leadership of Dr. George Wood Anderson. One district superintendent writes: "In my judgment the work of the Conference evangelist is one of the best of our achievements. Drs. Brown and Somerville have rendered invaluable service among us." This I emphatically endorse. Personally, I am convinced that the Christ plan of saving folks is the common sense and hence the most successful plan—the permeating influence of personal Christian life, personal work for Jesus.

There has been nothing in the Area that has claimed so large a part of my sympathetic interest and personal cooperation as the children's homes at Williamsville. We have cared for the dear old folks in the Blocher Homes, and have increased our endowment to that institution by at least $250,000. Our Children's Home at Williamsville has at present eighty acres of choice land, valued at $80,000, and constantly increasing in value. There are several buildings now worth together more than $300,000, and a Babyfold being erected by the Central

New York Conference. This coming summer the Northern New York Conference will erect its building. The whole Area is at present positively back of this splendid enterprise, and under the leadership of the able executive secretary, Dr. S. W. Robinson, we may expect this to become one of the outstanding institutions of our great Church.

I cannot close this report without paying an affectionate tribute to our efficient and devoted Area Secretary, Dr. Eli Pittman. He has been my faithful fellow-worker, never sparing with time, and always effectively attending to the urgent duties of the hour. If the Buffalo Area has met with a fair degree of success in the Centenary, it is largely due to our Area Secretary. We could not have done what we have done without him. He has been almost ubiquitous, always fervent and intelligent, always giving the whole of himself for the success of the work.

With all my heart I congratulate my fortunate successor who shall be appointed to the Buffalo Area, and wish him in all departments of its work God's richest blessing.

WILLIAM BURT.

REPORT OF THE CHATTANOOGA AREA

FRANK M. BRISTOL, RESIDENT BISHOP

The Chattanooga Area extends from the Mississippi River to the Atlantic Ocean and includes the States of Tennessee and North Carolina and portions of Virginia and West Virginia. Six Conferences are included in the Area, namely: the three white Conferences: Holston, Central Tennessee and Blue Ridge-Atlantic, and the three colored Conferences: Tennessee, East Tennessee and North Carolina.

The quadrennium has been characterized by the most perfect harmony, devotion and cooperation of the ministers and laymen of the Area. The Centenary Movement has been a two-fold blessing in the benefits of generous giving and grateful receiving. While this Area is largely home missionary territory, it has responded to the World Service appeal in the contribution by the three white Conferences of $232,300 and by the three colored Conferences of $134,600, a total of $366,900. But we are pleased to acknowledge that we have received much more than we have given. For pastoral maintenance and Church Extension the white work has received not less than $353,000. By the generous gifts of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension this has been made our greatest quadrennium of church and parsonage building. The people have responded to the challenge of the Centenary and contributed generously to the building enterprises of the Area. As a result, some of the finest churches and parsonages in the Area have been constructed during the last four years.

The appeals to the people in stressing Christian Stewardship have not only given them a new vision of the world's need of the Gospel and of their duty and responsibility in world evangelization, but it has also stimulated their evangelistic spirit and effort. Our pastors have led the churches in evangelistic meetings which have been marked by most encouraging ingatherings of such as shall be saved. The revival fires are still burning on our altars. The closing year of the quadrennium reveals an increase of membership over last year. The total membership is 98,800. Our Area Secretary, Dr. B. M. Martin, has proven himself a master of the situation in winning the utmost confidence and enlisting the hearty and constant cooperation of our devoted laymen, pastors and district superintendents in support of the Centenary.

The work of our Community Centers, conducted among the mountain people, has had a most gratifying development under the able and expert superintendency of Dr. J. S. Burnett. We have dedicated fine buildings at both the Patten Center and the Pittman Center in Tennessee, and another brick building is nearing completion at the Tipton Hill Center in North Carolina. The community buildings have cost about $100,000. These centers minister to the people in all matters relating to their economic, social, vocational, educational and spiritual welfare. This most practical exemplification of applied Christianity has developed beyond the experimental and problematical stage to assured and permanent efficiency.

To meet the demands of these regions among the mountains and valleys of our South land, where men and women trained for rural work in pastoral and educational lines are needed, the Summer School for Rural Pastors at Athens, Tennessee, has been successfully conducted under the superintendency of Rev. R. A. Kilburn. At the same academic center the school for the study of the Conference Courses has been opened and has had a most gratifying beginning. It is greatly appreciated by our young candidates for the ministry. The work done here during the summer days is not superficial but is thorough and is conducted by teachers and lecturers of high standing and recognized ability.

One feature of our home missionary work in this Area has had but slight recognition—our work among the Indians. From the beginning, we have had an Indian membership with Indian preachers in the Southern part of North Carolina and included in the Blue Ridge-Atlantic Conference. During the last eight years, and especially during this quadrennium, by the help of the Centenary, this field, has been more extensively and intensively cultivated. Our church seems to be the only one to interest itself in the spiritual welfare of the Indians in these regions. We send a missionary to the remnants of the Cherokees, still to be found in the mountains of North Carolina and Tennessee. But our work among the Indians in the southern parts of North Carolina has taken on new importance with the establishing of a flourishing Community Center at Pembroke, where a fine building, equipped to minister to the spiritual, social and educational needs of the people, is ready for dedication. Dr. E. E. Higley has taken a special and devoted interest in the welfare of this remarkable people, who claim to be the descendants of the Indians who, tradition tells us, absorbed Sir Walter Raleigh's "lost colony."

In educational development this Area has enjoyed the most remarkably successful quadrennium in its history. Perhaps no part of the South has, on equal extent of territory, a finer array of secondary schools than has our own Methodism. Washington Collegiate Institute, Murphy Collegiate Institute, Athens School, Baxter Seminary and McLemoresville Academy are all flourishing with an attendance that overcrowds their capacity. New dormitories, administration buildings and science halls have been erected at a cost which only the Centenary through the Board of Education could have helped even this generous people to meet.

The culminating achievement of the Area's splendid work for the higher education of these parts was the campaign for the endowment of the University of Chattanooga, the center of our educational system. Under the leadership of President Arlo A. Brown and assisted by Dr. John W. Hancher and his efficient staff the subscriptions reached $850,000, which placed this University among the institutions of first rank in the South.

Of the progress and condition of our work among the colored people we cannot speak too highly. While there is a lack of and an increasingly urgent demand for a more highly educated ministry it is nevertheless surprising to behold what God hath wrought with the few trained men and many uneducated men of our colored ministry. These colored people are generous to the giving of their last cent for the promotion of the Kingdom. The total amount of their givings to the Centenary may not seem large in comparison with the contributions of their white brethren, but in comparison with their own meager financial resources the giving of these colored brethren is enormous, phenomenal, great beyond all precedent in the history of the Christian Church. Dr. J. C. Sherrill, the very efficient Area Secretary for the colored Conferences, is able to report the payment of $134,600 for the quadrennium.

While the spiritual and evangelistic progress has been encouraging and the church building and repairing have met the demands, the most remarkable development has been in the educational line. Walden College has been revived and placed on a new and sure foundation. The old site was transferred to Meharry Medical College and a new property with fine buildings was purchased for Walden out on the pleasant hills overlooking Nashville. The Board of Education for Negroes has put into this college $151,550.00. Meharry Medical College, which was largely benefited in obtaining the property vacated by Walden College, was generously aided by the Board to the amount of $230,560.00 and it is now in class A, recognized as the foremost colored Medical College of the world. Bennett College at Greensboro, N. C., suffered a considerable loss by fire, but new and finer buildings have replaced the old, and to this flourishing school the Board has been able to give for all purposes $131,250.00. The Morristown Normal and Industrial College also suffered loss by fire, but again a whole group of splendid buildings costing $200,000, have risen from the ashes. To this college the Board has appropriated for all purposes, new buildings, etc., $135,600. President Judson S. Hill, whose genius for getting money for this great work is well known throughout the church, has had to do heroic work in securing aid from all quarters to supplement the appropriations of the Board. It is but just as it is most agreeable to acknowledge the magnificent appropriations of the Board of Education for Negroes for this Area, which is a grand total, and grand it is, of $648,961.00. This too has been made possible by the Centenary.

The outlook for Chattanooga Area was never brighter. The future challenges to greater achievement. With gratitude to God for His blessings through the eight years which we have had the honor of serving in this Area, and with most affectionate regard for the noble ministers and laymen with whom we have labored in joy and harmony we lay down our armor. Another, and we pray a better, will put it on. Then forward to higher ground and greater victories!

Respectfully submitted.

FRANK M. BRISTOL.

CHICAGO AREA

THOMAS NICHOLSON, RESIDENT BISHOP

The Conferences included in the Chicago Area are the Central Swedish, the Central Illinois, the Chicago German, the Illinois, and the Rock River. I have presided each year of the quadrennium at each of these Conferences excepting the Rock River in 1920, presided over by Bishop Frank M. Bristol, and the Central Swedish in 1922, presided over by Bishop Francis J. McConnell. In addition I presided in April, 1923, at the Newark and the New York East Conferences.

The work in the Chicago Area has during the quadrennium had notable growth. The membership has shown a net increase during the four years of 25,378. This is 6,362 more than the increase of the last quadrennium when two Indiana Conferences were included in the Area. There is a net increase in the Sunday School enrollment of 25,379. According to the reports of the statistician of the Sunday School Board the Sunday Schools during three years have paid on the Centenary a total of $279,415. They have paid for their own current expenses $825,109. The total amount contributed for ministerial support has increased by $415,873. This is significant when it is remembered that the increase for ministerial support during the previous quadrennium was a million and a quarter. This makes an increased ministerial support of more than one and three-quarters millions of dollars within an eight-year period. The Centenary offerings for the Disciplinary Benevolences show a total of $5,414,145, while the total reported for Conference Benevolences is $1,516,558.

The progress in church building is very significant. A complete statement has been secured from each District Superintendent in the Area and the data thus secured has been checked carefully with the Conference Minutes and with the statistician in the office of the Committee on Conservation and Advance. During the quadrennium we have built a total of 107 new church buildings, 95 new parsonages, and 14 new parish houses, which as in the case of First Church Campaign, Hemenway, Evanston, and Ravenswood, Chicago, were additions to the church buildings costing from eighty thousand to one hundred and fifty thousand dollars each. These represent an increase in property valuation of $6,802,339. This is exclusive of the Chicago Temple.

Perhaps the greatest single achievement of the quadrennium has been the replacing of the historic old Clark Street Church by the magnificent new Chicago Temple at the corner of Clark and Washington Streets, Chicago. This building is twenty-one stories in height, the tower rises 562 feet above the street level, the first three floors and the basement are devoted entirely to church purposes, under the auspices of our own Church. Offices of many church organizations including the Chicago Church Federation, the headquarters of the Presbyterian and Congregational Churches are in this building. It is expected that in the course of four or five years it will be the recognized Protestant headquarters of the Middle West. The property valuation is conservatively appraised at $7,000,000. The financing is cared for in a perfectly safe way, and the program of religious activities which will be projected during the early part of the new quadrennium will be one of the significant pieces of religious work in the life of the nation. Many persons have contributed time, influence, and money to make this great achievement possible, but chief among them all have been the pastor, the Rev. John Thompson, D.D., and the chairman of the Board of Trustees, the Hon. George W. Dixon. The superintending architect, Mr. F. J. Thielbar, is entitled to the highest credit for his able and efficient supervision, and Mr. William W. Dixon represents a type of man who has rendered very great service.

There is in the Chicago Area a long list of universities, colleges, and institutions of various kinds. Northwestern University has been carrying on a notable campaign for funds, inspired by the offer of $600,000 from the General Education (Rockefeller) Board and by the purchase of the site for a campus on which are to be erected buildings for the use of the professional departments of the University. This campus, comprising seven acres, known as the McKinlock Memorial Campus, is located on the lake front at the Eastern terminus of Chicago Avenue. The buildings of the Law School and of the Medical School are now assured, and there is no reasonable doubt that within the next quadrennium a great group of magnificent buildings will rise on this campus. Buildings also at Evanston are projected for the College of Liberal Arts and the departments located in Evanston. The total new funds secured in the campaign up to January 1, 1924, total $5,975,529. Of the amount just mentioned the greater part is for the professional schools on the new campus. On January 1, 1924, the committee lacked $250,000 of completing the amount necessary to secure the $600,000 gift of the Rockefeller Board, which when completed will add two million dollars to the endowment of the College of Liberal Arts. As the time for meeting this does not expire until July 1, 1924, there is no doubt this amount will be raised, and the addition thereof will put the total funds secured beyond the six million dollar mark. Four years ago the educational budget of the University was $1,142,000; the past year it was $2,013,000. The added resources just indicated will enable a much larger budget to be safely planned for the first year of the new quadrennium. The total resources of the University four years ago were twelve million dollars. The total resources when this report goes into print will be over twenty million dollars. The total enrollment of the University four years ago was 6,804; for the year 1922-23 it was 9,067.

Garrett Biblical Institute is making correspondingly significant progress. The magnificent new building was opened for the new year, January, 1924, and will be dedicated immediately following the General Conference. Its cost is roundly half a million dollars. The enrollment four years ago was 209, the total for 1922-23 was 386. The total number of graduates for the quadrennium was 248. It might also be interesting to state that in 1920 the attendance for the summer quarter was 130, and that in 1923 it was 161. The number of alumni is 2,616, of former students 4,505.

The Chicago Training School, located at 4949 Indiana Avenue, has had a successful quadrennium. At the opening of the school year 1918-19 men were for the first time admitted. The enrollment of men has steadily increased from 5 in the first year to 38 last year and a certainty of 40 or more this year. The Annex is now completely filled with married students. At the beginning of the quadrennium the institution offered five courses in its preparatory department. Now it offers thirty-one courses, giving the full equivalent of a four-year High School course. The work is standardized and fully accredited by the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

In the college department the academic standard has been steadily advanced and all the instructors fully meet the qualifications prescribed by the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools for Junior Colleges. The total number of courses offered is one hundred and fifty. The number of members of the faculty has increased during the quadrennium from eight to seventeen. The student enrollment has increased from 131 to 244, with the certainty of a still larger number for the current school year. The total net income in 1919-20 was $31,980; in 1923-24 it is $63,747. At the close of the year 1919 there was a deficit in running expenses of $7,230; at the close of the last school year there was a surplus in the treasury, with all bills paid, of $414. The productive endowment has increased about sixty thousand dollars, and is now the equivalent of $252,530. The Lucy Rider Meyer Memorial Fund has reached a total in pledges of $62,767 of which $24,715 have been paid in. The total assets of this school are now $606,743.

The Wesley Foundation at the University of Illinois is one of the notable achievements of the quadrennium. The new building, one of the finest pieces of architecture in the State, was dedicated in February, 1922. The net assets for general and building funds, library fund, new church fund, etc., now total $645,424, an increase of $539,240 for the quadrennium. In 1919-20 the total number of Methodist students enrolled was 1,878, of whom 855 were student members of Trinity Church, and 1,100 students were identified with some one of the activities of this church. The current year the Methodist students enrolled number 2,209, of whom 1,287 are members of Trinity Church and 1,605 are participating in its activities. The number of candidates for various forms of Christian work is most gratifying. Seven graduates of the University, members of Trinity Church, have been received on trial in the Illinois Conference the past year, and some others similarly received in other Conferences.

The Illinois Wesleyan University has had a notable growth and development. During the quadrennium it has received for new buildings and campus expansion in cash and subscriptions from Bloomington and McLean Counties $692,453 and from the patronizing Conference one-third of a million dollars in addition. A new gymnasium costing $200,000 has been erected and dedicated. The Buck Memorial Library, costing $140,000, has been erected and is now in use, and has recently received a gift of $100,000 for its endowment. The enrollment in the Illinois Wesleyan University has increased from 424 to over 1,000. The enrollment in the College of Liberal Arts at the close of the last quadrennium was 229, it is this year 560.

The Illinois Woman's College at Jacksonville reports total net resources of $1,025,407, a gain for the quadrennium of $306,318. The total net registration of regular college students is 288, a gain of 96. The total registration in all departments is 541, a gain of 192. During the quadrennium this institution has been fully recognized by the Association of American Universities, and a year later its graduates were made eligible for membership in the American Association of University Women.

Of the smaller institutions the Chaddock Boys' School at Quincy, Illinois, is doing a notable work. The current expenses run between thirty thousand and forty thousand dollars and until last year were provided without deficit. The institution shares in the results of the Bi-Conference Movement. It has as students boys from China, South America, Mexico and various parts of the United States. Its enrollment is usually about 65. The value of grounds and buildings is $105,000, the endowment about $50,000.

One of the problems of the Central Illinois Conference has been solved in the refunctoning of the Grand Prairie Seminary at Onarga, Illinois. Its corporate name remains the same, but it is popularly known as the Onarga Military School; the military features are disciplinary and regulative only. There has been a steady increase in the enrollment under the refunctioning; starting with 27, the enrollment is now 85 regular boarding students with 20 day students additional. The spirit of the institution is fine, the discipline good, the Christian atmosphere satisfactory. During the quadrennium a sixty-five foot addition was built to the dormitory and a new administration building has been erected. These have been provided for without debt. It is hoped in the near future to enlarge the capacity of this institution which is now working to its full capacity limit.

The Jennings Seminary at Aurora, Illinois, is operated by the Deaconesses. All members of the faculty are employed on the Deaconess basis. During the quadrennium seventeen thousand dollars has been added to the productive endowment; the grade work has been eliminated and High School courses only are offered. The number of students is 85, and the institution is prosperous.

Of other institutions the Old People's Home in Chicago, under the efficient management of Mrs. W. A. Phillips, has had a notable quadrennium. It has added to its endowment fund $150,000. A new building has been erected costing $133,500. Later a sun-parlor addition was erected costing $10,000, and repairs and improvements on the buildings have cost $10,000 more. All of this has been paid for. The capacity of the Home is now 155 old people. The new building was the gift of the late Mrs. G. F. Swift, whose death was a calamity to our Methodist institutions. Mrs. Swift was a woman of beautiful character whose benefactions reached the ends of the earth and amounted to a total of many thousands of dollars. Almost every Chicago institution under our auspices has been the recipient of gifts from her bountiful hand.

The Methodist Deaconess Orphanage at Lake Bluff has increased its endowment from $36,000 in 1920 to $193,000 in 1923. Extensive repairs have been made on the buildings, a physical director has been added to the regular staff, manual training and domestic science departments have been introduced and extended and the Orphanage is working to capacity.

The Cunningham Children's Home in the Illinois Conference has received an annuity gift of one hundred and twenty acres of land valued at $24,000 and also a house and lot which sold for $14,000. It is filled to capacity with children.

Notable also is the progress of the Baby-Fold at Normal in the Central Illinois Conference under the able management of Mrs. Asher.

One of the notable achievements of the quadrennium is the enlargement of the Methodist Hospital of Central Illinois at Peoria. This was opened for patients in 1910 with a capacity of 25 beds. At the close of the last quadrennium its capacity was 67 beds, its property valuation was $131,000, and it had 1,296 patients. At the close of the year 1923 it has 110 beds, its property and equipment is valued at $288,000, it has 16 graduate nurses, 2,647 patients. It has a heavy debt, a considerable portion of which is provided for in unpaid subscriptions.

We have a noble institution in our Wesley Memorial Hospital located at Dearborn and 24th Streets, Chicago. During the quadrennium 31,482 patients have been cared for. The income for this period has been $2,337,558. According to the latest reports the present endowment is $1,428,273, a gain for the quadrennium of $101,656. Nine thousand, three hundred and sixty-four people have been given free bed service at a total cost to the hospital of $357,322. Cash and supplies to the value of $29,817 have been contributed by the churches. New equipment and improvements to the amount of $130,476 have been added, all the earnings of the hospital, $83,254, having been put back into the hospital for new equipment and improvements. Six hundred and thirty-three nurses have been graduated during the quadrennium. There are 17 graduate nurses serving in the Foreign field, and 37 Life Service volunteers are now in training in the hospital and medical school. A controversy of more than twelve years standing between Northwestern University and the Wesley Hospital, which has been the occasion of much embarrassment to both institutions and to our work in the city, has recently been amicably settled. By the terms of the settlement Wesley Hospital is to have a site for a new hospital on the McKinlock campus of the University, Lake front, Chicago. Plans are now maturing for the erection of a great hospital building the equal or superior of anything in the Middle West, and the trustees of the present hospital are understood to have suggested the possible utilization of the present plant of Wesley Hospital for a Negro hospital when the new plant on the University campus or adjacent thereto shall have been completed.

The progress of the movement for the better care of the retired ministers noted in our last quadrennial report has gone on during this quadrennium. Notable additions have been made to this fund and the increased care of the veterans who made the progress of the present day possible is one of the causes for gratification. The total amount reported from the office of the Board of Conference Claimants as added to the permanent funds of the Conferences of the Area for the quadrennium is $152,433, and the increase in amounts raised for the current funds is $26,330. The increase in the amounts paid to claimants, including the necessitous relief is $26,980.

We have also the Bethany Home in Chicago which is the property of the Central Swedish Conference. It is a commanding institution growing rapidly. The total value of that property is $450,000, and the number of old people accommodated is 100. The increase in property valuation during the quadrennium is $150,000; 307 old people have been taken care of during this quadrennium, an increase of 167 over the previous four years.

A similar report might be made for the German Deaconess Home in Chicago, the Agard Rest Home at Lake Bluff, and the Chicago Deaconess Home.

Marcy Center is a valuable institution operated by the Woman's Home Missionary Society. It is the one significant piece of work among the Jews resident in the city of Chicago. Extensive plans for the enlargement of this institution and its removal to a new and better site on the West Side have been projected and will be carried out in the near future.

In our last quadrennial report we noted the establishment of the Department of Religious Education under the direction of the Graduate School of Northwestern University. Under the inspiration and with the help of both the Home and Foreign collections of the Centenary organization this work has gone on in a most gratifying way during the quadrennium. The enrollment has doubled and trebled, and now equals 90. Professor James A. James, Ph.D., Dean of the Graduate School of Northwestern University and a delegate to the General Conference, has given a notable leadership to this important piece of work.

The Chicago Area has the headquarters of the Board of Sunday Schools, the Board of Conference Claimants, the Board of Control of the Epworth League, the Board of Hospitals and Homes, the Committee of Conservation and Advance, the Northwestern Christian Advocate, the Epworth Herald and a branch of the Book Concern. It has other offices such as the Western office of the Board of Foreign Missions, of the Board of Education, of the Bureau of Architecture, of the Woman's Foreign and the Woman's Home Missionary Societies. These interests have all received the personal attention and cooperation of the Resident Bishop. Several of these Boards conduct within the Conferences of the Area special activities of great value to the total life of the Church. It is a noteworthy fact that while we were compelled to report a decrease of more than eleven thousand in the Sunday School enrollment in the last quadrennium we are able to report an increase of more than twenty-five thousand for this four years.

The Resident Bishop of Chicago has served as president of the Anti-Saloon League of America, as president of the Board of Sunday Schools, vice-president of the Deaconess Board, chairman of the Committee of Conservation and Advance, as a member of the executive and administrative committees of the Federal Council of Churches, as a member of the International Y. M. C. A. and one of its Western regional directors, and in a variety of other organizations. He served as delegate from the North American Missions Conference to the International Missionary Conference at Oxford, and as fraternal delegate to the Irish Methodist Conference at Belfast and to the British Wesleyan Conference at Bristol. In these capacities a large number of public services were inevitable.

The expanding program of this great Area demands ceaseless and untiring work. Addresses on all sorts of public occasions, denominational and interdenominational gatherings, patriotic work, every conceivable kind of meeting, together with services on various Church Boards make the life of the Resident Bishop in Chicago strenuous indeed.

During the quadrennium the number of candidates for our ministry has continued to show a gratifying increase. The total number reported for the five Conferences of the Area during the quadrennium is 105. Even more significant than the number is the quality and training of the men. At a recent session of one of the Conferences where 14 men were received every man was a college or university graduate and every one either a seminary graduate or in the seminary course. The response to the Life Service campaigns has been equally gratifying. We have the young people. Scores and hundreds of them are found on every public occasion, at our church dedications and in our various church gatherings. These young people show a willingness to consecrate themselves to religious work. The Epworth League under the very efficient leadership of its General Secretary, Doctor Charles E. Guthrie, is making the work of that great organization vital and significant to a remarkable degree. The Epworth League institutes are a great and blessed force in the life of our young people. A similar thing may be said of the institutes conducted under the auspices of the Sunday School Board.

CINCINNATI AREA

WILLIAM F. ANDERSON, RESIDENT BISHOP

When the Area system was adopted the Cincinnati Area consisted of five Conferences in Ohio, the Indiana, Kentucky, Central German and Lexington—nine in all. In 1916 Central German became associated with the Detroit Area, and in 1920 Indiana and Lexington Conferences became part of the Indianapolis Area. Meantime the five Conferences in Ohio have been reduced to three.

The Cincinnati Area, as now constituted, consists of Kentucky, Ohio, North-East Ohio and West Ohio Conferences. The membership in full of the churches in these Conferences is 426,373, with 16,898 probationary members. The increase in membership for the quadrennium is 14,301. The Sunday School enrollment is 449,723, an increase of 34,178.

Vigorous efforts have been persistently exerted during the quadrennium in the interest of THE CENTENARY. The gifts of the Area for CENTENARY purposes since the Movement was organized totals to January 1, 1924, $7,190,250, which is 10.87% plus of the amount given by the entire Church. The Area's highest per capita gift in any single year is $3.71.

There has been a steady advance for those interests of the Church not included in the Centenary. The increase in PASTORS' SALARIES has been remarkable. The total amount for MINISTERIAL SUPPORT is $9,039,671; a gift of $5.33 per capita annually.

The quadrennium has been marked by a very unusual amount of CHURCH-BUILDING. It is a fine testimonial to the loyalty and devotion of our people that so many churches should have been erected notwithstanding the high cost of building. For CHURCH-BUILDING AND IMPROVEMENT a total of $7,381,000 has been raised. At the same time there has been paid on OLD INDEBTEDNESS $176,851. The total VALUE OF CHURCH PROPERTY, exclusive of all indebtedness, is now $31,023,996; a gain of $4,920,892. The government authorities report that the annual per capita income for all the people in Ohio, including men, women and children, is $826. What might not the Methodists of Ohio do in KINGDOM BUILDING if the law of CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP were accepted and practiced!

One of the most noteworthy features of the work in the Cincinnati Area is the development of EDUCATIONAL INTERESTS. The Methodist youth of the Area are positively voracious in their educational appetites. As the result, our four colleges in Ohio are crowded to their utmost capacity. More than 40% of the students of the tax-supported institutions are Methodists, while the Methodist contingents in the colleges of other denominations are invariably large, sometimes almost to the point of embarrassment to the management of these institutions. The showing of our colleges is as follows:

Ohio Wesleyan, students 1,784, an advance of 455. Total material assets are $4,015,600. The Development Program for eight millions is in full swing and victory seems assured.

Mount Union continues on her upward course with 826 students and material assets valued at $1,422,038. A campaign for two million dollars additional is being organized.

Ohio Northern is providing educational facilities for a student body of more than 1,000 and at a cost which is surprisingly low in these times. The total material assets of the institutions are a little above $1,000,000.

Baldwin-Wallace has property, equipment and endowment whose value reaches the sum of $2,146,807; an increase of $256,632. The College of Liberal Arts has an enrollment of more than 300.

Union College, Barbourville, Kentucky, has registered a notable advance in educational standards and in the growth of property values. An Endowment Campaign resulted in subscriptions of $453,000 and endowment has been actually increased more than $100,000. Buildings and equipment are valued in round numbers at $300,000. The student body ranges about 300.

The Cincinnati Training School, which performs its work under the auspices of the Elizabeth Gamble Deaconess Home Association, is rendering a gracious and helpful ministry in the training of young women for practical Christian service in the home and foreign fields. It has a student body of almost 100, and property assets at $250,000.

The work of the Church under the Wesley Foundation has greatly increased. It is going forward splendidly in as many as ten or twelve of the non-Methodist institutions. It is so of necessity because of the very large Methodist constituency in all these colleges. Each of these institutions affords opportunity for reinforcement for life-service and the results are most gratifying.

The work of Hospitals and Homes has received a very distinct impetus in recent years and the response of the Cincinnati Area has been immediate and generous.

The Christ Hospital, associated with the Elizabeth Gamble Deaconess Home Association, represents standard of merit in every respect. Its present assets of cash investments, real estate, equipment, etc., totals $1,609,142; an increase of $126,849. In addition a Home for Nurses has been purchased whose value approximates $100,000.

A very remarkable piece of good fortune has come to Saint Luke's Hospital, Cleveland. Two friends of the institution, not members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, have made a proposal to give each the sum of one million dollars to be divided equally between buildings and endowments. This is on condition that the friends of the institution raise an additional million dollars and that the proceeds of the present downtown property be conserved for future development. A new site of sixteen acres has been purchased. The ministry and membership of the North-East Ohio and the Erie Conferences expect to join in a campaign in the months near at hand for the raising of the conditional million named by the donors. Saint Luke's will then have a property with a total valuation near $5,000,000. It is expected that the new Saint Luke's will provide accommodations for 500 beds. It is planned that building operations shall begin very soon.

White Cross Hospital of Columbus, formerly the Protestant Hospital, has now become a thorough-going Methodist institution in its official management and has been adopted by the Ohio Conference. It has recently purchased the old Ohio Medical College building and is planning to build a new unit with 200 beds, which will make it the largest hospital in Columbus. The expansion program anticipates the expenditure of $700,000.

Flower Hospital of Toledo has received a new impetus under new leadership. The institution has been reorganized and plans are in process for a large expansion. The assets of the property at present are a little beyond a quarter of a million dollars; increase $100,000.

Pikeville Hospital at Pikeville, Kentucky, has been organized under the auspices of the Kentucky Conference. It began its work during the present quadrennium and has property worth well toward $100,000.

The Methodist Episcopal Deaconess Hospital at Louisville, Kentucky, is facing the future with larger outlook than has heretofore been possible. It is growing in favor among the people of the city and has material assets worth something beyond $100,000.

The Methodist Home for the Aged on College Hill, Cincinnati, is having a period of splendid prosperity. The same is true of the Children's Home at Worthington and the Home for the Aged at Elyria.

The institutional and philanthropic work of this Area is conducted by leaders of recognized competency and is highly creditable to the denomination. Special emphasis is being continuously placed upon modern methods of church work, both in the cities and in rural districts. The leaders of the Church are thoroughly alive to all the interests of the Kingdom and are eagerly seeking to avail themselves of all improvement in method and procedure.

The growth and multiplication of Goodwill Industries, Community Houses, Social Centers and Church Houses in City and Rural Districts is one of the significant developments in the work of the Area—Esther Homes and Friendship Homes under the auspices of Woman's Home Missionary Society and the various Deaconess organizations are entering strategic fields with a ministry beautifully helpful and Christlike.

The work of The Methodist Book Concern under its present management in Cincinnati is the continued admiration of laymen and ministers alike.

There is a constant demand for the spiritual emphasis in all the activities of the Church and every appeal upon the basis of the spiritual meets ready response. The people of the Area still feel the original call of Methodism to spread scriptural holiness throughout the earth. The Centenary Movement has brought vital quickening in that regard. The enlargement of vision, the appeal of the stricken world, the emphasis upon the Gospel of Christ as the only means of attaining unto the better condition and the vitalizing of the message of the ministry have all contributed to a better conception of the meaning of the Kingdom of God and to a more virile Methodism. The people of this Area may be depended upon to show a deep and ever growing interest in the World Service Program. The spirit of ministers and members generally is "to thank God and take courage."

THE DENVER AREA

C. L. MEAD, RESIDENT BISHOP

The Denver Area, according to the Year Book for 1921, is with but one exception the largest episcopal area in the United States. It extends from the plains of Montana across the Rio Grande into Old Mexico and from the Mississippi River to the Sierra Nevada Mountains. These Conferences embrace the territory of Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and New Mexico with exclusive administration of all Methodist people, and the foreign-speaking and colored work included in these Conferences covering territory in the States of Oklahoma, Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska.

The physical features of the Area alone are marvelous, affording practically all types of climate: cold snows of winter linger late in the summer in northern Wyoming, while at the same time roses bloom and fruit ripens in southern New Mexico. Much of the territory of the Area is frontier in character, but it embraces all of the problems, however, incident to the work of the church. It has the City problem, the Community Church problem, the Mining Camp problem, the Rural problem, the Mormon problem, the Indian problem and the Frontier problem. In Denver and Salt Lake City, the city problem is especially pressing and prominent. Denver has approximately 300,000 people and is said to have more college graduates in proportion to its population than any city in the United States except Boston. It presents all types of the city problem from the residential family church to the Institutional church among the poor of the city. It is said to have the most progressive program in the development of the religious work of our church of any city in the United States. Being the heart of the Area, it also is the center of the Colorado Conference by virtue of its location, railroad facilities and growing influence in the Rocky Mountain region. It has possibly a half dozen of the most outstanding successful churches in the work of the cities in America. Trinity Church, which is one of the great churches of Methodism, has had a singularly successful career under the leadership of Dr. Loren M. Edwards, where literally thousands throng the church at every service. The Washington Park Community Church, of which Dr. George L. Nuckolls is pastor, has grown to such proportions that the church is under the necessity of immediate enlargement of its plant for worship, affording an entire community the opportunity for a cooperative effort which has brought all the Protestant denominations of the community together without losing anything of essential church influence and leadership. Grace Church, under the leadership of Dr. George S. Lackland, has attracted through its Open Forum and special ministry to the laboring men of the Rocky Mountain region a ministry of great value and efficiency. Grant Avenue Church, under the leadership of Dr. James Thomas, has successfully carried on during the quadrennium plans of community uplift which have been unique in Methodism, proving the value of the social service and spiritual ministry of the church. The Epworth Institutional Church, under the leadership of Dr. Ezra M. Cox, has become a perfect beehive of industry through its "Good Will" activities and has practically redeemed a large section of the child life of the city through its seven-day-week ministries. The Italian Mission is offering to the foreign speaking population of their community a fine opportunity for a better understanding of the spirit of our church life and reaching effectively many whose interest in other denominations has been divorced from vital church fellowship. In different sections of the city new church buildings are being erected with a view to meet the larger needs of the city's growth and seeking such modern equipment as will meet the demands of the growing life and preparing for the future growth of the city's population. Faithful men labor in these with unusual devotion to their tasks and are accomplishing almost impossible things.

At the University of Denver we have a center for Christian education in the Area which is proving its value in giving a finely trained group of our youth for the work both of the ministry and the laity of the area. At the beginning of the quadrennium Dr. Henry A. Buchtel, whose conspicuous leadership for twenty-two years had led the university to a position of influence and power, was suddenly stricken and compelled because of his physical condition to resign. The university was singularly fortunate in securing as his successor Chancellor Heber R. Harper, under whose leadership the university has steadily grown both in numbers and influence. Its value to the Rocky Mountain Methodism has been beyond all estimate. The Iliff School of Theology, under the leadership of Dr. Edwin W. Dunlavy, has increased its student-body to more than one hundred in number and has secured in a recent financial campaign $153,000 additional financial resources, and gives promise of being one of the great theological institutions of the Church.

Our work in the eastern part of the State of Colorado, from the foothills of the Rocky Mountains to the Kansas line, is largely made up of rural church problems. During the dreadful financial conditions which have affected the farmers, many farms have been sold and many people have moved out of this part of the territory. However, the ministers who have been appointed to these charges have proved their loyalty and devotion by giving a perfectly heroic service, so that the losses have been minimized and the work is moving forward slowly but substantially in these rural districts.

Two very large and successful Epworth League Institutes are held every year: one on the Grand Mesa on the Western Slope, serving the Grand Junction District; the other at Estes Park, serving the other districts of the Colorado Conference. These institutes are increasing in numbers and influence with every passing year, and bid fair to give our young people an opportunity for training seldom equalled, and to give to the church a finely trained youth which will be able to cope with the problems of the future. Throughout the Conference there have been steadily increasing and substantial gains in membership and property. Within the city of Denver, beautiful and commodious new churches have been dedicated at Edgewater and Englewood, while building projects at Park Hill Church, Christ Church, Highlands and Harkness Heights are moving forward, which promise to give a modern equipment in these sections of the city of Denver which will equal if they do not surpass that of any other city in America.

On the Colorado Springs District where Dr. G. M. Henderson is giving a most careful and constructive superintendency to the work new churches have been erected at Limon, a county-seat town in the eastern part of the State, commanding a great stretch of territory where our church is giving an invaluable ministry, and at Arvada, one of the suburbs of the city of Denver, where a Community Church has been partially erected, already giving promise of commanding the entire community with its fine and helpful social and religious ministry.

At Pueblo in the Colorado Conference, where the fine leadership of Dr. Chas. W. Hancher has been so conspicuously successful, constant advances of substantial character are apparent. The First Church is building a beautiful commodious modern structure costing $125,000, while Saint Paul's Church is adding a $30,000 Sunday school addition to its already fine auditorium. Monte Vista has completed a new structure which will be a center of religious life for all of the San Luis Valley. A new church has also been dedicated at Montrose on the Grand Junction District, which gives our Methodism a representative standing in that great area where men struggle against almost impossible odds. The Grand Junction District under the wise leadership of Dr. E. N. Edgerton has steadily gone forward in Centenary contributions and in the general strengthening of our Church in that vast region. On the Greeley District new churches have been dedicated at Akron, Armel, Fleming, Holyoke, Otis, Platteville and Hudson where the financial reverses of the farmers had seemed to prophesy failure for any advance of any kind. Yet under the careful, commanding leadership of Dr. C. A. Wright, the district has steadily advanced and substantial growths are recorded. At the student centers in Boulder, Greeley and Fort Collins where we have student pastors, houses have been purchased which form at each of these strategic places religious centers of student life, which serves to increase the commanding influence of the church among the young people of the State.

Probably the most signal development in the Area has been in connection with our hospital work at Colorado Springs. The Woman's Home Missionary Society owned a very fine property, consisting of a fine location with a small but beautiful and efficient hospital in operation, the total value of the property being estimated by careful survey to approximate $300,000. Through the generosity of the Woman's Home Missionary Society this entire property has been deeded over to the Colorado Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the growing usefulness of the institution is beyond all estimate. In view of the fact that our Rocky Mountain country offers a climate singularly congenial and friendly to sufferers from tuberculosis, many people from all parts of the United States come to us for healing and help. In connection with this fine gift from the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the complete plant of Beth-El Hospital where medical and surgical work is being carried on with such remarkable success, the City of Colorado Springs has donated additional adjoining land comprising twenty-three acres, upon which is to be erected the National Methodist Episcopal Sanatorium for Tuberculosis. It is expected that within the near future a modern Sanatorium consisting of commodious buildings completely equipped and having the best service available will be afforded our Methodist people who suffer from this dread disease. It is our hope that the buildings can be speedily completed and that the ministry so needed in this Rocky Mountain region to care for the innumerable victims who come to us can be given through the name of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the spirit of Christ for the healing of the nations.

The Wyoming State Conference is serving a portion of the country which is passing over from frontier conditions to industrial, commercial and agricultural situations. The large industrial development in the oil districts has made Casper a center of wide influence throughout the State. Our work has grown in the city of Casper until a second Methodist Church, known as the East Side Church, has been organized and has grown into a membership of 134 in a single year, with a growing Sunday school and increasing prospects of usefulness. A new and commanding site has been purchased for the Gantz Memorial Church and very soon a new building will be erected which will be a credit to the Methodism of that great State. In the Big Horn Basin dedications have been held at Worland, Basin and Greybull, while at Sheridan a $110,000 structure has been dedicated, whose beauty and imposing character is unmatched in the State, giving Methodism a commanding position in that locality. The industrial and agricultural conditions have very seriously affected the progress of the State, as many people have suffered financial bankruptcy through the result of the financial depression, yet under the very wise leadership of the District Superintendents, the work has steadily grown in that region.

At Thermopolis, Wyoming, there was organized last year the Wyoming State Epworth League Institute, which bids fair to rival, if not surpass, in attendance and registration any similar gathering in the Area.

The State University, located at Laramie, Wyoming, gives promise of becoming one of the great State universities of the country inasmuch as it has been enriched through royalties from great investments from the oil region, and with increasing endowment and equipment is attracting a very large student body to this university center. The Wesley Foundation has already been organized in connection with the work of the State University with a very competent committee and bids fair to rival the religious work in any of the great universities of the land. There is no more promising feature connected with our work in the State of Wyoming than the work of this Wesley Foundation.

The New Mexico Conference ministers to both English and Spanish speaking people in the State of New Mexico, the English speaking work steadily advancing under the leadership of Dr. S. Alonzo Bright, for many years one of the most conspicuous leaders in our Home Mission work; new churches have been dedicated at Clayton, Las Vegas, Santa Fe, Orchard Park in El Paso, while extension work at Raton and Albuquerque has given us the leadership of the Protestant forces of the community. The Spanish speaking work has been organized by virtue of the enabling act passed by the last General Conference into what is known as the Southwest Spanish Mission with Dr. H. A. Bassett as the superintendent, whose very effective service as District Superintendent of the Spanish speaking District has placed the work on a substantial basis, though the growth may not have been as rapid as desired. One of the great assets of our work is the Harwood School for Boys, of which Dr. Bassett is president, which is growing in numbers and strength among our Mexican people until we are beginning to look to that school as the source of supply for the finely trained Mexican youth both as preachers and laymen to care for the large number of Mexican people of the State constantly augmented by the numbers who come yearly across the border from Old Mexico. It is estimated that 100,000 Mexicans came into the United States through New Mexico and Arizona, and one of the pressing problems of the area is to secure a sufficiently trained Spanish speaking ministry to care for these needy people. The Sanatorium at Albuquerque under the splendid administration of the Woman's Home Missionary Society has erected a nurses' home, modernized the equipment, improved and enlarged the plant until it is one of the centers of helpful and healing life in the great southwest country. As the southwest develops, the Methodist Episcopal Church can be depended upon to keep in the van of progress and fine service, caring for all the large interests of Methodism in that region.

The West German brethren have been most loyal and faithful during a very trying period occasioned by feeling engendered by the World War, but have shown by their consecration and contributions to the work their fine loyalty both to the nation and the church. The West German Conference has been one of the few Conferences signally successful in having raised and paid its Centenary quota, and our German people are among our staunchest and strongest workers throughout the area. They suffer from a divided sentiment concerning the question of amalgamation with the English speaking work in the localities where they are at work, but are content to work on efficiently and faithfully until the future of their Conference relationship shall have been determined by further action. The Western Swedish Conference, operating principally in Nebraska, suffers under the same difficulty as the other foreign speaking Conferences: the older people in some sections desiring services in the Swedish language, while the younger people of the coming generations can be reached only by the use of the English. In the natural course of events the Swedish congregations will sooner or later be absorbed in the work of the contiguous Conferences, as by a gradual process of absorption many of the younger ministers of the Conference have accepted work in English speaking localities.

The Lincoln Conference has a double task of ministering to colored people in localities and cities which are practically northern in sentiment and community life and yet are obliged to carry on work in situations where our colored work is virtually on the Home Mission Basis. The brethren of the Lincoln Conference have shown a desire to grow in strength and devotion to the church of their life and love, and while very poor financially in some sections, yet they are struggling with a courage undiminished which is characteristic of the patience of their people. New churches have been erected, some of which are partially completed, at Kansas City, Kansas, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, Muskogee, Oklahoma, Tulsa and Ardmore, which indicate that our colored people of the Lincoln Conference are following slowly but surely in the path of a permanent development which gives fine promise for their race. They have been very patient in the face of race prejudice and have continued faithful to the tasks imposed upon them, seeking through the ordinary channels in Centenary efforts to accomplish almost impossible tasks in practically impossible situations.

One of the most remarkable pieces of work done in the Area during the quadrennium is in the Utah Mission under the very wise leadership and administration of Dr. John J. Lace, who has had charge of the work in this difficult field. The work has been pushed with regard to a comprehensiveness of plan and intensity of zeal and devotion to detail that has been remarkable. In the fine business administration of the Mission, Dr. Lace has been able to secure for our church a very high grade of credit in the confidence of the people in the various communities where we are at work. The clearance of titles, the disposal of property in unpromising situations, the opening of many fields throughout the State of Utah has given to us a very commanding position. In the city of Salt Lake our First Church under the fine ministry of Dr. Stanley A. Curtis has steadily grown in membership and representative character until both its ministry and members constitute leading factors in the evangelical life of the city. At Grace Church and Centenary Church new structures have been erected, which are beautiful in appearance, complete in modern equipment, and serving in most effective way the sections of the city where they are located. In Price, Utah, a new church, which has long been needed there, is now a reality, promising to give to that very thriving and growing city in the eastern part of the State a ministry of untold value.

A very promising Epworth League Institute has been organized in our work of the Utah Mission where more than one hundred young people have gathered in recent years with increasing enthusiasm and fine results under the leadership of Dr. Lace, who has secured a competent and efficient faculty to conduct the work of the institute.

One of the most gratifying elements in our work in Utah is the character of the men who have been secured to work in this very difficult mission field. It requires an unusual degree of consecration and courage to live under conditions as prevail in the presence of the powerful Mormon influences of this field. And yet the men, who have been secured and who labor among these hard conditions, with small remuneration, have shown a fidelity and devotion which is unsurpassed in any field under the administration of the Church.

An outstanding feature of our work has been the very strong and fine administration of the Centenary Area Office under the leadership of Rev. Frank R. Hollenback, of the Colorado Conference, whose long ministry in this field has made him entirely familiar with the problems of this Rocky Mountain region.

For many years a member of the Colorado Conference, a district superintendent of large service and wide experience, his service has proved invaluable in the continuation of the work done for our Committee on Conservation and Advance in the Centenary movement of the Church. The report of the Denver Area Office shows a fine planning and executive efficiency in covering so large an area and a very wise use of the material furnished by the Chicago Office in slides, lectures, speakers and literature reveals the fact that the standing of the Area in its Centenary record has been due very largely to the leadership of the Secretary with the cooperation of the district superintendents and the pastors in every section. It is difficult to conceive how such large returns could have been secured in benevolent contributions from a territory so scattered and sparsely settled with financial conditions that have been very difficult to work under without the help of this very valuable and efficient organization. The need for such an organization in an area composed of such diverse problems is beyond words.

There has been a steady growth in membership throughout the Area, and the increasing development in church buildings and church property, which is here recorded, has been made possible by the fine administration of the district superintendents and the splendid cooperation of the pastors and people in every section. We desire to record our very great debt to the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension, which has responded constantly and readily to innumerable appeals from what is distinctly in a very large part Home Missionary territory and frontier work, and we desire to record our conviction that the advances in church property and the growth in membership are due very largely to the splendid cooperation and generosity of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension in helping us to enter many neglected fields.

DETROIT AREA

THEODORE S. HENDERSON, RESIDENT BISHOP

The Detroit Area comprises the Central German, Detroit, Michigan, and Norwegian and Danish Conferences. The territory in which the churches are located reaches from North Braddock, Pennsylvania, on the east, to Fremont, Nebraska, on the west, and from Nashville, Tennessee, on the south, to Lake Superior and North Dakota on the north and northwest. This quadrennial report must be a recognized incomplete and condensed summary of the activities and achievements of Methodism in this Area.

Evangelism. Foremost in the manifold ministry of the church is the proclamation, interpretation and incarnation of the evangel of Christ. Amid all the seething world unrest we have endeavored to demonstrate to our constituency that Methodism is culture on fire with a dominant spiritual passion. The gain in church membership, including probationers, for the four years ending at the last Annual Conferences, was 10,456, a percentage gain of six per cent for the quadrennium. In one twelve months 24,078 probationers were received into church fellowship, or 14½ per cent of the total membership for that year. One of our still most appalling evangelistic deficiencies is the failure to train effectively the probationers we receive. As a part of the constructive program of fundamental evangelism, definite and far-reaching results have been obtained from the Laymen's Loyalty League, which has committed a large number of our laymen to the following basic principles of the spiritual life:

In loving loyalty to Jesus Christ, my personal Saviour and Lord, I agree to practice

First, The Life of Daily Prayer for myself and others.

Second, The Life of Stewardship, to acquire and administer my possessions as a sacred trust from God; and in token of the acknowledgment of the complete ownership of God, to set aside at least one tenth of my income for direct Kingdom purposes.

Third, The Life of Personal Evangelism, through which I covenant to seek to win others to Christ, especially my own personal acquaintances, and help them to share in the full responsibilities of the fellowship of the church.

Religious Education. Our major opportunity in religious education is the church Bible school. Manifest gains in the training of a better leadership have taken place, mightily improving the quality of our volunteer teaching force, which cannot be estimated by our numerical increase. The records indicate that the total enrollment of the Sunday schools of the Area is 211,088, a gain of nine per cent during the past four complete Annual Conference years. Daily Vacation Bible Schools grow in numbers and in the meeting of a rare opportunity in religious education, while in an increasing number of places pastors are teaching Bible study in the public schools with curriculum credit.

Young People's Work. The Epworth League still maintains its power to enlist young people in Kingdom service through the varied departments of this much needed organization. The Detroit Area maintains Epworth League institutes at Albion and Lake Michigamme, Michigan; at Lake Ripley, Wisconsin, and Lake Tipitwakan, Minnesota, for the Norwegian and Danish young people; while the young people of the Central German Conference meet at Santa Claus, Indiana, and Lakeside, Ohio. If the Epworth League did nothing more than to instruct and inspire the young people for the work of Christian leadership in the local churches by means of the institutes of this Area, the Epworth League would make a most enviable record in the service of the Kingdom. The attempt to articulate and coordinate the church activities of the high school group in our local churches is worthy of all praise. There is no more teasing problem before the Methodists of this Area than to enlist this group in vital service for Christ in the community. One of the most notable achievements of the Epworth Leagues of this Area is the support of Miss Geraldine Townsend in her work as the Epworth League Secretary of China. The State of Michigan has led the nation in the number of Mission Study classes.

Christian Education. Approximately five thousand Methodist students are in attendance at our own Albion College, the University of Michigan, the Michigan Agricultural College and the four normal colleges of the State. With the rapid growth of the student body at Albion, the superb financial achievement of securing subscriptions for more than $2,000,000 for Christian education in Michigan, of which $1,700,000 will go to Albion, is here recorded with grateful acknowledgment to the pastors and laymen without whose leadership the result would have been impossible. At Ann Arbor, the seat of the State university, a complete block of property adjoining the campus is now in the possession of the Methodists, on the corner of which are located the Methodist Church and the present Wesley Hall, and the remainder of the site will be used for the development of an adequate Wesley Foundation when a quarter of a million dollars is available from the funds of the Methodist Educational Advance. Special workers among students are engaged at Albion, Ann Arbor, Kalamazoo, Ypsilanti, Mount Pleasant and East Lansing. Here also it must be acknowledged that of the total amount raised for Baldwin Wallace College in Berea, Ohio, not less than $300,000 came from the Central German Conference.

Vocational Life Service. Since June 1, 1916, we have definite record of 309 men and women who have actually gone into their respective fields of service as ministers, missionaries, deaconesses, social workers and others. This does not include many times that number in the universities, colleges and normal schools in undergraduate preparation for some specific form of full time vocational life service. One of the reasons for such results has been the continuous presentation among our young people of the "Whatever, Wherever, Whenever" covenant and the formation of many 3 W Circles in the local churches. During the past four years one hundred men have united on trial with the four Annual Conferences of the Area. Recalling that two of the Conferences are bilingual Conferences, working mainly among foreign-speaking peoples, this record is not without significance. Within the bounds of the Area the most significant deaconess conference in Methodism is held annually within the bounds of the Central German Conference, where we appoint more than seventy deaconesses each year.

Bilingual Work. In this Area are the two outstanding bilingual Conferences of Methodism. When it is recognized that these churches in the Central German and the Norwegian and Danish Conferences have constantly contributed a part of their membership to the English speaking Conferences, their record, even from the standpoint of membership, is highly gratifying. Within the past four years the total membership of these two Conferences has increased from 19,771 to 20,547, while the Sunday school enrollment has increased from 22,676 to 24,741. When it is recalled that these two Conferences have in four years invested $586,446 in church extension projects; that the Central German Conference exceeds by fifteen per cent any other Conference in the Area in its Centenary payments, and that they have contributed more than $300,000 to Christian education; that the Norwegian and Danish Conference has established a working girls' home for Scandinavians in Chicago, appraised at $85,000; that there is now being erected in Cincinnati in the Central German Conference a $200,000 community center in the midst of a polyglot population; that $35,000 was given by a layman in the Central German Conference for a children's hospital at Bethesda, Cincinnati; that $525,466 has just been subscribed, mainly from the city of Cincinnati, of which $101,000 was from the Central German Conference, for a new Bethesda surgical hospital, it will be recognized that there remains a vast Kingdom asset in our bi-lingual Conferences, the value of which must be appropriately appraised. These Conferences believe that no policy should be framed by the General Conference which would disintegrate their work nor destroy the integrity of the Annual Conferences as units. After eight years of as careful supervision and study as I have been able to give, I am convinced that the registered opinion of these Conferences is correct and their convictions should prevail in any readjustment in the bilingual work of Methodism.

Parish Plan. In seven centers of the Michigan Conference the parish plan is in successful operation. It is an adaptation of the Methodist circuit system to a group of churches, especially where there are rural churches within a reasonable radius of a prosperous town or city church, and all the churches are under the direction of a preacher in charge with one or more ministers and special workers forming the parish staff. Notable in our cities is the Detroit City Parish. Here there are six centers, including Polish, Italian, Hungarian, Negro Centers and a Goodwill Industry center, all under the pastoral supervision of the superintendent of the Methodist Union, who is also the preacher in charge of the entire parish. These foreign language centers are the most dynamic Americanization centers in the city. Within the past three months 930 adult Hungarians have been in attendance on the citizenship classes, and within the city parish during the same period an aggregate of 22,551 people have been in our various educational and welfare groups for instruction.

Church Extension. According to district superintendents' reports, there has been an investment during the quadrennium of more than six and one half million dollars in building and rebuilding churches and parsonages. Notable among the larger projects are the Metropolitan Church, Detroit, to cost more than $1,000,000; Trinity Church, Grand Rapids, $400,000; First Church, Jackson, $320,000; Temple Community Hall, Central Church, Lansing, $300,000; Trinity Church, Highland Park, Detroit, $275,000; while dedications of new churches ranging in cost from $15,000 to $150,000 have been so many in number that the resident bishop has been unable to dedicate them all. As a part of our building program many community houses have been erected and a notable work is being done in interpreting the manifold ministry of Jesus to communities hitherto untouched. Notable among these community houses is the Temple Hall in Central Church, Lansing, the generous gift of Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Scott, of Lansing. During the quadrennium the Area has secured an episcopal residence at a cost of $30,000, providing a most attractive and comfortable residence for which the present resident bishop desires to express his genuine appreciation.

Hospitals and Homes. Bethesda Hospital, Cincinnati, in the Central German Conference, is the just pride of the Area. Nothing in Methodism surpasses it in its ministry. Its Sanitarium at Scarlet Oaks, its Home for the Aged, its Deaconess Home, its Maternity Hospital, its Dorcas Training School, together with the medical and surgical hospital, all under one supervision and with marked spirituality and tone, is a joy and an inspiration. During the quadrennium Bronson Hospital at Kalamazoo, within the bounds of the Michigan Conference, has been acquired for Methodism without cost and we now have a property valued at $205,000, to which will be added $100,000 now being raised, to double the capacity of the institution. In forty-three months Bronson Hospital has cared for 6,181 patients.

In Farmington, Michigan, within the bounds of the Detroit Conference, we have acquired forty-five acres and begun the development of a Children's Home on a basis of a Christian welfare policy unique in Methodism. Our property now exceeds $100,000 in value and we minister to a family of 155 children. The support of the Home has been almost entirely secured through an annual White Gift Christmas. The Detroit Community Union provides for the support of the children from the city of Detroit. The Berea Orphans' Home at Berea, Ohio, is generously supported by the Central German Conference. The Area is blessed with four homes for the aged: Clark Memorial Home, Grand Rapids, Michigan Conference; Chelsea Home, in the Detroit Conference; Bethesda Home for the Aged in Cincinnati, and Elim Home in Minneapolis, in the Norwegian and Danish Conference.

The Centenary. The Detroit Area has shared in the benefits as well as contributing to this most notable benevolent enterprise in the history of Protestantism. According to the latest reports available, the Area has paid 71 per cent of what is due on the four and a half years of the Centenary period. Without the inspiration and aid of the Centenary the achievements reported above would have been impossible. The Centenary record for the Area is held by the Central German Conference with 88 per cent of its apportionment paid. Within the past four years the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society has raised $434,243 and the Woman's Home Missionary Society $333,115.

Annual Conference Benevolences. The Annual Conference benevolences have increased with startling rapidity and it is possible that the Centenary may have suffered thereby in certain localities, but the Annual Conference benevolences are heavily indebted to the Centenary for the awakening and enlargement of a benevolent impulse previously dormant or defective. This same principle applies to many local churches whose vision of the Kingdom adventure and advance has been clarified and whose courage has been aroused by the achievements of the Centenary.

Stewardship. There is yet to be preached and practiced among us an adequate evangel of stewardship, which shall have for its main objective the increase of vitality in the spiritual life rather than the increase of budgets. Such an evangel will deepen acquaintance with Jesus Christ, which is the source and sustenance of all motive power of real stewardship. For the adoption of that evangel, Methodism in the Detroit Area waits.

Michigan Christian Advocate. Within the Detroit Area the organ of expression of every Kingdom interest is the Michigan Christian Advocate, which goes to 18,000 subscribers, ably and uniquely edited by Rev. William H. Phelps. Generously and uniformly the editor of the Advocate has given not only space but signal cooperation to every undertaking of the Area. Without this cooperation and the opportunity to appeal to our membership and constituency our advance in evangelism and education and benevolence and philanthropy and every other Kingdom adventure would have been impossible.

The Central Force. The most important force and factor in securing these Kingdom results is the pastor of the local church. No Kingdom agency vies in importance with the local church. No leader in Methodism is so imperative to Kingdom conquest as the faithful, devoted, adventurous pastor who gives his all that Christ may be all in all to all in the world. We recognize him as the central force of the Kingdom and pay tribute to his fidelity, without whom this quadrennial report of the Detroit Area would be impossible.

HELENA AREA

CHARLES WESLEY BURNS, RESIDENT BISHOP

DEAR FATHERS AND BRETHREN:

The following report of Methodist stewardship in the Helena Area is herewith submitted:

No one exalts more in love, nor holds in more lofty, reverential appreciation, Naphtali Luccock, the first Bishop of the Helena Area, than the one who now, holding dear his ideals, has for four years followed the Sage Brush Trail which he marked with such consecrated foot-steps. The highest loveliest glen of Montana, with snow-crowned mountains tossed about into inaccessible peaks, in loving memory we have named "Luccock Park," but the entire Area over which he presided and so sacrificially traveled bears his name in its heart.

TERRITORY

The Helena Area comprises four Annual Conferences: North Dakota, North Montana, Montana and Idaho. These Conferences are located in the States of North Dakota, Montana, Idaho and Eastern Oregon.

THE ENORMOUS REACHES OF THE AREA

The distance across the Area is as great as that from New York to Minneapolis. It is the largest continuous Area in Methodism—316,000 square miles. It is 1,750 miles across. Montana alone would hold the six New England states, New Jersey and Delaware. It is a Quayle-ism that "Montana could take the Holy Land in its hand and, thinking the hand was a little dirty, would wash it out." Great Eastern states would be small counties in this Area. Eighty per cent of the Area is covered by sage brush and prickly pear. The remaining twenty per cent consists of lakes and mountain country as fascinating, picturesque and lovely as any in the nation. Over these reaches is a scattered population—homesteaders, cattle and sheep raisers, save in the large cities. Into these great stretches came Methodist itinerant preachers. Francis Asbury Riggan, who was graduated from Dickinson fifty years ago, Van Orsdel, Iliff, Job Little, Logan and Mills came in the early seventies.

Over this territory of plains and prairies, mountain trail, river and lake, by train, stage-coach, narrow gauge railway, automobile, boat and broncho, in summer and in winter, I have traveled 305,655 miles. Glorious are the plains, the mountains, the men! Never have I seen such courage, such consecration, such conquest. My heart every mile of the way has uplifted in grateful Te Deums. During the four years, I have never been in one place a full week, nor at home in any one year a full month, and have visited every nook and corner of the entire Area. St. Paul's journeys, John Wesley's journeys, and Francis Asbury's journeys are not unlike the "journeyings oft" in the Helena Area.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS

The religious development has been governed largely by economic conditions. First, were the frontier days of the pioneer mining camps and small huddles of houses in widely scattered settlements; second, long years of rough, slow development in the stock-raising period between mining and agriculture; third, the very rapid exploited expansion of agricultural emphasis which was accompanied by the amazing development of church life throughout the frontier. North Dakota is predominantly agricultural; Montana now predominantly an agrarian, mining and cattle-raising country; Southern Idaho, predominantly a sheep-raising country with a strong tendency toward intensive farming due to recent irrigation development. The early settlers were homesteaders from the Middle West—noble, law abiding, and patriotic, but into the frontier also came hordes of incompetents, undesirables. Lawless elements have given to the frontier a background of the gambling hall, the pool room and the saloon. Following the roving trappers of an earlier day, permanent white settlements came by reason of mines in Idaho north of Boise, and in Montana at Virginia City and Helena. In both states, gold in large quantities was taken out in the sixties. Some of the miners, after the excitement died down, remained and entered agricultural and pastoral pursuits. Today, the copper mines of Butte and the silver-lead mines maintain the old traditions, while enormous quantities of timber in Western Montana support hundreds of men in the lumber industry. North Dakota was developed by the farming class drifting over the border from Minnesota and Canada, although in the eighties cattle raising was a major industry in the western part of the state and one with which Theodore Roosevelt was identified. The transcontinental railways developed the Pacific Coast States at the expense of the inland commonwealths until recently, so that the rapid growth, especially of Montana and Idaho, has all come in the last fifteen years. The growth in southern Idaho has been due largely to intensive irrigated agriculture; that in Montana to dry farming on larger tracts. One of the largest government reclamation projects in the United States is that at Boise, Idaho. The dam is higher than the Flatiron Building in New York. In all three states the products of field, farm and forest now exceed in value annually those of mines and manufactories. There is only one city in this Area of more than 41,000 population, and all others are below 25,000. The city of the Area headquarters is about 10,000. It is obvious that in the wide reaches of this territory our church life should take on the characteristics of the territory occupied. With widely divergent conflicting ideals of the people, no Area consciousness can possibly be developed. The vital currents east of the Rockies flow toward the Twin Cities, as the vital currents west of the Rockies flow toward Spokane and Portland. Each of the three states—economically, industrially, and religiously—constitutes an empire-unit of its own. Even the political influences of these states differ. The diversity of the Area, therefore, constitutes the diversity of problem in church expression and development. The “Helena Area” is a name. The life of the four Conferences is a fact growing out of the great territory occupied by each.

The quadrennium opened with a drouth in the semi-arid portions of the Area in its third year and which continued for three years longer. When the drouths were broken, the floods were followed by grasshoppers, hail—and the receding markets all had their depressing and deadening part. At present within the Area more than five hundred banks are closed. The economic subtractions of the three states of the Area are well known. Our work has been grouped about our heroic preachers until expansion of work threatens efficiency of performance. Not a few of our frontier preachers are covering more than a dozen-point circuits. The frontier has not passed. The religious development of this great Area will be largely dependent upon the consciousness in the general church that for a long period of time, perhaps a generation, it will still be frontier and missionary territory, where investment will bring the largest returns in the building of the most dynamic empire of America, adjacent to the Pacific basin.

OPPORTUNITIES

In Southeastern Idaho, there are 80,000 Mormons of the Utah type who furnish a somewhat stony soil for evangelical preaching. In North Dakota there is one of the most extensive examples of our foreign-speaking populations in the United States. Sixty per cent of the population of North Dakota is now foreign-speaking. The homesteaders have abandoned their rights or sold to larger holders. The incoming population is from Scandinavia, Russia and Syria. In a single county in North Dakota, two thousand families moved out in a period of five months. No more fascinating foreign missionary challenge is presented anywhere in America than in North Dakota. Its missionary character is indicated in this, that while this Conference kept the faith with the Centenary in this closing year of the quadrennium, it reported at its annual session a large shrinkage in ministerial support.

On the other hand, the city of Butte, the largest mining camp in the world, has a polyglot population of 41,000. Many of these thousands are foreigners who do not speak any language other than their own, nor have they any spiritual ministry of any kind. The industrial, mining, logging and Indian groups of the Area present an unfulfilled missionary task awaiting consecration of life and treasure. The urgency and immediacy of advance programs in Kingdom building are compelling, lest the time of beginnings be past. In the Glacier Park District, the second largest in American Methodism, embracing 45,000 square miles and running the whole length of Montana along the Canadian border—the longest border line of any state in the Union—there is only one modern church building. Within that district are presented as great opportunities as any in Methodism. There are four Indian Reservations—the Blackfoot, Flathead, Fort Peck, and Fort Belknap. The church program is modern, including religious education, community service, recreational activities, social service and evangelism. The first Sunday school for Indians under Methodist auspices was established on this district at Browning. It becomes increasingly clear that Methodism will never worthily and durably minister to the Indians of the Northwest, save through her schools where education and Christianity shall be linked in the formative and determinative years. If the only conception of Indian work is to take photographs of Indians dressed in war paint in many colored blanket-glory, we had better abandon this in the name of Methodism and religion. There has been no more disappointing and discouraging phase of Methodist ministry in the Northwest in the past than our ministry to the Indians. Under the superintendency of Dr. E. E. Higley of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension, and Mrs. Beggs of the Woman's Home Missionary Society, the inadequate, inefficient, unrelated and unscientific ministry of the past to the Indians is being organized and already is giving large promise of fruitful results.

All campaigns, programs and institutional developments have been under the counsel and direction of the Area Council, which has been sponsored by the Committee on Conservation and Advance.

Gooding College is the youngest in Methodism. The college dormitory, the cornerstone of which was laid on November 7, 1920, is now builded and roofed over, but only partly completed. The students of the college themselves contributed Thirteen Hundred Dollars to complete the building. The boys are now living in the unfinished basement. The students at Gooding are some of the finest young men and women in Idaho and Oregon, coming from ranches, homesteads and mountains, hungry for a Christian education. More than one-half of them are volunteers for Christian service.

Montana Wesleyan College has now been merged with the Presbyterian College—the College of Montana—under the new name of Intermountain Union College. This educational merger is not only unique in Methodism, but promises to lead the way to a solution of the problem of maintaining a Christian college in sparsely settled communities with an inadequate supporting Christian constituency. Our college has passed through a generation of struggle, hardship and achievement. Its presidents have been the notable leaders of our Church who have made large educational contributions to the Christian type of citizenship. The Presbyterian college at Deer Lodge has been closed for some years. In July, 1923, the Synod voted to accept our proposal of establishing at Helena a single Christian college. Under the guidance and assistance of the Board of Education, this has now been achieved. Our church has contributed its buildings, land and good will. A joint committee has appraised the value of our college plant at $275,166.72, against which there is a bonded indebtedness of $60,000 and current debts of $43,869.40, making our net assets $191,297.32. The Presbyterians have merged with a contribution of $82,519.12, which will be made a part of permanent endowment of the joint college.

The very life of these two colleges is due to the generous consideration of the Board of Education and the recognition of a present investment bringing thousand-fold dividend of life and treasure to the future of the Church.

Wesley College, Grand Forks, North Dakota, represents a unique and interesting pioneer approach to the state university. It is affiliated with the State University of North Dakota, and the students are offered all of the advantages of the State University while attending Wesley College. The funds of the college are not used to duplicate studies or facilities provided at the University, but to support the distinctive service of the church college.

Unique among Methodist institutions is the Montana Deaconess School in the Prickly Pear Valley, five miles from Helena. This school is a monument to the faith of the pioneers who thought the city would reach this far into the valley. It is a monument, also, to Miss Roxanna Beck, the Principal, who, with her deaconess helpers, maintains the only Protestant Deaconess school in Montana. The salvage of boys and girls—orphans and half-orphans—is immeasurable. If the deaconess movement, which flowers in wondrous ministry in the Northwest, had no other expression of its ministry than this, all that it has cost in life and treasure would be worth while in this investment. It provides a school and home for boys and girls between the ages of five and fourteen. Scholastic work runs through the eighth grade. The school has been conducted without outside help of any of the Boards. During the quadrennium, $13,000 has been spent on buildings and repairs. The first official act of the Bishop of this Area was to break the ground for a new building as a memorial to William W. Van Orsdel, affectionately known throughout Methodism as "Brother Van." This building has proceeded only as the funds have been raised by the Field Superintendent John Chirgwin—one of the most indefatigable and achieving representatives of the Church. The walls now stand ready for the roof at a cost of $50,000.

HOSPITALS

As the pioneers in the Methodist belt—Ohio, Indiana, Iowa—established colleges as the characteristic development of the church, not otherwise in the Helena Area Methodism has expressed itself through the ministry of evangelism and healing. There are more deaconess hospitals in Montana alone than in any other entire Area of the Church. We now have six deaconess hospitals in operation—Great Falls, Bozeman, Glasgow, Butte, Sidney, Forsyth. Two others are under construction at Havre and Billings. Through the invested aid of the General Deaconess Board, Charles D. Crouch has undertaken the building of our deaconess hospital at Billings, Montana. The cornerstone laying, under the auspices of the Masonic Grand Lodge of Montana, was declared to be the most significant Protestant event in the history of the state. Our Havre Hospital, started in 1916, is boarded up in its uncompleted state, but an heroic attempt is being made, with the aid of friends, to complete and open this hospital next spring. Successive crop failures have brought such distress that the local Methodists cannot possibly complete the structure alone. Sixty thousand dollars have been sacrificially expended thus far, but at least $8,000 more will be needed before the first unit can be opened.

The North Dakota Conference has a Deaconess Hospital at Mandan, and at Kenmare a privately owned hospital has been taken over by that Conference.

For lack of funds, we were compelled to close the Deaconess Hospital at Gooding, Idaho, and the liquidation of the Lava Hot Springs Sanitarium is now being achieved.

The subscriptions taken for our institutions and other projects during the years of prosperity have been realized in very small measure. In fact, the financial plan of all our institutions has been reorganized. Our hospitals have had inserted in their deeds the Methodist trust clause. The institutions report as follows:

Property valuation, schools and colleges, $732,835; hospitals, $895,704.

NEW PROJECTS

During the quadrennium, our heroic people, with the aid of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension, completed and dedicated twenty-one new church buildings. The untoward economic conditions have made impossible the completion of some dozen others, the basements of which have been digged and are now roofed over.

Under the authority of the Enabling Act as passed by the General Conference of 1920, as resident and presiding bishop, I signed the decree for the union of the Montana and North Montana Conferences to take place as of date August 27, 1924, the name of the united body to be the "Montana State Conference." The commissions duly appointed by both Conferences are completing the necessary legal and business acts involved in the union, under the law of the Church.

At its last session, the Idaho Conference, by unanimous vote, changed its name to "The Intermountain Conference." The new name avoids the delimitation in suggestion of the single state of Idaho comprising its territory, as in saddle-like conformation, the Conference lies in both states of Idaho and Oregon.

STATISTICS

The preachers of the Area have been faithful in their passionate heralding of Christ in evangelism. The winning of lives to Christ has been central in plan and prayer. The characteristic social ministry of the Area has not indicated any slackening in zeal or lessening in devotion to the evangelistic ideals of Methodism. During the quadrennium, 11,598 have been received on probation by faithful constructive evangelistic methods accented by educational religious culture. The total membership of the Area, including preparatory and full members, at the beginning of the quadrennium was 36,339. The present membership is 39,594. Our church is the predominating church throughout the Area. The peculiar temper and genius of Methodist people are fitted to the needs of the frontier, uniquely expressing evangelistic and social passion. With the multitudinous removals from the Area because of economic conditions and drouth, the membership has steadily declined, and has only been re-enforced by the really significant evangelistic achievement during the four years. An intensive survey of the eleven districts of the Area reveals the very real frontier and missionary character of the entire territory, apart from a few of our large cities, as well as its opportunity and need. There are 488 communities without church services; 87,230 children without Sunday School privileges; 112 pastorless charges. One-seventh of the total Protestant population is Methodist, while in Montana Methodists constitute one-third of the Protestant population.

Sunday School enrollment has increased from 59,391 to 61,170. The Epworth League's enrollment also shows a normal growth from 5,158 Senior members to 5,251; 1,979 Juniors to 3,034. The Institutes are bringing together increasing numbers of young people of the frontier states who increasingly face world opportunities of Christian service with open-mindedness.

In the Area, we have 454 church buildings with a valuation increased from $2,655,410 to $3,251,025. We now report 332 parsonages with an increased valuation from $808,625 to $845,325. In new buildings and improvements, we have expended $534,843 and paid on old indebtedness $228,179. The present indebtedness on our church plants is $245,788. The reaction of Centenary faithfulness upon ministerial support is indicated by the increase of pastors' salaries from $394,441 to $417,409. These two factors seem indissolubly joined. They wax or wane together.

PREACHING PERSONNEL

The personnel of the preachers of the Area is of the highest in equipment and consecration. During the quadrennium, the Conferences have sent a large proportion of their young preachers to theological schools for training for the present age task. In a district of nineteen effective men, fourteen are college trained, and eight have college and theological training. In another of thirty-three effective men, thirteen have college degrees; eleven have college and seminary degrees. In one district in North Montana, there are twenty-four preachers; seventeen of them are college trained, and nine have college and seminary training. The preaching personnel has about retained its status. There are in the Area 1,050 preaching places, manned by 344 preachers and 129 supplies. This averages a three-point circuit for each man throughout the Area. We have transferred into the Area during the quadrennium fifty preachers, and have transferred out seventy. Nine of the ministers have died, three of them in automobile accidents when ministering on their circuits. If the men be weighed rather than counted, the preachers of the Area have no peers in Methodism. Our Sunday School missionaries have toiled unceasingly and achieving in extensive ministry; in the outlying frontier Home Missionary fields, capturing new communities for Christ through the youth-hood; and intensive institute teacher-training and the development of modern Sunday School practice through efficiency methods.

Among the fruitful ministries of the quadrennium have been the sessions of the Schools for Rural Pastors on the campus of our three colleges and the initial sessions of the Summer Schools of Theology under the auspices of the Commission on Conference Course of Study.

The Area paper "The Messenger," edited by the Area Secretary, has been of great value as the most economical means of distributing information and arousing interest in the program of the Church among our widely scattered Methodism. This little paper has been distinctly an Area organ and has aided rather than lessened the interest and support of our people toward the Advocates serving this territory.

CENTENARY

During the first two and one-half years of the present quadrennium, George Mecklenburg as Area Secretary accomplished in Centenary subscriptions and propaganda a task seemingly impossible of achievement. His contribution to Area consciousness and Area development was large. Charles L. Bovard is the present Area Secretary, and during one and one-half years has guided the Centenary program of the Area to its place of marvelous achievement. Throughout the Area the ministers and laymen have cooperated with him with enthusiasm and unanimity. These eighteen months represents a period that brought to the states of the Area the most adverse economic conditions ever known in our country, with a perpetual exodus of membership to the more prosperous sections. In terms of Centenary achievement, while in membership the Helena Area ranks lowest, our total payment on four Centenary years gives us a per capita rank of ninth ($4.19). Herein lies the significance of the sacrificial achievement of the Methodists on the frontier who out of poverty and real need have advanced greatly over the per capita giving of the entire Church. The energy, faithfulness and cooperation of our District Superintendents, pastors and people brought the Centenary giving of the Area in this closing year of the Centenary to advance of the year before. Had the entire Church measured up to the sacrificial giving of our frontier people, the gain over the preceding year would have been more than the loss. In the midst of unparalleled financial depression, hunger and deprivation because of drouth, the Area has stood four-square to its world task.

The amazing optimism of the Centenary subscriptions throughout the Area in a period of prosperity became a real cloud of oppression during the continuance of a seven-year period of drouth and economic subtractions. However, despite drouth, bank failures, grasshoppers, hail and storm, the Methodists of the Area have kept the missionary faith, and have laid on the altars of the church during these four years $708,025. The entire Area accepts the World Service of the Church joyously.

During the quadrennium, the Area has worked unanimously in the program of Methodism and cooperatively with other denominations in the spirit of the Home Missions Council, avoiding overlapping, duplication and unholy rivalry in effort. The entire Area has been surveyed concerning our responsibility as a Church, and, with the aid of Dr. C. E. Vermilya, Superintendent of the Frontier Department of the Board of Home Missions, we have studied definitely our task in the frontier. We have been aided in maintaining our churches through the appropriations of the Board of Home Missions, and particularly by the gifts of the General Deaconess Board and Woman's Home Missionary Society. In all the undertakings, laity and ministry and deaconesses have sacrificially toiled in achieving such results as may be recorded under the supreme leadership of Christ. No less contribution to Kingdom achievement has been made by each cultured, consecrated "Lady of the Parsonage" whose hands and heart and spirit have so fortified and glorified the toils of the preacher-man and made possible the achievements recorded of them. The Church of Christ in the Helena Area with fidelity to the faith follows the adventuring Christ over the plains, trails and highways as eagerly in the tomorrows, as devotedly in the yesterdays.

INDIANAPOLIS AREA

REPORT OF BISHOP FREDERICK D. LEETE

NO TRIALS FOR MINISTERIAL DELINQUENCY

The four Conferences of the Indianapolis Area, three white, one colored, contain 1,006 preachers, not including 243 supplies. At the sessions of the Conferences these names have been called annually for four years for the passage of character, making over 4,000 such calls. No trials have been held, and in no case have charges of personal immorality been preferred against a preacher.

No one can deny that the moral strength of the Church depends very largely upon the character of its ministers. The above splendid record is not due to covering up known facts, accusations or substantial rumors. Why is the area able to present this account? Evangelical piety of a sincere type is one answer. Indiana preachers are too busy to give Satan much chance at them. The Area motto is "Christ First." Where He is first, temptation is easily conquered. Our younger men have been plainly warned as to the perils of Christian leadership. Theological controversy has not weakened ethical morale. The business of Christ has absorbed the passions of life.

MEMBERSHIP GAIN 32,821

Four Conferences have reported membership statistics for four years each. Of these sixteen reports all save two have been gains. The Year Book shows that the Area gained each year of the four from 4,987, the lowest, to 12,601, the highest net addition.

Conference net gains for the quadrennium are as follows:

Indiana	10,065
Lexington	6,315
North Indiana	9,056
Northwest Indiana	7,385
Total net gain	32,821

This increase above all losses is twelve and two-tenths per cent for the four years. Its consistent distribution over the years and through the Conferences is believed to be due to constant emphasis upon evangelism as the law of progress, to eclectic methods with much use of pastoral evangelism, very widespread revival meetings, and well-directed personal work. The general activity of the churches in social and community service has not been without evangelistic bearings and significance. The total membership credited to this area is 292,940.

CHURCH AND PARSONAGE INCREASE, $3,816,714

Indiana Methodism is lamentably underbuilt. The area, compared with others, received but a small percentage of aid from Centenary Church Extension funds. Many large congregations have cramped buildings, and old-style plants are far too common. Some progress has been made in church and parsonage building. The next quadrennium vastly more work of this nature must be done, if Methodism is to do what is asked of it, and if it is to keep its leading position among the denominations operating in the state. The largest net gain in property is that of Indiana Conference, $1,420,663. Naturally the smallest increase, but one which is very creditable, is that of Lexington Conference, $582,526. North Indiana Conference increased its property values $855,385; Northwest, $958,140. All debts have been cut out of these figures. Seven hundred and eighty-seven parsonages and 1,594 churches are valued at $17,644,132.

FOUR AND A HALF MILLIONS OF DISCIPLINARY BENEVOLENCES

From the General Minutes, the payments of the four Conferences of Indianapolis Area to Disciplinary Benevolences are taken as follows:

Indiana	$1,616,638
Lexington	147,988
North Indiana	1,850,139
Northwest Indiana	969,114
Total	$4,583,879

In addition to this sum, the local minutes disclose more than eight hundred thousand dollars of annual Conference benevolences, as follows:

Indiana	$407,648
Lexington	27,026
North Indiana	240,385
Total	$822,877

While this benevolent giving has been going forward, pastoral salaries and funds for retired preachers have made very substantial and gratifying advances, proportionately as large as elsewhere. In large sections of the state, Indiana Methodists are anything but wealthy. The Calumet region, the mining districts, and part of the Ohio River country necessarily reduce the total of philanthropic giving, and certain sections are missionary territory.

RAPIDLY GROWING INSTITUTIONS

De Pauw University continues its successful career under the leadership of President George R. Grose. A million dollar endowment campaign was successfully concluded December 31st last. Prior to this, the college was able to report property values of $1,151,134 and endowment, wholly productive, $2,611,902. The total resources show an increase for the quadrennium of $1,623,702. No annual financial deficits ever appear. Competitive scholarships provided by Mr. Edward Rector, bring to Greencastle hundreds of honor men from high schools of the country.

Evansville College perpetuates the honorable record of old Moore's Hill. The main building, costing over $350,000, one of the most beautiful college edifices in America, was dedicated June 16, 1922. President A. F. Hughes has a constantly growing student body. At the time of preparation of this report the college is in a million dollar endowment campaign with good prospects.

Four hospitals in one system are located at Indianapolis, Fort Wayne, Princeton and Gary, valued at two million dollars above all indebtedness, with over 600 beds, giving service to more than 12,000 patients annually, including more than $60,000 worth of free work. Dr. George M. Smith is superintendent. The events of the quadrennium have been the erection of the 90 bed Gary hospital, dedicated May 27, 1923, and the addition of a quarter million dollar wing to the Indianapolis plant.

One home for the aged at Warren, Ind., Dr. B. S. Hollopeter, secretary; one active orphanage, J. L. Stout, superintendent; a girls' school at Rensselaer; a Deaconess home in Indianapolis; Friendship House, Gary; are interesting foundations with over a half million of resources.

CHURCH SOCIETIES MAKE PROGRESS

The Sunday schools of Indianapolis Area enroll 280,294 persons in all departments. This is a gain of 24,793 for the quadrennium. The Epworth and Junior Epworth Leagues have made small gains. The institute work of the League is very efficient. Two new summer assembly grounds have been secured, with excellent financial provisions.

Under various names, Ladies' Aid Societies are increasingly helpful to the Church, and deserve great credit. The Woman's Foreign and the Woman's Home Missionary societies have made steady and consistent gains, not only in financial receipts, but in knowledge of missionary problems and methods. The Foreign Society has come from $114,300 per annum to $146,076, a gain of 27.8 per cent. The Home Society receipts have increased from $65,305 to $86,376, a gain of 32.2 per cent.

THE AREA ORGANIZED FOR SERVICE

The problem of associating together the Conferences of a newly created area is not as simple as it might seem. The lack of close unity, helpful traditions, or cooperative plans adds to the difficulty, which is increased when there is no local organ of publicity and not a dollar of general funds with which to create new and necessary undertakings.

It should not be contended that the Indianapolis Area organization is complete or perfect. That a sound beginning of united and mutual labors and achievements has been made during the quadrennium few, if any, would deny.

An Indiana State Council was established by legal action of the Conferences based on provisions adopted by representatives of all districts July 15, 1920. The Council comprises 160 members, half laymen, half preachers. All heads of state institutions and societies and all superintendents are ex officio members. There is a small list of delegates at large. The great body of delegates are elected by the district Conferences on the basis of the number of church members therein. Meetings of the entire body are held semi-annually and a popular Convocation attended by thousands is held each year. The operative end of the organization is a group of appropriate committees. A slight Area Expense Fund is furnished by the churches. A small area staff is maintained without salaries and without cost, except to those served. The Council is incorporated and has become a real force in creating fellowship, desire to work at common tasks, and in placing Christian idealism and service before the public. Two years ago, based on educational plans used in Kentucky, the foundations of county organization were securely laid in nearly every section. Evangelism, church building with improved architecture, Centenary collections, rural service, and all phases of Christian progress have been steadily promoted. A permanent body of 120 representative laymen authorized by the Council is promoting wise business and religious plans and has begun an Area Building Fund. Since the area secretary voluntarily pleaded to be allowed to return to the pastorate, a referendum, repeated from time to time, has showed that the local desire of the men was to carry their own burdens with office help, but without a paid secretary, at least until one might be able to be related to all area problems as well as to those which are financial. The statistics would seem to show that just and proportional results can be obtained with little pressure save that of the cause in itself, suitably presented by the regular local leaders, with informing visits from furloughed missionaries and others who have had adequate and successful practical experience. Strong and effective city organizations have been formed and are actively working in four of the five chief cities of Indiana.

The area has enjoyed the editorial kindness of Dr. Wareing and the Western Christian Advocate, but it should be known that a widespread desire is felt for a paper published and directed in the local field. Such an organ, if free from prescribed overhead, could be easily maintained without cost to the general church.

In view of many existing opportunities and of the high quality of many preachers and laymen, there appears to be no reason to believe that Methodism in Indiana has reached the limits of its usefulness or the peak of its possible progress.

REPORT OF THE NEW ORLEANS AREA

ROBERT E. JONES, RESIDENT BISHOP

During the quadrennium I have majored in Interracial Relations. This movement for the promotion of good will, mutual confidence and cooperation between the dominant races in the South is regarded by many as the most significant of its kind since the Emancipation. It has been a joy to have had some small share in this far-reaching movement which at the bottom is seeking to apply the spirit and to adopt the attitudes of the Christ in everyday human relations. We have found in the South a group of white men and women who are sincere and courageous in their desire for justice, equity and peace for all men. The movement began as one of our after-the-war necessities. At first faith was small, vision dim, hope uncertain, but the work grew until now out of one thousand counties in the South, 800 or more are duly organized with joint committees representing both races. There is a central office at Atlanta with Dr. W. W. Alexander, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as director. Most of the States have full time Interracial secretaries. Some of the States have two secretaries, one white and one colored.

The organization of the Woman's Department of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation has brought to light fine heroism on the part of the women. These women have added strength, dignity and confidence to the commission. There has been opposition in some quarters, misgivings in others, lack of interest in others, but the movement still goes forward with confidence, intelligence, equity and the leadership of Jesus Christ. This ideal of promoting a better understanding on the basis of cooperation and a more adequate appraisal of human values will strengthen our National Government and its reaction will be felt throughout the world and redound to the glory of God and the advancement of his Kingdom.

I do not know a better summing up of this movement than was put in a little verse which appeared not long ago in a South African magazine:

"If I knew you and you knew me,
If both of us could clearly see
And, with an inner sight, divine
The meaning of your heart and mine;
I'm sure that we would differ less
And clasp our hands in friendliness;
Our thoughts would pleasantly agree

CONFERENCES HELD

I have held four times each during the quadrennium the Louisiana, West Texas and Upper Mississippi Conferences, and the Mississippi, Texas and Central Alabama three times each. Bishops Mead, Clair and Bristol presided at one session of the latter named Conferences respectively. I have held outside of my Area one session of the following Conferences: Washington, Delaware, Lexington and Lincoln.

The Conferences of the New Orleans Area embrace a little more than one-third of our entire colored membership. Out of a total church membership of 450,000 excluding the Catholic Church, the Methodist Episcopal Church has within its fold more than 350,000 Negro members, which is three times as many Negro members as have the Congregationalists, Prebyterians and the Protestant Episcopalians. We have not merely been building our denominational membership but we have been in the exalted business of lifting a race and in this the Methodist Episcopal Church has had very remarkable success.

Methodism must hold to the Negro, admittedly for the Negroes' sake, but also for its own sake. The presence of the Negro in the Church emphasizes the fact that there is an open door for all the peoples of all the world.

TYPE OF WORK

An effort has been made to lift the ideals of church life in the New Orleans Area with especial reference to the orderliness of services, style of preaching, punctuality, music and methods of taking collection. In some instances there has been remarkable improvement.

In appointing the ministers, I have sent them as leaders in the communities which they were to serve. I have sought to have them interested in community wide betterment.

Consideration has been given to the type of architecture of our churches and parsonages by constant consultation with the Board of Architecture at Philadelphia and occasionally at Chicago.

To get an idea of the existing conditions, each District Superintendent purchased a small Kodak and snapshots of the parsonages and churches were taken, giving rear and front views. There has been no effort to grade preachers but there has been an effort to find out the men who are effective and efficient. A file of detailed record of every minister's work is being constructed and will be the confidential property of the Resident Bishop of the Area, the Conference Cabinets and such Bishops as may have charge of the work.

CLEAN UP WEEK

Clean Up Week has been unanimously endorsed and generally observed by the six Conferences of the Area. The purpose of Clean Up Week is to clean up the churches, improve the property, replace broken window panes, remove rubbish from the property, clean up parsonages and to improve our church property and surroundings in a general way.

The whole effect of this movement among our people has been very helpful. They have responded with enthusiasm. Local papers have taken cognizance of the movement and commended it. The results are that whole communities have been stirred so that Clean Up Week is not confined to Methodist churches only. One year's report shows that considerable money was raised and spent for the purpose of cleaning up; 6,909 participated, and in one clean up week alone 697 broken window panes were replaced.

MIGRATION

It has been variously estimated that from five hundred thousand to one million of our people have gone North. Many of the centers in the North have felt the influx of this new population. It has not been without its effect upon our church life in the South. Careful tabulation by districts shows that 18,455 of our members of the New Orleans Area have gone North. This no doubt does not include the total number of our migrant members. Such a movement has kept down to some extent at least the natural increase of our membership in the Area. The Year Book of 1924 shows a decrease for the area as a whole of 23; perhaps a more accurate accounting would show an increase during the quadrennium from one to three thousand. The increase would have been more, but for migration. Many of these once faithful members in the South have been lost to our Church entirely.

INCREASE IN PROPERTY

The total church and parsonage property valuation in the New Orleans Area for 1920 was in round numbers $3,000,000; in 1924 it is just a little less than $4,000,000; an increase of practically one million dollars. Of this amount $171,000 has been received from the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension, the remainder raised by the people, including cash and donations in labor of nearly $100,000.

Number of churches built, 83. Some of them would do credit to Methodism in the large cities. St. Paul, San Antonio; Wesley, Greenwood; Saint Andrew's, Fort Worth, are very substantial, modern structures, costing from $60,000 to $80,000. There has been considerable improvement in churches.

Forty new parsonages have been built during the quadrennium. Many have been repaired.

Forty-seven new preaching points and Missions have been established since 1920.

INCREASE IN MINISTERIAL SUPPORT

The total ministerial support of the Area in 1920 amounted to $403,753 as against $462,273 in 1923, showing an increase of $58,520.

THE CENTENARY GIVING

The New Orleans Area subscribed toward the five year Centenary program $370,005 with a quota fixed at $781,995. The Centenary office reports the Conferences of the Area gave for the Centenary period up to January 31, 1924, as follows:

Central Alabama	$55,595.26
Louisiana	123,682.73
Mississippi	110,308.84
Texas	110,082.43
Upper Mississippi	111,591.52
West Texas	97,781.80

Total for the Area.....$609,042.58

A comparison in the giving of the Conferences of the Area for a four year period before the Centenary and a four year period during the Centenary will be of interest:

REVIVAL FIRES

The tabulation of reports from the District Superintendents shows during the quadrennium 26,040 conversions and accessions, which is about twenty-five per cent of the total membership. Such an ingathering of souls is the result of a firm belief in evangelism, consecration to the supreme task of the ministry and a deep spiritual life. The hardships which our people must endure in the section covered by this area have often driven them to their knees with the evangelistic result shown, for which we devoutly thank God. This host of souls ingathered went to make up the loss by migration, death, transfer and otherwise.

SCHOOLS

There are located in the Area the following schools supported by the Board of Education for Negroes: Wiley College, New Orleans College, Rust College, Samuel Huston College, Haven Institute and Conservatory of Music, Central Alabama Institute and Flint Goodrich Hospital and Nurse Training School.

The outstanding achievement of the Area for her schools is the purchasing of a new location and plant for Haven Institute. Nearly $200,000 has been spent in rehabilitating this school making it a first class preparatory school and Conservatory of Music. Rust College, four years ago, had but seven in the College Department, now there are twenty-six. There were then 60 in the Preparatory Department, now 200. New Orleans College shows a remarkable change. In 1911-12 out of an enrollment of 489, 353 were in the grades and only 18 in the College Department. The report for 1924 shows 100 in the College Department, 333 in High School, and 91 in the grades including the model school. Samuel Huston College has grown in its equipment and standing. All grade work has been discontinued. The largest number previously enrolled in the College Department was 32, now the college enrollment is 92, all other students are in the High School. Wiley College bids fair to be our outstanding literary institution. More than $160,000 has been spent for buildings and permanent improvement. Wiley is the best known school in Texas and has been given an "A" rating by the State Board. In 1920 there were 60 students in the College Department, now there are 230, making it rank as one of the five outstanding colleges in America for the education of Negroes.

GULFSIDE ASSOCIATION

The purchase of a site on the Gulf of Mexico at Waveland, Mississippi and the establishment of the Gulfside Chautauqua and Camp Meeting Ground for our people in the South has met a long felt need. It has been said over and over again by men who have traveled the country that there is no other such site in all America for our people.

The Gulfside Association has in fee simple and in lease a shore line of over one mile, the property consisting of 700 acres of land most of which is high and dry. The site is only 48 miles removed from New Orleans, with a railroad station within 1,500 feet of the property, from which there are 6 trains each way daily, with additional trains only 4 miles removed at Bay Saint Louis.

The project has been operated only one season and then only for a very short time. But even with a short notice and with inadequate equipment the Gulfside Chautauqua and Camp Meeting Ground met with enthusiastic reception. The Summer School of Theology of the New Orleans Area was held at this site as was also the conference of a large group of Camp Fire Girls. Other activities were carried on, picnics of our combined churches of New Orleans were held. Gulfside offers to our people opportunities for Training Conferences, Mission Schools, assemblies, institutes and general recreation.

The beach is one of the best on the coast; there being a natural sand bar running from the shore 1,500 to 2,000 feet. This project, so far, has been financed entirely by funds coming from our own people. We own our private telephone connecting the adjacent town. We have electric lights and artesian water. An adequate hotel, the old historic Jackson House, built by the nephew of President Andrew Jackson, is held by the association.

LAFON OLD FOLKS' HOME AND OTHER HOMES

Some years ago Thomy Lafon, a Catholic of African descent, left among his many benefactions, in and around the city of New Orleans, $10,000 toward the establishment of an Old Folks' Home for the colored people under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church. This home had done splendid work for a number of years, but 1920 found it almost hopelessly in debt and much in need of repairs. A campaign was put on which appealed to the public in the city of New Orleans without regard to race line, enthusiasm ran high; the city daily papers were generous with their space, and promoted the campaign without reservation. In the peak of this campaign the older people were stationed with boxes at the intersection of the most prominent streets of the city of New Orleans and the ministers sang jubilee songs.

The campaign netted something like $18,000 in cash, but what seemed most significant, it awakened an abiding interest in the home. The campaign was also a bond between the two races.

The Texas Conference at its last session voted to establish an Old Folks' Home and appointed a committee on incorporation. Already a site has been donated.

A joint commission representing the Mississippi and Upper Mississippi Conferences has agreed on the establishment of an Old Folks' and Veteran Preachers' Home to be located on the grounds of the Gulfside Association. The home will soon be incorporated. The Conferences have accepted an apportionment for this year to cover the cost of the land.

In making this report of the New Orleans Area, it gives me pleasure to bear testimony to the evidence I found in all parts of the Area of the fine service rendered by Bishop Thirkield during the two previous quadrenniums. This service represents the ideals, the spirit and the devotion of the Methodist Episcopal Church for and in behalf of the Negro running back many, many years.

For this helping hand the Church receives in return the unstinted gratitude of the warm hearted race that steadily, although slowly, is moving forward in many ways. While there are large numbers of our people moving North, for all time to come most likely, the bulk of them will live in the South. The States covered by the New Orleans Area contain more than one-third of the Negro population of the Republic and here we should strengthen our work rather than retrench and go forward in His name until the people of the South together with the people of all the world shall be fully reclaimed and shall ardently serve our common Lord.

REPORT OF THE NEW YORK AREA

LUTHER B. WILSON, RESIDENT BISHOP

DEAR FATHERS AND BRETHREN:

The New York Area includes the New York East, the New York and the Newark Conferences, English speaking, the Eastern Swedish and the East German Conferences. The line of the East German is the most extended, reaching, as it does, from Long Island on the East to Buffalo on the West, from Boston on the North to Baltimore on the South.

During the quadrennium the Centenary program has had the careful attention of all the administrative officers of the Area as well as the general support of our membership. We may not have met the full expectation of those who projected the movement, but have certainly gone far beyond the expectation of those who studied the matter at close range and we have made an aggregate contribution approximating¹ $3,500,000, having in the previous quadrennium given $1,445,000. It is but fair to say that in the original canvass and return there were pledges made for one year which were recorded as the annual subscription for five years. The total return appears to me altogether creditable.

The Post-Centenary program is receiving attention. The "World Service Volume" has been widely distributed and is being carefully read. Many of the churches are systematically studying the volume on Church Training Night and the Area Sunday School Office has greatly promoted interest in the program of Methodism by its plan for oratorical contests in the local churches, districts, Conferences and Area in which the facts given in The World Service of the Methodist Episcopal Church are made the basis of composition and recitation. It is too early to say what will be the financial response to the new appeal.

It should be borne in mind that many of the churches have deferred expenditure for urgent local causes until their obligation to the Centenary shall have been met. In some of these instances, to defer longer the improvements called for, would be disastrous to the local church and to that extent would affect also the possible help of these churches in the general enterprises of Methodism.

It will be remembered also that interest in the support of our retired ministers has expressed itself in most enthusiastic effort in many of the Conferences. This is true of the Conferences of the New York Area in which new goals have been set and new plans adopted. The carrying forward of these plans has been delayed because the right of way has been given to the Centenary appeal. Now upon the conclusion of the Centenary period, it is expected that these plans for the retired ministers will be vigorously pressed.

One fact is noticeable, that where the most generous and unselfish support has been given to the great missionary causes of the Church, there the spiritual life of the local church has been most distinctly broadened and deepened.

During the quadrennium, as a result of direct aid from the Centenary funds, a number of important building projects have been carried to completion. The outstanding monument of the quadrennium is the Church of All Nations, toward which the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension gave $238,000. The total cost of the building was $407,000. It stands in the midst of one of the neediest neighborhoods of this city and of the nation, where it is imperative that we exhaust every effort in meeting the spiritual objective and approach our goal by every possible avenue. It is, so far as the community is concerned, in very truth, The Church of All Nations. In its formal and regular schedule of activity, we are ministering to Chinese, Czechs, Hungarians, Russians, and Italians, Jews as well as Gentiles. It is a fact of historic interest that Trotsky was for some years a resident of New York City and lived in this particular neighborhood. If it had been possible so to present to him the Gospel of the Son of God and so to influence his philosophy and ideals as that they would have represented the Man of Galilee, how different might have been the story of the Twentieth Century. If this most strategic work is to be carried forward effectively, it will be necessary to supplement the local contributions possible, by large gifts from those within and without the Area.

The Centenary has also given its aid to the project recently undertaken by the Chelsea congregation. The incomplete building in which this congregation has been worshiping for years does not afford adequate provisions for the demands of a Methodist Episcopal Church in upper New York. By the help of the Board of Church Extension a most eligible lot has been secured on Broadway at 173d Street, and it is proposed to erect there a building of which the church proper will be the central unit, the remainder of the lot affording room for a modern apartment house. A mortgage on the property will provide for approximately half the cost of construction; the other half will be cared for by a bond issue so arranged as not to constitute an embarrassment to the activities of the church. This seems to be a new departure in church building but the expectation of success is justified by the results attending a somewhat similar enterprise in Kansas City and by the hopes so confidently cherished as to the Chicago First Church enterprise. When completed, the Chelsea Church will occupy one of the most commanding sites in the city upon Broadway, one of the great thoroughfares of the nation. There is every reason to expect that not only the local church but also the denomination will gain by this projection of Methodism's zeal and courage. Ultimately the revenue from the investment will constitute a fund for local church extension.

The Market Street Church of Paterson must also have mention. During the quadrennium it has greatly improved its plant by adding a dormitory for men and one for women and by providing the best equipped gymnasium in Paterson. It is an outstanding example of a downtown property, preserved, modernized and utilized. It is self-supporting and aggressive, and while seeking to minister to, and to assimilate those of other nationalities, maintains its character as a strong American church. The debt of $168,000 remaining on the building, will be paid off probably at the rate of $5,000 a year.

The population of New York City has, during the quadrennium, been affected by the migration of the colored people from the South. Within the bounds of the Borough of Manhattan, there are at present resident one hundred and fifty thousand, to which number must be added a large population in the Bronx and in all the cities near to greater New York. Chiefly due to the conditions created by this immigration, Calvary Church, for many years one of the leading churches of the denomination, has suffered a loss in its membership exceeding one thousand and has been compelled to find a new location. An admirable site has been secured on University Avenue near the New York University. It is expected that the congregations of Calvary and of Morris Heights will unite, upon the completion of the new edifice. The old building, vacated by Calvary, ample and most conveniently arranged, will become the home of our Colored Salem Congregation.

The congregation of Saint Mark's, on 53d Street, long ago outgrew its building and is arranging to begin work on its new structure at Saint Nicholas Avenue and 137th Street within a few weeks. This is to be a thoroughly equipped modern church, to cost about $350,000, toward which the congregation itself has pledged about $185,000.

Epworth and Butler Colored Churches are also making ready for new church buildings in the near future and the preliminary plans are well under way.

The loss in the membership of our white churches in Harlem and the Bronx will be more than offset by our gain in colored constituency when these buildings already planned shall have been completed.

In addition to the enterprises promoted by the Centenary, there have been several notable accomplishments. The Methodist Episcopal Hospital in Brooklyn has, by the great liberality of a few of our laymen and by the generous cooperation of a large number of our laymen and ministers, added to its equipment a new maternity building representing the highest standards of modern hospital construction. The cost of this building was approximately $650,000 and its erection has made possible such rearrangement of the hospital as very greatly to improve its general facilities. The hospital is making a contribution in service to the ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church and their families, amounting to $50,000 a year and is affording the advantage of most advanced hospital treatment to a constantly increasing clientele representing all nationalities and creeds.

The Bethany Deaconess Hospital, of Brooklyn, supported by the East German Conference, has completed a new building at a cost, including equipment, of $270,600. In the improved building there are about one hundred and twenty beds. The indebtedness remaining upon the institution is $150,000 of which about $35,000 is covered by subscription. The new building is about three times as large as the old. The whole plant is valued at $450,000.

Our Homes for the Aged in Brooklyn and Manhattan and our Methodist Home at West Haven, Connecticut, have gained significantly in endowment during the quadrennium and the Newark Conference is represented more adequately than heretofore in the Home at Ocean Grove.

The Swedish program for the Home for the Aged at Ossining has been carried forward satisfactorily. Too much praise cannot be given to the godly women of Methodism for their painstaking and successful work in the promotion of these blessed institutions.

The Five Points Mission, with greatly improved equipment and increased effectiveness, continues its Christlike ministry. Long ago, a never-to-be-forgotten group of Methodist women fixed upon this—one of the most arid of spiritual wastes—as the place for the demonstration of God's transforming power, and the hope they cherished has not been disappointed.

The Woman's Home Missionary Society of the New York Area has expended during the quadrennium $31,645 in the New York Immigrant Girls' Home and $36,720 in the maintenance of the Watts de Peyster Home for Girls at Tivoli, New York. It has given substantial aid in the maintenance of The Dwight W. Blakeslee Memorial Training School at New Haven, Connecticut. These institutions are of large importance.

The Deaconess Homes of Newark and Jersey City, which are connected with this Society, have also been supported at a cost exceeding $78,000. The amount raised and paid by the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Area into the general treasury, totals $212,561.

In addition to the Deaconess Home maintained by the Woman's Home Missionary Society, there is the Deaconess Home in the City of New York with its property increasing constantly in value and with its faithful workers giving of their energy without stint to the program of the Church. The mortgage on the Home has recently been canceled.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society in the New York Area is a part of the New York Branch. Each year there has been an increase in the annual revenue, the contribution for the last year being nearly $30,000 in advance of the first year of the quadrennium. The contributions for the four years total about $330,000. As one of the reasons for the steady gain of this Society, there should be noted the remarkable continuity in the personnel of its most important offices, a statement which might also well be applied to the Woman's Home Missionary Society. The "Third Thursday" gathering, which is one of the features of the Foreign Society, gives to our women the opportunity to discuss the latest plans for the Home Base and to gather inspiration from addresses delivered by furloughed missionaries.

The Saint Christopher's Home for Children at Dobbs Ferry has had remarkable success during the quadrennium and with the most adequate equipment it has ever known, is entirely free from debt.

The city societies of the Area include the Brooklyn and Long Island Society, the Jersey City District Society, the Paterson Methodist Union, the Staten Island Society, the Newark City Society, the New Haven League and the New York City Society. It would not be possible, within the limits of such a report, to indicate in detail even the most significant lines of activity pursued by these several organizations. Some of the most difficult work undertaken and carried forward is of a nature which does not easily lend itself to tabulation or particular mention; it is just the steady plodding along the accustomed paths, sometimes without the inspiration of expressed appreciation from the churches aided or of praise from others.

The Goodwill Industries, as maintained with conspicuous success in Jersey City, is one of the notable features of the many-sided work of the Saint Paul's Center. The Jefferson Park Parish, New York, has been expanded by the conversion of the old Trinity Church into the Casa del Popolo. Here a very full program is carried out including recreational activities, vocational training, the ordinary educational work, a day nursery, and also classes in Americanization for adults, from which about four hundred annually are graduated into citizenship. But the work among all these groups is conducted with the aim of bringing those who are under our care into the enjoyment of a vital Christian experience. The result has been that from seventy-five to one hundred young men and women have been received into the Church each year since the work was started. It is of unusual significance that for this work, the Italians themselves are contributing $6,000 annually.

This work among the Italians is one of the most hopeful in the field of denominational activity, outstanding illustrations being supplied by Astoria, Yonkers, Paterson, Newark, Jersey City and Eleventh Street, and Washington Square, Manhattan. Mention has already been made of this feature of the program at the Church of All Nations.

Excellent work among the Russians is carried on chiefly in Manhattan and Jersey City, and work for the Spanish is well organized in connection with Sands Street, Brooklyn, and Metropolitan Temple, Manhattan.

The Japanese congregation of Manhattan has been housed in a building of its own, secured at a cost of $38,500, half of the cost being met by Centenary funds and half being raised by the Japanese themselves.

The Korean Church in New York City has been organized and housed in a convenient neighborhood. The cost of the property was about $17,000.

We are seeking to utilize the old Saint Paul's Church, Newark, for the community service of young people and also to develop the most worth while plans for Union Church, Manhattan.

The Hadley Rescue Mission is still as a lighthouse and a harbor for those smitten by the storm, battered by the sea; the light is never suffered to go out and the harbor bells are ever ringing.

John Street Church holds its own undisputed place in the reverence and love of our people. Situated as it is at the center of the financial world, it is a shrine made sacred by its unbroken service from the days of Philip Embury and Captain Webb to the present. But it is likewise one of the busiest of our churches. Two services are held every day of the year except in such week-day holidays as close the offices of the financial district. By its admirable program it is offering its practical ministry and uttering its vital message to increasing numbers and with increasing effectiveness. No church in New York represents a broader catholicity or more sincere evangelism than John Street. Because of its unique relation to Methodism, the Trustees of John Street will make report to the General Conference for its consideration and appropriate action.

It cannot be claimed that in dealing with the problems of the cities of the Area, we have reached the maximum of efficiency. All of those who are best acquainted with the facts will agree as to this; will declare that their reach far exceeds their grasp, but for all those who have striven to see the whole program and have sought to advance the common cause even by the surrender or subordination of individual preference, I have only words of approval and heartiest praise. For the cooperation of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension, given with such breadth of sympathy, such generosity, such painstaking care, any expression of appreciation attempted by me would be utterly inadequate.

The city problem and opportunity naturally claim largest place in attention and discussion but the rural church also deserves mention, for we have many country charges in the New York and Newark Conferences especially. In such sections as the Catskills, we have also the problem of change from Gentile to Jewish population, and the extension of New York City's water system has caused the loss of communities, which, in years past, have furnished excellent fields for our cultivation. In one of the sections of the Newark Conference it appears that in recent years about one fourth of the farms have changed hands annually, vastly increasing the difficulty of administration in churches which formerly made rich gifts of men to our cities. The results, however, of close attention given to our country work are most gratifying.

The Area Epworth League reports the holding of three summer institutes at Madison, New Jersey; Middletown, Connecticut; and Carmel, New York; with a total attendance of six hundred and sixty-six. There are also sixteen winter institutes with an attendance exceeding fifteen hundred. During the four year period just closing, there have been more than two hundred Life Service decisions; more than one hundred and sixty Leagues have adopted the Twenty-Four Hour Day plan of giving. The establishment of the New York Area Office, with its budget of $10,000, has been justified by the results secured.

The Area Sunday School Office has rendered most valuable service to the cause of religious education. Its practical courses in group training classes are especially worthy of note. In the change of method which is so marked a feature of our present Sunday School or Church school, the work of this particular office I regard not only as invaluable but altogether indispensable.

The progress of our educational institutions is encouraging. At Drew Seminary for Young Women at Carmel, New York, several new buildings have been erected and equipped—one of these especially for younger scholars not previously provided for. The attendance has exceeded that of previous periods, and the finances of the school are carried on without deficit.

At Centenary Collegiate Institute, Hackettstown, New Jersey,

the indebtedness, so long hampering the activities of the school, has been met. This is a notable achievement and the value of the unencumbered resources of the school exceeds $800,000. The educational standards have been raised, the faculty increased and the attendance brought to the record enrollment.

Wesleyan University has, during the quadrennium, completed its campaign for a three million dollar increase of its endowment fund. The faculty has been strengthened so that at present, including professors, assistant professors and instructors, there are fifty-five on the teaching staff of the university. The enrollment has been kept at approximately five hundred. The restriction in the number of students has made possible insistence upon the highest standards in the qualifications of those admitted, so that while in the number of its students it will be ranked among the smaller colleges, yet in its educational ideals and the character of the work actually accomplished, it must be classed with the best. During the quadrennium, President William A. Shanklin, after his notably successful incumbency, was compelled, because of health conditions, to accept the position of President Emeritus. A permanent successor has not yet been chosen.

Drew Theological Seminary has written into the record for the four years its story of endeavor and achievement. The classes in course of instruction are larger than in any previous quadrennium. Though there have been new buildings erected on the campus and old buildings remodeled, other buildings are needed at once, and the endowment should be greatly increased. As the President of Drew Seminary has well stated, there ought to be in the program of Methodism, adequate provision for the pastors now serving, satisfactory provision for the pastors who have served and grants in aid for those who are to serve.

We must have thoroughly trained men for moral and spiritual leadership, and such training involves large expense. But while the college has its alumni in all the zones of remunerative employment, its local friends and likewise its well defined group of patronizing Conferences, the theological school, with its necessary and inescapable financial requirements, is without such resources.

The ordinary mind, unable to see the question in its vital bearing or possibly indifferent to the subject, is too often wholly lacking in sympathy with this particular phase of denominational activity. Unless, however, we are ready to accept in place of the prophet or minister, that grotesque substitute proposed by the superficial thought of the day, it must be that such schools as Drew shall find generous support not upon the basis of neighborhood relation or accidental interest but upon the basis of profound and deliberately cultivated conviction.

Methodism's treatment of her theological schools will indicate, as possibly no other single fact can do, her wise or unwise analysis of present world conditions and will in some fair degree measure her sacrificial eagerness to meet the present world need.

I desire to express the highest appreciation of the work done by our Commission on Courses of Study both in its institutes and by correspondence. Its plans in formulation and execution cannot be too highly praised. It will be borne in mind, however, in the study of our total educational program that all of the agencies mentioned are complementary one of the other and that neither can be considered a substitute for the other; they have their own distinctive places; their own vastly important functions.

On the basis of the figures as reported to me, it appears that there have been built during the quadrennium forty-four churches and thirty parsonages, while we have sold twenty-three churches and fourteen parsonages. There has been a gain of 10,958 in church membership; in the Sunday school membership a gain of 13,502; in the Epworth League there appears a loss of 688. There are 355 Mission Study Classes in the churches of the Area with an enrollment of 4,716 members; there are 184 supply pastors employed, of which group a large proportion is of students in attendance upon our schools, colleges, universities, and theological seminaries; there are 821 pastoral charges and a Conference membership, including probationers, of 884.

It is gratifying to report that in this period of agitation and unrest, when the whole problem of religion and the Church has developed unusual complexities, there has been a fine spirit of harmony and cooperation prevailing in the Area. In the councils of the great benevolent boards centered in New York as well as in the organizations whose work is confined to the city or Area, we have had the invaluable cooperation of ministers and laymen with the expert knowledge and encouragement of secretaries and editors.

New York City is one of the seething centers of the modern world. Its tasks are multiform, intricate, almost appalling. Its possibilities for good or ill are beyond all power of estimate. In New York City, as a whole, every third person is enumerated as a Roman Catholic and every fourth person as a Jew. Of the remaining forty-two per cent of the population, not over one-sixth is enrolled in the communicant membership of the Protestant Churches.

And yet this city has become more and more the home and center of those denominational and interdenominational, of those national and international movements which visualize and seek to make effective the spirit of Christianity. As illustrative of these, there may be named the Mission Boards of the Presbyterian, Baptist and Protestant Episcopal Churches, the Missions Conference of North America, the Council of Boards of Home Missions, the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, the International Young Men's Christian Association and the National Board of the Young Women's Christian Association, the Student Volunteer Movement, the International Alliance for Christian Fellowship among the Churches, the American Bible Society, The Church Peace Union.

We must not lose sight of this, for it is in such association that the Methodist Episcopal Church finds some of its greatest opportunities for distinctive contribution to political and religious progress, as also for the richly stimulating reactions of such contacts.

No one among us can fail to recognize the vast importance of these relationships, for the Methodist Episcopal Church, as represented in New York, must of necessity take part in the work of all these agencies. Neither can we fail to acknowledge the stimulation of local activities and the encouragement of worldwide enterprise by our general connectional agencies located here—The Methodist Book Concern with the principal office of the General Book Editor, the Methodist Review, The Christian Advocate, the Board of Education, and the Board of Foreign Missions. These agencies give to Methodism its own unmistakable place in the spiritual skyline of this wonderful city. In an hour when Rome is adding to her prestige and power by the elevation of her Archbishop to the Cardinalate, we must certainly give thanks to God that, by his providential guidance, these agencies of ours are here, where, in the development of national and international affairs, they count for most, whether we regard the individual program of the Methodist Episcopal Church or the collective task of Protestantism. We are here, and I cannot believe that the great Church will consent to relinquish her place or lessen her influence for any price that can be bid or for any reason that can be legitimately urged.

For the distinct city task, however, every complexity must increase difficulty. In greater New York, where forty-two languages are spoken, mere approach demands carefully developed skill and any ministry, which is actually worth while, involves the mastery of really scientific missionary method. These processes are of necessity slow and costly, costly in terms of human energy—physical, intellectual and spiritual; costly also in terms of money required, and the more limited the funds available, the more intricate and delicate the problem, the more unsatisfying the result.

Were New York Methodism left to its own resources, the movements in the tide of population would mean even more frequent and inevitable surrender of locations rich in sentimental association, but no longer of value as places for English speaking congregations. It is true that some of the other denominations, by the accumulated endowment of centuries, are able to maintain themselves with all the equipment and accessories required, even when the neighborhoods occupied have been deserted by English speaking residents, but these denominations, for the most part, were already relatively rich in material things when American Methodism was starting out upon its mission. The Methodist Episcopal Church however will not lose either its vision or its fervor and New York Methodism will not be left alone.

It doubtless will be necessary to re-form the line. With the required resources at command we shall be able to care for our English-speaking constituency and also provide suitably for those from over seas. The world is standing at the gate, is knocking at the door; our spiritual hospitality is undiminished; the fires of evangelism burn in our hearts; we will not retreat. Our hope is in God; also we are looking eagerly but expectantly for the patient sympathy of our general Church, a sympathy which, taking account of the toilers and their task, will find fitting expression in heartening word, in intercessory prayer, and in such material help as will avail in the hastening of the Kingdom.

Looking out upon our field, with all its spiritual involvement of opportunity and obligation, we may adapt, if we cannot literally adopt as descriptive of that field, the words, "The world is our parish." Calling to mind the noble company of men and women who have passed from the earthly to the heavenly, and mindful of their worthy successors, whose accomplishments are beyond our power of appraisal, we must write, "God buries his workmen but carries on his work," and in the consciousness of the divine love, which has been the source of our joy and strength and must be the secret of our sustained effort, of our final victory, we look up and on, declaring with exultant confidence, "The best of all is, God is with us."

Respectfully submitted,

L. B. WILSON.

HOMER C. STUNTZ, RESIDENT BISHOP

Two things stand out as causes for special emphasis in the report for the Omaha Area during the quadrennium which has just closed. First, the very general and blessed harmony which has prevailed in every one of the four years. For this spirit of union and co-operation we devoutly thank God. The second is the measure of success attained despite the very unfavorable economic conditions through which the Area has passed.

Both of these great states—Iowa and Nebraska—are almost exclusively agricultural. Added to the general handicap under which agricultural districts have labored during the last four years has been the wild speculation in land which prevailed immediately before the beginning of this quadrennium, but the effects of which have been carried over into these two states in the four years under report. These speculative purchases of farms in the confident hope of large and immediate profits from re-sale have ruined thousands of prosperous farmers, crippled the merchants, hampered and broken many banks, and, in total, done far more to tie up the financial interests of Iowa and Nebraska than low prices of farm products, high freight rates, and the falling off of the exports of grain and other products to over-seas markets. Only those who have lived through these years have any just conception of the extremes to which this gambling spirit carried men of otherwise sober judgment. Despite the inevitable crash which has prostrated so many thousands the loyalty of our people has been manifested in the reports which we gratefully give of their stewardship.

The giving of our membership during these four years has been generous:

Included in this quarter of a million for improvement in the buildings and equipment of our six colleges is the splendid new administration building at Simpson College, new gymnasiums at both Upper Iowa University and Iowa Wesleyan, and a practically new science hall at Morningside, all of which add greatly to the attractiveness and usefulness of these institutions.

Increased attendance has been a marked feature in all the six colleges of the Area. Simpson College has doubled the number in collegiate courses. Nebraska Wesleyan shows an increase of 33 1/3 per cent. Cornell College a healthy growth. Iowa Wesleyan and Upper Iowa University show most encouraging increases. Morningside shows an increase in the College of Liberal Arts of 36 per cent. Epworth Seminary is in its first year as a Military Academy with about 40 students, and the management expect to reach a total of 100 next year.

The most marked single feature of institutional work in the Area has been the establishment of new hospitals. Our splendid hospitals at Des Moines and Omaha have made very substantial improvements to their buildings and equipment, and new hospitals have been begun in Sioux City and Cedar Rapids, Ia., at Scottsbluff and Lincoln, Neb.

Dr. Jepson, a prominent surgeon of Sioux City, gave us his private hospital on the one condition that he should retain a few rooms for his orthopedic patients. The Northwest Iowa Conference rose to the occasion and took formal action committing the Conference to enlarging this hospital program, setting $500,000 as the goal to be attained, with 200 bed capacity within five years.

At Cedar Rapids, Ia., St. Luke's Parish of the Episcopal Church offered the Upper Iowa Conference the well-known St. Luke's Hospital with property valued at $350,000 on condition that we would add a unit "costing not less than $100,000 within eighteen months." This offer was accepted by the Conference at its fall session of 1922 by unanimous vote. The Conference was called in extraordinary session one year ago and definite plans and figures put before them, and by unanimous vote they decided to raise $275,000 and thereby provide all that the city and contiguous territory needs in the way of added hospital equipment. An intensive campaign for this amount closed November 19th with over $305,000 subscribed or paid.

The Honorable William Jennings Bryan gave us his beautiful, suburban home called "Fairacres" with ten acres of sightly land at the edge of Lincoln, Nebraska, as the first unit for a new Methodist Hospital in that capital city. A strong board of trustees is planning for a modern hospital there on the unit system and propose to bring the program to complete realization within five years.

At Scottsbluff, Nebraska, in the irrigated section near the Wyoming line, a new Methodist Hospital was opened in March. The total assets in property and subscriptions already reach $200,000. The new plant furnishes the finest sort of modern hospital accommodation for 50 bed patients. It is located in a part of the Area where for scores of miles in every direction there is great need for the Christlike ministry which this institution will provide.

The Nebraska Methodist Hospital at Omaha has treated 18,776 patients, with 11,264 surgical operations. The cost to the Hospital of caring for free and part free patients for the four years is $162,835.94. The total receipts have been $829,365.86, and the disbursements $812,129.46. The Hospital treated during 1923, 655 free patients, a service which only God's deserving poor can fully appreciate.

An equally fine report comes from the Iowa Methodist Hospital at Des Moines. They have admitted 18,545 patients during the quadrennium, treating on an average each year 4,675 persons. Free bed patients numbering 1,301 have been cared for, and those for whom only part of the charges could be paid reach the total of 2,987. A large Appraisal Company certifies that the replacement value of this great House of Healing is $1,198,272. There are 104 pupil nurses studying in the Nurses' School. One of the required subjects and a course diligently attended is a series of lectures on Bible characters by the Chaplain, Rev. Dilman Smith. Chapel exercises for the entire Nurses' School, both at Omaha and Des Moines, are conducted every morning with the finest results. Chaplain Smith at Des Moines and Chaplain Webster at Omaha give their time to spiritual work among the patients. They report a number of conversions, and many who have professed to be Christians and have fallen away, are brought back to a vital faith in Christ during their stay in these institutions.

With the help of Centenary money and nearly double that amount given in Omaha, a Home for Self-Supporting Young Women has been opened in Omaha and named after Frances Willard—WILLARD HALL. It provides accommodation for nearly 100 young women at rates within the reach of those having very moderate salaries. When fully completed it will care for 175 to 200 guests and will render a real service in a city where about ten thousand girls and young women are working by the week. It was opened the first of June and has been self-sustaining from the first month. Sixty girls are now enjoying its modern provisions for physical and moral safety.

The increase in the number of full members is 14,641. Disappointing as this total is when matched up with the financial showing, it must be understood that the population of these two states is practically static. High land values deprive us of additions from immigration, and push out of the Area young people who expect to make farming their livelihood. Also, elderly folk who were among the first settlers and who have gained a competence, are leaving for kindlier climates literally by the thousand. The closing or crippling of scores of country churches is due to this cause.

It is impossible for the Resident Bishop to adequately express his appreciation of the efficient co-operation of Dr. Clyde Clay Cissell, the Area Secretary, and our fine office staff at Omaha, and of the splendid loyalty of the thirty District Superintendents and the 1,278 Pastors who make up the ministerial force of the Area.

As the quadrennium nears its end we are cheered with news of evangelistic work which fills us with great hope. At a half dozen centers a week of "visitation evangelism" has yielded from 120 to over 200 converts and accessions and has left the churches aflame with spiritual passion.

As this report is being prepared, Pastors, District Superintendents, Official Boards, the Area Secretary, and the Resident Bishop are holding District Training Conferences and perfecting the organization to carry the Every Member Canvass for our new World Service program right across the Area from the Mississippi River to Wyoming and Colorado. Before this report comes under the eye of the delegates at Springfield we are confident that we shall be laying the cap-stone of that great effort with shoutings of grace unto the Lord.

PHILADELPHIA AREA

JOSEPH F. BERRY, RESIDENT BISHOP

The Philadelphia Area embraces the Philadelphia, New Jersey, Delaware and Wyoming Conferences.

We have 770 pastors who are members of the Annual Conferences. There are in addition 276 "supply" pastors. In some cases these supplies are students preparing for our ministry, but most of them are local preachers or retired ministers.

The membership of the church is 283,493, an increase of 1,804 during the past three years.

The Philadelphia Area embraces many of the chief anthracite coal mines of the country, and hence has a very large foreign-speaking population. These populations continue to present a serious missionary problem, the solution of which has not yet been attempted in any adequate way. Such cities as Philadelphia, Atlantic City, Camden, Trenton, Scranton, Reading, Chester, Wilkes-Barre and Binghamton present open doors of opportunity as well as very difficult fields for spiritual conquest.

The Area covers a region which, in former days, was distinguished for its intense evangelistic life. It still retains that characteristic. Revival campaigns of the old-fashioned kind are conducted with much zeal. But the results are much more meager than formerly. Our pastors are now depending more largely upon individual evangelism and the regular ministries of the church.

We have not been distracted in this territory with serious theological unrest. There is a small coterie which speaks for the extreme conservative or fundamentalist group, and another which represents the modernist mind. But the great majority of our ministers and people are marching in the middle of the theological road, and are not interested in the sensational newspaper debates between the small ultra factions.

One of the most interesting recent events was the celebration in old Saint George's Church, Philadelphia, of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the first Methodist Conference in America. A program was presented extending through two days. Rev. Jacob S. Hughes, D.D., pastor of Saint George's, was in general charge, and Bishop Thomas B. Neely, Bishop Luther B. Wilson, Dr. Francis B. Green, Mr. John Walton and other prominent Methodist leaders spoke. The old church stands on Fourth Street, above Race, and is in excellent repair. It is not only the oldest Methodist church in America, but the oldest edifice now occupied by the Methodists in the world. The building of a great bridge over the Delaware River with the approach to the bridge within a few feet of the church, will place the building in the midst of an enormous and noisy traffic. While the usefulness of the building as a house of regular worship may be somewhat modified, yet it is proposed to maintain it as a rare historic landmark, and continue to make such use of it for religious services as conditions will permit.

The authorities of Dickinson College and Pennington School united last year in a financial campaign with very satisfactory results. The crusade was conducted under the supervision of the Board of Education, and had much personal direction from Dr. J. W. Hancher. The sum aimed at was $1,500,000, payable in five years. When the effort closed there was a small balance unprovided for, which was promptly underwritten by the trustees of the two institutions.

Dickinson College, under the presidency of Dr. J. H. Morgan, is in a prosperous condition, and the added resources will enable the historic institution to greatly develop its work. The Pennington school has had a serious time in meeting its financial obligations, notwithstanding the fact that the school has had the sagacious leadership of such strong laymen as Mr. John W. Sparks and Mr. William E. Massey. Dr. Francis E. Green, the principal, is a school man of the highest type.

The Philadelphia Methodist Hospital has had four years of unparalleled prosperity. A noble addition to the main building costing upwards of $600,000 has been erected, greatly increasing the capacity and efficiency of the institution. The major part of the money needed to pay for this improvement has been raised. A fine new nurses' home is now being erected, the gift of a generous gentleman, not a member of our church. The hospital is admittedly one of the two or three great hospitals in the state, having an official rating indicated by "A.A."

Preparations for a large addition to the Deaconess Home of Philadelphia are practically complete, and most of the funds to pay for the same are already in hand. Plans are under way for a much-needed infirmary at the Philadelphia Home for the Aged, an addition very much needed. The dedication of the Children's Home at Binghamton, N. Y., brought out a great company of Wyoming Conference Methodists. The home is a handsome building and its surroundings are most charming. The Home for the Aged at Ocean Grove, N. J., has had a successful campaign to increase its endowment and improve its facilities. Mr. William Halls, Jr., has been a most generous leader in this movement for the enlargement and endowment of the Home, and Mrs. Jennie S. Parker, the executive officer of the Board, has been a most efficient promoter of all the interests of the Home.

In an important sense Ocean Grove belongs to the whole denomination. For more than half a century it has been the chief summer assembly of our church. Yet the responsibility of the care of the institution really belongs to the Philadelphia Area. For years the annual camp-meeting drew great multitudes, and resulted in the conversion of thousands. The crowds attending the camp-meetings are still very large, but the evangelistic results are much more limited. The place has become a Christian sea-side resort, where intellectual and social culture is mingled with the spiritual. Four years ago a Summer Bible School was organized somewhat on the lines of the school at Northfield. From the first it has been a very great success. The attendance has grown year by year, until last summer it became necessary to take some of the sessions into the great auditorium. The school is now upon a solid financial foundation, and it is known that one friend of the movement has made provision in a will for a sum large enough to provide an adequate endowment for all time. The debt of Ocean Grove amounts to nearly $500,000. This debt is bonded for a long term at five per cent interest, and under the present able financial management, the institution is in no peril. A spirit of harmony now characterizes the administration, and the best days of this unique institution are still ahead.

The Goodwill Industries at Philadelphia have had a substantial growth. New quarters have been secured which will greatly facilitate the work both of the commercial and educational departments.

A fine headquarters building for our Chinese Christians was recently dedicated in Philadelphia.

The work of the City Missions in Philadelphia has been decidedly stimulated during the past two years. A dozen new churches have been erected, and special attention is given to the occupancy of new fields in a city whose population is growing at the rate of 40,000 a year. No finer piece of down-town missionary work is being done in any American city than that of the Fifth Street Church and Community Center. The work has taken a firm grasp upon the confidence and affection of the community, and the results of the social, educational and evangelistic activities are most gratifying. The work in our Italian churches has been somewhat disappointing, but a recent reorganization of the work and the enlistment of a new leadership promises better results.

Emphasis has been placed upon the circulation of our denominational literature, and the circulation of The Christian Advocate has been still further increased.

We are feeling most keenly the shortage in ministerial supply. Too many of our charges are compelled to accept the services of the part-time pastors, or of full-time men who are inadequately trained. While we are thankful that in the emergency which is upon us we have "supplies" to put into vacant pulpits, yet it is a constant regret that we cannot secure trained pastors who can give their undivided time to the work. One of the most serious conditions which the Area is facing is the situation growing out of the lack of ministers. The fact that so few of our young men are now being called into the Christian ministry should cause the church the most serious heartsearching and humiliation.

There has been a steady increase for several years in pastoral salaries. Most salaries still afford only a bare subsistence for the minister and his family, yet the trend upward furnishes one of the most heartening evidences of the increased intelligence and generosity of the church.

Throughout the Wyoming Conference, and to some extent in the other Conferences of the Area, the organization of Tithers' Storehouse Associations has had a most salutary influence upon the financial and spiritual condition of the churches. After seeing this method of finance in operation for several years and closely watching the results I am firmly of the opinion that the general adoption of the Storehouse plan throughout the church would confer far-reaching benedictions. Whenever fairly tried it has been a distinct blessing to every side of life in the local church.

The Area has suffered by the death of several of our influential ministers and laymen. Perhaps the most serious loss from the ranks of our leaders was that of the passing of Rev. Dr. James A. Hensey, Superintendent of the Binghamton District. He was a most alert and zealous toiler, and the magnetism of his leadership was constantly felt throughout the entire Conference.

The Centenary period is drawing to a close. It has had a few severe critics in this region, and a few others have been simply indifferent. But the great mass of our pastors and people have been loyal and cooperative. I wish we had paid our Centenary subscriptions more nearly in full. Many of the lessons we have learned by unpleasant experiences during the Centenary days will be a benefit to us as we enter upon the activities of the World Service program. In the main the new program has been hospitably received, and the preliminary work already done, gives promise of success. Rev. Dr. L. C. Murdock, the Area Secretary, is a most conscientious and zealous leader, and has inspired to a remarkable degree the confidence and co-operation of our people.

PITTSBURGH AREA

BY BISHOP FRANCIS J. McCONNELL

The Pittsburgh Area comprises the Erie, Pittsburgh and West Virginia Conferences and the Porto Rico Mission Conference. It is comparatively easy to travel through the area with Pittsburgh as headquarters but it is hard for geographical reasons to develop a very distinctive area consciousness. The better railroad accommodations are east and west, rather than north and south, so that while there does not appear to be any dissatisfaction in the Erie and West Virginia Conferences with Pittsburgh as the area center, still it is not easy to have conventions or rallies or councils anywhere in the area largely attended by representatives from outside any one Conference boundary line. The present church membership of the area is about 262,000.

In each of the three home Conferences the appointments are fairly well distributed among cities, towns and country districts, but the problem of filling the country churches in each Conference is increasingly difficult. For example both the Erie and West Virginia Conferences have considerable numbers of churches paying very small salaries. The district superintendents do not feel free to ask college-trained men, likely to be in debt for their education, to take these small salaries. The result is an increasing number of supplies, many of whom do most excellent work, but without the sense of responsibility which marks the Conference man. This difficulty is made worse by the eagerness of the various churches of circuits to break away from the circuits, to have a full-time preacher of their own. Except for notably successful country churches here and there I do not regard the country church problem in the Pittsburgh area with any great satisfaction. Whatever exceptions there are can be largely credited to distinctive rural-church efforts made under the leadership of West Virginia Wesleyan College, of West Virginia State University and of district superintendents who have made special effort with the country problems. Larger support will have to be paid by country churches if they are to be served as they should be. If we could have some agency to finance country preachers, in part, while they are developing the resources of their communities we might solve the problem. As soon as a successful country preacher is confronted by the responsibility of a college education for his children he feels that he must accept opportunity in town or city.

A second general problem of the area is industrial. Large sections of all the Conferences are given to coal mining. At the time of the most recent large-scale coal strike, almost entire villages in the Erie Conference were depopulated by the exodus of miners and their families, while in West Virginia thousands of our members went for months without earning anything worth mentioning. This, of course, makes time and again an acute industrial problem, aggravated by the fact that both miners and operators seem to expect the church to take sides in the conflict. Except where the justice of the case was clearly on one side or the other the preachers have for the most part confined themselves to more distinctively religious and humanitarian effort in times of strike. There come crises, however, when the representatives of the church have at least to seem to take sides. There have been instances of tyranny on the part of miners deserving of rebuke, and there have been unwarrantable invasions of civic and elementary human rights by operators. The policy in these districts aims at keeping the churches free from undue influence by either party to an industrial conflict. The money for the support of what is virtually home mission work in mine fields should come in such preponderant proportions from the church that the local societies do not become dependent on mine operators for financial support. Contributions from operators are to be gladly welcomed, but such contributions should never be sought for or received to such an extent that their possible withdrawal would embarrass the work of the church. This is not intended in criticism of coal operators; but human nature being what it is, the preacher whose salary comes in large part from a corporation will likely take the corporation point of view in time of industrial conflict, just as the preacher would find it hard to hold the scales of his judgment exact if he were receiving direct help from labor unions. The entire problem in the Pittsburgh area is most serious. In one district in the area corporation contributions to our preachers' salaries went as high as $14,000 a year. In that district however the work had to be carried on chiefly by supplies. The regular Conference men hesitate to accept appointments where the greater part of the financial support comes from outside the church.

I think I discern both in the ministry and laity of our church an increasing sensitiveness in mining and manufacturing districts toward unfavorable industrial conditions. The Pittsburgh Conference in particular has more than once spoken boldly and prophetically against indifference to human welfare in industrial relationships, and the members of the Conference report slow but steady improvement in industrial working and living conditions as the years ago by.

The situations throughout the field as to evangelism remain in some quarters about what they have been for half a century, though in other parts the evangelistic effort has to be of the distinctly and persistently personal type. In the rural parts of the West Virginia and of the Erie Conferences it is still possible to carry through evangelistic campaigns of the revivalistic type with remarkable success. In some of the circuits and smaller towns not a season passes without the most gratifying response to the appeal made through the special evangelistic series of meetings. In fact so successful is this method that I feel that some preachers rely upon it too exclusively, with an under-emphasis on Christian education and training. The result is that in some of our rural and small-town fields religion is thought of too exclusively in terms of emotional crisis. There are among us churches where little is being done for the systematic nurture of the Christian life, the preacher depending on a series of revivalistic appeals throughout the year not only to lead in outsiders but to keep the insiders in spiritual health.

In the cities the personal and educational methods are more used, for the most part commendably. The larger churches in the larger cities are more and more utilizing every day in the week and a larger number of hours a day for the work of an all-round ministry to the communities. It would be hard to find ministers more devoted to systematic pastoral work and thoroughgoing organizational activity in trying to solve the problem of the city church. I must remark however that the attempts under the so-called educational directors in the churches are not always successful. The difficulty is most often that the educational director is not left free to carry out the work for which he has been set aside. It is too easy for the pastor to utilize him as an assistant pastor. The only effective remedy that I can see is for the men of the better training in the newer educational methods to be put at the head of churches where there is a chance for them to work out their plans, so that we can come to a better appreciation of the methods. The problem of religious education will have to be taken seriously enough to be the determining factor in more of our churches before we have the data for a solution of one of the most urgent tasks now confronting us.

So far as institutional education of the college type is concerned the area interests are being well cared for. Both Allegheny College and West Virginia Wesleyan College are proceeding upon the sound educational policy of limiting themselves to the tasks which they can accomplish best. Neither institution aspires to be a university, strictly speaking, but each is doing work of high quality in collegiate grade. Each is embarrassed by the increasing numbers of students attracted by the qualitative excellence of the academic courses offered. West Virginia Wesleyan had completed a campaign for a million dollars just before the close of the last quadrennium. Allegheny completed a like campaign about two years ago, and has received large sums of money by individual donors in addition. It would be hard to suggest any improvement in the program of either of these fine colleges.

The work of the Wesley Foundation goes forward effectively and promisingly at Morgantown, West Virginia; Oakland Church, Pittsburgh, and at State College, Pennsylvania. The old charge that state educational institutions are lacking in religious interest no longer has point either as regards faculties or students. The teachers and pupils of West Virginia State University, Penn State College, the University of Pittsburgh and the Carnegie Technical Institute have sought to take advantage of the religious opportunities granted by the workers of the Wesley Foundations. After personal visits to all of the centers where this work is being carried forward I record my gratification at the work already done and ask the support of Methodism for still larger plans for the form of educational investment which must count for more and more in our Methodist planning. I find no places where it is easier to get responsive hearing for evangelistic appeals and for calls to distinct forms of Christian service than at the centers where our Wesley Foundations are established.

Mention should be made of the Pittsburgh Church Union as an effective agency for city work in Pittsburgh and Allegheny County. This is the instrument through which the Methodism of Pittsburgh makes its attack on its specifically city problems. An unusually large amount of new church building, of preaching to foreign-speaking people, of "good-will industry" enterprise is carried through by the Union. I do not know any organization of the kind doing better with the materials at hand. In harmony with the spirit of the Discipline in furthering such forms of work I have made the Superintendent of the Pittsburgh Church Union a member of the cabinet of the Pittsburgh Conference. The building of a modern office building on the site of Smithfield Street Methodist Church has been determined upon as a means of supporting and continuing our work in the heart of Pittsburgh.

The Board of Home Missions supports many enterprises throughout the Pittsburgh area, notably the Coke Mission within the Pittsburgh Conference. I have found in dealing with this Board an unselfish spirit of desire to do the largest and best for the Church and for the Kingdom. The disappointment of this or that community over failure to get money for local enterprises through the shrinkage of Centenary funds does not, I trust, blind us to the fact that the suggestions of the Board in city, industrial and rural fields have been simply invaluable to us. The qualitative results of the administration of the Board of Home Missions have been fully as important as the quantitative efforts of the larger money appropriations. I do not know any place where Home Missionary money is being unwisely spent.

The Porto Rico Mission Conference is part of the Pittsburgh Area. The general conditions in Porto Rico are not such as to make possible large visible success. The economic opportunities for young people in the island are few. The more enterprising youths come by scores and hundreds to the United States. Within the limitations set however by the natural conditions the work of the Mission goes forward satisfactorily, if we can ever use such a word in connection with religious effort. At the opening of the quadrennium the temper of the preachers of the Conference was, while devoted and self-sacrificing, nevertheless somewhat discouraged. The Board of Home Missions however found a way to increase the salary of the preachers, and the policy was inaugurated of giving them larger and larger measure of control over Porto Rican ecclesiastical affairs, without direction or even insistent advice from any officials in the United States. I am sure the very capable superintendent of the field, Manuel Andujar, will confirm my statement that since this ampler emphasis on self-determination the spirit of the Conference has notably improved. Santo Domingo is attached to the Porto Rico work. I hope to visit Santo Domingo before the opening of the General Conference.

I wish to record my appreciation of the effectiveness with which the Area Centenary office of the Pittsburgh Area has been administered under the direction of Dr. Appleton Bash. Sixty thousand pledges have been followed up constantly, incessant demands of preachers for Centenary lecture material have been met, multitudinous calls for special addresses have been responded to. The returns have not always been as large as we had hoped, but the field has at least been thoroughly worked. The Centenary office has striven also to aid college campaigns and campaigns for Conference Claimants' funds. The returns to the Erie Conference Claimants' campaign were especially gratifying.

PORTLAND AREA

WILLIAM O. SHEPARD, RESIDENT BISHOP

The strong personality of Bishop Matthew Simpson Hughes, his firm administration, and his eloquent utterance of the Word of God by life and speech, will always be held in grateful remembrance in the Portland Area of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Two modern, beautiful and costly churches, one at Medford, Oregon, and the other at Edmonds-On-The Sound, Washington, are soon to be dedicated, and named for him in testimony of the affection in which he is held.

The continued residence of Mrs. Hughes in Portland, and her leadership of the Columbia River Branch of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, have been most helpful. The appreciation of her presence and work is indicated by her election as a delegate to this body.

The Portland Area covers the Territory of Alaska, the states of Oregon and Washington, the northern part of Idaho, and, for Scandinavian work, the whole of the Pacific Coast from Nome to San Diego. Embraced in this territory are the Columbia River, Oregon, Puget Sound, Pacific German and Western Norwegian-Danish Conferences, the Pacific Swedish Mission Conference, and the Alaska Mission.

Such results of the work of the past four years as can be shown in tabulated statistics may be seen in the following:

Members	74,959	86,260	11,301 or 15%
Sunday-school Enrollment...	84,332	106,652	22,320 or 26%
Epworth League	11,328	11,565	237 or 02%
Property	$5,450,736	$6,393,750	$943,014 or 17%
Ministerial Support	$576,381	$743,538	$167,157 or 29%
Benevolences	$323,807	$538,439	$214,632 or 66%

The Area contains a number of institutions of Christian philanthropy, which have done successful work during the past four years. The Lyng Home for Girls in Seattle, the Norwegian-Danish Home for Girls at Los Angeles, and the Bethany Old People's Home at Stockton, Cal., are under the management of the Western Norwegian-Danish Conference. The Woman's Home Missionary Society successfully conducts the Jesse Lee Home at Unalaska, the Maynard-Columbus Hospital at Nome, a Community House at Tacoma, Wash., the Catherine P. Blaine Home and Kindergarten for Japanese Children at Seattle, the Portland Settlement Center at Portland, Ore., and a Mission among miners at Wilkeson, Wash. For the latter a convenient and commodious building has been dedicated within the last year. The Oregon Conference Society of the Woman's Home Missionary Society, has built during the quadrennium a modern and fully equipped building for the Old People's Home at Salem, Oregon, costing $65,000 and housing in comfort thirty-five old people. The Conference Society also maintains a kindergarten in Portland for Japanese children.

There are six hospitals in the Area. The Maynard-Columbus Hospital at Nome, Alaska, is erecting a $35,000 building, and the government has given three buildings. The Seattle General Hospital, fully equipped with 110 beds, has been under the management of the Deaconess Association, but recently has been taken over by the Puget Sound Conference. The Scace Hospital at Centralia, Wash., with buildings valued at $100,000, has been transferred within the past year to the Puget Sound Conference by Dr. Paul Sweet. The Central Washington Deaconess Hospital and Nurses' Home at Wenatchee, Wash., has constructed a building, costing $150,000, fully equipped and accommodating seventy-five patients. The Deaconess Hospital at Spokane, is one of the best in the Church. There is a capacity for over two hundred beds and a Home for seventy-five nurses. The plant is valued at $525,000, and has been placed upon a sound financial basis. In the last three years the hospital has been fully standardized and equipped with every modern appliance for the surgical and medical treatment of the sick. A hospital at Marshfield, Oregon, under the control of the Oregon Conference, has just been established. Pledges have been secured for a hospital in Portland; and a considerable sum is in hand for a Children's Home in the same city.

Under the Deaconess Association in Seattle, a Deaconess Home and Settlement, and a Training School for Deaconesses are maintained. In Portland the Association conducts a Deaconess Home and a Friendly Center Mission. For the latter a new building has been erected within the last twelve months.

Good-Will Industries in very successful operation have been established in Tacoma and Seattle.

Great emphasis has been placed upon evangelism, but the teaching function of the Church has not been neglected. Three, and part of the time four, Sunday-school Missionaries have been at work. Numberless institutes and Summer Schools for Religious Education have been conducted by the Board of Sunday Schools. In every Conference the Epworth League has had annual Conference and District Institutes, and property in several places has been secured for these annual gatherings of the young people. Summer Schools for Rural Pastors have been conducted annually at Salem, Oregon, and Pullman, Wash., under the auspices of the Board of Home Missions. The same Board has provided part of the salary of a professor in Kimball School of Theology, who assists rural pastors in modern methods.

Supported by the Board of Home Missions and the Woman's Home Missionary Society work is carried on in seven Indian Reservations among a large number of tribes. Notwithstanding the difficulty of securing men adapted to this work and with sufficient consecration to continue in it, marked success has been achieved at several stations.

Under the Evangelistic Department of the Board of Home Missions work has been done in a large number of logging-camps and lumber-mill towns by four experienced workers. The confidence of the lumbermen, many of them far from home and away from other Christian influences, has been in a large measure secured, friendly services and pastoral oversight have been freely rendered, and aggressive evangelistic work has been prosecuted.

Under the inspiration of the conditional offer of $350,000 made by the General Board of Education, the historic Willamette University at Salem, Oregon, conducted, in 1922, a successful campaign for $1,250,000. Buildings costing $260,000 have been erected upon the campus. Notwithstanding these enlarged facilities, many students who apply for admission are turned away because of lack of room.

The College of Puget Sound at Tacoma, Wash., has, during the quadrennium, obtained subscriptions for $1,800,000. A very fine campus of forty acres has been secured within the bounds of the city of Tacoma. An administration building to cost $250,000 is now in process of erection and will be ready for the opening in the fall when the old buildings and campus will be vacated. The campaigns for these two larger institutions have been the most notable financial achievements of the quadrennium.

In new and detached territory peculiar problems abound. In the period of preëmption the denominations over-churched many small communities, and now often exhibit extravagance of doctrine and sectarianism. Such communities are the easy prey of wandering wolves in the clothing of traveling evangelists. In the Portland Area the problem of recruiting an educated and capable ministry is most difficult. Only a few of the young men sent from the Area to eastern schools, after four or eight years of absence, and after having related themselves to the Conferences of the east, are willing upon graduation to undergo the great expense of returning to the Pacific Coast to await the uncertainty of appointment in the fall. To meet this condition the Kimball School of Theology has been maintained at great cost. Although the student body of the school is necessarily small, the School is worthy of sympathetic consideration by the Church. In order to maintain the personnel of the ministry it has been necessary to make large drafts upon the older sections of the Church. It is believed that thereby the ministry of the Area has been strengthened. Especial care has been exercised to secure suitable pastors for the churches at the seat of educational institutions.

The last four years has been a period of building. Under the inspiration of the larger vision given by the "Centenary" and the sympathetic assistance of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension, sixty-three churches have been erected at a cost of $1,300,000 and twenty-eight have been remodelled costing $322,793. Forty-two parsonages costing $141,555 have been built, and six remodelled costing $5,000. Twenty churches and parsonages at a cost of $500,000 are in process of erection.

The Board of Home Missions has rightly considered this section to constitute a missionary field. There have been several notable instances of churches erected far from the centers of population at considerable cost. These have been made "experimental stations" and have aroused much interest. The great church at Bremerton, Washington, the home of one of the largest Navy Yards of the country, is an example. The Board of Home Missions and Church Extension has also given wise consideration to the Wesley Foundation of the University of Washington, at Seattle, where property worth $75,000 has been secured, and the Foundation operating with great success. At Corvallis, Oregon, the students of the State Agricultural College will be cared for in the church building, to cost $125,000 and now in process of erection. Enlarged facilities for handling the student problem have been made possible at the State Agricultural College at Pullman, Washington, and the Idaho University at Moscow, Idaho, and at State Normal Schools in Bellevue and Cheney, Washington. Probably no expenditure will yield greater results to the Kingdom than the money wisely spent at the seat of Normal Schools.

The collection of "Centenary" subscriptions has been given much attention. Under the efficient leadership of the Area Secretary, the Area has endeavored to collect all subscriptions, not only for the sake of the "benevolences," but, also, to preserve the morale of the Area. Fruit and wheat crop conditions for three years in one of the larger Conferences have made it exceedingly difficult to secure payment in full upon subscriptions made in a more favorable time; and the same adverse conditions are now seriously hindering the World Service Program canvass which is being prosecuted at the time this report is made. It is a matter of much satisfaction that pastors and churches have received the Program with much enthusiasm, and success is anticipated. In the presentation of the World Service Program great care is being taken that every condition of the subscriptions is clearly understood.

stantly growing in favor with the people and increasing in sales, amounting in 1923 to about one hundred and thirty-five thousand dollars. This is larger than the gross sales of some of the depositories. It is believed that a depository at Portland would be in every way justified. At present the depository at which the books and accounts are kept is eight hundred miles south. The establishment of a fully accredited depository at Portland would doubtless very greatly increase the sales and further every interest of our work.

The Pacific Christian Advocate, published in Portland, continues to be the leading denominational paper of all the Northwest, and is attracting wide attention.

The comparatively mild climate of the Northwest has attracted a large number of ministers of advanced age, and before the Area system was adopted little attention was paid to equitable exchanges. The proportion of retired ministers is therefore very large, and their disciplinary support has required much attention. In all of the Conferences funds are being built up, though very slowly, for the care of these honored men. Until such funds are provided the tax upon the churches will be severe. In some of the Conferences it has amounted to twelve or fifteen per cent of the pastor's salary. The pro-rating of salaries has everywhere been required; and therefore the retired ministers have been paid their claim nearly in full.

The Portland Area has greatly enjoyed the presence of Dr. H. C. Jennings, Publishing Agent, Emeritus. Though he has been in impaired health, he has been active in the local church and beloved by all.

During the quadrennium, by the action of commissions duly appointed, and with the consent of the bishop presiding at the two Conferences, The Dalles District of the Columbia River Conference, with the exception of two charges, was transferred to the Oregon Conference, and is now known as the Eastern District. The territory was almost wholly within the state of Oregon. This transfer considerably affects the statistics of the two Conferences. Other boundary changes will be requested at this General Conference.

In 1918, the influenza carried away about one half of the native population of Alaska. At about the same time the world war called the younger men of Alaska into the service, and when the war closed they did not return to the Territory because the mining of gold, which had formerly attracted them, had become unprofitable. The Territory, therefore, is greatly decreased in population and our missionary responsibility has correspondingly diminished and our work declined. The immense distances separating the few stations where we are still at work make it very difficult, if, indeed, possible, to hold a Mission meeting; and only one attempt to do so has been made during the quadrennium. Because of this, it is recommended that the Alaska Mission, as such, be discontinued and our work in the Territory be placed in the Puget Sound Conference. This would greatly reduce the cost of superintendence. The expense of the occasional (perhaps only annual) visitation of the District Superintendent should be borne by the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension as a part of the maintenance of his district.

The General Conference will doubtless give special attention to the non-English speaking work organized in our Mission Conferences and Missions. There are three such organizations in the Portland Area, and they have done work of very great value. However, because of the laws limiting immigration, and other considerations so well known as to need no mention, the numerical results of our work are comparatively meager. In all of these Conferences and Missions it is exceedingly difficult to secure young men for the ministry. The age of the present ministers, and their probable early retirement if the Conferences are to be continued, constitutes a problem for which only a connectional fund administered by the Board of Conference Claimants can sufficiently provide. This whole question, with the many complications, is to be seen in the Portland Area, and requires sympathetic administration and wise legislation.

The history of the "great Northwest" is one of romantic interest. Saved to the government of the United States in the early part of the last century by the heroism and statesmanship of its first missionaries—Jason Lee, Marquis Whitman, and their companions—it was in a peculiar sense dedicated to Christian civilization and high ideals of liberty. Jason Lee, a true pathfinder, came to be an apostle to a benighted people, but he gave unending impulse to the moral and spiritual life of commonwealths.

This surely will be recognized as a Providential foundation for the great future in which the Pacific Northwest probably will be the richest and most populous section of the country. This expectation seems justified by the unequalled possibilities of hydro-electric power in Idaho, Washington and Oregon; the fertility of the diversified soils under irrigation projects already launched by the federal government; the variety of fruits and grains growable in the equable climate; the abundance of timber, elsewhere almost exhausted, for building and manufacturing purposes; the inexhaustible wealth of the mines of Alaska close at hand; the access to the markets of the awakening Orient; the ports and harbors and navigable streams reaching far into the interior; the matchless scenery which has made the Northwest the tourist Mecca of America; and the wholesome civilization which has already built several of the most beautiful cities of the world.

At present the country is still in the making and the churches share in the immaturity. The great stretches of comparative desert separating the present centers of population from the Northwest, connected only by trans-continental railroads maintained in efficiency under uncertain laws and in competition with a canal which is a world enterprise, have placed this rich section of America under temporary handicaps to be surmounted only by great enterprise and faith. The railroad situation, so important to a geographically separated but component part of the country, can be seen in a single glance: The Northwest produces more than it needs of grains, fruits, wool, lumber, etc., and therefore sends full trains east, while over half of the freight cars, at a cost of one hundred to one hundred and fifty dollars each, must be returned as "empties." The government, if it deals at all with a situation like this, must deal wisely, or it will deal fatally.

For the promotion of the work of the Area the Resident Bishop has given himself unreservedly. He has presided at eighteen Conferences within the Area and five outside. As far as possible he has given encouragement to evangelistic and financial campaigns, building enterprises, and the many interests of churches and institutions. The ministers and laymen have been responsive to every call of the Church, and have placed the Resident Bishop under heavy obligation for many personal kindnesses.

WILLIAM A. QUAYLE, RESIDENT BISHOP

DEAR FATHERS AND BRETHREN:

It becomes my duty to make a brief report for the Saint Louis Area. The contour of conditions is little changed from the preceding quadrennium. The lay and ministerial brethren are still lovely to my heart. "The love of Christ constraineth" them. Whoever comes to this Area will come to a company of wholesome Christians. They have been gracious to mine and me, both during my health and during my period of sickness. I shall remember them in eternity as brothers beloved.

Until the fall of 1922 I did in such fashion as I was capable, speaking uninterruptedly in the Area, in dedicating churches and answering to the varied calls and preaching the gospel, always finding the audiences attentive and appreciative. And the word of the Lord grew and abounded. Since my illness, when I could not speak, but could carry on the episcopal administration, the consideration of the preachers and laymen has been constant. And the work of holding Conferences and dedicating churches has been carried forward through the courtesy of various bishops, and through the district superintendents and preachers. During my health, from the first day of last quadrennium, all church dedications, practically, have been conducted by me. Such was formerly not the case, and would wisely now be carried on by the district superintendents and the ministry as the custom aforetime largely was. At those functions many of our preachers are entirely capable of rendering the best service and it brings out their talent. We need to develop power in the ministry; and the development of it should be one of the chief objects of the Church. Many churches have been built and dedicated. The Church grows: hope abides.

The merger of the Arkansas Conference with the Saint Louis Conference has achieved all that was hoped for it. Strong points are being developed in the Arkansas territory, and some of our strongest men of the Conference are in that territory. The Methodist Episcopal Church has a ministry both civic and sacred in these parts. The former Arkansas Conference has been made a district in the Saint Louis Conference. And the effect is commendable, up to date.

The growth of our Area has been constant during the quadrennium, and gradual and praiseworthy.

The Saint Louis Area has not done the best for the Centenary, but it has done well and has done it with a glad will. Dr. W. T. Wright, for many years the efficient secretary, was minded to go to California for his daughter's health. He was a superior secretary and a fine soul to work with. His departure was a loss; for he had spent his lifetime of ministry in the Saint Louis Conference. Dr. Stephen B. Campbell was appointed to fill the secretarial vacancy, and has shown himself a happy master of the task.

This quadrennium has marked the death of George Warren Brown, well known to Methodism and its legislative body. He left a will, instinct with church love, and its beneficence ranging over so wide a field of church activities as to serve as a model for Christian testaments for all coming time.

Two Conferences of this Area are colored; and I desire to reaffirm my belief in this work and in these brethren, and its necessity to Christianity and America. In Fort Smith, Arkansas, of the Little Rock Conference, the brethren have built a handsome church, modern and adapted to the needs of the city. In Saint Louis of the Central Missouri Conference, is one of the leading churches of our denomination with a membership of 2,700, and leadership in the city, in all worthy things. This work must be fostered and lends itself to leadership in all good things.

There is a marked future for Christianity under the auspices of the Saint Louis Area. The Centenary has occurred. The churches are sweetly at work in the kingdom of God.

In retiring from the field, I do so with great gratitude to man and God for my day's work in it. I have loved the people and the Lord, and hope to live with them in heaven.

QUADRENNIAL REPORT OF THE SAINT PAUL AREA

BISHOP CHARLES BAYARD MITCHELL

This is my second quadrennial report of the Saint Paul Area, and the most important item I have to report is the healthy and hopeful increase in church membership within the bounds of the area. We have made a net gain of 20,608. We are especially pleased with this fact when we consider that in some portions of the church decrease in membership is reported. The following table shows the gains and losses by Conferences:

Conference	1919	1923	Gain	Loss
Dakota	21,917	26,326	4,409
Minnesota	24,364	28,203	3,839

Totals	136,030	156,638	22,030	1,422
Net Gain			20,608

The next important item I wish to report is the benevolences. I am sorry to report that we have made a net loss of $63,366.00 over the preceding quadrennium. This item is due to the falling off in Centenary receipts. Following is the list of benevolences within the area for the past quadrennium:

Conference	1919	1923	Loss	Gain
Dakota	$202,010	$129,008	$73,002

We have two Conferences in the State of Wisconsin, the Wisconsin and the West Wisconsin Conference. I have the following report to make of Lawrence College, located at Appleton, Wisconsin.

LAWRENCE COLLEGE, APPLETON, WISCONSIN

Lawrence College, Appleton, Wisconsin, has had a very satisfactory growth during the quadrennium. The attendance in the College of Liberal Arts in 1920 was 625, and in the Conservatory of Music, 392. The present year there are 903 in the college and 501 in the conservatory. This increase has taken place in spite of the fact that a year ago the college passed a regulation refusing to admit any student who stood in the lowest twenty per cent of the graduating class of his high school; and any student whose moral character was not considered satisfactory as judged from questionnaires submitted to principals and other references.

In 1920 the total income of the college was $253,505, and its total expenditures was $270,969. In 1923 its total income was $378,537 and its total expenditures $350,298. In 1920 the value of the educational plant including land, buildings, and equipment was $938,292. In 1923 it was $1,193,173. In 1920 the endowment was $1,126,790. At the present time the endowment is about $1,800,000.

An effort to add $600,000 to the endowment and wipe out an indebtedness of $48,000 was begun in 1921 and resulted in securing the full amount desired with a surplus to take care of shrinkage in collections. In addition to this, the institution has received several bequests during the quadrennium which will total about $125,000. A year ago the trustees voted to seek to raise $250,000 for a new gymnasium. At the present time subscriptions to about $175,000 have been secured.

Lawrence has developed this year a new plan for the care of freshmen which is attracting considerable attention and which promises much for the better scholarship and adjustment of freshmen to college life and work. It has also developed a new plan for the supervision of upper classmen providing for vocational guidance, special opportunities for men of exceptional ability, and a moral record of all students.

DEACONESS HOSPITAL, GREEN BAY, WISCONSIN

Our Deaconess Hospital of Green Bay, Wisconsin, is making an increasingly large contribution to the constant developing philanthropic program of the church. Situated in the midst of a strong Roman Catholic population, it is preaching and practicing the evangel of the gospel through its ministry to body and soul, impartially to all classes and creeds.

The new unit in its development program will be completed by March at a cost of $110,000. With this addition, it will have a property valuation of $250,000. $500,000 will be needed in the near future to complete the program as contemplated by the Board of Directors. The Board of Directors is very conservative and proceeds cautiously in its building program. A sound financial plan is conducted in this institution, paying all current expenses and retiring $2,000 worth of bonds annually.

There are at present about $30,000 worth of bonds outstanding. A subscription already provided equals $35,000. As early in new year as possible, the board is putting on a campaign in Green Bay to raise this subscription to $100,000.

The hospital business amounts to over $50,000 annually. Notwithstanding it has no endowment, more than five thousand dollars' worth of free service is rendered every year. This is largely provided for by White Cross memberships.

Green Bay has been known for a long time as "The Rochester of Wisconsin." The staff of the Deaconess hospital adheres to the open staff principle. The management also believes that a Christian hospital has a spiritual ministry as well as physical, and the field secretary gives part time in capacity of chaplain.

A Training School for Nurses is conducted in connection with the hospital, with forty nurses caring for more than 2,000 patients annually.

The Wisconsin Deaconess Hospital has a great future in this field of practical Christianity in ministry to sick and suffering humanity in Northeastern Wisconsin.

During the quadrennium an important organization has been formed within the West Wisconsin Conference, namely:

THE WISCONSIN METHODIST HOSPITAL AND HOME ASSOCIATION

Under the direction of this organization, two hospitals are in operation, and the Morrow Memorial Home for the Aged, at Sparta, has been continued in its beneficent career.

On a beautiful site, within six hundred feet of the State Capitol at Madison, a four-story Catholic school building has been remodelled into a forty bed hospital which is now in very successful operation. This hospital is in affiliation with the Jackson Clinic, an old and well established organization with a fine reputation. It is also closely related to the Medical School of the University of Wisconsin.

More recently a Convalescent Home has been opened, which provides for seventeen more beds.

During the last fiscal year 1,433 patients were cared for and 1,776 operations were performed with a surgical mortality of only one and one-tenth per cent. The hospital death rate was two and sixteen hundredths per cent. $4,000 worth of free service was given. The hospital is taxed to its utmost capacity continuously and the need is very urgent for the contemplated new hospital building which will give Methodism opportunity to care for the needy of all classes that are constantly applying for help.

The Lakeside Methodist Hospital at Rice Lake was opened in October, 1922. It is a beautiful building, fire-proof and well equipped, which stands in the northern part of the State as a house of refuge to all who need medical or surgical care. During the first year of its service 477 patients were cared for, and $3,000 worth of free work was gladly given.

The total value of the hospital properties is nearly $400,000; much of which is covered by bonds.

A third hospital at Richland Center, Wisconsin, is to be built and operated by this association, nearly $40,000 having already been raised by subscription. The Nurses' Home is at this date being completed which will be used for a hospital until such time as the hospital building shall have been completed, thus ministering to a county whose population of 20,000 has no other hospital facilities.

The Morrow Memorial Home for the Aged, opened in Sparta, in May, 1917, has continued its beautiful ministrations to a most worthy group of people during the quadrennium. Although another building has been added to the two already in use, which increases the capacity of the home to twenty-four, the lengthening waiting list is continually appealing for the carrying out as early as may be of the proposed building program.

The White Cross Roll Call has now been used for three years quite successfully in the raising of funds, especially for the free bed work of our hospitals.

The churches are quite generally observing Mother's Day in the interest of the Home for the Aged.

The booth festival idea is taking firm root in the benevolent soil of the West Wisconsin Conference, whereby the Epworth Leagues are being actively tied up to the service program of the church through the hospitals and homes. It is rapidly coming to be a most popular phase of the work among the young people.

METHODIST STATE HOSPITAL, MITCHELL, SOUTH DAKOTA

The Methodist State Hospital of Mitchell, South Dakota, has a bed capacity of one hundred, standardized according to the American College of Surgeons. It has very complete up to date equipment.

An addition to the nurses' home was completed recently giving room for thirty-five girls. A Freeport gas plant installed and plans for other improvements are being made.

The Nurses' School, a three year course in connection with the hospital, is of the highest type affiliated with the Dakota Wesleyan University. A five year course is offered leading to a college degree and Graduate Nurses' Diplomas.

A higher standard of Christian young womanhood will not be found anywhere than exists in the school.

Within the State of Minnesota we have two educational institutions, our great university at Hamline and the secondary school, Parker College, at Winnebago.

Within the bounds of the South Dakota Conference, which covers the entire State, we fortunately have but one college, the Dakota Wesleyan University, concerning which I have the pleasure to report.

DAKOTA WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY

Its Past: In the thirty-nine years of its history 9,000 young people have been enrolled in the classes of Dakota Wesleyan University. An especially choice group have gone out into full time Christian service, including more than forty into foreign missionary fields, and scores into the ministry. Other hundreds, equally inspired by Christian ideals, are engaged in various business and professional activities, a strength to the church and community where they live. Dakota Wesleyan began as a sub-collegiate institution chiefly. Seventy-five per cent of its students now are of collegiate rank.

Its Present: Dakota Wesleyan University graduated the largest class in its history last spring, fifty-one receiving Bachelors' degrees. New students entering in the summer quarter and last fall include several already committed to full time Christian service. A larger freshman class than last year is enrolled. While highest academic standards are maintained, with a faculty stronger than ever before, the chief purpose of the university as a training ground for Christian leaders and workers is the continual concern of the administration.

Its Future: With a resident church membership of less than 25,000, the Dakota Conference has built up and is maintaining an absolutely first class institution with Liberal Arts, Music, and High School Departments, the contribution of South Dakota Methodism to the training of leadership for Christian civilization. Plans for the future, already approved by the Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, call for an additional million five hundred thousand dollars for additional endowment and buildings by 1932. While the major portion of this must be found in South Dakota, it will be readily recognized that some help must come to the Methodism of this pioneer State from friends in older and longer established communities farther east, who once knew the joy and the difficulty of building the Kingdom while still on the frontiers.

HAMLIN UNIVERSITY

Hamline University is having a very successful year with a large attendance and an enlarged faculty. The high standards of the institution are maintained, with increased equipment, laboratory facilities and also an improvement in plant. For over ten years Hamline has never failed to add each year to its faculty, equipment and endowment. The student body has also more than doubled during the decade, although the entrance requirements are the most rigid in the State.

The organized work of the college for Christian service is well in hand with over one hundred in life service, with thirty-five young preachers—about half of whom are serving charges—and with an enthusiastic Student Volunteer band. The Y. M. and Y. W. organizations are doing effective work, while the general Christian social service group and the college Epworth League are active. Several gospel teams are organized and frequently spend week-ends in helpful service at some of the neighboring churches.

Plans are being drawn for a completed group of buildings and further landscaping of the campus. These plans, it is hoped, may be sufficiently consummated within the next ten years to make possible the care of at least a thousand students. The strategic location of the college makes possible the visit of many distinguished speakers who are brought to the Twin Cities. It also affords the greatest advantages for general cultural and laboratory work in economics, social, church, or other lines of special study. The advantages of the cloistered student studying remote from the maddening throng are giving place to a realization that the most favorable place to fit oneself for the service of humanity is in or near to congested centers where all Christian agencies for serving the Master are in operation.

PARKER COLLEGE

Parker College, located at Winnebago, Minnesota, is the only academy of our church in the Saint Paul Area. Ever since the school came into the Methodist Church, it has been giving the equivalent of a year of college work. However, within the past year, it seemed wise to the trustees to add an additional year's work, making Parker College a full-fledged Junior College with an excellent rating at the University of Minnesota.

The total enrollment in all departments this year was 140, with about twenty per cent of this number fitting themselves for full-time Christian work. Many of the best young men who have united with the Minnesota Conference within the past few years are students of Parker College. The school is training a group of belated young people, most of whom are fitting themselves for some form of Christian work.

At the universities of Wisconsin, Minnesota, and South Dakota, we are doing Wesley Foundation work, which is reaching in fine fashion Methodist students in attendance upon those universities.

WESLEY FOUNDATION OF WISCONSIN

At the University of Wisconsin is our Wesley Foundation, the first to erect a social building for State university students. In this building three departments (a) Social Life, (b) University Church, (c) Courses in Religion, are carried forward. This is a Methodist College within a State University.

Here is an outstanding achievement. By means of the Wesley Foundation, our church accepts the investment of the State in all branches except religion; and itself, in keeping with the spirit and the letter of the constitution, supplies the altar, the sacraments, pastoral leadership, religious education, life service appeal, and church training, to those from its own firesides.

To Methodism this foundation gives account of its stewardship as follows: In the past fifteen years, 318 converts, 5,800 received pastoral leadership, 1,025 have had at least one year of special Bible instruction, 82 graduates have gone out as Methodist missionaries, teachers, preachers, etc., a university church has come to self support, $20,000 has been brought to Conference in benevolences, a property of $188,000 net value over and above liabilities is reported, a group of 60 university faculty members has been built up so that these scholars now function for the Methodist Church among its 1,700 students there enrolled.

WESLEY FOUNDATION OF MINNESOTA

Through the aid of the Centenary, three floors of the first unit of a $400,000 plant have been erected, at a cost of about $130,000. $9,000 from the sale of the old First Church property plus $3,500 from subscriptions have been invested in equipment of Wesley Hall. This provides an organ rebuilt throughout (valued at $12,000), kitchen and dining room equipment for 400 people, 600 auditorium chairs, 400 flat folder chairs, 4 pianos, 34 screens, 6 kindergarten tables, kitchenette equipment, an office suite provided with most of the necessary furniture. The ladies' parlor has been fully equipped by Mr. and Mrs. Draper Dayton in honor of Mrs. C. S. Winchell, a large young people's club room decorated and about to be equipped by ladies of Hennepin Avenue Methodist Church.

The following lines of work are undertaken: Membership (Church and League), Fellowship, Epworth League Department Committee, Religious Education, Students of other lands, Extension (Gospel Team, etc.), Alumni, Music, Pageantry, Social, Publicity. The Kappa Phi Club, the National organization of Methodist women at State Institutions, is a vital part of the work of the Foundation. It aims at interest and training of young women in the service of the Church. A society known as the Young Men's Club is made up of most of the leading men workers of the Foundation and has for its object the training of leadership. As far as recreational program is concerned, there is social life provided for by age groups or societies. Athletics are promoted among junior and teen ages as far as possible with no gymnasium facilities. Open House is held every Friday night at Wesley Hall for students and other young people. In cooperation with three sister churches a Vacation Bible School is offered each July.

The church membership is now 400, of which 70 are students. Sunday school enrollment 380. There has been a specially large growth the past year in the Junior Department. Epworth League membership: Senior, 135; Teen Age, 20; Junior, 34. Women's societies never were stronger. Centenary this last year was $3,059. The greatest change in the church is the new spirit of cooperation and optimism following years of utter discouragement. The budget raised by the church is about $4,700, which includes one third of the running expense of Wesley Hall, and the Minneapolis Methodist Union helps on preacher's salary to the extent of $500.00. The Centenary in the Wesley Foundation program pays $2,600.00; $1,050.00 on pastor's or director's salary, $1,200.00 for secretary, $350.00 office and printing. Even with the part of the building and scant equipment in use only since January, 1923, the interest of students has been growing most commendably. There is a volunteer working force of students of more than 125. The most difficult part of the situation is the attempt to care adequately for the work of both local church and Wesley Foundation with so small a staff. At the earliest possible moment a strong man as assistant should be placed at the head of the work for students, thus leaving the pastor freer for development of the church field.

VERMILLION WESLEY FOUNDATION

The student work at the University of South Dakota is effectively organized for the putting on of the Wesley Foundation student activity program. It seemed advisable not to ask for a Conference organization, but to carry on the work with a Wesley Foundation Committee appointed by the Local Official Board. The basement of the church has been fitted up as a temporary quarters for the student work. The pastor is keeping open house in these temporary quarters for the 300 Methodist preference students. In all the history of the university but one student went to the foreign field; but during the two years that the foundation program has been on, four young people have volunteered and have been accepted, one of whom has arrived and is already at work in China. Many more of the students are organized into life service teams.

Title has been taken to adjacent property, upon which it is hoped to build the Foundation Student Social Center. The Dakota Conference has underwritten the project to the amount of $20,000. The Conference Home Mission Board has requested that the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension grant $25,000 from the World Service funds. The local church has pledged $20,000. This will make possible the necessary building and with the proper provision for maintenance a great program will be made possible, where before practically nothing was being done to minister to this splendid body of young Methodists.

The pastor at Spearfish and the pastor at Brookings, South Dakota, where State institutions are located, without outside aid, are ministering very efficiently and successfully in connection with the student bodies at both places. Their congregations are largely composed of Methodist students, and fine work is being done.

The Saint Paul Area is well supplied with Methodist Hospitals.

ASBURY HOSPITAL

One of the outstanding ministries of Methodism is our great Asbury Hospital at Minneapolis, Minnesota. With the completion of the Nurses' Home which was dedicated November 16, 1923, Asbury Hospital probably has no equal within our church in size and efficiency of equipment. It now has a capacity of 500 beds and its buildings are appraised at over $1,500,000. The location is singularly happy. It forms a part of a great hospital center around a park with its miniature lake and is within easy access to the car lines and the great highway trails through the Twin Cities.

Since the opening of Asbury in 1892, it has cared for 65,000 patients and has given free service to the amount of over $150,000, not counting the service given by physicians and surgeons whose gifts would more than double that amount. Its training school has a wide reputation for efficiency and its graduates number 340 nurses. It is marked as a Christian institution and a distinct religious atmosphere pervades the entire place. At present the main building with 350 beds is leased to the United States government for use in rehabilitation of soldiers injured in the Great War. The lease has still two years to run. No hospital could have a greater mission to suffering humanity than has Asbury just now in giving care and life to hundreds of suffering soldier boys—a service merciful, patriotic, and Christlike, while the new building is devoted to the care of suffering men, women, and children, of every degree.

WADENA METHODIST HOSPITAL

sota, began its campaign in June, 1922, and the organization was incorporated that same fall. Cash and subscriptions have been received to the extent of $53,000. The building, when completed, will cost $60,000; the equipment will be additional. The land was purchased at a cost of $5,400. The site is exceedingly advantageous, being at the north end of the main street of the city. A modern house located on the property is being remodeled for use as a Nurses' Home. The hospital itself will be equipped with three beds, two operating rooms, modern surgical and X-ray equipment. The building will be absolutely fireproof, and is now under construction.

Ground was broken September 10, 1923, the cornerstone was laid November 15, and it is hoped that we can dedicate some time in June, 1924. A large territory is to be served by this institution.

METHODIST DEACONESS HOSPITAL, RAPID CITY, SOUTH DAKOTA

The Methodist Deaconess Hospital of Rapid City, South Dakota, was established in 1912, and has had a steady growth. It was purchased in the faith that a Protestant hospital would meet a definite need and find a ready support in the great frontier district of western South Dakota.

That faith has been amply justified. Beginning in 1912 with a property valuation of $21,000 and a bed capacity of thirty, the institution has grown until buildings and equipment are valued at $163,950, with a bed capacity of 50, and last year cared for 1,382 patients, which is a gain of 311 over previous records; 820 operations were performed with but 14 surgical deaths, and the earnings of the institution were $41,077.51.

The hospital is well located for its work. The elevation is 3,200 feet. The climate is one predominated by sunshine. Beautiful mountain scenery is visible from the windows. Good spring water from the mountains, pure air and sunshine makes this an ideal place for those seeking health.

DAKOTA DEACONESS HOSPITAL, BROOKINGS, SOUTH DAKOTA

The Dakota Deaconess Hospital at Brookings, South Dakota, is not a large institution—only 14 beds—but we are glad to report a successful year. There has been progress in our work. It would be impossible to express in words the joy we have found in ministering to others during the year. Many have been helped to health and hope.

Financially we have held our own. We have cared for 525 patients this year in our small hospital. There has been over $1,000 worth of free work done. Part of this sum was covered by White Cross contributions.

We received a large donation of good home-canned fruit, jelly, and pickles, from the ladies of the Methodist Aid Society, also a donation from the Baptist Aid Society.

THE TOURTELLOTTE MEMORIAL DEACONESS HOME

Located at Minneapolis is one of the finest Deaconess homes in the Church. It was founded in 1888, and has a property valued at $150,000 with an endowment of $50,000, the gift of Mrs. Tourtellotte, after whom it is named. Mrs. Josephine S. Fish is the Superintendent. The Deaconess nurses in the Asbury Memorial Hospital near by make their home in this institution, as do a number of deaconesses who are doing work in various churches in the city.

We are pleased to report a very material advancement in the way of new churches, parsonages, and other church property improvements. We have dedicated, during the quadrennium, 86 churches, 78 parsonages, and spent $563,071 for other improvements on church and parsonage property.

The pastors of the area, with hardly an exception, are loyally devoted to the connectional interests of the church, and at the same time are devoting themselves with great assiduity and devotion to the up-building of the Kingdom in the various communities in which they live. A fine spirit of evangelism prevails throughout our area. There is a growing sense on the part of all the pastors of the importance of direct evangelistic effort and they are employing the methods of personal as well as mass evangelism. The fine increase in the membership of our church within the bounds of the area is proof of this fact.

SAN FRANCISCO AREA

A. W. LEONARD, RESIDENT BISHOP

The San Francisco Area consists of the states of California, Arizona and Nevada, and the territory of Hawaii, and Lower California in the Republic of Mexico. The work of our Church within this wide area comprises not only a vast extent of territory, but a variety of church activities of great and far-reaching importance. The problems confronting the Church on this western slope are those common to centers of large population and to rural and mining communities. Added to all this are the problems, some of them quite acute, growing out of the presence of large and significant groups of foreign speaking people, including those from oriental countries and from Russia and the Near East. In the Fresno Valley alone there are more than 10,000 German-speaking Russians.

There are three Annual Conferences and four Missions within the San Francisco Area, and the work of our Church is carried on among the following groups: English, German, Norwegian,¹ Swedish,¹ Danish,¹ Finnish, Italian, Japanese, Chinese, Korean, Filipino, Portuguese, North American Indian and Mexican.

The Conferences and Missions which are carrying forward the work of the Church among these groups are giving conscientious and increasingly successful efforts to meet the varied and complex problems.

From the beginning of the present quadrennium, the Centenary has been the center of interest and of endeavor. With a loyalty characteristic of our ministers and laymen, we have bent every energy toward meeting our obligations and are thankful for the measure of success that has been achieved. Although we have not met all of our Centenary quota in full, we have maintained our position of second place in per capita giving among all the areas of the Church.

¹While geographically within the San Francisco Area, the work of our church among the Norwegian, Swedish and Danish churches comes under the administration of the Portland Area.

The following table speaks for itself:

	Apportioned payable in 5 years	Subscribed payable in 5 years	Paid to October 31, 1923

*Hawaii Mission

Two area councils were held during the quadrennium. The first one was held in the new church at Fresno, in February, 1922, and the second in the University Church, Los Angeles, in the same month of 1923. These councils were composed of representatives from all the districts of the Annual Conferences and from the missions throughout the area. The morning and evening sessions were open to the public and the afternoons were given over to discussion groups. On the second evening, the Findings Committee presented its report to the council and after adoption, became the area program for the year. Next to the Annual Conferences, these area councils were the most important assemblies held in the area during the quadrennium.

The Conferences have experienced a steady growth along all lines. This has been due to the efficiency of the district superintendents and also to the loyalty of our pastors and people. The district superintendents have not spared themselves in directing the many and varied interests of the Church.

There is an erroneous impression abroad, to the effect that the work of the San Francisco Area is easy compared with similar work in other sections of the country. This is a great mistake. If our pastors succeed in leading the people in church building enterprises, and in securing large audiences, it is not due to the influx of Methodists from other sections of the United States, nor is it due to climate, but to the unceasing toil of these men of God.

Under the leadership of the district superintendents and pastors, the area has endeavored to meet every reasonable claim of the Church and has had a phenomenal record in the erection of new churches, parsonages, educational and social buildings. The salaries of the pastors have been increased beyond anything in previous quadrenniums and an encouraging increase in membership is recorded, as shown by the following table:

* At the time this report had to go to press, the exact returns from the Hawaii Mission had not been received.

PACIFIC CHINESE MISSION

During the past quadrennium, the Chinese work on the Pacific coast suffered a severe loss in the death of Dr. George L. Pearson, who had been the efficient and successful superintendent of the Chinese work for approximately eight years. I was very fortunate in persuading Dr. John Hedley, who for a number of years had been a professor in the Maclay School of Religion of the University of Southern California, a member of the Southern California Conference, to succeed Dr. Pearson as the superintendent of the Pacific Chinese Mission. Having spent seventeen years as a missionary in China, and being familiar with both the Mandarin and Cantonese languages, he comes into the work with a knowledge of the Chinese character and an appreciation of the Chinese people, which at once gives him a position of leadership among the Oriental workers on the Pacific coast. Many people think of the Chinese on the Pacific coast as offering a field of service that is becoming less and less important with every year. This is an erroneous idea, for there are coming through the immigration station at Angel Island between eight and nine thousand Chinese every year, of whom approximately five thousand are new applicants for admission into this country. Most of the Chinese admitted to this country settle on the Pacific coast and find their way into rural sections and in the cities where the Chinese colonies are to be found.

The loyal Chinese Methodists in California have, for years, been desirous of establishing some kind of official relation between the Methodist Episcopal Church and the mission work in the Canton Provinces of China, the reason being that most of the Chinese coming to this country, or who are already located here, are from south China. If they unite with our Church and then later return to China, they have no choice except to go to a church of another denomination. For more than fifty years our Methodist Mission on this coast has supported an independent Methodist Mission in Canton, China, and there has never been a year that we have not received into some one of our Chinese churches on the Pacific coast, one or more who have been related in some way to the Methodist Mission in Canton. Recently the Mission renewed its request to the Board of Foreign Missions to consider the advisability of establishing our work in south China.

The Pacific Chinese Mission leads the entire church in its Centenary contributions, having paid 160 per cent of its quota during the past four years.

HAWAII MISSION

The Hawaii Mission is literally at the cross-roads of the Pacific and occupies a place of strategic and of growing importance. A study of the plan and program of the United States government for the Islands reveals very clearly the fact that our Government is awake to the pivotal importance of these Islands relative to world affairs and of possible future developments, commercially and otherwise, with the orient.

It, therefore, behooves the Methodist Episcopal Church to build strongly for the future and this has been done especially during the past quadrennium. A new church for our Japanese Methodists of Honolulu, to be known as the Harris Memorial, will be one of the most serviceable plants for church and social work among the large number of Japanese in that city. The same may be said of the new First Church in Honolulu for Filipinos. Having disposed of the old Korean Compound, we are planning to erect a new church and dormitories for our Korean Methodists.

There is great need for the establishment of a book depository in Honolulu, which will supply our English reading people with Christian literature. A request was made for the establishment of such a depository, but the Book Committee did not see its way clear to comply with this request, which request expressed the mature judgment of all our Methodist people in Hawaii, especially those who have lived in the Islands for many years. English is being used more and more by the oriental people of the Islands and if our church does not supply them with good literature, others will. I, therefore, strongly urge the reconsideration of this question.

Early in the year 1922, Dr. Henry B. Schwartz, resigned as field secretary for the Japanese, and accepted the position of inspector of Japanese schools under the Territorial Government.

Rev. D. H. Klinefelter, the field secretary for the Filipinos, has done admirable work along educational and evangelistic lines.

The Buddhists, with their ninety schools in which there are approximately 15,000 American-born Japanese children who are given daily instruction by Buddhist teachers, create serious problems in the Islands from the standpoint of the Christian church and its program. The Mormons are there also, in large numbers, and in the city of Honolulu there are twenty-two sects and denominations carrying on some kind of religious work.

Through the aid of the Centenary, more help has been given for maintenance and church building than ever before, with the result that but two of our preachers receive financial aid from the plantations where their churches are located.

We have but one English church in the Islands and that is located in Honolulu. Under the successful leadership of the present pastor, Rev. M. H. Alexander, D.D., the entire indebtedness of the church has been removed and the activities of the church have been increased and strengthened. The church has interested itself sympathetically in the many problems arising in the Islands as a result of the large number of oriental people that make up the population, and, therefore, has kept in line with a very generous Missionary program.

For ten years, Dr. William H. Fry has been the efficient and capable leader of our Methodist forces in Hawaii. When he went to the Islands ten years ago, we had very little to show for the many years that we have been doing missionary work in the Islands. Our membership was small and our buildings anything but creditable. Under his leadership, we have not only increased in numbers, but we have developed a building program that is the admiration of all who are familiar with the work. His statesmanlike policies, together with his Christian courtesy and tact, have given to our church prestige which it has never before enjoyed.

PACIFIC JAPANESE MISSION

Dr. H. B. Johnson, the outstanding leader in oriental work among church forces of the Pacific coast, has entered upon his twenty-first year as superintendent of the Japanese Mission. He became the superintendent of the Mission immediately after Bishop M. K. Harris was elected to the Episcopacy and assigned to our work in Japan and Korea. No one man has made a more indelible impression for good on the oriental people of the Pacific coast than has Dr. Johnson. His counsel and advice have been sought again and again by American and also by Japanese officials, and at all times he has proven himself to be a Christian statesman and administrator of the highest order.

The country is familiar with the anti-Japanese legislation that has been passed by the legislature. An unchristian spirit has found expression in various ways and has been again and again an impediment to us in the development of our church work. In the city of Los Angeles, where we have been working for fourteen years among the Japanese, in a section allocated to us by the comity agreement of the various Protestant churches, we planned erecting a church and educational buildings for the Japanese that would be the outstanding Centenary achievement among our oriental people in this area. The city council of Los Angeles, however, declined to grant us a building permit and we were therefore required to delay building operations.

The per capita giving for "ministerial support" and for "Disciplinary Benevolences" for the Japanese Mission amounted to $6.00 minus, during the quadrennium 1916-1920. During the present quadrennium the per capita giving has advanced to $12.00 plus. Sixteen of the Japanese churches paid their Centenary quota in full up to June, 1924. This does not include the giving for current expenses, property, and other benevolences, which represent a large total annually. The Japanese on the Pacific coast responded to the first calls that went out to the world from stricken Japan. It is a matter of record, and of which the Christian church may be proud, that the most sacrificial giving was among the Christian Japanese whose relatives and friends in Japan had suffered so terribly from the unprecedented disaster.

LATIN AMERICAN MISSION

The General Conference of 1920 passed the following enabling act:

"Latin-American Mission. The Resident Bishop of the San Francisco Area is authorized to organize the Latin-American Mission, which shall include the Mexicans and other Spanish-speaking people, Portuguese, Italians, and French in Lower California, the States of California and Nevada, and that part of the State of Arizona lying west of the meridian of longitude 112 degrees west."

In accordance with this authorization, I organized the Latin-American Mission in the city of Los Angeles, June 2, 1921.

It is only fair to say that the work of this Mission has been made possible very largely through the efforts of Dr. Vernon

M. McCombs, the first superintendent of the Mission, and who, prior to the organization of the Mission, had been for a number of years the superintendent of the Spanish-American District of the Southern California Conference. Like Dr. Johnson, superintendent of the Pacific Japanese Mission, and Dr. Hedley, superintendent of the Pacific Chinese Mission, Dr. McCombs had been a foreign missionary, having spent a number of years in Peru, where he acquired the language and a knowledge of the Latin people.

The development of this work is one of the outstanding features of the work of the Methodist Episcopal Church in this area during this quadrennium and reflects not only credit upon the church which authorized it, but upon the superintendent under whose guiding hand it has reached its present degree of development. The Board of Home Missions has been very sympathetic and generous in its attitude toward the foreign-speaking work in this area and I cannot speak too highly of the great help that it has been in the development of all our foreign-language work on the Pacific coast.

BOARD OF SUNDAY SCHOOLS

The work of the Board of Sunday Schools has shown decided growth during the past four years. In Southern California under the leadership of the Rev. Jesse L. Corley, D.D., Secretary of the Board of Sunday Schools for the Southern California Conference, many new Sunday Schools have been organized, practically all of the Sunday School work within the Conference reorganized and a modern program adopted generally throughout Southern California and Arizona.

The same may be said of the California Conference. The Rev. Oliver H. Langdon began his duties as Sunday-school Secretary for the California Conference during the latter part of 1923, and already there are marked evidences of his leadership. Plans are under way in this Conference for the entire reorganization of the Sunday-school work. Within another year or two this work in the California Conference will be as thoroughly organized under Mr. Langdon's leadership as it is in the Southern California Conference under the leadership of Dr. Corley.

EPWORTH LEAGUE

During the early part of 1923, the Epworth League of the California Conference sustained a severe loss in the death of its able secretary, Mr. James K. Stinchcomb. Mr. James McGiffin has been elected to succeed Mr. Stinchcomb and has already entered upon his new field of labor.

Dr. A. Ray Moore, a member of the Southern California Conference, was elected Secretary of the Epworth League for that Conference, and he also entered upon his duties the latter part of 1923. Under the leadership of these two strong Epworth League leaders, the work of the League in the San Francisco Area has been completely standardized in accordance with the plans of the Central office, and all of the departments of the League work are showing marked growth and development.

There is no more aggressive or vital force in the area than the Epworth League. The seven institutes that are held every year, though not as largely attended in 1923 as in 1922, were even more fruitful of definite results. Larger numbers volunteered for the ministry, mission field, and various lines of Christian service than ever before. With such an army of Epworth Leaguers devoted and loyal as they are, the Methodist Church of the future is secure.

UNIVERSITY OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

President R. B. von KleinSmid was elected to the presidency of the University of Southern California in the fall of 1921, succeeding Dr. George F. Bovard, who had rendered such distinguished service as the president of that institution. President von KleinSmid took up his active work at the University on April 28, 1922, on which day elaborate inaugural exercises were held. The new president, who had been connected with two of our Methodist Educational Institutions—Northwestern and DePauw Universities—accepted the position as president of the University of Southern California because of his belief in Christian education. For six years he had been the successful president of the University of Arizona, during which time larger appropriations were granted for the development and extension of that university than had ever been granted before or since that time. President von KleinSmid came to his task with ripe scholarship and in full sympathy with the Christian ideals in modern education. The enrollment of the University for the year 1923 was 8,549. The enrollment for 1924 will be in excess of 9,000. Extension classes are still opening up and proving most popular. I doubt very much if any other institution of learning has accomplished so much on so little capital. The capital being inadequate, definite plans are under way for the securing of ten million dollars for equipment and endowment, the effort being to secure not less than one million dollars a year for ten years. Already the response has been encouraging and nearly a half million dollars outside the regular income has been added to the University capital funds during the past six months. Some of the most prominent educators in the United States have visited the University of Southern California during the past two and one-half years and have expressed as their conviction that this university is destined to become one of the greatest universities in the United States.

Upon the retirement of Dr. Ezra A. Healy, who for seventeen years was the dean of the Maclay School of Religion, Dr. John F. Fisher, formerly of Cleveland, Ohio, was secured to succeed him. The Maclay School of Religion which originally had an endowment of $42,000, has during the past year, as a result of gifts and the sales of unproductive real estate, increased its endowment funds to the amount of over $150,000. I am very happy to report that the Conferences and Missions of the entire area have approved the Maclay School of Theology as the theological school for the entire area.

The University in all of its departments enjoys scholastic standing fitting to its size and influence. The universities of the country are classified as to their scholastic standing by the Association of American Universities. The University of Southern California along with the leading institutions of the country, is on the approved list of this association as being an institution whose scholastic standings are worthy of that recognition. All the professional and technical departments are members of the standardizing bodies in their particular fields. The enrollment of the university in its different departments for the year 1923 was as follows:

College of Liberal Arts	1,853
Summer Session	1,394
High School	213
School of Law	458
College of Dentistry	575
Religious Education	310
College of Pharmacy	266
College of Music	367
School of Speech	236
College of Commerce	549
Extension Division	2,237

COLLEGE OF THE PACIFIC

The College of the Pacific has been in the transition period during the past year due to the relocation of the college at Stockton, California. The old buildings and property in San Jose have been sold and the new buildings are now in the process of erection. It is confidently expected that the buildings will be ready for occupancy next fall and that the entire student body will begin its work at Stockton in September. The student body this year has been one of the largest in recent years.

For the success of this gigantic undertaking, too much praise cannot be given to Mr. Rolla V. Watt, the president of the Board of Trustees, and to the efficient President of the College, Dr. T. C. Knoles.

STATE UNIVERSITIES

By the organization of the Area Wesley Foundation, plans are under way now for taking care of Methodist students in the State Universities located within the area in a very much better manner than has been ever done in the past.

A fine site has been secured for the erection of the Wesley Foundation buildings in Berkeley, California, close to the campus of the University. Dr. E. P. Dennett, pastor of Trinity Church, Berkeley, and the student pastor, Dr. B. J. Morris, have been most active and helpful in the promotion of this new plan.

NATIONAL MISSIONARY TRAINING SCHOOL

This is a school of the Woman's Home Missionary Society, and has had another quadrennium of successful work. Dr. A. C. Stevens, who for five years was president of this school, and under whose masterful leadership additional properties were acquired and the buildings renovated, resigned his position prior to the session of the California Conference, September, 1923, because he desired to return to the pastorate. Miss L. Lyster succeeded Dr. Stevens in the presidency of the school and is now in charge of that very important work. The properties are valued at $90,000 with no indebtedness.

ANGLO-JAPANESE SCHOOL

Under the presidency of the Rev. Milton S. Vail, D.D., the Anglo-Japanese School of San Francisco continues to have marked success. The school is located at 1359 Pine Street and occupies the first floor of the Japanese Methodist Episcopal Church building. The dormitory which adjoins the church building is a very necessary adjunct to this important work. But for this, we would not be able to have a large student body in regular attendance. Both young men and young women are admitted to this school and most of those who attend support themselves by doing housework, nearly all of them being graduates of the Japanese Grammar School, High School or University in Japan. The great desire on the part of the students is that they may learn the English language in order that they may secure a higher education in some of our American Universities. The average annual attendance for the quadrennium was two hundred. It is worthy of note that not infrequently are the ranks of our Japanese ministry recruited from the students who attend this school.

SPANISH AMERICAN INSTITUTE

This school for Mexican boys, on a twenty-acre piece of land located at Gardena in one of the most desirable parts of Southern California, has in it more promise than any other investment of like amount among all the various activities of the Southern California Conference. The present buildings and property are valued at $170,000 and there is no indebtedness. The closing year of the quadrennium has enrolled the largest number of students in the history of the school. The endowment fund ($6,000) though small, is increasing year by year. Too much credit cannot be given to Mr. Frank S. Wallace, who since the organization of the school has been the president of the Board of Trustees. Through his wise counsel and generous gifts, this work is permanently established. Rev. Byron H. Wilson, D.D., succeeds Mr. Wallace as president of the Board. The superintendent, Mr. Charles A. Robinson, has surrounded himself with an able corps of teachers and helpers and there is every prospect that the immediate future will show a decided growth in all the departments of the work.

HOSPITALS, HOMES AND ORPHANAGES

The Methodist Hospital of Southern California is owned and controlled by the Woman's Home Missionary Society. In 1912, the charter for this hospital was received from the State of California and the main or central building was erected in 1915. The present value of the property is approximately $700,000, the indebtedness being a little more than $75,000. During the calendar year 1923, 4,081 patients were treated in this hospital, 533 of whom received free or discounted service, amounting to $12,693.68. The nurses' training school is now fully accredited with the state and there are in training 70 young women. The work of the hospital requires five supervising nurses, a superintendent of nurses, an instructress and five graduate nurses on general duty. The present urgent need is for more room and a nurses' home. The total number of hospital beds in the city of Los Angeles is 2,800. Experts in this line of work declare 7,800 beds are absolutely essential if adequate service is to be rendered to the present population. A building program has been decided upon and improvements are already under way. I cannot speak too highly of the work of this hospital under the direction of the Woman's Home Missionary Society.

Four years ago, I reported that the Methodist Hospital at Phoenix, Arizona, was in process of erection. That great undertaking has been completed and early in 1923 the hospital was dedicated and since that time has been rendering remarkable service to the people of Phoenix. Although there is considerable indebtedness on this building, the present plan calls for early retirement of the debt, together with expansion of the work.

The Susannah Wesley Home at Honolulu, continues to do very remarkable work. Its mission is to the oriental girls of the Hawaiian Islands and although a new building has been acquired during the past quadrennium with increased facilities for caring for the children who are fortunate enough to secure a place in the home, the equipment is not yet as perfect as it should be. Mrs. W. C. Evans, who for so many years was the inspiring and efficient secretary of Japanese and Korean work, passed away the latter part of 1923. Her death not only brought sorrow to a very large circle of friends but registered a distinct loss to the work of the Methodist Episcopal Church among the oriental children of the Pacific coast. Her place cannot easily be filled for she was possessed of a rare personality that made its appeal both to Christian workers and to people interested in missionary work among the oriental people in Hawaii. The success of the Susannah Wesley Home is due more largely to her and her sacrificial service than to any other person connected with that work.

Miss Stixrude, the present superintendent of the Home, is rendering very efficient service.

The Mary J. Platt Home and School at Tucson, Arizona, has had a most successful quadrennium. The mission of this school is to Mexican girls, giving to them not only modern educational advantages but a home with a Christian atmosphere. The enrollment during the past quadrennium was sixty per year.

The Frances M. DePauw Spanish School is located in Los Angeles and is owned by the Woman's Home Missionary Society. The real estate is valued at $86,000, the building at $65,500 and the furniture at $11,135, representing a total investment of $162,635. There is practically no indebtedness on the property, the deed to which is held by the National Woman's Home Missionary Society. The school has been filled to capacity during the past quadrennium—one hundred and twenty-five pupils being in attendance. The courses of study include grammar and high school work, domestic science, dress-making, millinery and house nursing under the Red Cross. There is also a department for training of Christian workers. This school, like the Spanish-American Institute for Mexican boys, is rendering a very significant service to the Spanish-speaking people of the southwest.

The Oriental Home for Chinese women and children, located at 940 Washington street, San Francisco, will enter very soon upon a new program as worked out and authorized by the executive officers of the Woman's Home Missionary Society. It is too early to estimate the value of the new plan, which is one of cooperation with other denominations engaged in the same kind of work. We are sincerely hopeful that the plans agreed upon will show that the officers of the Woman's Home Missionary Society have not sacrificed too greatly the interests of our church in their participation in the union plan of work among the Chinese women and girls of the Pacific coast.

The California German Conference has established, during the past decade, an Old People's Home in Hollywood that is a credit to the denomination. The present building is modern and commodious, and the old people who are in the Home are taken care of in the best possible manner. There is a beautiful Christian atmosphere and every consideration is given to the welfare of the old people. The finances of the Institution are well managed and there is practically no indebtedness on the buildings. Dr. John H. Durbahn has been the efficient district superintendent of the California German Conference for nearly ten years and has interested himself in this undertaking as in all matters relating to the church work.

The Beulah Rest Home in east Oakland is worthy of special mention. Although this benevolent enterprise is comparatively new, it is making friends every year. About fifteen aged people are now cared for in this home. This work is under the direction of a local Board of Trustees.

Methodism needs half a million dollars for the purpose of erecting an Old People's Home in northern California.

Our church is very fortunate in its ownership of two orphanages in northern California, each of which is doing a remarkable work.

The William McKinley Orphanage located in San Francisco owns a three-story building with basement, playhouse and a building used as a workshop. These buildings are located on a lot 100 x 228 feet. The total estimated value is $16,500. In 1923-1924, the average enrollment was fifty. There is no indebtedness on the property and during the past quadrennium the endowment fund has increased to a little more than $23,000. The buildings are in good physical condition and the work is carried forward under the direction of a board of managers, augmented by the McKinley Club which is composed of women from the different Methodist churches in the city of San Francisco. The present plan calls for the acquiring of additional adjacent property, and the erection of several cottages so as to provide for the children in groups rather than en masse. The running expenses of this orphanage are less than $1,000 a month and it is the united opinion of all who are familiar with the work, that no children are better cared for in homes of like character. The president of the Board of Trustees is the Honorable John H. McCallum of San Francisco, whose devotion to this work is widely known.

The Fred Finch Orphanage, which is located in Oakland, is now thirty-two years old. During this time thousands of boys and girls have been clothed and instructed, and prepared for a life of usefulness. The records reveal the remarkable fact that in all the thirty-two years of its existence, but two children have died in the orphanage. The value of the property is approximately $100,000 with an endowment of a like amount, and the entire enterprise carries no debt. The annual average number of children in the home during the past quadrennium was 105. The support of this work comes from the state and county grants, interest on endowment, apportionments from Methodist churches, private contributions and a small grant from the Oakland Community chest. The present current expenses are $2,500 per month. The entire work is under the direction of a board of trustees of whom Mr. Harry Morton is the efficient president.

GOODWILL INDUSTRIES

The Goodwill Industries of the area are showing marked development. The reorganized Goodwill Industries of southern California are now rivaling, in volume of work accomplished, the mother of all Goodwill Industries in Boston, and its influence is being very widely felt. Until two years ago, these industries were organized on a somewhat independent basis, but within the recent past became related officially to the Methodist Episcopal Church under the provisions of the department of Goodwill Industries of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension. The investment of southern California represents approximately half a million dollars and is rendering a most important service to the worthy but needy people in that part of the state.

In northern California, the Goodwill Industries of San Francisco are entering upon a period of development and expansion as the result of unusual prosperity. In spite of the fact that a disastrous fire took place in the old building on Mission Street, the work has been so organized under the newly elected superintendent, the Rev. A. J. Kennedy, as to call forth from people of all denominations expressions of highest approval and appreciation. New buildings are to be erected during the coming year in which The Church of Goodwill becomes central to all the activities of the industries. The organization of a branch of the San Francisco Industries is well under way in Oakland and a church property has been acquired. On December 30th, I dedicated in Oakland the first Goodwill Church on the Pacific coast. The coming year promises to see the greatest growth in Goodwill Industries since their organization eight years ago.

CALIFORNIA CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

This paper has had the largest number of subscriptions in the history of the paper. Large numbers of Methodists coming into California from different sections of the country very naturally desire the official church paper of the area in which they take up their residence. While quite a number continue to be subscribers of the Advocate where they formerly lived, nevertheless, increasingly large numbers become subscribers to the California Christian Advocate immediately upon their moving into the area, or soon after. The loyalty of our pastors in pushing the interests of the Advocate accounts very largely for the increase in the subscription list. Dr. Francis M. Larkin has edited this paper for the past eleven years.

METHODIST BOOK CONCERN

The Methodist Book Concern is located at the junction of McAllister and Leavenworth streets on a lot 100 x 75. The valuation of the property is $172,944. This property is strategically located close to San Francisco's great Civic Center, a section of the city which is becoming increasingly important. There is no indebtedness on the property. During the past quadrennium the records show an increase in business for every year. The depository carries a stock of books amounting to from $40,000 to $50,000. Mr. Howard M. Boys is the successful manager of this great Christian agency.

ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE

In November, 1922, the people of California passed by a very large majority what is known as the Wright Law. This is nothing more than a "little" Volstead Law, requiring the state authorities to enforce the Eighteenth Amendment. One of its characteristics is that if the Volstead Law should be changed by Congress, the Wright Law would automatically change in accordance with the action of Congress. It is regarded as one of the greatest temperance victories ever won in the State of California. The Rev. Arthur H. Briggs, D.D., a member of the California Conference, is the superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, under whose direction the campaign was carried to a successful conclusion.

Eight years ago, when I was assigned to this area, I called together a number of prominent laymen and ministers for the purpose of working out an area program. The plan adopted at that time required not less than eight years in which to carry out its various provisions. In addition to the evangelistic, Centenary and World Service programs, the area program called for the securing of buildings and endowment funds for our educational work, the clearing of all our institutions from debt, the erection of new churches to meet the changing and expanding conditions, the organization of Goodwill Industries, social service and community service programs and the erection of hospitals in sections of the area where no Methodist or Protestant hospitals were to be found. While this program has not been entirely carried out, it has been so nearly accomplished that the liberal and loyal people called Methodists on this part of the Pacific coast have every reason to thank God and take courage.

In the third year of the present quadrennium, I was assigned by the Board of Bishops to preside over the fall Conferences in the Saint Louis Area in exchange with Bishop Quayle, who was assigned to the fall Conferences in the San Francisco Area. It was my privilege to hold the St. Louis German Conference at Muscatine, Iowa, September 6th to 10th; the Missouri Conference at Braymer, Missouri, September 13th to 17th; the St. Louis Conference at Eldorado Springs, Missouri, September 20th to 24th. I was also assigned to hold the Southern Illinois Conference, but on account of the illness of Bishop Quayle, I was requested by him to return to the the San Francisco Area and preside over the Conferences to which he had been assigned. I was, therefore, unable to preside over the Southern Illinois Conference. Returning at once to the San Francisco Area, I presided over the California Conference at Santa Cruz, September 27th to October 2nd; the California German Conference, at Pasadena, California, October 5th to 8th; the Southern California Conference at Fresno, California, October 11th to 16th. At the fall meeting of the Board of Bishops held at Baltimore, Maryland, in 1922, I was assigned to the presidency of the New Jersey Conference at Asbury Park, New Jersey, March 14th to 19th and to the Baltimore Conference at Washington, D. C., April 4th to 9th. Bishop Mead was assigned to the presidency of the Hawaii Mission which convened at Honolulu, February 1st to 5th. Bishop Shepard was assigned to preside over the Latin American Mission which met at Los Angeles, February 6th to 7th, 1923; and the Hawaii Mission at Honolulu, Oahu, Territory of Hawaii, February 28th to March 4th.

During the quadrennium, I have endeavored to cover the entire area in a general supervision of the work, which has necessitated my traveling on an average of 43,000 miles a year. The area is so vast geographically and new communities are being settled in such large numbers, to say nothing of the very great increase in the population of all the cities and towns in the state, that I do not hesitate to report that it is becoming a practical impossibility for one bishop to give the close supervision to the work which the law of the church evidently intends that he shall give. If the present area system is to continue it might be well for the General Conference to give consideration to the division of the area creating a northern and southern California area. I make this suggestion after eight years of constant traveling throughout the area and of witnessing the unusual growth of our church activities in the midst of a rapidly growing population. If it should not be practical to do this at the present General Conference, I am convinced that another four years will require that serious consideration be given this suggestion. Although the Discipline does not state that Lower California of Mexico is a part of the San Francisco area, nevertheless, the General Conference Journal for 1920, page 537 states in relation to the Southern California Conference that "it shall include Lower California in the Republic of Mexico."

With the awakening of the orient and the attention of the nations turning to the Pacific Basin, the next twenty-five years will lift up the problems of the Pacific coast to world-wide importance and significance beyond anything of which we now dream. If the church had the funds to invest in order to make possible the holding of sites for churches in the rapidly growing sections of California, Methodism could be established so permanently as to give her a place of commanding leadership in all the years to come.

I cannot speak too highly of the loyalty and devotion of the Methodist preachers and laymen, who, during the past quadrennium, have made possible the achievements of our church in this far western area.

WASHINGTON AREA

WILLIAM FRASER McDOWELL, RESIDENT BISHOP

This report is purposely kept free from statistics, all of which will appear in other places. I have tried to obey the request of the General Conference of 1920 as expressed in the resolutions printed in the Discipline, Paragraph 574, and calling for continuity of administration. With two or three exceptions, therefore, I have held each of the Conferences in the Washington Area each year. I am of the opinion now, as I have always been, that a little more variety in the presidency over Annual Sessions is desirable and that such variety would be agreeable to the Conferences. Continuity of administration can be secured by residential supervision and activity, in which I thoroughly believe.

Our attention has been given throughout the area to the completion of the Centenary program in its various phases and to the presentation of the World Service plans. I have met the District gatherings regularly and frequently in the effort to promote these and all other interests of the church. It is a pleasure to report a growing District efficiency and consciousness, in view of the fact that the District is the most effective unit in our system for the maintenance of denominational spirit and the promotion of denominational enterprise and interests.

The quadrennium has seen marked advance in the life of our educational institutions in each of the Conferences. Dickinson College and Williamsport Dickinson Seminary have added largely to their endowment and property and both have had as full attendance as they could care for. The Wesley Collegiate Institute at Dover has extended its course so as to become a Junior College, has purchased a new and attractive site, and now plans further enlargement so as to meet the needs of our great Conference on the historic peninsula to which early Methodism is so closely related and where Methodism has from the beginning played so large a part. The Wesley Collegiate Institute is only a few miles from Barratt's Chapel, still standing in good condition and in constant use, where Coke and Asbury met and planned to call the Christmas Conference.

Morgan College has had a most gratifying growth in all respects, and now occupies a commanding site in the suburbs of Baltimore where it is doing a remarkable work in the training of leaders, preachers, teachers and others for the Negro race in the border where the North and South meet. The cooperation of the Board of Education for Negroes and the Annual Conference which support Morgan College has been very effective.

The story of Goucher College is too long to be told in this brief report. The College has large and imposing plans for development into one of the outstanding colleges for women, and its relation to the church which founded it and which two or three times saved it, is being carefully guarded.

Of the American University I will speak in a later paragraph.

The work of Religious Education in the churches, Sunday Schools and Epworth Leagues is thoroughly organized and very effective. The Board of Sunday Schools and Board of Control of the Epworth League are both heartily cooperating with the Conference Boards in this important work for youth. Each Conference has a full time Director of Religious Education and these are organized so as to promote their work in a unified way throughout the area. The Institutes and Summer Schools have been especially helpful.

Benevolent and philanthropic activities are being carried on in the area in a gratifying manner. Homes for the Aged, orphanages and hospitals are receiving full support and wise administration. Central Pennsylvania has a Board of Philanthropies which gives unity to the philanthropic activities of the Conference. Baltimore looks toward a like organization of its various Boards. It ought to be reported that a generous layman, Mr. George W. Albaugh, has given the Baltimore Conference a splendid farm and a large gift of money to found Strawbridge Home for Boys in the neighborhood where Robert Strawbridge did his historic work for Methodism at the beginning. It ought also to be reported that the Central Pennsylvania Conference has purchased a large farm near Harrisburg for its Children's Home, and the Methodist Home for the Aged and the Swartzell Home for Children in Washington have both acquired commanding sites in the suburbs of Washington.

The Washington Christian Advocate has received the care of the area, has been moved to Washington and is bound to become one of the leading Advocates of the church. The Book Committee has established the National Methodist Press Association at Washington for the service of all the Advocates, with headquarters in the Methodist Building. It is this bishop's firm conviction that the General Conference should direct the Book Committee to take over and maintain in strength the Washington Christian Advocate as well as the National Methodist Press at the Capital, which is sure to have increasing significance for our Methodist world.

During the quadrennium the area has purchased a residence in Washington for the use of the bishop which has already abundantly justified itself. The church in the Capital and, in consequence of the large number of visitors coming to the Capital, the church in the nation, has been greatly advantaged by having this attractive home for the bishop resident in the area,

The Area Council is well organized and proceeding according to a carefully thought out program in the development of the interests of the church in the area. The area center is now fully located in the Methodist Building in Washington. Each of the Conferences increasingly develops and recognizes a Conference center where all the Conference activities are represented. Baltimore for the Baltimore Conference, Harrisburg for the Central Pennsylvania Conference, Wilmington for the Wilmington Conference, and Baltimore for the Washington Conference are recognized as such Conference centers.

An exceedingly interesting development is in process of being worked out in Baltimore with reference to one of the historic old churches which is no longer in the center of residences but which is in the center of great populations. Preferring to report what has been achieved rather than what is simply proposed, I only mention this as under way.

I desire to call especial attention to two events in the life of the area. First, to the erection and dedication of The Methodist Building under the auspices of the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals. The net cost of this property is in the neighborhood of a half million dollars. The building faces the capitol grounds and thus occupies a site which cannot be surpassed anywhere. In it the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals has its offices and in it also are all the offices representing the area activities along with some others. The building is one block from the Library of Congress, a half block from the Senate Office Building, and as near the Capitol as any building can be. It is intended to be, as its name implies, a Methodist Building for all the church and for all Methodism, whether the Methodism of our own or of other churches.

Second, a word must be said concerning the development of the American University. Slowly through the years and more rapidly in more recent years, this institution has grown. Very eligible and valuable land has been acquired in the center of the city where work is now being done in accordance with the original plans of the institution. The original site purchased at the beginning will become the site for the large development which must come in the new educational conditions developing in the country.

I do not regard Washington as simply a local center for the area. The city has come to possess a new relation to the country and to the world. It is not at all the same city or in the same relation that it was and sustained a dozen years ago. Other churches see this. The Roman Catholic Church is planted in Washington in perfectly tremendous strength. The Protestant Episcopal Church is erecting a cathedral which will cost ten million dollars, proposing to make it the visible center of Christian worship for the Capital of the nation. Other churches are proposing other activities in order to strengthen themselves here. Our own church has now planted itself visibly, beautifully and impressively in the Methodist Building for all its large work for temperance, prohibition, public morals, law enforcement and good citizenship. The local churches are alive to the necessities and opportunities that confront them, but the church as a whole to which this report is made, should swiftly and nobly follow those men of vision who proposed to establish here in the American University an institution through which Methodism could make its commanding contribution to the life of the nation and the world through higher education. It would seem to us that ten million dollars for such an institution would be the next great contribution of our church in and through this Capital. We must stand here in the matter of reform for the Protestant principle. We must especially stand for the Protestant principle and for the highest Christian ideals in the matter of higher education. In the providence of God, we have the sites and the charter and the plans. We shall be unfaithful to God and our duty if we do not match the largest things being done by anybody with an equally large thing in this vital matter of Christian education.

The Chairman of the Fine Arts Commission of Washington has announced that all the plans of that Commission for Washington's building and development are now being made with the certainty that very shortly Washington will have a million people.

If the union of Methodism occurs, as we pray God it may, Washington will be the natural center for the reunited church. Great interest will center in other great cities and sections of the country, but in the Capital where politically all sections of the country meet, especially in the Capital which is already within the borders of the Methodist Episcopal Church, The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the Methodist Protestant Church, united Methodism will find a normal center. For this large vision of the large future we must plan. Of these immense possibilities for Protestant Christianity, we must constantly think.

WICHITA AREA

BISHOP ERNEST LYNN WALDORF

The Wichita Area considered geographically and industrially, includes Kansas, which leads all other states in the production of alfalfa and produces more hard winter wheat than any other political unit in the world; Oklahoma, which leads in the production of oil and has leaped from a sparsely settled territory to a populous state of two and one-half millions in an incredibly short time; Texas, the largest of the states, leading in the production of cotton and in the number of acres under the plow; and Louisiana, which stands second in the production of lumber, among the states of the Union. The Wichita Area, though having the geographical center of the United States within its borders, nevertheless has seven hundred sixty-four miles of coast line.

The Wichita Area considered denominationally, has seven Conferences, namely the Gulf, Kansas, Northwest Kansas, Oklahoma, Southwest Kansas, the Southern German, and the Southern Swedish Mission. Five of these carry forward their work in the English language, one in the German, and one in Swedish, and service is rendered also in the Spanish, French, and Italian tongues.

In Kansas, eighty-four out of every one thousand of the population are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and speaking in general terms, about one out of every four who attend church, attend the Methodist Church. Aside from Kansas, the Area lies south of the Mason-Dixon line (extended) and has more white members of the Methodist Church than in all the other Areas south of that line combined. Naturally this Area is profoundly interested and even agitated over questions involved in a possible union with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Here and there churches have debated the wisdom of taking forward steps and have counselled the deferring of plans for development until the outcome of the negotiations between the two churches is known, but for the most part there has been no slowing up. Prolonged uncertainty in this matter will increase the problems of these churches and retard their progress.

There has been an increase in ministerial support during the quadrennium of 37.8 per cent. The present valuation of the churches of the Area is, $12,767,105, an increase of $3,341,578, or 35.4 per cent for the quadrennium. The value of the parsonages is $2,567,209, an increase of $641,299, or 33.2 per cent.

Methodism has eight educational institutions within the bounds of the Wichita Area. One of them, the Evangeline Preparatory School, Basile, Louisiana, is the only school for the French under Methodist control in the United States, and was founded during this quadrennium. Port Arthur College is distinctive in that it is purely a business school of high grade and conducted under Church auspices.

The growth and development made during the quadrennium by our colleges and hospitals are best set forth by the following tabulations, and constitute a record of real achievement and progress:

This is an increase of 39.3 per cent in property; 54.7 per cent increase in endowment; and 100 per cent increase in student enrollment.

Baker University is now engaged in a campaign for $2,000,000 for buildings and endowment.

	18,341	6,500	$56,227	$33,537

This is an increase of 98.8 per cent in property; 117.8 per cent increase in beds; and 176.3 per cent increase in nurses.

The Methodist Episcopal Home for the Aged located at Topeka, Kansas, has a property valuation of $54,000, which has been increased $27,000 during the quadrennium. The Home shows a 25 per cent increase in number of guests and a 25 per cent increase in the amount of free service.

Four new Nurses Homes have been built; at Bethany, Kansas City; Kansas; Wesley, Wichita, Kansas; Guthrie, Oklahoma; and at Norton, Kansas.

The Epworth League numbers 43,983 members; an increase of 15,028 or 51.9 per cent; and shares with one other Area the honor of leadership in the per cent of the number of charges having Epworth Leagues.

A trifle less than one million of dollars in pledges and cash have been added to the Conference Claimants' resources of the Area. The following table shows the rates of Annuity paid to the Claimants from the several Conferences for the year 1920 and 1924.

Annuity Rate Paid Conference Claimants

Conference	1920	1924
Gulf	$6.63	$14.50
Kansas	8.25	19.00
Northwest Kansas	3.75	12.00

Southern Swedish Mission.....	8.00	13.00
Southern German	4.40	6.00
Southwest Kansas	13.00	25.00
Average for the Area.....	7.14	15.64

This is a gain of 119 per cent in the rate paid during the last four years.

Inasmuch as this Area is predominately agricultural in character and as such has suffered severely in financial matters, we are grateful that the pastors and churches, under the leadership of the Centenary Office, have labored with such faithfulness that the Area has consistently held a place in the upper half of the Area tabulations among the Areas in the per cent of Centenary money paid.

There are 231,094 Church members, an increase of 33,862, or 17.2 per cent for the quadrennium. In 1922 the Area with a net increase of 12,796, stood at the head of the column in net increase in membership. Each year of the quadrennium, each Conference of the Area, has been able to report (with one exception, one year) a creditable net increase in membership.

The Central Christian Advocate, which enjoys a wide circulation, has been a real helper in all our work.

The Conferences of the Area have secured an Episcopal Residence which is well located, and have made provision for meeting the financial obligation thus assumed.

One of the most significant developments has been that of an Area-wide organization which meets annually and maintains nine standing committees through which it works in outlining plans year by year, and to which, under the direction of the Bishop and an Executive Committee, is charged the responsibility of making the plans effective. As more than five hundred ministers and five hundred laymen have thus year by year planned the work for the year, the Council has made a large contribution to the unity of the Area and to the maintainance of a fine Area spirit. The twenty-nine districts have generally followed the Area Council with a District Conference to which the members of the churches have been rallied in large numbers to plan the district work in harmony with the plans developed at the Council. This year, the after-council rallies numbered one hundred forty-eight and reached between forty and fifty thousand people, and through them, the entire membership, with good results as evidenced by the enthusiastic response to the Climax Benevolence appeal and the Area-wide united Evangelistic campaign.

The twenty-nine District Superintendents and the able Area Staff captained by H. E. Wolfe, and the efficient pastor leaders of the hosts faithfully supported by the rank and file of church members, deserve all praise for their industry, consecration and vision. The achievements of the quadrennium and the high purposes which have inspired them and the Master's "Well done," are their sufficient reward.

2. FOREIGN FIELDS

SEOUL (JAPAN-KOREA) AREA

HERBERT WELCH, RESIDENT BISHOP

The one event in this area to which the thought of the church has been most directed is of course the great disaster of September 1, 1923, when by earthquake and fire about two hundred thousand persons were killed or missing in Tokyo, Yokohama, and their vicinity, another hundred thousand were injured, and nearly six hundred thousand buildings were destroyed. In these huge losses to the community our Mission and churches were called upon to share—our losses being estimated at almost two million dollars in property, besides the death, injury, or impoverishment of many members. The magnificent uprising of our home church in this time of dire need, and the unexampled offering made through the cooperation of all the Boards and the warm-hearted interest of the people, brought new strength and courage to hearts across the sea and can never be forgotten. The work of reconstruction will necessarily be slow and years must elapse before these desolated cities can resume their normal life, but the vigor of the Christian forces is of preeminent importance in such a time of distress and change.

This world-tragedy has not, however, stood alone in this area. A severe earthquake which damaged our property at Nagasaki eight months earlier, floods and droughts in Korea, and somewhat general financial depression, amounting in one case to panic, have added to the difficulty of maintaining and advancing our work. Nevertheless, the statistics reveal creditable gains during the past quadrennium. Some items may be tabulated:

	Korea Conference		Japan Methodist Church
Members and probationers	18,734	20,149	20,745	27,867
Sunday School enrollment	23,546	32,730	38,108	45,092
Total contributions....	$51,307	$99,711	$49,372	$176,216

These figures show a continuance of the advance of the previous quadrennium, emphasized by the Forward Movement in Japan, where the gains are in some lines remarkable. There has been also in that country an increase in baptisms, in the number of churches, and in the number of those which are self-supporting. In Korea there has been more general support of the various church benevolences, great growth in Epworth League membership, both senior and junior, a large increase in baptisms, seekers, and total adherents; in addition, there are now in our schools more than 15,000 pupils compared with about 5,000 four years ago.

As to my personal work, I have held the Korea Annual Conference, with its accompanying Woman's Conference, four times, with welcome visits from Bishops Bickley and Keeney, Dr. S. D. Chown, General Superintendent of the Methodist Church of Canada, Dr. H. R. Calkins, and others. I have met the Japan Mission Council six times and the two Woman's Conferences of Japan, meeting separately, three times each. Besides these, there have been the Finance and Reference Committees and Mission meetings (sometimes resembling Conferences) and other committees and boards without number. These include the Federal Council of Missions in Korea and the Conference of Federated Missions and the National Christian Conference in Japan, as well as the Japan Continuation Committee, now merged into the new National Christian Council. Worthy of special mention also are the Korea Mission (including the missionaries of both our Boards, which has met three times), the joint Policy Council of elected missionary and Korean workers, which has met twice, and a joint session on Methodist policies in Korea with delegates from the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The Post-Centenary survey meetings, while unavoidable, were laborious and exhausting in the summer heats of 1922. Three trips to Manchuria can hardly be considered as leaving my area since the extension of our Korean work into those provinces; but five times I have left the territory especially assigned to my care. Twice I have gone to the United States, once at the request of the field, with a special view to securing recruits for our depleted forces, and once when ordered home by physicians for medical examination and care and for recuperation. Once I went to Singapore for the meeting of the bishops resident in Asia, and twice have been to China in connection with the duties of the Eastern Asia Central Conference. I have not attended any of the semi-annual meetings of the bishops in the United States, save those immediately following and preceding the General Conference sessions, with the single exception of that held in November, 1921. I was present at the General Conference of the Japan Methodist Church in January, 1924.

The travel involved has amounted to something over 130,000 miles during the quadrennium. The area is large, comprising the work of our church in the whole Japanese Empire plus scattered sections of Manchuria. From the northernmost station in Japan in which our missionaries are living to the most southern station is about 1,700 miles; to swing around the circle from that northern station to our missionary residence station farthest north in Korea involves a journey of more than two thousand miles and four days' continuous travel; to touch the extremes of our work in north Japan and north Manchuria would call for more than 3,000 miles and an uncertain amount of time. But there have been no serious accidents and my health, with the exception noted above, has been generally good. I have visited all seventeen missionary residence stations in this area at least twice during the quadrennium and some, of course, very frequently, according to the demands of the work.

Scarcely second to the Great Earthquake itself in its importance to Japan was the Washington Conference of 1921-2. It served not only to make some of the favorable aspects of the Japanese people better known to the world at large, but also to stimulate the forces of liberalism within the Empire itself. The influence of the Prince Regent's visit to Europe, combined with the general movement of the world toward freedom and democracy and international cooperation, has produced a radically changed attitude on many public questions in the Sunrise Kingdom. Improved relations with China and the United States, the humane and progressive tendencies displayed in the government of Korea, are different tokens of the same spirit in action in the political realm.

This has been a season of unusual progress in the religious field as well. The Tai Sei Undo (Great Forward Movement) of the Methodist Church in Japan has produced a church consciousness and energy which have accomplished wonders in more than finances. Increasing emphasis is laid on evangelism; more ready access to strategic groups in railways, schools, factories, hospitals, has been possible. In Korea special Sunday-school campaigns, reinforced by experts from the United States, are reflected in the statistics of growth. The Diamond Jubilee of Methodism in Eastern Asia has led to "retreats" for missionaries and Korean workers which have their natural consequence in evangelistic victories. Attention should be called to educational progress in Chosen. In 1910, at the time of the annexation by Japan, the mission schools accommodated about twice as many students as all the Government schools together, but since that day rather rapid progress has been made in public provision for education. In the Philippine Islands, twenty-four years after the American occupation, 36 per cent of the school population was actually under instruction, probably an unprecedented record in colonial administration. Egypt, after twenty-four years of English rule, had only 5 per cent of her school population cared for. Korea at the time of the annexation had less than 1 per cent of her school population in school, although the Japanese protectorate had then lasted five years; but ten years later 5 per cent were in school, and now, after 18 years of Japanese administration, 12 per cent of the school population is housed and being taught more or less after the Western fashion. This is obviously a praiseworthy record, especially for these later years, under the new regime. The primary school course has been lengthened from four years to six, the whole curriculum assimilated to that prevailing in Japan Proper, and an ideal of a common school for every village has been adopted. The registration of schools with full Government recognition and its accompanying privileges has been made more difficult by the recent regulations, but on the other hand the ban on non-registered schools has been lifted and they may continue indefinitely by compliance with certain less rigid requirements.

Some encouraging facts and factors may be noted in the work of the area. In 1920 there were here 123 missionaries under appointment by our church; three years later this number had grown to 162, an increase of nearly 27 per cent. The force is still far below the needs, especially since in Korea we labor side by side with strongly staffed Presbyterian Mission, and in Japan we are associated with the two Methodist Missions (Southern and Canadian) which grew by 85 per cent within fifteen years after the Union of 1907 while we were almost standing still. . . . The cooperation in this field of the Board of Sunday Schools and the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals is welcomed and appreciated, as well as the assistance of the Board of Education through its department of Summer Conferences for Ministers. New buildings have been erected in almost every higher school and station, notably those for the boys' schools at Seoul, Pyengyang, Kongju, and Hiro-saki (where the old samurai school, the To-o-gijuka, was revived two years ago), in the girls' schools at Seoul and Tokyo, in our share of the Chosen Christian College at Seoul and the Union Woman's Christian College at Tokyo. A most timely and generous gift from a passing traveler has made possible the purchase of land for a Woman's College in Seoul, which may well develop from our college department in Ewha Haktang. The great property for the Social-Evangelistic Center for Women in Seoul was purchased by the Southern Methodist Mission, but we are now participating in the capital as well as in the current expenses and work. . . . Government funds have in several cases been donated to approved schools without any conditions which would render their acceptance embarrassing—and this in Korea as well as in Japan.

The kindergarten normal department of our girls' school at Nagasaki has been united with the Southern Methodist school at Osaka, and the Bible training department of the same school has been merged into the Yokohama Woman's Training School for Christian Workers, which, reorganized, has become a union institution, the Canadian Methodists taking some part in it at present and other missions considering cooperation with the school on its new site in Tokyo, to which it has been removed since the earthquake. Three missions are now cooperating with us in the Theological Seminary at Aoyama, although this remains an integral portion of our own great school. Nagoya and its surrounding territory were transferred three years ago to the care of the Canadian Methodist Mission and our girls' school in that city was sold, the proceeds being devoted to other places where reinforcement was much needed. On the other side, the Southern Methodist Mission, under the leadership of secretaries from the United States and the resident bishop, Dr. H. A. Boaz, one of the most genial and brotherly of men, has transferred its Korean work in north Manchuria to us, practically doubling our responsibility in that interesting field of the future. The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, however, has not yet seen its way clear to joining the Board of Foreign Missions here. The work has been largely financed by the Koreans themselves. We have now seven Quarterly Conferences with about forty preaching-places, and although we own scarcely any property some small school enterprises are under way and there are more than 1,000 believers enrolled. When unification is no longer a problem but an accomplished fact, the Japanese and Korean work which we are fostering in north Manchuria will fit admirably with the work for Russians and Chinese which the Southern Church is energetically pushing there. Our relations with that church continue to grow more close and helpful. Apart from the union institutions with which others are also connected, we are joined with them in Seoul in the Theological Seminary, the Woman's Bible Training School, the Social-Evangelistic Center, and all signs point to an early union for women's college work.

I think that the past four years may safely be called a period of coordination. The missionaries of the Board and the Society are more clearly recognizing their relation as parts of the one great enterprise; native and foreign workers are meeting in council and sharing responsibilities which used to be assumed by missionaries alone; places are found on the most important and powerful committees for the representatives of the indigenous church; interdenominational bonds grow stronger, conspicuously in the full-fledged National Council just organized in Japan and the more loosely united Council still in its tentative stages in Korea.

Women are finding a larger place in the church as in the state. They are now in the membership of our Woman's Conferences; they are organizing local missionary societies; one was elected a departmental head by the Japan General Conference; a Young Women's Christian Association has resulted from Conferences promoted and mostly led by Korean women.

Korean initiative is finding expression in many and varied ways. Young People's Associations are conducting athletic and other mutual improvement activities. A Christian Publishing Company has begun operations without missionary cooperation or encouragement. A People's University is projected and $5,000,000 is being asked for it. Self-help is increasing in churches and schools; alumni buildings have been given at Hakodate and Fukuoka; property has been contributed or ambitious projects for native support have been launched at Chinnampo, Yengbyen, Pyengyang, and Kongju. Zaidans are being organized as general property-holding bodies for the church and for the missions or in some places for local institutions. All of this means a larger assumption of responsibility by those who are demonstrating their fitness for it and are being trained in the very process to undertake still weightier matters.

The sphere of Christian endeavor is also slowly widening. We are now identified with extension classes, night-schools, hostel work for students, health work, especially anti-tuberculosis and child welfare, temperance work, orphanages, kindergartens, work for the blind and for mothers. We have the beginnings at least of social centers or institutional churches at Sapporo, Sendai, Tokyo, Nagasaki, Wonju, and Seoul, and others will follow suit. Medical itinerating and extension and dispensaries are finding an ampler space in our program. A distinct effort is being put forth to exemplify the inclusive gospel in its ministry to all classes and all needs.

The survey is heartening, the outlook cheering to all who believe in Jesus Christ and in His purpose to win the world by serving it through the disciples whom He is sending out and whom He is raising up.

FOOCHOW AREA

BY BISHOP F. T. KEENEY

China is passing through a period of sore distress. Her chief enemies are those of her own household. Brigands and soldiers are an equal menace. Of the two, many hold the latter to be a greater evil, as the soldiers have to support both themselves and the General by plunder and extortion, while the brigands only have to support themselves. However, the line between the two is an invisible one, as it is almost a daily occurrence for bands of brigands to become soldiers and soldiers to become brigands.

The peace-loving and industrious people are being ground between the upper and nether millstones of a disorganized condition of society and a corrupt and inefficient Government, if mis-rule and no-rule are entitled to be called Government. In most sections outside of the port cities, the man with a gun is the only recognized authority known to the public. No sooner is a tax levied and paid to some war-lord or brigand chief than another armed band appears to make further demands. If the money asked is not forthcoming, husbands or wives are seized and held for ransom, or, as is often the case, children are taken and sold into slavery. In one community the people had to make heavy payments to the soldiers eight times in two weeks and in one Superintendent's district over eight hundred children were stolen in one year and sold or exchanged for rifles.

In large areas people go to the mountains with all their possessions every night to hide, not daring to sleep in their own homes. Crops of rice are raised only to be seized as soon as harvested. Shops are raided and whole villages despoiled or burned without compensation. Everywhere, those who are prosperous or known to have money are in constant danger of being seized and held for enormous ransoms, often in excess of any possibility of payment, with torture as the penalty, if the sum demanded is not forthcoming.

As a result, the most pretentious shops and the costliest homes in large sections of the rural districts are being abandoned by their owners, who are taking refuge in the walled cities or the foreign concessions at the nearest port. In some portions of the Province, as high as thirty per cent of the male population have left for Singapore or other places in the south where they may be protected.

Conditions such as these were present at the beginning of the Quadrennium but have steadily increased during the four years. As the country is becoming impoverished, more drastic measures have been used to secure the money and grain which remained. Lately, the officials have adopted the policy of licensing houses of prostitution and opium dens. They also have instituted a persistent military program of enforcing the raising of the poppy upon an unwilling public. This method has several financial advantages. First, the poppy fields are made to pay a heavy land tax, often as high as $50 an acre. Then the people are fined for raising a crop, which on the Statute Books is outlawed. Later they are fined for selling the opium raised and those who buy are likewise fined. Lastly, the opium dens are licensed and those who smoke are fined, thus bringing money to the treasury of dishonest officials at every turn.

The attitude of the Christians, which is strongly against the raising of the poppy, subjects them to persecution, beating and frequent arrest. In one community, when the official threatened to put all who did not raise the poppy into jail, the Chinese Christians, on their own initiative, sent back word, that if he carried out his purpose it would be necessary to enlarge the jail, as there were eighteen hundred followers of Christ who would disregard his order. In some places our chapels have been raided by the soldiers and our pastors and their families have suffered untold indignities because they have encouraged the people to be true to their convictions.

THE LOSS OF BISHOP LEWIS

The sickness and death of Bishop Lewis early in the Quadrennium has made it necessary, in conjunction with Bishop Birney, to spend several months outside the Area each year, helping to care for the work in North and West China. This, however, has not been without its compensations in adding to the list of friends, both foreign and Chinese, in greater familiarity with the work of the entire field and in the enlarging experience, which new problems always bring.

For the two new Bishops assigned to China in 1920, thus early to have to take over full administrative responsibility of a field covering an Area, eighteen hundred miles from East to West and fifteen hundred miles from North to South, embracing seven Conferences with over five hundred missionaries, over twenty-two hundred paid Chinese workers and a Methodist constituency approaching a quarter of a million, was indeed an undertaking from which one well might shrink.

Distances, too, especially in South and West China, where railroads are unknown and where automobiles and other wheeled vehicles are still blessings to be hoped for but not realized, must not be computed in miles but in the days and effort required to reach a given point, and add materially to the work of administration, as much time must of necessity be spent in going and coming, when from twenty to thirty miles a day is the limit of speed. Even this mileage requires from dawn to dark, when the Bishop and interpreter with the cook, a full equipment of food, water, cooking utensils, bed and bedding for the entire journey have to be carried over mountain paths on men's shoulders.

The journeys, however, are made both interesting and attractive by the beautiful mountain scenery which is always near at hand in the South. Wherever the Church has worked, the children and Church members march out miles to meet the Bishop with banners, music and fire-crackers and royally escort him an equal distance as he leaves the city. Both the work and workers are a constant challenge and a perpetual joy, even though difficult problems are never far away.

BUILDING ENTERPRISES

Church building has gone forward apace in spite of disturbed conditions in China and delayed Centenary gifts from America. Enlarging congregations have required larger and better housing accommodations at many of our circuit centers, while our school buildings everywhere are crowded to suffocation. Both the faith and heroism of the native Christians have been tested to the full. In one instance, stones for the entire building were carried from the quarry, more than a mile away, on the shoulders of Christian men and women. In other places brick and mortar have been carried long distances to reduce expense. At another point each family sacrificed their meat allowance for the year by giving the much-prized family pig as an offering to make the Church possible. Another community said that the twenty members would build their new Church of earth walls with their own hands and furnish it if the missionaries would promise them a foreign bell, as there were no clocks in the village.

Thus in ways many and varied, the interest and enthusiasm of the Christian community have been shown in providing houses of worship and homes for their pastors. Often two-thirds or more of the expense has been borne by the local Church from incomes averaging not more than $5 or $6 a month to the head of the family. Between ninety and one hundred new churches, parsonages and school buildings have been erected during the Quadrennium and bear eloquent witness to the devotion of our Chinese Christians to Christ and the Church. In addition to the completed structures, there are no less than thirty-five churches or chapels now under way, where in many cases the native Christians have taken the initiative and begun to build without any assurance of help from abroad. In some cases the work would have been completed without foreign aid if unexpected reverses had not come to the community through the assaults of bandits and soldiers. In other cases promised gifts from America have not been forthcoming but everywhere sacrifice has taken the place of complaint and struggling churches are pushing forward as best they can with hope and faith. Often from $300 to $500 would be sufficient to complete the church or parsonage and make glad an heroic band.

The largest single church enterprise to be inaugurated during the Quadrennium is the student church at Nantai, Foochow, where an auditorium is required which will seat twenty-five hundred persons to accommodate our more than fifteen hundred students and resident membership of over one thousand. Room will also be required for recreational, social and other institutional features. Ground has been secured and plans are being made. The cost will be about $100,000, of which the Foochow Conference has undertaken to raise about $5,000 and the local Church and community $25,000.

INSTITUTIONAL WORK

The Institutional Church at the center of the walled city, Foochow, is now under construction and through its schools, gymnasium, reading-room, lecture courses, dispensary, etc., is making a large and most important contribution which is appreciated, as is evidenced by the fact that over six thousand dollars were subscribed locally this year for the support of the church and the Governor of the Province acted as chairman of the soliciting committee.

The foundations are in for the large institutional church at Yen Ping for which generous gifts have been received from friends in America, which will minister to the needs of a large community, who are especially sympathetic and responsive to the work of the Church.

Institutional work has also been opened at Hinghwa in Chinese quarters. These, however, have been so transformed and adapted as to provide reading-rooms, dormitories, lecture hall, class rooms and baths, which are well patronized and self-supporting. Three full-time, highly trained Chinese are occupied in furthering the work, which is being conducted without any appropriation from the Board.

BOYS' CLUBS

The Boys' Clubs at Hinghwa which enroll some two thousand boys in thirty-four clubs in and about the city are among the most promising new organizations of the Quadrennium. These clubs are largely in charge of the Bible School students, who meet the boys in different centers, once every week or oftener for Bible study, calisthenics, social stunts, drills, etc. Many of them are from non-Christian homes but all are thus made acquainted with Christian workers and with Christian ideals. It is estimated that fully 40 per cent of the boys from ten to fifteen years of age in Hinghwa and vicinity are thus brought under the influence of the Church and made sympathetic with the Kingdom Program. Each year on the afternoon of Conference Sunday, all the clubs have an Anniversary Rally in the Hinghwa Church with an attendance of from twenty-two hundred to twenty-five hundred. Each club marches to the Church with band, banners and fire-crackers and is so well drilled that the great congregation is a model of order, while the program of singing, Bible memory verses, addresses, etc., is presented. Already the effect of the clubs is apparent in the quickened interest of the boys in our Christian schools and in the sympathetic attitude of officials and parents to the work of the Church.

EDUCATIONAL

During the Quadrennium the Fukien Christian University has removed from its limited rented quarters in Foochow to the large and commanding site comprising fifty acres on the shores of the Min river at the foot of Mount Kushan, midway between Foochow City and Pagoda Anchorage. Here the University began work in temporary buildings two years ago. In addition to these wooden structures, six substantial residences have been erected for the foreign faculty and a permanent dormitory for men is nearing completion. Two residences for Chinese Professors are under construction and contracts are ready to be let for a Science Hall. There are twelve foreign and six Chinese Professors, while the student body doing regular college work numbers one hundred and twenty-seven.

Hwa Nan College for young women in Foochow was granted a charter by the University of the State of New York on September 28, 1922, in recognition of the high grade work being done. The faculty now numbers twelve foreign women and three American trained Chinese teachers and has a student body of sixty-three.

The physical equipment comprises one of the best and most attractive groups of college buildings in China and the laboratories are well provided with modern apparatus. The investment represents $220,000 Mex., aside from the valuable and beautiful site. A new much-needed dormitory is now under construction, which, when completed, will house the college student body, thus releasing the present dormitory for the accommodation of the two hundred and eleven High School girls. The next outstanding and imperative needs are two residences for the foreign faculty, properly provided with heat, plumbing and a music hall.

Among the major building enterprises, must also be included the large Woman's School building at Foochow with accommodations for three hundred women.

The High School building at Hinghwa, now nearing completion, is in many respects the most remarkable educational achievement of the Quadrennium. The unparalleled growth of the school until every square foot of space was occupied, including basement and attic, with an overflow into abandoned Chinese residences, which even then could not accommodate the hundreds of boys waiting at the door and pleading to be admitted, made new buildings a necessity but there was no appropriation, and urgent appeals to the Board brought sympathy but no financial encouragement because of reduced income.

Then in May last came the great evangelistic meeting spoken of elsewhere, out of which was born as one of the direct results the inspiration to go forward in faith and begin to build. A subscription list was opened at one of the sessions and about $10,000 secured on the spot from Alumni and friends. This has now grown to $20,000 from local sources, which, with a recent grant from the Board and designated gifts from America, will cover the cost of the building and it is hoped, in addition, provide a much needed Science Hall and equipment. The High School enrollment last reported was 430 with a primary enrollment of 246. The High School boys include 34 local preachers, 55 exhorters, 137 church members, and 56 probationers with 116 reported as non-members, mostly from the lower classes. Such results prove the quality of the work done and the wisdom of the investment to properly house the growing institution.

The student army for the Area now numbers 19,934, grouped in 556 day schools, 38 Higher Primary and High Schools and 2 Colleges. The superiority of the Christian schools is evidenced by the fact that while the tuition has been raised during the Quadrennium from 10 per cent to 50 per cent, the attendance has steadily increased in spite of the fact that the government schools offer free tuition. The total local receipts now exceed $180,000 a year from the Primary and High School students, a gain of over thirty per cent for the Quadrennium. The outstanding need, however, is not for more schools so much as for better schools, which can only be possible by providing better teachers and better housing facilities, adequate normal training and increased support, sufficient to afford a comfortable living, for the teaching staff are necessities if our educational work is to have its permanent and rightful place in the promotion of our Church program.

EVANGELISM

The final test of all of our work is the number who are brought to a knowledge of Christ through personal experience. By-products of Christianity are valuable but are not to be compared with Christianity itself and must not be confused with it.

China has never experienced a mass movement toward Christianity and probably never will. The Chinese are not moved by sentiment or emotion. They are slow to change and respond chiefly to personal appeal to their reason. Chinese Christians are, therefore, for the most part "hand-picked" and come as the reward of faithful seed-sowing with long and patient cultivation. It was ten years after our work was founded in Foochow before our first missionaries were privileged to rejoice over the first baptism. Robert Morrison, although possessed of great and heroic faith, prophesied out of his long experience that after a hundred years of Christian effort there would not be over 1,000 Chinese won to an open confession of Christ. However, the end of the first century after he began his work found 178,000 professing Christians and at the time of the Boxer uprising in 1900, over 2,200 of these laid down their lives as proof of the genuineness of their profession.

Methodism may well rejoice and praise God for the share she has been privileged to have in this great work. We complete our first seventy-five years with 154,363 full members and probationers, of whom 24,000 full members have been added during the present Quadrennium, or a net gain in four years of 70 per cent for all China. Foochow Area has contributed 8,728 to this total.

For four years our first aim has been intensive rather than extensive. Workers have stressed the instruction and training of those now enrolled as inquirers, probationers and members rather than the enrollment of large numbers of new names. Training Conferences have been held each year for the instruction of pastors, local preachers and Church officials, and institutes have brought together smaller groups on the several districts for instruction in practical methods of evangelism and education.

Year by year the goals have been advanced from 10 per cent to 20 per cent to include the number of whole families professing Christ, the number of family altars, the number who can read the Bible, the number who can lead in audible prayer, the amount contributed for self-support, the number enrolled for Bible study, the number of personal workers, Sunday School attendance, etc. Almost without exception the goals have been reached and passed with a substantial margin. The process may seem slow when compared with the size of the task still to be accomplished but the results mark a healthy growth and are exceedingly heartening.

The most remarkable manifestation of evangelistic power during the Quadrennium was at Hingwha in May, 1923, when the pastors and lay representatives from every charge in the Conference were brought together for ten days of prayer, instruction and consecration. The stated services were varied but filled all available hours from daybreak till late at night. From the beginning the power of the Holy Spirit was manifest, convicting men of sin and calling them to a deeper consecration. Such a gripping and transforming work of grace, I have never witnessed before, either in America or China. Both pastors and laymen came into a new and richer experience.

Before the meeting closed each district group met for definite organization and assignment of tasks under the direction of the District Superintendent; likewise, each pastor with his laymen determined together how the fire kindled at Hingwha might be carried back to the local church. It is not strange that the results should register a gain for the two closing years of the Quadrennium sufficient to offset the loss of members by the division of the Conference to form the South Fukien Mission Conference with a surplus of over 600. The accessions to the Annual Conference also, have been such as to make the total enrollment larger than before the separation. It was in the fervor and consecration of this great meeting that the project for a new High School building was born as noted above.

When difficulties are considered, it would have been marvelous to have held the totals of Sunday School, day school and church membership without loss during the disturbed period through which we have passed, but when a marked advance has been made in every branch of the work, the result proves the power of divine grace working through human agencies to accomplish the impossible.

SELF-SUPPORT

One of the vital tasks of a growing church is its readiness cheerfully to bear its financial burdens. No one can doubt but that the Chinese Christians are meeting this test in a worthy way when the statistics are reviewed in the light of the fact that dimes in China are as large as are dollars in America, the daily wage for equivalent work being about one tenth of that in the United States. The Hingwha Conference reports $107,928 in the self-support column for the Quadrennium with $44,345 for building projects and an item of at least $25,000 a year from Christian homes for the education of their children in the schools of their Conference.

Foochow Conference shows a gain in the local self-support of the ministry of 107 per cent during the Quadrennium. Yenping registered its high water mark in 1922 with a contribution of $12,042, the amount for 1923 being but $315 less in spite of greatly increased financial distress. The South Fukien Mission Conference, where banditry is worse than anywhere else in the Area, has not only held its own but actually made a gain of 2 per cent last year in local pastoral support, and a 47 per cent gain for the Quadrennium. At the same time the native Christians contributed last year 67 per cent of the day school budget of $11,958 and 69 per cent of the Higher Primary school budget of $6,008. The contributions from all native sources totalled fully $25,000 during the year.

With a stable government and protection to life and property throughout South China, the Church would speedily and gladly assume full responsibility for local expenses. Stewardship is one of the cardinal doctrines taught in all of our Conferences. All pastors and teachers practice giving a tithe of their small incomes. In a few churches the every-member canvass with weekly payments has been adopted with the effect of increasing the contributions 400 per cent.

A NEW CONFERENCE

One of the most interesting events of the Quadrennium has been the organization of the South Fukien Mission Conference in 1923. This Conference is composed of three districts taken from Hinghwa Conference, comprising the section where the Amoy dialect is spoken. Both language conditions and geographical considerations made the separation desirable. The new Conference is on the very frontier of our work. The Board of Foreign Missions is undertaking the unique task of providing for education and evangelistic work for women and girls without the aid of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. No more difficult place could have been chosen for the experiment. The Quadrennium began with no school for girls in the entire territory and only one Bible woman nearing superannuation. Illiteracy is higher here than in any other section where Methodism is at work in China. On one district not more than four or five women can read. To-day we have two full-time foreign women teachers. The girls' school, which is only two years old, has about eighty students, and the women's school registers sixteen earnest women, who are preparing for definite Christian work. Successful girls' schools have been opened at the centers of each of the three districts. At Yungchun we also have a successful kindergarten, comfortably housed.

It is a slow process to grow workers from the cradle but the years fly quickly. Through the help of an ex-brigand chief, who had become a Christian, a large plot of ground has been secured adjoining our compound, on which have been erected a residence, a kindergarten building, a two-story building for a girls' boarding school, with sufficient room remaining for a woman's Bible school and another much needed residence. A desirable site has been secured across the street from the compound for a new high school building and a commodious property has been purchased for the Bible school through the generosity of Honorable F. E. Baldwin of Elmira, New York. The large majority of the work in this new Conference is done by local preachers, there being but thirteen full members of Conference with as many more on trial. None of these faithful men have above a Higher Primary education and some have not gone far beyond the Fourth Grade but all have availed themselves of the local preachers' course of study and by the consecration of their one talent to Christ have made possible during the Quadrennium a net gain of over 60 per cent in membership, and 58 per cent gain in Sunday school scholars. The salary paid a married man is only $6 a month with 75 cents additional for the support of each child. They are separated from one to two days' journey from the nearest pastor and make the rounds of their large circuits on foot, often in actual peril from bandits and soldiers. In consecration and loyalty they are unsurpassed. When, a few years ago, the Board of Foreign Missions thought it might be wise because of its remoteness to give this field over to another denomination which is doing work further south in the Province, our loyal Methodists declared that they would go to Hell before they would consent to join another Church. In the face of such an avowal of love and loyalty, the Board reversed its decision. Before the end of another Quadrennium, the new Mission Conference will have become a full fledged Annual Conference.

THE DIAMOND JUBILEE AND EAST ASIA CONFERENCE

The seventy-fifth anniversary of the beginning of Methodist Missions in China at Foochow makes the present Quadrennium historic. Here Rev. Judson D. Collins and Rev. Moses C. White and their wives landed on September 6, 1847, as the first representatives of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The first school was opened on February 28, 1848, with eight boys in attendance, and the first session of Sunday school was conducted on March 4 of the same year.

Following the first baptism on July 14, 1857, it was twelve years before the first class of seven deacons was ordained in 1869, just twenty-two years after the opening of the Mission. During the first six years following the first convert, there were but one hundred accessions. It only required three additional years, however, to add the next one hundred, but at the end of 1867, after twenty years of sacrificial effort, Methodism had won but 340 Chinese to open confession of Christ and of these, 139 were added during 1867.

From these days of small beginnings, it is a far call to the present year of Jubilee, when the foreign missionary staff in China numbers 541, with over 2,200 paid Chinese workers divided into nine Conferences with a membership of 154,363 and a student enrollment of over 40,000 with contributions towards self-support of $913,860. It was fitting that the East Asia Central Conference should be held at Foochow in connection with the Diamond Jubilee celebration. For two weeks the delegates and representatives from Japan, Korea and the nine Chinese Conferences dwelt happily together as brothers on the spot where Methodism in Asia began its work.

In the Central Conference 67 per cent of the voting members were Chinese, while only 23 per cent were foreigners but no line of cleavage was visible between Nationals and others. Debate was free and at times animated but always in the best spirit. Every question was finally decided on its merits without appeal in any instance to race prejudice, Chinese and foreigners always voting together. None are more happy to see the Chinese come to positions of leadership than are the missionaries.

In 1867 Methodism leaped from Fukien to the Yangtze Valley and located in Kukiang. Two years later Dr. H. H. Lowry left the Foochow station to open work in Peking, the capital of the Empire, where he is still active and during the Jubilee was privileged to return to Foochow as the most distinguished guest of honor.

From Foochow went out Robert S. Maclay in 1877 to open up work in Japan and later in 1885 to lay the foundations of Methodism in Korea.

From beginning to end the Jubilee program was one of historic interest and inspirational value. The chief interest, however, was not in the past but in the Forward Look and the ever broadening program that reaches out toward the final and speedy evangelism of the greatest single group of men and women on the face of the earth. All felt the challenge of China's call and all nobly resolved with the blessing of God to help hasten the day of Christ's triumph among China's 400,000,000 souls.

SHANGHAI AREA

BISHOP L. J. BIRNEY

Among the many new and interesting experiences the Quadrennium has brought, came one of bitter disappointment and loss. To Bishop Lewis' guiding counsel, experienced leadership, and ennobling fellowship, we looked forward with confidence and comfort as we took ship for a land we had never seen, to attempt an untried task amid conditions wholly unfamiliar. Arriving in Shanghai in October, we found him already off to far West China, where illness and pain confined him for months. Returning in the spring apparently restored to perfect health, we had but a few days with him, when we waved him adieu as he stood on the steamer deck bound for America, to return, as he confidently hoped, in the early autumn. Those few days of conference, counsel and prayer revealed how much we needed him and how much he could do for us. They deepened our regret at his early sailing and made the cable that brought the word of his untimely death, a messenger of bitter pain and loss, as it was the bearer of poignant sorrow to the whole Methodist Church in China. Suddenly we found added to an already overwhelming task, the special responsibility for the great North China field, and to Bishop Keeney's vast area was thus added West China. These added responsibilities have been mutually shared, however, each having held the West China Conference—he having once and I twice presided at the North China Conference.

The heavy responsibilities thus added to the tasks assigned by the General Conference, materially changed the plans which had already been formed after eight months close study of the conditions and needs in the Shanghai area. It became early evident that the great need of the Church in China today so far as Episcopal supervision is concerned, is a more intimate knowledge of local conditions and a more intensive form of administration than had been humanly possible with but two bishops assigned to all China, and one or the other of these so constantly required to be in America. This conviction and plan of intensive cultivation has been pursued as faithfully as time and strength has permitted, though the removal of Bishop Lewis, again leaving but two bishops, has prevented as high a degree of concentration upon the problems of a single area as we had hoped and planned. The writer is cognizant of the arguments against the more intensive type of Episcopal supervision on the mission fields and feels the force of some of them, but for the most part they are made by those who know little of mission work by actual experience. It would not be difficult to list reasons which are sufficient to convince those who have had actual and close contact with mission work and conditions, that at the present time in China the intensive type of administration is the one most needed.

It is not possible for those who have not actually "traveled throughout the connection" in China, to form any adequate conception of the distances, time and difficulties involved in an effort to know in any comprehensive and detailed way, the conditions and problems of the field—and any wise and effective administration, without such knowledge, is impossible. The writer has traveled approximately 60,000 miles during the quadrennium, not counting voyages to and from China. But many thousands of these miles have been at the rate of twenty-five to thirty-five miles per day, the fastest transportation obtainable overland in most sections of China. The same distance could be covered with vastly greater ease in a single year in an American Episcopal area. The writer could have gone from Shanghai to Boston and held a Conference in less time than was required to go from Shanghai to Chengtu, West China, and hold that Conference, and the travel would have been far safer and immensely less taxing physically. Even within the Shanghai area under best travel conditions, it requires not less than a week to reach the farthest portions of the area by most direct route and fastest modes of travel. It will readily be seen that the simple problem of knowing the field and the task assumes discouragingly large proportions.

The disturbed conditions of the country have made work more difficult and checked progress to some extent. The drive of Chang Tso-lin from Manchuria into the territory of the North China Conference, the invasion of Kiangsi province by Wu Pei Fu's army to intercept and put to rout the invading troops of Sun Yat Sen from the South—the torn and harassed condition of West and South China, where armies are combing up and down the country doing far greater damage to the innocent people than to each other, with armed bandits demanding pitiless toll of helpless peoples—all these, with the general spirit of uncertainty and insecurity among the people, have tended seriously to retard the speed of our Christian advance. But these war conditions look very much worse from the viewpoint of an easy chair with a morning paper in safe America than when one is in the very midst of them with bandits in the hills hard by and the sounds of rifle fire between opposing armies, in one's ears. The American who reads about it may consider reducing his gifts to China. The missionaries who depend upon his support may live in the midst of it, with rifles peppering away and stray bullets puncturing their homes or schools, and, as I have seen them do, go straight on about their work, doing the only thing that will ever permanently heal the hurts of China and bring order and security out of chaos and confusion. Even these last terms which so vividly characterize the American impression of conditions in China must be understood with grave limitations upon the imagination. There is actually vastly less chaos and confusion than reported or believed. The great mass of the people go steadily on about their work, sowing and reaping, toiling and sleeping, more or less unconscious of political misrule and chicanery, except in the war and bandit areas which by no means cover all China, nor even the greater part of it. Never has there ever been a better chance for the Gospel of Christ in China than today, notwithstanding all impediments, and never a time when greater gains were made of substantial character than in these troubled years. True the work is more difficult by far than it has been since the days of the pioneers, because of growing tendencies in the life of the people which greatly complicate the task and render constructive Christian work among an increasingly sensitive people daily more delicate and difficult. But for the most part these tendencies are signs of growth and development. The youth, discovering his own personality and individuality, is vastly more difficult to deal with than the child, but for reasons that give one hope rather than despair.

Several events of the Quadrennium require mention as deeply affecting the life of the Church in China. They can be noted but briefly here.

1. THE CENTENARY. While it brought false hopes to China, promises that have never been and may never be fulfilled, and some of which should never have been made, nevertheless it has brought great blessings to the Church. Scores of churches and schools filled with busy pupils and reverent worshipers: a great increase in the annual gifts from America stand witness to its material beneficence: while a 50 per cent greater missionary force attest its vital contribution. A greater unity of the entire work in China and a stronger consciousness of the Church's strength and influence—a greatly increased aggressiveness in evangelistic and social work, are direct results of the Centenary.

2. THE JUBILEE, seventy-fifth anniversary of the coming of the first Methodist missionaries, has brought peculiar blessings, intensifying and making permanent some of the best influences of the Centenary movement. It did much to increase the consciousness of an indigenous Methodism, China's own, built not by foreign missionaries alone or chiefly, but by the sacrificial toil of three generations of native Christians. It deepened the spiritual tides of life and made vivid the sense of debt to the apostles and martyrs of the past, missionary and Chinese, which brings the Church to face tomorrow with a deeper consecration and self-surrender for the sake of those who follow.

3. THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE, which proved to be the greatest single influence toward the creation of a self-conscious indigenous Church that has as yet been felt in China. More than half of its more than one thousand delegates were Chinese, each Chinese delegate representing one thousand Chinese Christians. Out of this Conference sprang the National Christian Council which is destined to be one of the strongest forces in China for the furtherance of the Christian movement and of vast aid in effecting ever closer sympathy and cooperation between the denominations.

4. THE EXTENDED SURVEY AND CONFERENCE OF THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATIONAL ASSOCIATION, under the direction of its able chairman, our veteran missionary, Dr. F. D. Gamewell. This is the outstanding event in the history of Christian Education in China and has already resulted in radical changes in educational policy and will, we believe, prove to be the moulding influence in the work of the future. Its chief contribution will be higher standards and increasing coordination denominationally and interdenominationally.

The last two movements are of course general, but will profoundly influence the work of our Church.

In regard to statistics, vital and financial, there has been a 60 per cent gain in membership in all China during the Quadrennium, the entire number now being 62,000.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society has increased in missionaries during the Quadrennium in the three Conferences 20 per cent and in mission funds from America, 14 per cent.

In connection with the Jubilee year, which coincided with the last Centenary year, a special financial goal was adopted for each Conference in addition to the vital Centenary goals. In North China the Jubilee Thank Offering proposed was $10,000 (Mexican) for Gamewell Girls' School in Peking. This represented about 50 cents per member. The total sum raised was $11,000. In Central China Conference the memorial was $7,500 for opening work in Anking, an important river city, the capital of Anhwei, one of the most thickly populated provinces per square mile in China. This represented $1.00 for each member and probationer, but was to cover two years. Fifty-five hundred dollars has been raised the first year. In Kiangsi Conference the goal was $7,000 for a church in Kintehchen, the great procelain center of China, from which "chinaware" is shipped to every part of the world. The people in parts of Kiangsi have been harassed and troubled and robbed by soldiers and bandits but have practically reached the first year's goal of $3,500.

The district Conferences have been turned into institutes for the training of the preachers, lay workers and Bible women. These institute-conferences have now been tried in the Central China and Kiangsi Conferences with great satisfaction and success. The sessions in 1924 will be ten days or two weeks. This training consists in methods covering every phase of church work, but the great emphasis was placed upon the effort to lead all the workers into a more vital Christian life and experience. After a quadrennium in China it is the writer's conviction that this is the supreme need and the most imperative thing now to be done. The entire Church must have a deeper realization of the spiritual and personal nature of Christianity. This can only be done through the leaders. These institute-conferences are an effort to meet, among other things, this highly important need.

In preparation for the period just ahead now that the Centenary with its special objectives is over, each Annual Conference was urged to plan definitely for a new and vigorous campaign to cover the next Quadrennium in the spirit of the World Service plan in so far as it can be wisely adapted to China. The following is the program for Central China Conferences given as typical of those of the North China and Kiangsi Conferences as well:

Jubilee Forward Movement—Four Year Program, 1923-1927

Points of Special Emphasis

1. Development of Spiritual Life in the Church.
2. Intensification rather than extension.
Quality rather than quantity in all our work.
3. New emphasis on Chinese responsibility both in leadership and in self-support.
4. A more vital type of Evangelism.
5. Higher standard of qualification and training for the Ministry.
6. Emphasis in Education to be on Middle Schools rather than on Primary Schools.

Objectives

I. Evangelistic

1. Largest possible increase in church membership consistent with highest spiritual quality.
2. Inaugurate an effective program of religious education in every place, including the Sunday School, Epworth League, Junior Epworth League, Daily Vacation Bible School, etc., properly coordinated wherever any or all of them exist.
3. Strong religious program in every Primary School, and every student who graduates from one of our Middle Schools brought into saved and living relation with Jesus Christ.

II. Education

1. All schools and all teachers to conform to the standards set by Conference Board of Education.
2. Development of Teacher Training Courses in Central China Conference Academy and Ning-kwo-fu Academy.
3. A student Volunteer Band in every Middle School made up of all students who have settled their life purpose to dedicate themselves to the Christian Ministry.

III. Self-Support

1. Addition of $1,000 annually to amount raised for self-support.
2. Relate pastors' salaries to the percentage of self-support of the charges served.
3. Carry on a carefully planned campaign to teach our people the reason for increase in self-support.

IV. Anking Memorial and New Buildings

1. Every charge to raise its apportionment for the Jubilee Memorial as set for two years 1923-24 before Conference 1924.

Committees have been at work studying the question of possible self-support. Next to necessity of a deeper spiritual life in the churches and schools, this is the most commanding problem. It is an exceedingly difficult and delicate one but upon its proper solution depends the building of a really indigenous Church in China. In some places, in the writer's judgment, the time has come for radical and firm action. It was in this conviction that the special committee reported a recommendation that the churches of North China Conference become self-supporting in ten years, 10 per cent foreign support to be surrendered each year. It remains to be seen whether or not this is literally possible, but without question it is action in the right direction. Reports from the districts are at the time of writing most encouraging, indicating the probability that many churches will achieve self-support in less than the time allowed.

One of the most remarkable phenomena in evangelistic history has occurred in the North China Conference during the last year of the Quadrennium in the baptism in a single day of over 3,700 soldiers of General Feng's army, practically all of whom have followed their great leader's example and joined the Methodist Church.

BANGALORE AREA

H. LESTER SMITH, RESIDENT BISHOP

DEAR FATHERS AND BRETHREN:

At the General Conference of 1920 I was assigned to residence in the Bangalore Area in Southern India. I made immediate application to the British government for a permit to enter India, without which I could not sail for an Indian port. I was subjected to a vexatious delay in securing the permit, but finally the British government made a special arrangement, under the so-called memorandum A, for the issuance of permits to properly appointed American missionary representatives by the Committee of Reference of the North American Council of Missions. I received the first permit issued under this new arrangement on October 7, 1920, and two days later, October 9, 1920, we sailed for Liverpool en route for India.

We reached Bangalore in November and received a cordial and brotherly welcome from Bishop and Mrs. J. E. Robinson. I am sure it is permissible, even in a brief report of this kind, to express my sincere appreciation of the extraordinary kindness, the unfailing courtesy and the constant but wholly unobtrusive helpfulness of this noble bishop of the Church of God and his equally charming wife. They were as a father and mother to Mrs. Smith and myself and were a great blessing to both of us.

Bangalore Area included the English speaking mission of India and Burma and the South India Annual Conference. I found, after my arrival in India, that the English-speaking mission had not been organized. There was no record of disciplinary action by the Executive Board of Southern Asia, or of necessary action by some of the Annual Conferences. I found, moreover, that some of the Annual Conferences had refused to proceed with the formation of an English Mission Conference, and that all the Conferences had kept their institutional work in the Vernacular Annual Conferences. Since the necessary action had not been taken and it was manifestly difficult if not impossible to secure the necessary consent and cooperation in the action necessary for the further development of a separate Conference for the English-speaking work, it was decided to discontinue any further efforts to organize the English-speaking Mission.

The Central Conference of Southern Asia at its recent session voted to concur in a memorial from the Bombay Annual Conference to the General Conference, requesting the repeal of all legislation or enabling acts either ordering or permitting the organization of the English-speaking work in a separate mission or mission Conference. This will provide that all English work shall be administered as in the past, by the Annual Conference within which it is located.

This action concerning the English-speaking work attached the English work to the various Areas and reduced the Bangalore Area to a single Annual Conference.

South India Annual Conference is not a large Conference numerically. It has about forty members. A little less than half of this number are missionaries. It covers a considerable amount of territory, however, on account of the serious division of the Conference by the territory of other missions. Methodist missionary work in South India is not very old in comparison with other missionary societies which began work here more than one hundred years ago. Coming into the territory after others were at work we could not secure a solid block of territory. Our districts are widely separated. The largest single block of continuous territory is in Hyderabad State where we have two Telugu language districts, Vikarabad and Hyderabad, and three Kanarese language districts, Bidar, Raichur and Gulbarga. All of these districts have only one central station where we have missionaries in residence. Two hundred miles eastward we have a small Telugu district under the care of an Indian district superintendent, with a small central station. Three hundred miles west, by rail, is the large Belgaum Kanarese District with two central stations, Belgaum and Gokak Falls. About four hundred miles south of Hyderabad is Bangalore Kanarese District with two central stations, Kolar and Bangalore. Two hundred and twenty miles east of Bangalore is the Madras Tamil District with one central station at Madras. This district has two sections, Madras and vicinity, and Tuticorin and vicinity four hundred and fifty miles south with the territory of other missions intervening.

The Conference is thus shaped like a great triangle with the apex pointing south. East and west the triangle is about six hundred fifty miles, north and south about nine hundred miles. Within this territory we have nine central mission stations in charge of missionaries and two central stations in charge of Indian district superintendents. All told, we have almost 70,000 Methodist Christian population. Our exclusive Methodist missionary responsibility under agreements with other missions is for about 65,000 square miles of territory and for about eleven and one half millions of population.

My first task was to acquaint myself with the problems of the work, and to study the territory of the Conference, the program of missionary advance and the immediate opportunities for Kingdom development.

I was surprised and delighted to find that a missionary Area is far more simply organized, more centralized, and much more easily administered than a home Area with its complexity of competing institutions, its widely scattered centers of control and activity, its increasing tendency toward a decentralized administration and the universal crossing and recrossing of the lines of official responsibility, activity and service.

The character of church organization and administration in the foreign field, and the centralization of all lines of church and missionary activity and control in the Annual Conference and its various committees made it unexpectedly easy to take over administrative responsibility for the entire Area and to immediately establish contact with all parts of my task.

It at once became apparent that a thorough reorganization of the Conference program was necessary. Three things had seriously hindered the formation of a comprehensive, uniform and continuous Conference policy; the diversity of languages, the widely separated territory of the Conference, and the lack of a unified, complete financial control of the Conference funds. The latter situation had arisen from the fact that from the very organization of the Conference, the missionary appropriations had been barely sufficient to pay the salaries. All the work costs had been borne by special gifts which had been solicited for specific objects and consequently were controlled solely and directly by the missionaries in charge of that specific work.

The adoption of the budget system of the Centenary made possible a very important and necessary change in financial policy. In 1921, with the hearty support of the missionary staff, we succeeded in effecting a thorough reorganization which brought the expenditure of every dollar of missionary money under the direct supervision of the Finance Committee, composed of both missionary and Indian members and of both ex officio and elected representatives, and regulated all expenditure in conformity to a carefully planned, comprehensive and continuous Conference program. This program was adopted by the Joint Finance Committee, covered all units of missionary and church work and was unanimously approved by the entire missionary body, both men and women as well as by the Annual Conference.

This new policy has had an exceedingly gratifying effect. It has produced a fine esprit de corps in the entire missionary and Conference body and has resulted in an efficiency of cooperation and a degree of mutual interest and helpfulness never before known or possible under the old plan.

Fine progress has been made in the development of the Conference program notwithstanding the serious shortage of men and money. The more noteworthy and important advances during the quadrennium are as follows:

At the beginning of the quadrennium there were four high schools in the Conference. Two of these were the English high schools at Bangalore. One was the Stanley Girls' High School (Telugu language), at Hyderabad, and the Beynon Smith Boys' High School (Kanarese language), at Belgaum. The educational program of the Conference planned for a boys' and a girls' high school in each language Area on account of the distance and the language difficulties making consolidation impossible. This program would thus require eight high schools ultimately for this Area. Six of the eight have already been provided. The details of this remarkable development are as follows:

At Hyderabad a Telugu Boys' High School has been organized and is now in operation to balance up the work of the Stanley Girls' High School. Although the boys' school is only a little more than two years old the attendance is over 180. We have been amazed and gratified at the rapid and substantial growth of this school.

The Conference has put into additional land for buildings and play grounds over $16,000. In addition to this the Detroit Area has given $11,000 for buildings and equipment. Without this fine help from Detroit this undertaking would have been very seriously handicapped if not impossible of achievement. This money has provided a new bungalow for the missionary principal, a new assembly hall, has remodeled and enlarged the old bungalow so that it now contains eleven classrooms, and has remodeled and enlarged the buildings of the Bible Institute.

The Stanley Girls' High School, also in Hyderabad, has had such a rapid growth that more room was necessary. We have consequently purchased two fine adjoining properties with useful buildings at a cost of almost $25,000. This has almost doubled the value of this property. The new buildings are already in use.

In Belgaum, the Beynon-Smith High School for Kanarese boys has had a very remarkable growth from between four and five hundred to over seven hundred in the last two or three years. This made the enlargement of this plant a necessity at the same time our program called for the organization of a greatly needed Girls' Kanarese High School at this point. To the great mutual advantage of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society and the Board of Foreign Missions, we have just completed the sale of the present Boys' High School buildings and property to the Woman's Home Missionary Society for the immediate organization of the Kanarese Girls' High School and have purchased ground for a new Boys' School. The sale price of the old buildings, combined with the loyal and substantial help which the Indianapolis District has been giving to this district every year, makes it possible to immediately begin the construction of the new buildings. In the meantime the old buildings will be used jointly.

At the beginning of the quadrennium the two English high schools, the Baldwin Boys' and the Baldwin Girls' High Schools of Bangalore, were embarrassed by debt. Indeed the Baldwin Boys' School was so seriously involved that the Finance Committee, before my arrival in India, had voted to close the school. We have been able to save this fine old school, however, and have put it upon a self-supporting basis, and although it is still seriously embarrassed by debt we have substantially reduced the debt by the sale of property not required and the reduction of the overhead expenses.

The Baldwin Girls' School has been entirely freed from debt and is doing fine work.

The remarkable advance in our high school program has resulted in the addition of two high schools, the doubling of the property value of another, the doubling of the property value and the securing of a new site and of new buildings for another, the freeing of another school from debt, and the preservation of another school from closing and the placing of this school upon a basis of self-support.

We have also been able to make a fine advance in our educational work in connection with our middle schools.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society is just completing a fine middle school for girls, with a missionary bungalow, teachers' quarters, etc., at Raichur.

Money has been provided for a new boys' middle school at Bidar and work will be begun as soon as government permission to build has been granted.

Money has been provided and material has been purchased for a new middle school at Madras. Actual building operations are being delayed until the government has made the necessary grant-in-aid.

At Tuticorin, we have purchased a plot of land large enough for a middle school, missionary bungalow and other necessary buildings. The actual construction work will not be begun until our new missionary has had a year at the language school.

At Gulbarga a new hostel has been built for the boys in residence there at the middle school, while a fine new hostel, or rather an addition to our present hostel, has been provided at Belgaum.

The medical work of the Conference has made a fine advance during the quadrennium. The Kolar Woman's Hospital of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society has been reopened with the largest staff it has ever had and is doing the greatest work of its history.

The General Hospital of the Board of Foreign Missions, at Bidar, has been repaired, refurnished and reopened after having been closed for several years. The reopening of this hospital at Bidar, sixty-nine miles from the railway and equally distant from medical help, has been providentially blessed this year in the saving of the life of a fine missionary who was suddenly stricken with a serious attack of typhus fever from which he would almost certainly have died but for immediate and skillful medical attention.

A second doctor has just been appointed for Vikarabad Hospital. Vikarabad is the center of the great Telugu Mass Movement where in a single district we have 27,000 Methodist Christians. This reinforcement will be a great blessing to the work at this point.

We have made good progress in furnishing comfortable and sanitary homes for our missionary staff during the quadrennium.

At Belgaum we have bought and repaired a fine bungalow. At Hyderabad a new bungalow has been built for the high school principal. At Vikarabad a new bungalow is being built for the district superintendent and another one is just being started for the doctor. At Bidar a small bungalow has been built and is now being occupied by the doctor. Later it will be used as a nurses' home when the new bungalow, the money for which has been furnished by the Detroit Area, has been built for the doctor. By the way, the repairs on the Bidar hospital as well as this bungalow are all paid for by Detroit Area laymen and churches. At Madras a new bungalow has just been completed for the district superintendent. At Raichur the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society has just completed a fine new bungalow for their missionary at that point.

The sanitarian arrangements for the care of the health of our missionaries during the heated season have been greatly improved. Hitherto each family with but a small grant of help for rent has had to make expensive and inadequate arrangements for quarters. We have recently purchased seven acres of land at Kodaikamal, a fine hill station at an altitude of 7,000 feet and have erected thereon a fine double bungalow and have remodeled the old bungalow and enlarged it so that it furnishes ten two-room apartments. This is not sufficient, and we have to charge a fairly heavy rent to carry the undertaking, but it is a great improvement over the old method. When we can complete the plan and furnish quarters to all of our families free, we will then be doing only that which is reasonable and fair in the difficult climatic conditions which face our missionary staff.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society has built and opened a very much needed ministry of love to children in the Wilbur Paul Graff Babyfold at Kolar. The cost of this fine institution was $10,000, and it already has thirty-eight babies under its care.

A Bible training school for the training of men and women workers, with the necessary hostels, study halls, etc., has been built and opened at Kolar under the joint care of the Board of Foreign Missions and the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. The school is just beginning its promising and much needed work.

The most serious problem of the Conference during the quadrennium has been the shortage of missionaries. The active missionary staff is now more than twenty per cent less than it was a dozen years ago while our actual Christian community is five times as large. We have used our qualified Indian leaders as much as possible, but they are far too few for the posts which must be manned. The only way we have been able to relieve the pressure has been by the purchase of automobiles, by which missionary time and strength have been saved and the field of efficient service has been greatly enlarged. During the quadrennium we have added fourteen new cars to our missionary equipment. I consider this a wise and profitable investment which has already yielded very gratifying returns, and which has more than doubled the efficiency of our overworked missionary staff.

The work has gone forward steadily at every point, although not with uniform rapidity. Indeed, we have earnestly endeavored to bring some sections forward more rapidly than others on account of the unequal and rather embarrassing irregularity of our work. The survey of our work revealed the irregularities and it has been our constant effort to give priority to the most needy places and institutions. We have had fair success in this policy and the work of the Area is making good progress toward the place where the various language areas and the different sections of the Conference will be coordinated to such a degree that all parts of the Conference will be able to cooperate efficiently in the working out of our Conference program.

As an illustration of the progress which has been made in this connection a statement of the improvement either already secured or well under way in connection with the training of our Indian leaders will be illuminating. The rapid growth of the Conference and the lack of necessary schools and training institutions compelled the use of poorly trained men. An analysis of the educational qualifications of all the Indian workers in the South India Conference, members of Conference, local preachers, etc., revealed the following deplorable condition: Seven per cent of the entire number were high school graduates or better; twenty-four per cent were as far along as the sixth grade; thirty-five per cent had a fourth grade education; thirty-one per cent were under the fourth grade, while three per cent were wholly illiterate. This situation is being improved as rapidly as possible. It is not possible to estimate the improvement among the lower grade workers at this early date, but in the grade of men applying for membership in the Annual Conference a very fine advance has been made. The Conference at Madras, in 1923, received twelve men in the classes for admission on trial and into full membership. Of this number, three were B.A.'s and all the rest were high school graduates, while several had theological training in addition. This was by far the best class in the history of the Conference. The minimum standard for admission on trial, graduation from high school, is being faithfully maintained and South India Conference is probably without a superior in India in the quality of young men received. If we can keep up the present rate of progress and maintain the present quality the leadership of the Conference will soon be strong enough to assume greatly increased burdens of responsibility.

Two spiritual movements in the Conference are of sufficient importance to deserve special mention. In the winter of 1922-23 I was urged to visit a remote section of the Conference to inspect the work there and to pass upon the readiness of a new group of villages for baptism. The importance of this action rested upon the fact that these people were high caste people and if we baptized them it would be the beginning of our first mass-movement among high caste people. After a thorough examination I was satisfied that they were ready for baptism. I therefore baptized every man, woman and child in five villages on one Sunday. It was an extraordinary day. The villagers made a very satisfactory road for my Ford car for three miles through the jungle and were exceedingly enthusiastic and happy in their reception into the Church. They are a substantial farming community, own their own land and are already able to support preachers, school teachers, etc. Other villages are ready, but must wait until we can train workers. This is a fine and promising beginning among the caste people of this section.

The second movement is a real and wonderfully promising revival of spiritual life among the preachers and workers of the Conference. It began in a camp meeting held by the superintendents of the Bidar and Vikarabad Districts for their workers. The presence and power of the Holy Spirit was wonderfully evident. Some of the experiences of the preachers were truly Pentecostal. The revival broadened its ministry to the rest of the Conference at the recent Conference session through the work of the Indian brethren themselves and at the present writing it bids fair to make a very helpful and deeply vital contribution to the work and the spiritual life of the entire Conference.

During the quadrennium I have visited all parts of India and Burma on official business. I have traveled in India and Burma alone on official business over 75,000 miles by rail, automobile, bullock cart, tongas, and on foot. I have visited the most remote districts of my Area and have carefully studied the work of the rural and jungle districts as well as the work of the mission centers. I have presided twice at the South India Annual Conference and once each at the Burma, the Bombay, the Central Provinces and the Lucknow Conferences. I have presided in my turn at the sessions of the Central Conference of Southern Asia and have attended the sessions of the various Finance Committees, the Boards of Trustees of the colleges and seminaries, the various district Conferences, and other official and semi-official meetings with which I have been connected as frequently as my health and time would permit.

I am sorry to say that I have frequently been compelled to cancel official engagements on account of malaria or dengue fever. At this writing I have suffered twenty-two attacks of fever in India sufficiently severe to compel me to cease work and to confine me to bed for several days. More than sixteen per cent of my entire time in India has been spent in bed with fever and at other times I have managed to carry my work with difficulty owing to less severe attacks which were not sufficient to compel me to stop work.

Early in 1921 I was requested by the unanimous and insistent action of the other bishops resident in Southern Asia to represent India in the meetings of the Board of Foreign Missions and the Board of Bishops in November of that year, and to assist those charged with the promotion of our missionary enterprises in keeping our work in the thought and interest of the Church. It was very definitely felt both by the bishops and by the missionary leaders upon the field as well, that this work was of equal importance with the work upon the field. Since it was possible to have the work on the field cared for without difficulty I finished my visitation of the various parts of the Area and arranged my work in accordance with the requests of my colleagues in India, and proceeded home in the autumn of 1921. Upon the request of the Committee of Conservation and Advance and the Centenary Committee of the Board of Bishops I arranged my schedule so that I could give considerable time following the Detroit Convention to speaking in the various Annual Conferences and in the Area conventions and sectional rallies which were held in all parts of the country during the winter and spring of 1921-22. Under the direction of these two committees and wholly by their arrangement and appointment I traveled 32,400 miles in the United States and spoke 240 times in a little over seven months. This extension of my service in the United States made it necessary for me to return to India in the very midst of the heated season, the very worst time in the year for tropical travel, but I felt that the service which I was thus able to render the missionary work of our Church made it worth while for me to endure this personal discomfort and danger to my health.

In addition to my official duties in India I have done considerable speaking and preaching at our different Annual Conferences and at various conventions and special occasions. I have also made many addresses to large audiences of educated non-Christians. In these meetings I have spoken on distinctly Christian themes and the audience has had the privilege of asking questions at the end of the address. These meetings have usually been held in college and university centers and in every case I have had a friendly and sympathetic hearing.

I have also lectured frequently upon such subjects as the temperance question and various aspects of moral reform and social work, as well as upon educational and scientific subjects and topics of general interest.

In closing I wish to express my appreciation of the cordial and helpful relations which have uniformly prevailed between the Board of Foreign Missions and the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society and the Bangalore Area. We have been encouraged upon the field by the continued evidence of a strong, well informed, efficient and sympathetic interest in our work on the part of our official leaders in the home church. We are grateful for all that has been done for us and our work.

I wish also to pay a well deserved tribute to the loyal and faithful staff of missionaries and Indian leaders in the Bangalore Area. Loyal and efficient, they have have been true comrades in the Master's service. I deeply appreciate their warm friendship and their enthusiastic and unflinching support.

May God bless these comrades of the Cross in the Bangalore Area.

REPORT OF THE BOMBAY AREA

JOHN W. ROBINSON, RESIDENT BISHOP

The Bombay Area embraces the country of Baluchistan and approximately the northwest quarter of India. It contains about 825,000 square miles of territory, equal in size to about fifteen States the size of Iowa. It would take the people of forty States like Iowa to reach its 87,000,000 of population. At the beginning of the quadrennium there were two annual Conferences within the Area, and at the close there were three annual Conferences and one mission Conference. This to an extent manifests real development, but to an extent it is also a realignment of language areas. In the formation of the Indus River Mission Conference, authorized by General Conference, all of the immense provinces of Rajputana and the Punjab came to this Area from Northwest India, but the formation of the Gujarat Conference was a matter of convenience in administration. As now existing, the work in the Central Provinces Conference is almost entirely in the Hindi language, while in the Bombay Conference Marathi so largely predominates that the work of the sessions can conveniently be conducted in that language. Gujarat Conference is a pure Gujarati language territory, and the Indus River work is practically all within the Urdu region, though our border work in Pushtu is developing. Before the present alignment was made some of our Conferences had to conduct their proceedings in two and even three of the vernaculars.

In our evangelistic work we have before us the two great tasks of reaching the non-Christian people, and building up our own Christian community. The latter is the more difficult of the two. Of our approximately 107,000 converts within the Area, the great mass are villagers from the agricultural sections of the country. Without any tradition of education, or even of literacy, behind them, and with the consequent necessity of reaching them through oral teaching alone, they require an attention that is tactful but also persistent and insistent. In the nature of the case the line upon line and the precept upon precept which they require can only be given by preachers who know their language and who have an amount of real training. In this part of India for many years the mistake was made of trying to accomplish this work through such cast-off workers as we could pick up from other missions, or through our own converted but untrained men. This weakness has now been remedied, and we have Bible training and theological schools for Hindi workers in Jubbulpore, for Marathi workers in Nagpur, for Gujarati workers in Baroda, for the Rajputana dialects in Ajmere, for Punjabi at Raewind, and for the frontier work at Quetta.

The Christian community in the entire Area has made progress in every way. The essentials of spiritual life are rapidly appearing in even the distant village communities, and there is also a decided improvement in the mental grasp which they are obtaining of the elements of our faith. It is decidedly encouraging to find that non-Christians are expecting better moral standards from our people because they are Christians. In practically every community where we have obtained a foothold our people are the leaders in the agitation against immorality, gambling, drunkenness, child marriage, widow oppression and caste tyranny. As a rule our small communities wield an influence in these matters altogether out of proportion to their numbers and former social position. While our Methodist Christians are almost entirely from among the poverty-stricken masses of the land, they are beginning to recognize in a most encouraging way their responsibility for the support of their own churches and pastors. In one of our village communities, in which we have about thirty-six thousand Christians, all from among the most depressed and indigent classes, we are encouraged to find our people averaging forty cents for every man, woman and child, for pastoral support. In the larger towns and cities, of course, the average is higher than this, but for the rural areas the figures quoted are perhaps larger than is obtained in the work of any other mission in India.

In the development of the Christian community we make large use of the ordinary agencies of the church. We have 451 Epworth League chapters with 12,000 members; we have 470 day and boarding schools with 13,066 pupils, and 2,097 Sunday Schools with 73,306 registered attendants. In connection with our Sunday school work we lay great stress on Bible teaching, and yearly have examinations set by the interdenominational Indian Sunday School Union. While these examinations are simple they can only be passed by those who have acquired an amount of definite biblical knowledge. The paper contains twelve questions, none of which can be answered by a simple yes or no, nor from merely general knowledge, but each of which is based on one of the lessons from each of the months of the year. In the last examinations in one Conference we sent up about fifteen thousand candidates out of a total of twenty-three thousand attendants, and of those sent up over thirteen thousand five hundred passed.

While much of our evangelistic work is among the ordinary rural classes, we have given much attention to the peoples of the jungle, the desert and the frontier. As a rule these are animists, and as yet are not under the spell of either Hinduism or Mohammedanism. They are at present peculiarly approachable, and we are gathering many converts from among them. But both the Hindus and the Mohammedans have awakened to the tendency of our work and are themselves putting forth great efforts to win these peoples. Some time ago, within two miles of the Afghan border, we took over a work that had been conducted for many years by another mission, but with scant returns. To us the harvest time seems to have come, and we now have a Christian church there of a hundred and twenty members, and while we are not allowed, on pain of death, to cross the border to preach the Gospel, or for any other purpose, still we do reach the Afghans that come from across the border to attend our little mission, and not only do many of them go back with the story of the Gospel, but some of them have already become Christians. In the very heart of the vast mid-India jungles also, we have three splendid mission stations that touch and influence the people, not only in the immediate vicinity but, through outstations, in the recesses of these wildernesses.

The metropolitan city of Bombay, with its million and a quarter of inhabitants, furnishes us at once a difficult problem and a tremendous opportunity. On its streets are heard practically all the languages of the East, while in its haunts are practiced all the iniquities of both East and West. During the quadrennium we have been trying to develop Methodism to its rightful place in this city, and with much of success. We now have six congregations that are all practically self-supporting, four of the different vernaculars and two of English. Through the help of the Centenary we have developed a splendid evangelistic center at Grant Road, in the heart of the better-class residence portion of the native city, and also have now under construction another center for the Marathi and Kanarese sections of our work. While the Centenary gives us $60,000 for this development scheme we are glad to be able to say that of the total cost of Rs. 475,000, local resources furnish all the remainder. We still need an educational center in this city, and only when that has been attained shall we feel that a really strategic position has been attained by our Church in Bombay. What we are in process of doing in Bombay is what we need to do in Karachi, the great wheat port-city of the northwest; in Baroda, the capital of the splendid native state of the same name; and in all such great cities as Lahore, Ajmere, Nagpur, Jubbulpore and Poona.

On account of the caste system, which in its practical effect excludes the children of the outcastes from all state institutions (and our Christian children are at first almost always counted as outcastes because they came from these classes), we have to maintain our own schools. During the quadrennium distinct progress has been made in this direction. We now have, as previously noted, 470 schools of different grades and 13,066 pupils in attendance within the area. These are opening a door of hope to our Christian boys and girls and at the same time preparing for us the workers we need in days to come.

In an area on the foreign field such as this, the work of a bishop is varied. Traveling incessantly, visiting the villages as well as the centers, to encourage discouraged and persecuted Christians, advising with men who are keen in the work but very inexperienced, making friends with non-Christian public and influential men the better to avoid caste persecutions of the Church, settling disputes that have gone beyond the ability of district and local officials, advising missionaries and ministers as to finances, buildings, forward movements, insistently pressing for self-support, encouraging leaders of other religious communities to cooperate with us in pressing for reforms on which we agree, and backing up and in every way assisting the overburdened district superintendent in his encouragement, management and direction of the large and enormously important district Conferences which we have developed under the necessities of local conditions. Holding the annual Conferences is an important duty, but not by any means the most important which the bishop on a missionary field has to carry. During the four years under review I have presided at eleven annual Conference sessions and at fifty-three district Conferences.

CALCUTTA AREA

REPORT OF BISHOP FREDERICK B. FISHER

The Calcutta Area, as arranged by the General Conference of 1920, comprises two Conference territories—Bengal and Burma. These represent two distinct phases of Christian development. They differ in race, religion, society and genius. They are separated by eight hundred miles of sea. Both Conferences, because dominated by great cities, partake of the nature of Metropolitan areas.

The population of Bengal is forty-seven millions, while that of Burma is twelve millions. But it would be misleading to even hint that our Church is alone responsible for the evangelization of these vast populations. Other capable and successful missionary agencies are at work.

The American Baptists may be said to be dominant in Burma because of the early occupation of the territory by Judson, and because of the tremendous outpouring of life and treasure in its development. Side by side with them are the Anglicans, Roman Catholics, Scottish Presbyterians, English Wesleyans, and ourselves. By a comity agreement the Wesleyans confine their activities to upper Burma, while we restrict our work to lower Burma. Our field is particularly the Delta surrounding Rangoon, but with an extension to Mergui on the Southern Peninsula. In Rangoon we have extensive and well developed educational institutions, and in several out stations there are vital centers of education and evangelization.

In Bengal we are the only American Mission. But strategic centers have been long occupied by the English Baptists, Scotch Presbyterians, the Anglicans, the Roman Catholics, and other agencies. Christian Missions have never been as numerically successful in Bengal as in other sections of India. There has never been a mass movement. Converts have therefore come as individuals and not as families or tribes. The actual membership of the Christian Churches in Bengal is only sixty-seven thousand. How meager a harvest this seems after a century of devoted endeavor. William Carey came to Serampore more than a hundred years ago, establishing a great educational center. Through his prodigious efforts the Bible was translated into many vernaculars. Following Carey, an intrepid pioneer, William Duff, came to Calcutta and had a remarkable personal victory in the conversion of a number of educated young Bengalis. Certain of their early acts in connection with the violation of sacred Hindu customs brought about bitter persecution, and extreme misunderstanding as to the nature of Christian ideals. Unbiased historians would probably have to admit that the fault was as much on the Christian side as on the Hindu. One thing that missionaries have been gradually learning through the years is that they must not unduly shock the sensibilities of the people among whom they work, and that direct proselytism is not the only important thing in connection with the delivering of the Christian message.

Among the major victories of Christianity in Bengal and Burma are the indirect representations of Christian ideals and life. The vast educational system, founded by Missionaries, developed by co-operation of the Government, and now supported by the entire populace, has brought a remarkable change. Calcutta is the greatest educational center in Southern Asia. There are in the Colleges and High Schools affiliated with Calcutta University, some thirty-six thousand students. They have come from as far as Persia and Afghanistan, from the Southern tip of the Indian Peninsula, from Ceylon, Malaysia, China and Burma. Our Methodism has a fascinating share in this movement. Two schools for Anglo-Indian students, the Calcutta Boys' School and the Calcutta Girls' School, occupy central positions, supported almost entirely from local resources, and related to Thoburn Church. Two high Schools for Indian Students, the Lee Memorial for girls, and the Collins Institute for Boys, are vigorous and successful. Collins Institute has five hundred students enrolled, is entirely under Indian management and is self-supporting. No missionary is now directly related to this institution. Its Principal is a graduate of Calcutta University, and has been connected with the School for fourteen years, first as an instructor, then as Head-Master, and now as Principal. Last year 154 students passed the matriculation examination. This number is the largest to pass of any school affiliated with the University.

Since the early days of William Taylor and James M. Thoburn, we have been recognized as one of the vital evangelistic agencies among the European and Anglo-Indian communities of Calcutta and Rangoon. Beginning thus, we have gradually developed successful Churches in the several vernaculars, and have become a permanent and influential factor in the Christian and social movements of the two Provinces. During this Quadrennium the evangelistic message has been emphasized, with the result that our numbers have greatly increased in all Districts—the most signal ingatherings in a generation. At the same time our institutions have been kept to the highest possible standard and have steadily advanced. Experiments in transferring responsibility and management to indigenous leadership have resulted in gratifying success. Here is one of the challenges to our missionary capacity during the ensuing years. It applies to practically all mission fields. We must turn the corner in placing upon the national and local Churches the responsibility and privilege of enlarged self-management and self-support. Our goal must be to make the Church native to the soil. Notable progress has been made in our Indian Methodism in this regard during the Quadrennium. True victory depends upon the degree of success which attends this development.

I have been privileged to preside at four Annual Conferences outside the Calcutta Area; South India, 1922, Indus River, North West India, Gujerat, 1923.

Calcutta Methodism entertained the Central Conference for Southern Asia during December, 1923, and profited greatly by the inspiration of its sessions. It was a truly constructive Conference. Progressive policies were discussed and adopted. More than at any time in our history we grappled with problems of national import.

No sketch of the Area, even so brief as this, could be complete without an expression of gratitude to the Churches in America, who through the efficient and sympathetic cooperation of the Board of Foreign Missions, The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, The Board of Sunday Schools and the Epworth League, have so largely contributed to the Christian victories vouchsafed to us during these years.

LUCKNOW AREA

BISHOP FRANCIS W. WARNE

I started from New York for India June 23, 1920, or shortly after the close of the Des Moines Conference, and hope to arrive in New York during April, 1924.

I have held all the Annual Conferences for the four years of the Lucknow Area, except the one in which the bishops of Southern Asia made a complete exchange. I have attended the Annual Meeting of our Executive Board, and most of the two meetings each year of the Finance Committees of each Annual Conference. There are twenty-eight District Conferences to meet annually in the area and I have been present at eighty-six of these sessions. At the Annual and District Conferences, almost without exception, there have been gracious outpourings of the Holy Spirit, and our ministers and leaders have been strengthened, endued with power and inspired. This only explains the continuance of our Mass Movement, and the moving up of the movement among the higher castes. In addition to all the Conference sessions there have been our own general meetings and interdenominational work.

TERRITORY

I was appointed at last General Conference to administer the North and Northwest India Conferences. These two Conferences covered such enormous territories, and being our oldest work in India there lived within their bounds such a large percentage of our Christian community that enabling acts had been granted by the General Conference for two divisions. The principal part of the Lucknow Conference came out of the old North India Conference, though two districts, centering in the cities of Cawnpore and Allahabad, were also put into the new Lucknow Conference from the Northwest India Conference. Our work in the great territories of Rajputana and the Punjab was taken from the Northwest India Conference and joined with sections taken from the Bombay Conference to form the new Indus River Conference, of which Bishop J. W. Robinson took supervision. This left in this area the old North and Northwest India Conferences, and the new Lucknow Conference.

When these two large sections had been taken from this area there was left a territory containing about seventy-five million people, living in sixty-eight towns and cities, in which we have work, ranging in population from fifteen to three hundred thousand. In these towns and cities we have sixty-four educational institutions of fair standing, including the Lucknow Christian College and the Isabella Thoburn College. This makes no mention of eighty-five thousand smaller villages within the area in many of which we have Christians, and some educational work in humbler forms, which cannot be classed under institutions.

Many I fear have not grasped any idea of the vastness of India. To travel in the fastest way possible from Darbunga, in the eastern end of the Lucknow Conference, to Chaudas, the station nearest Tibet in the North India Conference, requires seventeen days. The part on the plains requires two days by rail, and in the mountains one may travel eighty miles by motor, but the balance must be on horseback.

INTERCONFERENCE INSTITUTIONS

This being our oldest field much of our educational work centers here. In the mountains at Naini Tal we have two large educational institutions for European children, which are prospering and have a splendid history and record. In Lucknow are our two colleges, the Lucknow Christian College for men, and the Isabella Thoburn College for women, which has now become an interdenominational college. During the quadrennium four excellent new buildings have been added to the Lucknow Christian College plant, at a cost of about $200,000, thanks to the Centenary and to the British Government. Hence we have a greatly increased attendance, with an Indian, Rev. J. R. Chitambar, M.H., as the Principal.

The Isabella Thoburn College has been moved about two miles from the original site to a great educational center near the Lucknow University, has secured thirty acres of land, and on these have been erected buildings that would do credit to a great woman's college in the homeland. This all points to the college having a large place in a most remarkable future connected with the education and elevation of India's womanhood. We would like to say a hearty grateful thank you to all the good women at home who have made this marvelous advance possible.

Of our Lucknow Press it can be said that the total net profits for the quadrennium were Rs. 138,364, while the total expenditure for religious literature and donations was Rs. 126,604. The assets over liabilities on June 30, 1923, amounted to Rs. 537,143, a net gain for the period of Rs. 20,291. Taking the last two quadrenniums together the assets of the Publishing House have increased by Rs. 168,621, and in addition to this gain the contributions from the earnings of the Press for religious literature were Rs. 222,517.

THE CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY

In forming the new Indus River Conference 53,126 Christians were transferred out of the Lucknow Area. There was after this left in the Lucknow Area in 1920 a Christian community of 211,410, which has grown during the quadrennium to 255,043, that is an increase of over 43,633, or over 20 per cent. There were during this period in this area 81,698 baptisms, which shows that there is no abatement in our mass movement in our oldest mass movement areas. The increase would have given a much higher percentage save for the fact that the epidemics of these years carried off 27,637 of our people.

INDIA HELPING HERSELF

This Christian community increased in their giving for pastoral support during the quadrennium from Rs. 41,041 in 1920 to Rs. 73,099 in 1923, or 78 per cent. In the benevolent collections the increase has been from Rs. 11,598 in 1920 to Rs. 28,932 in 1923, or 150 per cent increase. That is this area has given for ministerial support during the four years Rs. 830,926, or well on to a million rupees, an increase of 83 per cent. When it is remembered that over 90 per cent of our people are mass movement village Christians, earning an average of $4.50 per month per family, one asks are they behind any other section of our Church in their sacrificial giving? They will go right on increasing their self-support. I recently heard an Indian Christian, not a Methodist, who had several times visited Europe and America, say of our mass movement Christians that they were not yet wholly Christianized, but added, "The mass movement Christians of the Western World are not yet wholly Christianized." It is a question of degrees.

INDIANS PROMOTED

An outstanding feature of the area during these four years is the advanced places given to Indians. More college graduates have joined the ministry during this period than in all the previous years of our work in India, and there is every reason to believe that this move toward the ministry from among our educated young men is a permanent move. The percentage of our Indian Christians taking a college course is increasing. In 1920 there were but five Indian district superintendents in this area; now there are eleven, or only three less than half of the whole number, and I am proud and happy to record that every Indian District Superintendent is making good. Our missionaries are desirous of being helpers and advisers. We in promoting our Indian brethren have in our Church kept ahead of the rising tide of Indian aspiration for home rule. Our Central Conference has just closed and while the government is embarrassed by a national clamoring for Indian promotion, and while some other churches for the same reason are in difficulties, there was from our Indian membership in the Central Conference not one utterance of complaint on this line; and while at this time some other churches are being rent by doctrinal differences, not one utterance of division was heard. There are throughout ideal harmony and cooperation between the missionary and the Indian delegates. The Indians also gave outstanding spiritual messages that thrilled the whole Conference. Dr. Gamewell of China was overheard to say, "It is worth coming all the way from China to hear such a spiritual message from an Asiatic." Such messengers from India will yet repay and stir the home church. India has had a great quadrennium.

REPORT OF THE SINGAPORE AREA

GEORGE H. BICKLEY, BISHOP

The Singapore Area is often spoken of as the "Island Empire." Though because of the small scale on which this part of the world is usually drawn, its size does not readily appear, yet it is necessary to remember that from Sumatra south to Java and east to Borneo covers territory larger than the United States.

It lies both sides of the equator and has a tropical climate. The thermometer rarely rises above 95 degrees, but the high humidity makes it hard to bear in some sections. It produces prolifically several crops a year. The native peoples are predominantly of the Malay race, with their well-known characteristics.

These islands have long been exploited by various European races. The Dutch control Sumatra, Java, large parts of Borneo and the other islands of the Netherlands Indies. Holland here exercises governmental control over thirty times the area of the home land. The British Empire holds Malaysia as a Crown Colony and has a dominating influence over the Federated Malay States. The principal city is Singapore with a population of over a quarter of a million, composed of all peoples, races, religions and ideals. Penang at the other end of the peninsula is also a large and important city with numerous growing places throughout the territory. Here is a great source of rubber and tin. When the trade in these two commodities is poor then business is dull. After a period of inflation during the war, the last three years have been sadly depressed.

The development of this section has been brought about by the brains and organizing ability of white men with the brawn and shrewdness of the Chinese. The Malay is a poor third in this race for existence. People from India forced to move by the pressure there are here for trade and coolie work. The European peoples are transients. If in government service they expect shortly to retire on a pension and return home. If in business it is with the hope of soon amassing a sufficient fortune to retire. This hope is far from being always realized.

Java is one of the most densely populated places in the world. Its population numbers 34,000,000, of whom 30,000,000 are Moslem. But a little distance under the surface they are Animists and superstitious with a sad mixture of old and new "hantus." In certain islands is a large number professing Christianity. There are, however, in Borneo and Sumatra vast tracts still in jungle.

Our Mission work, through fortuitous and Providential circumstances, has largely been associated with educational work. In Malaysia 80 per cent of pupils now enrolled are in Mission schools. These are supported partly through government grant-in-aid and fees from the pupils, so that the schools are largely on a self-supporting basis.

The attitude of government has changed somewhat on this matter. It is still willing to continue such grant-in-aid but is circumscribing our liberty of action, bringing teachers and qualifications, methods and expenditures under much more rigid governmental inspection, continuing however liberty for religious instruction, which has offered us so large a place for a point of contact.

Here also influences growing out of the World War are seen in increased emphasis on national spirit, in seeking to develop loyalty to the ruling nation. This is but natural though embarrassing. It means placing limitations against increase of school enrollment and a not friendly attitude toward foreign higher education. Its increasing importance as a center of world naval power is not unworthy of attention.

These educational methods, starting in Singapore, have followed the progress of our missionaries into other islands, as they have listened to the call and followed the migrating peoples. In Medan, Sumatra, we have a school notably successful in teaching English to Chinese boys. Also at Buitenzorg, Java, we have an educational center for both boys and girls. It is however a question how long this method can be successful with the changing attitude of the Dutch government, which is becoming more favorable toward an education for the natives in their vernacular.

A fine start was made in Tjisoroa hospital in Java in medical work under government subsidy. An extensive program had been outlined for eight more government-aided hospitals in Dutch territory. The slump in this part of the world during the last three years has been so serious that the government has felt compelled to postpone indefinitely their proffers of financial help. The church should not now attempt this type of work beyond its own ability to carry on both financially and with workers.

To this land come the peoples from China and India. We learn of their political and national aspirations. They bring these with them. They are not amalgamating into one nation. Both groups are taught and ministered unto. They must be reached through differentiated service. They are all taught English in the schools. But, for instance, in Singapore, every Sunday we have one service in English, another in Tamil, one in Baba (Straits Chinese), also others in different dialects for the Cantonese, Hakka, Hakkien, Foochow. The tie which holds them together is strained by the differences which separate.

The training of native workers is receiving attention. In Weltevreden is the Training School for Java. Most of the students are Battaks and Malay, but these will not furnish leadership for the Chinese. We are receiving as many candidates as we can at present use. The Jean Hamilton Theological School at Singapore is trying to solve this difficult matter. It is not quite clear what is the best course to pursue. The larger monetary inducements held out in business and education add to the difficulties of providing pastors for the Chinese people.

The open field here is a growing one. In numerous towns there are groups waiting for the coming of the preacher. While the indications are that with limited dimensions, the educational opportunity will continue, as indicated in its announced policy to provide for all increase of school enrollment and to care for collegiate education in this colony, yet these things do not limit the evangelistic call and opportunity which will be growing and permanent.

The Publishing House maintained at Singapore is a credit to the church. It has a property, clear of debt, worth over $300,000 (Straits) and will soon become a source of income for building churches.

The work of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society in this area performs a valuable service not only in maintaining schools for girls, put also in various forms of activity affecting favorably the religious life of women.

From the Annual Conference Minutes for the year 1923 we select the following statistics:

Malaysia: Churches and parsonages, 70; valuation, $244,990 (strs. dollars). Total raised locally, $60,944 (strs. dollars); property and endowment, $1,184,360 (strs. dollars); schools, 53; teachers, 374; daily enrollment, 10,497.

Netherlands Indies: Churches and parsonages, 22; valuation, 129,000 guilders. Schools, 18; teachers, 39; enrollment, 1,175. Total raised locally, 17,587 guilders. Property and endowment 888,920 guilders.

North Sumatra: One church, value 50,000 guilders; one school, 50,000 guilders.

REPORT OF MANILA AREA

BY BISHOP CHARLES EDWARD LOCKE

It is with grateful hearts that we look back upon another year of happy labor for Him in the Philippine Islands. Although there has been much political turmoil during these months, and the crops have been decreased and in some places entirely destroyed by storm and tempest, and the support of our pastors in some sections considerably reduced, yet contentment and hopefulness characterize our people, and good progress has been made in all spiritual and temporal lines.

Before this report shall have been published we shall have enjoyed the Quarter Centennial Celebration of the coming of our beloved Methodism to these islands. It is not forgotten that Bishop James M. Thoburn hurried here immediately after Admiral Dewey's victory in Manila Bay, and preached the first gospel sermon in the Philippines. A little later the first piece of property ever owned by the Protestant Church was purchased and upon it there still stands our Central Student Church.

An interesting program is being prepared for the celebration consisting of sermons, and songs, and lectures, and reminiscences, and pageants, and elaborate exhibits. The exhibits will include miniature models of several hundred churches and chapels as well as samples of the products of the various provinces. Our field includes work in nearly a dozen different dialects in a score of different provinces. There is a wholesome and good-natured rivalry among these widely scattered people. We are expecting that our work shall be greatly stimulated by this notable celebration. As we look upon the accomplishments of these twenty-five eventful years we join in the words of Holy Writ quoted by John Wesley, "What hath God wrought?"

The following, not dry but succulent statistics, give a bird's-eye view of the achievements of our work during this closing quadrennium:

We have built or rebuilt and dedicated seventy-seven chapels and churches and thirty-one parsonages. Substantial additions and extensions have been made to our two hospitals, and Mission houses and dormitories, and to our new Publishing House. The Harris Memorial Training School is now established in a group of fine new re-enforced concrete buildings. These enterprises cost something over 500,000 pesos.

There has been received from the Boards at home for buildings 285,000 pesos, and the Native Church has raised for all purposes, 435,000 pesos.

Our membership has grown from 56,000 in 1919 to 70,000 in 1924, an increase of 25 per cent. In 1923 we baptized 16 persons each day of the year. There are now 40,300 pupils in our Sunday schools.

These figures tell only a part of the story of achievement. It would be difficult to estimate the widening influences of the Protestant gospel of the Living Christ here in the Philippine Islands. There are thousands of adherents and attendants who are not so far enrolled in our membership and yet have definitely broken with Roman mediævalism. The superstitions and deceptions which are still practiced by the Roman Church are astounding and unbelievable, and the educated Filipino is resenting these things as a reflection upon his developing mental ability.

In the personnel of our Mission I am glad to report our workers in exceptionally good health. We are happy over the return to their work here of Mr. J. W. Moore and of Mr. and Mrs. Rex R. Moe and of Miss Bertha Charles. They have been absent in America for several years and are now back with us because they wanted to come. They were abundant in labors while here and are now received with open arms by their fellow-workers by whom they are greatly beloved. We are also happy to welcome our newest missionary, Mr. Will Akert, who comes to assist in the Publishing House.

There have been added to our forces the last year, Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Stagg and Mr. and Mrs. Herbert J. Riley. These four enthusiastic young people have come from California and are all graduates of the University of Southern California. They are especially qualified for work among the young people, and have brought with them a great amount of optimism accompanied by consecrated hearts and vigorous bodies. Already our work is feeling the stimulating influence of these ardent recruits.

We have also with us Chaplain and Mrs. Joseph Clemens. The Chaplain is a retired army officer and served three terms in the Philippine Islands. He has now returned as a Christian evangelist and he and his devoted wife are traveling at their own expense throughout our entire Area giving illustrated lectures on the Pilgrim's Progress. He awakens deep interest everywhere he goes, and during the last ten months has baptized nearly a thousand people.

We are especially gratified over two building enterprises which have reached their completion during the last year.

One is the new church at Lingayen where we have long needed a church building. It is a beautiful and commodious structure in one of the prettiest provincial capitals in the Islands, and where several thousand young people are in attendance at the high school. Throngs attended the dedicatory exercises on a recent Sunday. District Superintendent and Mrs. C. C. Herrmann gave themselves unstintedly to this much needed enterprise.

The other notable achievement of this quadrennium is the erection of the new Harris Memorial Training School for the preparation of young women for deaconess work under the auspices of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. The two beautiful buildings are of re-enforced concrete. They are imposing and dignified. There will be accommodations now for a hundred devoted young women who are very earnest in dedicating themselves to work for the Master. Miss Margaret Decker, the principal, and her two efficient assistants, Miss Mary Evans and Miss Hazel Davis, are to be heartily congratulated upon at last having conveniences and equipment for carrying forward one of the most important branches of our work in the Philippines.

There is not space to speak in detail of our successful labors in our hospitals in Manila and Aparri; and of our busy Publishing House, and of our eight dormitories in Manila, San Fernando, Vigan and Tuguegarao; and of our Bible Women's Training School in Lingayen; and of our Theological Seminary in which we are working conjointly with other denominations. It is not boasting to claim that no investment of our Church at home in Foreign Missions has surpassed our labors here, because of the consecration, and earnest endeavors, and fine abilities of the workers, and the vast opportunities of this most fruitful field.

We are confidently hoping that the greatly increased interest of the people in America in the governmental condition of the Philippines will very largely add to the financial gifts of the home people. We leave it to politicians and statesmen to conclude matters with reference to the political status of these Islands in their relation to the United States, but all of our experienced Filipino leaders in our church work agree that it will be a long and indefinite time before Protestant work in these Islands will be able to get along without the assistance of workers and money from America. We sincerely hope that the people at home will not lose enthusiasm in our church work even if they should become impatient with the tactics employed by some of the political leaders here.

The Filipino people are not surpassed in their possibilities of development by any Oriental people. They have been deprived by an astute and superstitious mediævalism of the Holy Bible with all of its refining influences, and Protestantism is bringing to them the Open Bible, and the Public School, and freedom of thought, and the defense of pure womanhood, and democratic privileges.

We are working under "The Stars and Stripes," and if Americans always "follow the Flag" there should be a vast increase in the offerings of money and workers and deep sympathy. We believe as the people at home know our needs and possibilities they will generously respond.

REPORT OF THE CAPE TOWN AREA

EBEN S. JOHNSON, RESIDENT BISHOP

From your far-flung battle line, thinly stretched across the tropical regions of Africa, I bring you greetings on behalf of my fellow workers and respectfully present this brief report.

During the quadrennium we have often had to fall back on what Livingstone called "the word of a gentleman," walking by faith rather than by sight, but at this moment our dominant note is: "Now thanks be unto God who always causeth us to triumph in Christ and maketh manifest the savor of his knowledge by us in every place."

An uninterrupted four years on the field, covering from fourteen thousand to twenty-two thousand miles a year in visitation within the area, by all sorts of transportation and locomotion save flying, has brought me into fairly close touch with the African native in every stage of his development and has increased my consciousness of the truly apostolic quality of the work of the missionary. And apostolic successes have crowned apostolic devotion. Africa's sons and daughters are entering into the light and liberty and glory of the children of God.

Much of our work is still of the pioneer sort. We have pushed into unoccupied fields and have made the first contacts between the native mind and Christian truth. God has opened to us great doors, some of which you have permitted us to enter. Others await us. Some who sat in darkness have begun to see the great light; others in gross darkness await our coming.

Four years ago we planned more than we have been able to accomplish. Nevertheless, thanks to the loyal support of our people at home, expressed through the Centenary movement and the "I will maintain" campaign, we have made substantial progress. The New Testament has been put into two new tongues and given to the people who, as they learn to read, thus receive the glorious gospel in their own language. Three hospitals have been built. Three doctors have come to us. Many thousands of treatments are given in a single year. Several new stations have been opened, and, in a measure, manned. Missionaries' residences have been built on all fields.

We began with the rawest heathenism. My beloved predecessor labored; we enter into his labor. Some time ago a group of missionaries, with a few native workers, accompanied me at earliest dawn to the top of Hartzell Mountain. It was a stiff climb, but we soon forgot that. We viewed the landscape o'er. In every direction were villages in which men and women were living Christian lives. We sang and prayed and broke bread together. At the foot of that same hill I had a rare and delightful experience one day last year. Over nine hundred native Christians received the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. One group at the Lord's Table consisted of ninety-eight pastors-teachers. Nearly all these men were of the first generation from heathenism. Such training as they have our missionaries have given them. Now they pray, and preach! A multitude attended the preaching of the Word that day, and among those who gave their hearts to God were four young men from a neighboring tribe. Two of these are to go to Old Umtali and prepare to carry the gospel to their people. Thus the work goes on. We have similar meetings under the great tamarind tree at Kambini, Inhambane. Other multitudes have gathered about us in the Congo and Angola, and everywhere "God causeth us to triumph in Christ."

Among the achievements of the quadrennium I give high place to the progress that has been made in the training of a native leadership. Nine natives have been received on Conference probation and ten or twelve others are in training for reception next year.

Notwithstanding the achievements that make us glad we have touched only the fringe of our great task, and the constant prayer ascending to high heaven from Africa is that our people in America will not fail to support us as we go forward. Neighboring tribes, to whom we have been hoping for a decade to carry the Word of God, have not yet heard the name of Jesus. A gap of six hundred miles separates two of our stations in the chain of which Taylor and Hartzell dreamed. Great sections of Congo country are waiting for the fulfillment of our promise to go to them.

A few months ago we suffered very serious loss in the death of Dr. William Clark Berry, who, with his wife, went out to the Congo in 1919. The young couple did a remarkable piece of missionary work at Kabongo, a station about fourteen days' journey from the head of the railway. The doctor early acquired the native language and preached as he practiced. With fine ability he organized his medical service, training a few intelligent boys to recognize and treat the more common ailments, and making rounds in the outlying villages. They also maintained day and Sunday schools and opened a girls' boarding school. Government officials often availed themselves of his medical skill, and he was tireless in his ministry of healing among his people. Last year he gave nearly three thousand treatments. "He saved others; himself he could not save." He and Mrs. Berry had been sent for, to take care of the wife of a government official about seven days from Kabongo, three weeks from the railway. Here he was seized with pernicious malaria. Taking his own blood test he knew the unfavorableness of the prognosis and before he lapsed into coma he begged his wife to see that their work be not given up. Mrs. Berry ministered to him until the end and carried to success the case they had gone to attend. But the shock and heavy strain were too much for her. She became sick with fever and blind. Mr. Hartzler hastened to her help from Kabongo and took her back to his wife as soon as she could stand the journey. Thence she went to Cape Town where, under the skillful treatment the city afforded she quite regained her sight and her health. It was thought that she would desire to come to America, but no. She is to-day back at work in the Congo.

At the order of this General Conference we organized, in June, 1921, the South Africa Central Conference. The first delegated session of that body was held last October. Many matters of connectional interest received earnest consideration. Plans were adopted for the selection and translation of suitable books for courses of study. The establishment of a central mission press was ordered. A system of education was set forth and committees were appointed to carry out inter-Conference plans.

EDUCATION

Four years ago in their address to the General Conference the bishops said, "The progress of the Cross waits and stops at the dense wall of illiteracy. Gate No. 1 is Christian Education." This Gate No. 1 has been made available on practically every mission station and at such places as Old Umtali, Kambini, Loanda and Quessua leads up to Bible study and elementary teacher training. These are supplemented by Bible Institutes conducted once or twice a year eagerly attended by pastor teachers and evangelists. The Congo is developing its educational activities as rapidly as possible and the site for a Central Training School has recently been selected and approved by the government. Industrial and agricultural education is efficiently carried on at Umtali, Kambini, and Quessua. At the basis of all our education is the Christian ideal. Including those in village schools about eight thousand pupils are receiving instruction at our hands. Some difficulty is presented in our educational work from the fact that, except in British territory, we cannot use the English language, and in Portuguese territory we cannot use the native language except as a means to teach the Portuguese language. In such cases our text books must be wholly in Portuguese. Our missionaries are bravely conforming to all governmental regulations, although they occasionally find themselves at fault because of different interpretations by different officials.

MEDICAL WORK

Our medical work has extended during the quadrennium. We have now at least one trained doctor in each field and they are all doing excellent work. Doctor Stauffacher, of Inhambane, and the late Doctor Berry gave special attention to the treatment of leprosy. The chaulmoogra treatment seems to have cured the disease. Two cases which I have seen every year for four or five years showed no recurrence of the disease. In this connection I desire to record the cordial response of the Department of Agriculture at Washington to my request for some plants of the Oncoba Echinata which yields the active principle of the chaulmoogra plant, and which can probably be a success. It will greatly reduce the cost of the treatment of leprosy.

STEWARDSHIP

Our missionaries, by practice as well as by precept, teach the principle of stewardship, and in many places our people respond readily even out of their penury. In Rhodesia the pastor-teachers are nearly all supported by funds raised on the field. On the Rand, where the Portuguese East Africa membership has more than doubled, the entire cost of all the native workers in the four circuits is borne by the natives. The native church in Loanda is helping to support a number of outstations among their people.

FAMINE

There are times, however, when the people have no money and no, or little, food. Two years ago many people died from the famine in Portuguese East Africa, but our Christian families and a great many who came to us for help were saved from starvation by the food we were able to distribute through the prompt response of the Board to our urgency appeal. A famine is now threatening, more serious than that to which I have referred, and again the Board has cabled relief. I have every reason to believe that our missionaries will administer the relief as wisely as before and many precious lives will be saved.

VISIT FROM A SECRETARY

Associate Secretary T. S. Donohugh, of the Board of Foreign Missions, made a more thorough tour of our mission fields last year than any visitor ever made before. Everywhere he was received with delight. He attended all the Conferences and saw all the missionaries. I am sure he would be able to visualize our work to the Board. We appreciate his visit.

It is many years since an episcopal visitor came to any part of the Cape Town Area. In the interests of general superintendency it would be well for a bishop from some other area.

to visit the work and to hold the Conference during one year of the quadrennium at least.

WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY

The work of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society goes on with increasing efficiency. They have now three centers in Rhodesia, one in Portuguese East Africa, and one in Angola. Earnest requests, in which I heartily concur, are made to the Society to open work in the Congo and at another point in Angola.

There are fifty-four members of the four Mission Conferences in the Cape Town Area with no representation in this body. Cannot some provision be made for representation from the Central Conference?

I commend to your favorable consideration the request of the Rhodesia Mission Conference that you pass an enabling act giving it authority to become an Annual Conference should it be able to comply with all conditions during the coming quadrennium.

MONROVIA AREA

MATTHEW W. CLAIR, RESIDENT BISHOP

At the close of the last General Conference I was keenly conscious of the responsibility that had been placed upon my shoulders. I at once began to acquaint myself with the conditions of the Area through such information as was available by getting in touch with the Board of Foreign Missions. Dr. North, Rev. Thomas S. Donohugh and others were ever ready and graciously patient in giving me the benefit of the information at their disposal.

I very soon found myself becoming very much interested in my far-away, unknown field of labor, and anxious to be at the battlefront, leading the forces of righteousness in action on the first Foreign Missionary battleground of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

December 14, 1920, my wife and I boarded the S. S. Egba and put out to sea and steamed into Monrovia harbor. The good people were expecting us and we were accorded a most cordial welcome. Here we also found Mrs. Camphor, the widow of my lamented predecessor, the late Bishop A. P. Camphor. Her presence on the field added much to our comfort, and to my being able to take hold of the helm and direct the affairs of the Conference. I was not long in the midst of my new and strange environment before I began to feel quite at home.

In the Area is included only the Liberia Conference in the Republic of Liberia, with a land area of 43,000 square miles and a civilized population of about 30,000 and an aboriginal population of more than 2,000,000. It was not long before I began to feel that my lot had been cast amid wonderful possibilities, challenging the best of which the Church was capable. I felt the force of the last words of Methodism's pioneer Foreign Missionary: "Let a thousand fall before Africa be given up."

The first session of the Conference was held in Lower Buchanan, Grand Bassa. Much interest and general attention were manifested in this session, to see and size up the newly elected and appointed Bishop. At this Conference I got a fair insight into conditions and needs, which were many. I found the brethren loyal and devoted but handicapped by conditions.

Soon after Conference I visited Cape Palmas and from there all the points along the Coast to Sinoe, touching every native town and village. This trip gave me a chance to study conditions and possibilities among the element not yet reached and affected by Christian civilization. I was greatly impressed by the desire manifested by these neglected thousands to know "book" and learn the "God way." Their chiefs plead pathetically for the Church and School, that their children may have a chance.

June, 1922, to February, 1923, was spent in the States, assisting in the "I Will Maintain" drive. During this time, I held the Tennessee, Texas, Little Rock and Atlanta Conferences. In all these Conferences the brethren were very cordial and brotherly in all our dealings. I have held the Liberia Conference twice; missed one session due to a belated ship.

The educational work throughout the Conference is taking on new life. A definite educational program looking forward to a standardized system is being planned. Mr. P. G. Wolo, a very capable young man, has been recently appointed supervisor. Garraway, Sasstown, Nana Kru, Sinoe River and White Plains will be important educational centers, feeders to the College of West Africa, Stokes Bible School, Hartzell Academy and Cape Palmas Seminary. We have a grant on the Hoffman River by the Cape Palmas people of 150 acres to the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society for the purpose of establishing a Training School for Girls. This would be quite an addition to the working force along educational lines in the Republic. With these schools properly organized and a standardized system of education in operation, we shall be able to train our preachers, teachers and leaders in other walks of life on the field and thereby get better results. There are gathered in these various schools 3,024 scholars with 85 teachers and membership of 9,209.

The Interior, where the bulk of the population is found, is wholly unoccupied. A recent visit to these parts revealed the fact that in two districts alone, Jorquellie and Sanequellie, there are 600,000 people without Church or School. The way is clear to lead these people in large numbers into the Kingdom. This is to be our next move. In Sanequellie, one afternoon in November, it was my privilege to speak to an audience of 3,000 gathered in the market place. They heard me with the keenest interest. One Chief speaking for all the chiefs present (there were 25 or 30 present) urged me to send to their people, their towns, preachers and teachers. In this section alone we could, with a competent working force, reap astonishing results in Kingdom building and more than justify the outlay and efforts of the past. Our working force must be adequate to the demands. It is a field truly white to the harvest.

On the new Kru Coast District, entirely among the Nationals, the membership has been more than doubled during the past two years.

The importance of Self Support is now the thought of the Conference. We plan to celebrate the one hundredth Anniversary of the Conference by placing it on the basis of Self Support.

During the quadrennium much of the time has been spent in acquainting myself with a new, strange and promising field. I have closely identified myself with the work of the Area with the hope of rendering the most effective service.

The visit of Rev. T. S. Donohugh representing the Board of Foreign Missions, last January, was highly appreciated by the Conference. His valuable service and keen interest had a telling effect. The missionaries are men and woman, brave and devoted, and are giving the best they are for the uplift and enlightenment of a neglected people. With an enlarged, constructive program we plan to press forward with faith in God and stretch the curtains of righteousness over the thousands in the Hinterland now without the Gospel.

SOUTH AMERICA

REPORT OF BISHOP W. F. OLDHAM

It is difficult to believe that the quadrennium has almost passed at this writing and yet profound changes have occurred during these four years.

Like a gradual alteration in climate, perhaps the greatest changes are occurring so almost imperceptibly as to be difficult to analyze and describe.

Such, for instance, are the effects of the awakening of the Latin races to the desirability of integrating the whole Latin family into a political "bloc" to offset what is thought to be the ascendancy of the Anglo-Saxon in world affairs. This it is that gives importance to the recent rapprochement between Italy and Spain. For the time, there is some dissatisfaction in France—arising, perhaps, from rivalry in the Mediterranean and in North Africa, but this will pass away. And the Empire Spain sought autocratically to build, may more securely be restored by the free association of the nations speaking the Romance languages.

All this deeply affects South America. For the openly expressed program is to win back to racial allegiance the Western Republics which passed from Spain, politically, into Republicanism, there finding safety in the earlier days under the aegis of the Monroe Doctrine. Now, passing beyond any fears of physical compulsion, they are sought in respectful and even adulatory terms to recognize their racial ties of blood and language and culture that bind them together. The call is the more alluring since the stronger and better developed Republics fret under ceaseless North American utterances regarding the United States alone being the judge of all legitimate action under the "Monroe Doctrine," since the doctrine is unilateral and derives its authority solely from the national will of the U. S. A. A little imagination might lead to a happier treatment of the subject and thus to the readier evolution of a Pan-Americanism which would secure the same ends without constantly growing irritation.

Now all this pours water on the Roman wheel. For no opportunity is lost in declaring that the Latin Church best suits the Latin temperament.

But the New Testament knows nothing about all these "modern" points of view. They belong to a "naturalistic philosophy" so called. A true Christ is as much at home in the Latin as in the "Anglo-Saxon" mind and is entirely suited to both.

The history of the quadrennium in South America proves the truth of this contention. For while the "Dia de la raza," the visits of Cardinals, etc., have held their sentimental appeal, the cause of simple, virile, comparatively unadorned but sincere religion has gone forward in the Methodist camp (and in other evangelical camps) as never before.

Advance has been chiefly in two directions, in the domesticating of the life and institutions of Methodism and in the growing sense of capacity to carry on for ourselves, both in financial resources and in spiritual energy for advance.

Different parts of the field differ much from each other in both these regards but something of movement there has been everywhere and notable movement in places.

To judge by statistics, merely, would be misleading. We have not the mighty hordes of Asia. These are young nations with enormous resources and assured futures. But as yet the populations are scant. Their history is before them. Any healthful touch put upon them now promises great future returns. These peoples are to be weighed, not counted. The counting will come as surely as the presence of great physical abundance must ultimately register in vast populations. The emphatic call is to spiritually seize the cradle of future human swarms before the swarms arrive.

But even in statistics is some room for encouragement. There has been good growth in membership, rising from a total of about 11,000 in 1920 to 14,300 in 1924, or a gain of 30 per cent in the quadrennium, while the development of financial self-support and benevolences has risen from about $70,000 American gold to $150,000 gold, an average for the whole area of about $11.00 gold per capita and a growth of over 100 per cent.

While in the older and better developed work on the East Coast the average rises to $18.00 each, a record without parallel in the whole range of Methodism's Foreign Missions.

But this, while encouraging, tells little of the growing experience of these young churches in deeper knowledge of the things of God, and of the power of grace to cleanse and beautify life as well as the strength that lies in the churches themselves to communicate this new life to communities hitherto untouched.

Great has been my satisfaction to constantly have reported to me, beginnings in new localities, beginnings often made by Godly laymen who have moved into regions where before evangelical teaching was unknown. There are dozens of little groups all over the country with occasional preachings and gettings together of inquiring minds, with some humble but sincere Methodist doing what he can to teach his neighbors.

In this virility of personal religion rather than in any neo-political movement I put my confidence in the expansion of Methodism.

There has been a good deal of church building, the value of our church buildings having risen from about $850,000 gold to over a million and ten thousand. But scattered over four Republics, the call is for an intensive program of church building during the next quadrennium, a program in which the South American Methodists, though small in number, will largely help themselves.

The schools have given us great concern. They are well patronized and more powerful in their impact on the life of the young generation but growing efficiently in state schools and the expanding ideas of education among ourselves, make it increasingly difficult to maintain good schools largely manned by missionary teachers on the small subventions received from the appropriations. It must be true in all our foreign fields that we are attempting abroad, often among unfriendly surroundings, and amid hostile critics, what we could not succeed in doing in the home land, namely, support well-equipped schools from tuition fees and the small yearly doles of the churches—without endowments and special building grants.

Some way must be found to come to the help of all our foreign schools.

In spite of handicaps our South American schools have rendered splendid service. Among the greater assets of the South American area is the Chile Farm school, which promises to be of very large value in the agricultural development of Central Southern Chile and in raising the whole farmer tenantry to higher levels of Christian manhood.

The W. F. M. S. does not have many schools or institutions of any kind in South America, but those there are rank among the best in any land, and such a school as "Crandon Institute" in Montevideo reflects the highest credit upon Methodist enterprise.

Methodist missionaries in South America face difficult situations demanding capacity and utmost patience, and the church may well be proud of the gallant group of her sons and daughters who have worked for this quadrennium under the Southern Cross.

MEXICO CITY AREA

WILBUR P. THIRKIELD, RESIDENT BISHOP

It would appear that in the first assignment of a bishop to Mexico City, the General Conference had in view not merely his relation to a small Conference in the compact territory allocated to the Methodist Episcopal Church, but also to a possible mission of international and interracial service. In fact, in the strong representations made to me through the Episcopal Committee, in the closing hours of the General Conference, after my assignment to another area, the opportunity and the obligation for the broader service in the interest of the Kingdom most keenly appealed to me, and influenced me in my volunteering for service as the first resident bishop for the Mexico City Area. It has therefore been my aim to pave the way towards a better understanding between the two neighboring peoples and to cultivate more cordial international relations in the interest of permanent co-operation and good-will. To this end it has been my privilege to keep in touch with the chief executives and officers of state in both republics, and to directly reach the people through hundreds of addresses, besides articles and interviews in the secular and religious press.

Diplomacy, war, intervention, commercialism through a century have failed to bring these two neighboring nations together. It is time to try nobler motives and new contacts through religion, so that instead of a Border riven by distrust and bloodshed, we may establish a Border of peace and mutual good will, thus riveting together peoples of one continent having common interests and common aims. It is one of the tragedies of North American history that a people along a border of 1,800 miles have been so little influenced in mental outlook, habits of thought, and philosophy of life by contacts with church and state in the United States for hundreds of years. Citizens of one North American continent, we have missed a big chance, through Mexico, to mold the thought and spiritual life of all Latin America. We believe that what Mexico needs is not the "gold-cure" through United States capital and exploitation, but the Christ-cure—the application of the social principles and ideals of Jesus to the whole life of the people in terms of social justice, human sympathy and brotherly helpfulness. The millions of peons are at last breaking through from slavery and darkness into the light of a new day. Herein is the best opportunity ever given the Protestant Church for constructive evangelism.

Area and Supervision. My supervision of the work in Mexico began just at the close of the revolution that seated Obregon in the presidential chair. The courageous and effective work of Bishop McConnell during eight years of revolution is worthy of all praise. The permanence of the evangelical movement is demonstrated by the fact that when every missionary was forced off the field, the work of the Church was firmly held together by national workers. Slow national recovery began in 1920. The favorable attitude of the Obregon government was early assured, the resident bishop being the first representative of any ecclesiastical organization to bring to him Christian salutations. Not a missionary or church has been molested. The lifting of the peon into a broader life, with increased wages and a chance to get land, has been a factor in the increase in membership and giving, as set forth below.

The area comprises the republics of Mexico, Panama, Costa Rica and Peru with Mexico City as the designated residence. Actual working of the area proves it to be, on account of the altitudes and distances, an impossible adjustment of territory for effective supervision. In Mexico the altitude is from 6,500 to 10,000 feet and in Peru from sea level to 16,000 feet. Even by the Pacific line of ships, Panama is twelve days from Mexico City and only six from New York. Japan might as well be attached to the Portland Area as Peru to Mexico City, for the latter is distant eighteen days by rail and ship.

However, the resident bishop has given three months annually to these southern republics except in 1923, when with Bishop Oldham and Dr. Titus Lowe a survey of the Latin-American field was made. It was a privilege to be thus associated with this saintly and heroic missionary leader, to note his methods and to observe the marked signs of progress in his vast area. Through the keen observations of Secretary Lowe, the Board of Foreign Missions has gained invaluable data concerning the entire Latin-American field.

Even with this adjustment of the area the resident bishop was able to spend more time in actual residence in Panama and Peru than in the case of any former administration. During the first three years of the quadrennium he spent September and October in Mexico and two or three months in the winter and spring of each year. The summer and fall of 1923, with the hearty concurrence of the Mexico Finance Committee, were given to the World Service Commission in a campaign especially in behalf of missions and of a larger spirit of co-operation and good will between United States and our neighbor next door.

Union Work. The allocation of territory among the several denominations has vindicated this method in missions. To the Methodist Episcopal Church are assigned the six states on the great central plateau, where the movements in behalf of freedom and the larger life of the people have been carried forward during the past hundred years, and the several denominations are united in a unified program in the furtherance of the evangelical movement. The Union Evangelical Seminary in Mexico City has now its largest enrollment and plans are adopted for an eligible site and buildings. There is a Union Press with a weekly paper and a central book store now located at Gante 5. In the past year all debts of the Press have been paid and in 1923 over 16,000,000 pages were printed. All Protestant forces in Mexico are united in a plan for the founding of a Union Christian University which should do for Mexico what Robert College has done for the Near East. An institution with ample equipment and endowment to train men of character and fit them for genuine leadership and unselfish service, based on thorough intellectual equipment, is the outstanding need of Mexico to-day. The Rev. Dr. O. W. E. Cook, one of our missionaries, during his furlough was chosen to lead this movement, and now by the urgent request of the Federal Council of Churches and the University Council in Mexico, has been assigned to the work of promotion by the Board at New York. Option on a noble site is now held and the outlook is favorable.

Co-operation with the most efficient work and workers or missionaries of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society has been thorough and cordial. The six schools maintained by the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society are of a high order and, in the equipment given Christian women for leadership and service, are fundamental to the whole program for the larger life for Mexico. The Bible School for Deaconesses and Social Workers is linked up to the work at Aztecas and Gante. It sent out five graduates this year. A Conference Deaconess Board was organized in 1922 and the first deaconess consecrated. The organization of the "Joint Committee of Methodist Workers" with monthly meetings, has developed a fine spirit of sympathetic co-operation between missionaries and national workers and has fostered a fine spirit of fellowship in Christian service.

Native Ministry. The demand for a native ministry is urgent to fill the ranks depleted by the retirement of the older group of ministers. To this end, following the seventeen years of faithful administration by that outstanding Mexican leader, Dr. Valderrama, the Puebla Institute was reorganized with an experienced and efficient educator as principal. An evangelical atmosphere was soon manifest. There now are twenty-three candidates in training at the Institute, eighteen of whom are in active service in the missions of Puebla and on the district. Thirty-eight are organized in a Life Service group.

The Annual Ministerial Institute provided for through Dr. MacRossie is having a marked influence in equipping our ministry to meet the exacting requirements of the new day of freedom and enlightenment in Mexico. The "Centenary" has been a valuable training school through its institutes and lay classes. Besides the bi-monthly "Mexico" and "The Bulletin" 90 booklets and leaflets have been issued.

Appropriations. As practically all non-recurring funds had been appropriated before 1920 for debts and for several worthy enterprises, it was necessary for the resident bishop to raise large sums through special gifts for the erection of the Aztecas Social Center group of buildings, the new Puebla church, etc. His purchase of the Patten Rest Home at Cuernavaca (through special funds) has proved of effective service, avoiding the home-going of several missionaries on account of the altitude. The total appropriations from the Board for the entire area since 1920 available for building enterprises in these three republics has been less than $30,000. It should, however, be gratefully recorded that the appropriations on account of enlarged missionary staffs have been about doubled in each mission during the Centenary period:

Stewardship. The Centenary has opened a new era in Mexican Methodism. The adoption of the method and spirit of stewardship has brought in sight the day of an indigenous church that shall achieve the ultimate goal of self support, self direction and self propagation. The stewardship of money represented by 19 per cent of our church members as tithers, accounts for the fact that, for example, Gante Church is now self supporting through giving 14,000 pesos annually as compared with 2,500 pesos in 1918, and also that the Puebla membership out of their poverty have given over 30,000 pesos for the new church. The goal of the Central District is entire self support in 1925.

The following statistics for the Mexico Conference were compiled by Dr. F. F. Wolfe, who has shown unusual efficiency as Area Secretary, and set forth, in brief, the results of the five Centenary years both as related to stewardship and spiritual progress:

During this period an average of 140 Centenary classes have met weekly for Bible study and methods of work with an average attendance of 2,092 members.

Puebla Church. The calamity in the burning of the Puebla Church in 1922 has been turned into a blessing. The architect's plans for a spacious and impressive Gothic church stirred the people to sacrificial giving. With no appropriation from the Board excepting $5,000 in 1924, and only $17,000 available from insurance and loan from the Board, this building at a cost of 120,000 gold pesos was dedicated during the Conference session, March 16, 1924. The giving of over 40,000 pesos by our members and missionaries is unprecedented. Special gifts from the United States were generous.

Seven other churches and six school buildings have been erected. Many properties have been improved. In 1923 a Conference Missionary Society was organized and $1,700 subscribed.

Aztecas Church and Social Service. Through the Aztecas Social Center with its five units now crowned by a commodious Spanish Gothic church, dedicated last March, entrance is made into an open door of social service and evangelical opportunity. This is a form of work neglected by the Catholic Church and this first concrete example of Christian service through dispensary, kindergarten, day nursery, night schools and recreation center, together with home visitation in the interest of health, sanitation, instructed motherhood and ennobled childhood, has already taken hold of the thought and imagination of both the ministry and the people in the city and throughout the Conference. The response to this social approach in Christ's name is manifest in a membership increased from a minor mission group to a church of over 300 members, with gifts of 5,000 pesos to the church and with plans for entire self-support next year.

The appropriation of $2,000 annually by the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals has enabled our church through the leadership of Professor Andres Osuna to greatly advance the cause of temperance reform and prohibition, to which our pastors and church people are firmly and aggressively committed.

The international vision and missionary spirit of the Board of the Epworth League is manifest in providing for the leadership of our young people through an efficient secretary for Mexico. The president and general secretary of the League, after personal visitations, have approved the results. A literature in Spanish has been created and the League work unified and strengthened.

SEMI-CENTENNIAL

Extensive plans were projected for the proper celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of Methodist missions in Mexico in 1873 by Bishop Gilbert Haven and Dr. William Butler and to commemorate the great work of Dr. John Butler and other workers. The revolution that began last December forced the postponement of this celebration. However, an illustrated history of the mission of 225 pages, printed in both Spanish and English, has been published.

CENTRAL AMERICAN MISSION CONFERENCE

In 1920 I organized the Central American Mission Conference with seven members. The work has made good progress. The college and church in Panama have gained enlarged equipment through the addition of a new stone building. School standards have been raised, and through evangelistic work the membership of the Sea Wall Church has been more than doubled and five missions started with Sunday schools among the Spanish and West Indians. The return of Dr. George A. Miller as superintendent has brought new strength and hope.

Instead of one missionary in Costa Rica as in 1920, we now have eleven workers with excellent properties in three centers. The organization of the Escuela Metodista in San Jose, the capital, with a staff of efficient teachers, so gained favor that the President of the Republic gave the first commencement address, warmly commending the school. It has now moved into a commodious central building, required by the growth of the school. A Biblical Institute is a valuable addition to our work. The standards of our schools are being raised, in line with the policy of Superintendent Miller, expressed in the word that "wherever we have developed strong secondary schools our graduates are coming to prominence and influence and bear with them through life the stamp of our ideals." A church press is maintained in Panama and two papers are issued.

NORTH ANDES MISSION CONFERENCE

The outstanding fact in Lima has been a revival in the churches resulting in eighty conversions, the spiritual quickening of pastors and people and the expansion of the work through six native preachers which has resulted in an increase of interest in the work of church and Sunday school. The same spirit is manifest in churches far up the Andes with a Conference net gain in 1923 of 20 per cent in membership and 25 per cent in self-support. The cumulative power of the work is evidenced in the statistical survey of Superintendent Archard showing an increase in the past quadrennium in the number of ministers, members, and self-support, equalling that of the entire previous twenty years. Thus one soweth and another reapeth. After years of waiting the Victoria Church in Lima is now completed and a commodious church at Huancayo is provided for.

Hospital. At Lima a joint contract had been made with the British-American Committee for the erection of a hospital at the cost of about $150,000. Bishop Oldham had shown the firm purpose of our Church by the purchase of a lot for $20,400. Centenary funds failed, but the obligation held. Fortunately on my arrival, the Casa de Salud, a well equipped hospital, occupying an entire block, was in straits and for sale. I proposed to the Committee that they purchase and modernize the hospital and the Mission would furnish what would be equivalent to eight per cent on their investment by the assignment for service of a surgeon-in-chief and two other members of the staff. This was possible because of limited missionary salaries. We now, therefore, have a noble hospital plant with four members on the Board of Governors, "operated by the Mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church." The President of the Republic was present at the formal opening and has become a patron, together with the Secretary of State and other officials, attracted by the exceptional skill of Dr. McCormick.

Biblical Institute. My first visit to Huancayo, 16,000 feet over the top of the Andes, revealed the necessity of a native ministry for the evangelization of millions of Indians, now in a worse condition than when Spain and the church first named Christ to them. Here in connection with the North Andian Institute, for which Bishop Oldham through a wise purchase secured a spacious campus and three buildings, I established in 1920 a Biblical Institute for preachers and social workers. Eight candidates started their training the first year, with an increase in the second and third years. From this Institute we have received into the Conference three ministers and through this group of workers many Indian villages have been effectively reached. They welcome this new evangel eagerly and it is an opportunity unmeasured.

The elementary school at Callao is now self supporting with an annual surplus. The Lima High School has been consolidated with the best established school in Peru with our principal as one of the executive officers. Provision was thus made for a boys' dormitory under definite religious control and direction, which is the only effective method for the training of groups of evangelical ministers, teachers and social workers for missionary service.

COPENHAGEN AREA

ANTON BAST, RESIDENT BISHOP

Copenhagen Area embraces the northern part of Europe from the Arctic Sea to Baltica. It covers a territory of 459,000 square miles. The Methodist Episcopal Church in this Area is at work in northern towns where for months at a time in summer the sun never sets and in winter never rises. The church membership is well scattered over the Area from this northern territory to the most southern part of the Danish country. Most of Norway, Sweden and Finland is very thinly populated. The people in these poorer regions are neglected in every sense—including the work of Christian churches. The state churches claim as members all but the very few who have actually withdrawn their membership. There is a shortage of pastors for the state churches, especially in the distant and poorer parishes; the clergy are attracted to the more wealthy churches.

It is in these poorer sections of Norway and Sweden that Methodism has made its greatest gains during the quadrennium; for it is to these sections that the Bishop has appointed most of the Methodist pastors. Of course the churches are small because of the scattered population; nevertheless an excellent evangelistic work has been carried on by pastors and lay preachers, and a foundation has been laid for extensive Christian activity.

The past four years in Scandinavia, as in other parts of the world, have been seriously affected by the dreadful aftermath of the World War. Although the Copenhagen Area outside of Finland did not take an active part in the War, it has shared in the suffering and other consequences of the calamity. It has suffered especially because of its proximity to those countries to which the war was most costly. To Scandinavia the War has meant stagnation in commercial affairs, the worst unemployment situation in her history, a drop in money values, high prices, an emphasis on material things, religious indifference, and a recklessness leading often to blasphemy and mockery of holy things. The housing situation and many other evils have served the forces of wrong and have seemed to deprave the people.

State expenses are so high that people with good incomes have been so taxed they are obliged to forego all but the necessities of life.

Our church members have spent considerable of their money that would otherwise have gone into our treasuries in assisting our war-stricken neighbors in Austria and Germany. We miss the income in our churches, but we are glad that God has enabled us to be of some service to these stricken people. We would not have it otherwise. We have not done as much for these sufferers as we ought to have done, but we can say that much money and goods have gone from Methodist pockets and families through our Methodist pastors.

In spite of these conditions the Area has made progress toward self-support. High prices have prevented us from freeing the Board of Foreign Missions from much of its grants toward our work, but we have raised more money for self-support this quadrennium than in any previous four-year period. And we are determined to do still better in the future. The Area Council has adopted a program for the gradual diminishing of aid from the Board of Foreign Missions, so that outside of Finland we may be self-supporting in about twenty years; then we plan to pay back what we received in past years.

The Centenary call for prayer, activity and giving met with fine response all over the Area. It has been a time of humility and prayer; more than ever before our pastors and laymen have engaged in evangelistic work. A spirit of missionary zeal has taken hold of many of our young people. It is no exaggeration to say that more than a score of intelligent, well-trained young Scandinavians are now ready to go wherever the church has a work for them. Many are in preparation in schools and hospitals planning to devote their lives to foreign mission work.

SWEDEN

Statistics show a decrease in church membership within the Swedish Conference. Unfortunately this is the case with every organized free church in the country. It is due in part to the universal religious indifference and pleasure seeking in after-war days. It seems to have been harder to Sweden than to any other country. It is also in part due to the rapid spreading over Sweden of such movements as Christian Science, Russelism, Theosophy, Spiritism and similar cults. The so-called Pentecostal Movement has been a disrupting influence in the organized churches, and has taken away many of their members.

Yet in quite a number of places—especially in the neglected sections of the north—Methodism has done a great work. Ten new churches have been organized. Sixteen new church edifices have been built, and a like number of older ones have been thoroughly repaired. Thirteen new parsonages have been erected or purchased. The purchase of a central building as headquarters in Stockholm has been of value to our activities throughout Sweden. Here are to be found the deaconess home, Conference and office rooms, and the bishop's headquarters. It is planned before long to have the Swedish Book Concern have its quarters in this building.

Self-support has increased more than twenty per cent over last quadrennium. But to that may also be added money collected in the Centenary time for the consolidating of the several branches of the work, and now held in solid stocks as a foundation for self-support in coming years when grants from the Board of Foreign Missions will be diminished and finally cease.

NORWAY

A serious menace to our Christian work has been the turning of many of our laboring people to Bolshevism as proclaimed from Moscow. Many of the trade unions have proclaimed free-thinking as a necessity for membership. If one wants a position in the union or wants to be considered a member in good standing, he must declare himself a free-thinker. This has forced some of our Methodist brethren who believe communism the best political scheme to desert their fellow workers and give up positions of trust. One of these is a member of parliament elected by the communists. Of course this is proving a serious check to Methodism's work among the laboring classes—and it was here that we formerly did our most fruitful work.

Nevertheless our Norwegian pastors have not worked in vain. Doors have been opened to them everywhere. Especially in the northern part of the country have they been successful. These territories, where live the poorer people, have been free from the worst of the poison of free-thinking. We must use this opportunity to give them a form of Christianity that will preserve them when Satan and his helpers are at hand.

During the quadrennium four new churches were organized and three church edifices were built. In southern Norway two new churches were organized. In the south there are also several strong churches that during this period have built parsonages, or have had their buildings renovated, repaired or wholly rebuilt.

Our work in Christiana has greatly benefited by the purchase of a large central building. Here one of our churches has found a permanent home, and such activities as the theological school, the deaconess work, the home for young people from the country who are also university students, and the Christian hospital find quarters here. This excellent property in Christiana will in the near future be the headquarters for all our Methodist work in Norway.

The Norwegian churches have increased their giving for pastors' salaries more than 78 per cent during the quadrennium; and other large sums have been received by the Centenary committee for other self-supporting purposes.

DENMARK

The churches in Denmark have gone forward during the quadrennium. There has been a steady increase year by year in membership, in Sunday schools and in finances. The work has been carried on steadily in the older congregations, and five new churches have been organized. While the membership in the churches has increased by only nine per cent, finances have increased more rapidly. The receipts for pastors' salaries have increased by more than 130 per cent, and we are on the way toward self-support. Our people were greatly inspired by the Centenary message. We have had difficult times financially, and people once well-to-do are now poor. But their giving has been marked by a regularity which has in the end brought good results.

In the provinces given back to Denmark after the war, our Methodist work has prospered. There are very good congregations in several places. At Flensburg we have taken over the members who formerly belonged to the German Church there. As Kolding was the town nearest the old border, we organized the church members living there and made that town the fortress from which we waged the battle against sin and ungodliness in the new territory; here towns and villages are filled with saloons and rumshops—more in proportion to population than in any place in the older Denmark.

Three new churches were built during the quadrennium, and two houses (formerly used by saloon keepers) were bought and transformed into Methodist prayer-houses; one of them is in Hamlet's old historic town of Elsinore. This town has property for the erection of a church in the future. Seven parsonages were either built or purchased. The housing calamity forced upon the churches the necessity of thus securing new homes for our pastors.

FINLAND

Although the Methodist Episcopal Church has always been a "revival church" in Finland, it has been that especially during the past four years. It has poured new life into the churches. The other free churches, and even the state church, have been awakened to a larger aggressiveness and more evangelistic zeal. They have imitated especially our work among the country people and those in the villages. By the grace of God our church in a high degree has been an instrument to influence the Finnish people to a truer understanding of Christianity—an understanding that has developed since the war. That result is due chiefly to the Centenary Movement. In many of our churches there have been strong revivals. In the three years, 1920 to 1923, of the present quadrennium, 1,934 persons have united with the Methodist Episcopal Church; while in the former similar period the number was 282. The receipts for foreign missions show a similar increase: 32,895 Fm. in the earlier quadrennium; 129,822 Fm. in the one just closing.

New work has been undertaken in Wuoksenlaakso, where we now have the largest church in the country with its own building and parsonage. New churches have also been organized in Joensuu, Kajana, Sardavala, Lahtis, Dalsbruk and Skaftung. The Swedish congregation at Dalsbruk has built a church. In Abo, Borga, Jacobsstad, Tammerfors, Sideby and Viborg houses have been purchased and fitted up as churches. Parsonages have been built or purchased at Tammerfors, Dalsbruk, Jacobsstad and Wuoksenlaakso.

In 1919 the sum of 136,898 Fm. was raised toward self-support. The increase was more than 100 per cent in 1923, the total received being 288,015 Fm.

EDUCATIONAL WORK AND WORK FOR YOUTH

The main object of our educational work is the training of men for our ministry. On account of the difference of languages the earlier education has to be carried on in the local countries; until now it is the only thing we have done. Some of our preachers have studied at the national universities and at American Methodist universities, but after graduating from our theological schools most of them have had to be content with the course of study as prescribed in the Discipline. For many years we have felt the need for an institute of higher standing; we planned for it for many years, but every plan failed until we secured an area council. In February of last year the plan was worked out, and we went ahead to secure a suitable building for a joint theological school. An estate in Gothenborg, Sweden, well adapted to our needs, was purchased, and plans made so that the work was commenced in February of this year.

During the quadrennium we have had in our four theological schools 92 students. Of these 39 have completed their studies and have taken up the active work of the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church. More will be ready for service during the present year.

In Denmark our "People's High School" has educated the young people of our Epworth Leagues to higher spiritual and intellectual standards. With the aid of the Centenary and with other moneys collected by the Epworthians and other friends it has been made possible to secure a large garden near Aarhus and to have a school house built on the site.

EPWORTH LEAGUES

The Centenary movement met with a great response from the young people. The Epworth Leagues of Denmark have decided to pay the salary of a former member who is now a missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church to the Belgian Congo. In Finland the Epworthians are among the leaders in the great revivals. They regularly attend Bible study and mission study classes. In Norway the membership has increased 18 per cent. What has been said about the Finnish young people may be said about the Norwegians also; they are eagerly taking part in evangelistic and revival work. It is an omen for future good in Sweden that courses in Bible study and in missions are conducted. The students in our theological schools come largely from the Epworth Leagues. It was in Epworth League prayer meetings and Bible study classes that the abilities of these young people were discovered.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS

Dr. Ernest L. Mills has rendered valuable service to the Sunday school cause on the area. In each Conference in Sweden, Norway and Denmark a pastor has been appointed for Sunday school extension work. Dr. Mills has inspired us to greater effort in the training and education of teachers.

The increase in the number of students has varied in the several Conferences, but the total enrollment shows an increase of 3,500. Connected with the Sunday school are such organizations as the Junior League, the Boy Scouts and the Girl Scouts. They have grown very fast in Scandinavia; they can be of great service if they are led in the right way; that is the problem we are trying to solve with the blessing of God who has charged us to "feed my lambs."

SOCIAL WORK

Our social work goes on hand in hand with our religious and evangelistic work. Those who support the social work do so because of the moral values and moral influence. Our social work is divided into work for the sick, work for the old and feeble people, work for young mothers with babies, work for destitute men.

DEACONESS WORK

The work for the sick, the old and the feeble and part of the work for the destitute children is carried on mainly by our deaconesses. On the whole Area we have 160 consecrated deaconesses and a large number of probationers—an increase of 38 per cent during the quadrennium. From seven headquarters they go out to do their ministry of service in hospitals, in homes for old people, in children's homes, or as workers engaged by local churches for service among the poor and destitute people of the community. Our best deaconess work is in Norway, where we have an excellent hospital in Bergen. In Sweden two homes for sick people belong to our church and are under the direction of deaconesses; the Danish deaconesses have three homes for sick and feeble persons. Besides that our deaconesses are in great demand by doctors and hospitals everywhere; at least one hospital (not a Methodist) is guided solely by deaconesses. Besides the hospitals, most of the homes for old people, the recreation homes and the children's homes are served by deaconesses.

OLD PEOPLE'S HOMES

In addition to the homes for old and feeble people managed directly by our deaconesses, we have on the Area three other homes for old people (and two others under erection) and two recreation homes.

WORK FOR CHILDREN

Seven hundred and twenty-nine destitute children are cared for in twenty-one children's homes. Besides the permanent homes we have a large number of day nurseries and provisional institutions, where children are cared for when mothers are obliged to work outside their homes. Some of these institutions are for the older children; here they are given food and shelter in the leisure hours when the day-schools are closed and both parents are at work. In these temporary places of residence the child learns his lessons for the next day of school; when that is done the inspectress leads in songs and in play. During the summer vacation period our Central Missions conduct children's colonies in the country; and there thousands of city children may get fresh air and nourishing food during several weeks. In the winter time our Central Missions and many of our churches conduct soup-kitchens for hungry children; there they can have a meal of nourishing food every day. In almost every church there is a ladies' organization preparing clothes for the poor and destitute children.

CENTRAL MISSIONS

As already stated, most of our children's work is carried on by central missions. In almost all of the larger cities of the Area there has been organized Central Mission work after the model of the Copenhagen Central Mission. The aim of these missions is in the name of the Lord to bring both temporal and spiritual relief to the people in greatest need. This work is financed chiefly by well-to-do people outside the church, but of course our own members share in the giving, and they carry on the actual work. In the winter season people by the thousands go to the central mission for bread, fuel and house rent, so that they may avoid losing their homes and being cared for at public expense—which means that they would lose their citizenship and other privileges which go with it.

Another important work of a central mission is to provide night lodgings for single men who are out of work and have used up all their money. We take them in for a few nights, give them necessary food, while we try to find them employment or get them in touch with families of friends. If they have neither family nor friend we let them work at wood chopping or some similar tasks. This is a very much needed rescue work; through it many young men are lifted to a higher plane for their whole mode of living. In connection with this work we have lectures and musicales for these folks out of work.

Still another greatly needed work carried on by our central missions is among mothers with children who are without homes. This is a special feature of the activities of the Copenhagen Central Mission. When such a woman comes to the central mission she is given food and shelter for a short time, while she herself or we are finding for her a permanent home. We have a home for young girl-mothers where they may be before their babies are born and after they are born; twenty of them can be cared for here; and we assist them in finding homes for their little ones whom they have learned to love.

There are many other forms of Christian work carried on all over the Area by the central missions and by the social workers and institutions in general of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Our social work has given us an eminent place among the churches.

God grant us the grace and spiritual power to carry on our social work and our evangelistic work among our fellowmen.

THE MEDITERRANEAN AREA

BISHOP EDGAR BLAKE

The Mediterranean Area comprises the territory in the Mediterranean Basin, the Balkan Peninsula, and the Madeira Islands. It embraces France, Spain, Italy, Yugo-Slavia, Bulgaria, Tunisia, Algeria and Madeira. It also includes the Italian work in Switzerland. Our work touches two continents, Europe and Africa. It serves three civilizations, Latin, Slavic, and Arabic. It confronts three great and powerful religious systems—the Roman Catholic, the Greek Orthodox, and Mohammedanism. The Area is one of the most fascinating and challenging in the Church in the variety and complexity of its problems.

We are working in eleven languages: French, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, German, Hungarian, Serbian, Bulgarian, Arabic, Kabyle, and English. Our work is evangelistic, social, recreational, educational, medical and physical relief. In addition to our churches, we have 14 schools, 12 orphanages, 5 dispensaries, 8 social and 6 industrial centers. In our orphanages and schools we are caring for the training of more than two thousand children.

In point of membership the Mediterranean Area is the smallest in the Church and seems likely to remain so for a long time. The conditions we face are such as to challenge our faith and zeal to the utmost. Nothing but a long and persistent campaign of the most determined character will establish evangelical Christianity, as we understand it, in Southern and South-eastern Europe and in North Africa. If we expect quick returns, and large results immediately, we shall be disappointed. It is not a work of years but of generations that confronts us. Unless we are willing to face this fact and accept it, it is better that we acknowledge our unwillingness to undertake so difficult a task, and withdraw from the field.

ROMAN CATHOLICISM

Roman Catholicism is the dominant and controlling religion in the Latin countries. It is more dominant to-day than for a century. By a strange turn of fortune, combined with skillful and not over scrupulous diplomacy, the Vatican that sought the defeat of the Allied Nations during the war, is more strongly entrenched politically in the Allied Nations than before the war.

In Italy, the crucifix has been restored in public schools by government decree. Roman Catholicism has been officially acknowledged as the national religion by the state. The teaching of its traditions and dogmas has been made compulsory in the elementary schools. The Vatican now has the opportunity it has sought for half a century to capture the youth of Italy, and is bending every effort to do so. The fruitage of the life time struggle of Cavour and Mazzini and Garibaldi to deliver Italy from the bondage of Romanism has been swept away in a day. Whether the destruction is to be complete and permanent remains to be seen.

France has reestablished diplomatic relations with the Vatican. It is again sending its representative to Rome, and Rome is sending its nuncio to Paris. The church properties that were taken by the state at the time of the separation have been returned to the church. The religious orders that were expelled from the country are returning in strength. Religious organizations that were looked upon as a menace to the life of the French nation are being received again within its hospitable borders. The leaders of the church do not conceal their hostility to the republic, nor do they hesitate to work for its overthrow and the reestablishment of the monarchy. While all this is transpiring, the voice of Protestantism is too feeble to be heard or too weak to be heeded.

Spain appears to be as strongly in the grip of Catholicism as ever. A few months ago a liberal government proposed to grant religious freedom to all churches and religions. It was immediately overthrown and a dictatorship put in its place. It was only a few weeks ago that the King and Queen of Spain made their famous pilgrimage to Rome and kissed the Pope's toe in token of allegiance and submission. This humiliating spectacle passed without a protest from their subjects at home.

Roman Catholicism in Europe is the same narrow and intolerant ecclesiasticism that it has always been. It does not and apparently cannot change. Every organization and movement that makes for progress is fought with the same bitterness and unscrupulous skill as in the days of Pius IX, who placed a ban on railroads on the ground that railroads make for progress, and progress is a foe to religion and the church. During the past year, Protestant Bibles have been publicly burned in the streets of Rome by the authorities of the church. Methodism has been assailed in the most bitter and violent fashion by the Catholic controlled press. It has been misrepresented, maligned and opposed in the most virulent fashion. The faithful have been warned against us, and assistance has been summoned from America to drive the Methodists from the Eternal City.

The Reformed Church is doing its work with splendid courage in France as are the Waldensians in Italy. But their numbers are too few and their resources too limited to successfully withstand the onslaught of political Romanism with its unlimited resources and power.

In Spain there is no Protestant Church capable of even seeming to meet the situation. If Protestantism is not to perish as a vital force in the life of the Latin countries, the present evangelical agencies must be supplemented by some great and powerful Protestant body such as Methodism. I do not believe that this is a time for retreat or timidity. Methodism can, if it will, put heart and life into the Protestant forces of Southern Europe. To curtail our activities or to lessen our efforts in the least degree in the face of the present emergency would be a surrender of the providential responsibility that has been placed upon us for such a time as this.

MOHAMMEDANISM

There is probably no field that offers a more promising approach to Moslemism than North Africa. This does not mean that the numerical returns have been notable as yet; or that they are likely to be in the near future. A people moulded into a single groove for forty generations cannot be changed in one.

Mohammedanism is not only a religion, it is a complete political and social system. It is a net work of regulations, customs and laws. Its followers are hedged about and protected at every turn from non-Moslem influences. And if perchance a Mohammedan becomes a convert to Christianity the social penalties are such as to make life unbearable in a Mohammedan community. Yet, in spite of these difficulties, the case is not hopeless. North Africa offers probably the most fruitful approach to Mohammedanism to be found anywhere. The Berber population was Christian until it was overwhelmed by the Arab invasion and forced to accept Mohammed as its prophet at the peril of the sword. The Berbers are in close and sympathetic contact with Western Christianity. Their interests center in Europe rather than in Arabia. Gradually they are taking on the form and substance of our own civilization. The Berbers are probably more open to Christian approach than any other section of the Mohammedan world. If we are wise, we shall strengthen our stakes in North Africa and carry forward our work there with increasing zeal and with constantly enlarging resources. North Africa is on the eve of large developments if we but press our work with the necessary vigor and support.

THE BALKANS

The Balkans, still the fire-brand of Europe, have been opened up to outside influences through the war. A process of reconstruction is going on. New forces are at work, new ideas are coming into play, new foundations are being laid, new institutions are becoming possible. The Balkans that gave so much and received so much during the war are increasingly open to us.

In Yugo-Slavia our work is developing rapidly in the North. New congregations are being gathered, new churches are being organized, and our membership is increasing. The future in Yugo-Slavia is a matter of men and money. The former are available as rapidly as the latter is obtainable.

During the quadrennium we have taken over the work of the American Board in Macedonia. The need there is as great as in the Apostle's day, and the cry is the same: "Come over into Macedonia and help us." Macedonia has been the cockpit of the Balkans for centuries and is still its greatest menace. Exploited and oppressed by the Turks for centuries, the Macedonians are still in a state of unrest and ferment. No people of Europe are more in need of the healing influences of the Gospel of Christ and its constructive ministry than the Macedonians.

Little Albania stretched out its hands to Methodism for aid. It offered to put its public schools under our care and to submit the education of its youth to our direction, if we would accept the responsibility. Albania is the only Mohammedan nation that has ever appealed to Christianity to save it. Thus far nothing has been done. Obligations to other fields and lack of funds for new work have prevented us from answering Albania's cry for help. Unless the appeal is soon answered it will cease. The opportunity will pass, and the responsibility for another unheard call will be laid against us.

Bulgaria has been an orphan among the missions of Methodism for half a century. Our Church assumed responsibilities and failed to meet them. We have not understood Bulgaria's needs. When we should have given with a lavish hand we withheld our bounty, and doled out a pittance. Bulgaria is open to evangelical Christianity. It is hospitable to kindness and sympathy. We have work there that is a credit to Methodism and the Kingdom of Christ. If Bulgaria had been fed instead of starved, it would have compared favorably with the most prosperous missions of the Church. Happily the policy of the past is being changed. We are beginning to deal with Bulgaria in a more generous fashion. Time will demonstrate the wisdom of the new way. Unless we are greatly mistaken Bulgarian Methodism will soon come to its own.

POLICIES

A quadrennium of constant contact with the several fields of the Area, a study of their needs, and the means of meeting them, has steadily strengthened the conviction that a more adequate equipment is absolutely indispensable for the larger success of our work. Little halls, located in out-of-the-way places, do not and will not command the attention and respect of peoples who are accustomed to Cathedrals. There is no greater waste of money than to put it into work where the limitations of equipment are such as to make impossible results that justify the expenditure of the time, talent and money invested. We must have places of worship that are of sufficient dignity to command the respect of those whom we are seeking to aid. We cannot hope to win self-respecting Frenchmen, Italians, Spaniards or Portuguese, through means that self-respecting Americans would not support or tolerate. We must have buildings properly located, respectable in appearance, and equipped for the largest social ministry, if we are to make any great impression upon the peoples we desire to serve. We might as well pour our money into rat holes as to attempt to do business for the Kingdom of God under the conditions and limitations that frequently confront us, conditions that are a reproach to any church or religion.

Our first duty is to make Christians, not Methodists merely. We must socialize as well as evangelize our ministry. When John sent his messengers to Jesus to inquire, "Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?" Jesus said, "Tell John of the works of healing and service. They are the proofs of my Messiahship." The ministry of the Church must be as varied as the needs of the people. We must be "all things to all men" if we would win them. Multitudes outside the Church look upon it as a parasite, whose aim is to get, not to give; whose purpose is to rule, not to serve. Until we can disabuse their minds of these prejudices, and demonstrate that Methodism is in the field to serve, we cannot hope for any large response to our appeal. The preaching of the Gospel must be accompanied by a constantly increasing social ministry. Without it our preaching will be in vain.

Among the Mohammedan peoples medical missions must find a constantly enlarging place in our program. The need of physical healing is great. Men and women and little children live and die with never a doctor or nurse to care for them. The wastage of human life is appalling. They are neglected as though they were not, nor had ever been. They sicken and die and nobody cares. The ministry of Jesus was a healing ministry. He cured bodies as well as souls. He fought disease as he fought sin. Both were a curse to humanity, in his sight. The Church must follow in His train. The healing ministry is the most effective form of evangelism. The Moslem may controvert our preaching but he cannot answer Christianity's service to the poor and needy. One cure in the name of Christ is worth a thousand sermons. Yet we have not a single medical mission in the whole of North Africa.

Youth is our largest hope. It is from them that our leadership must come. Americans cannot save Europeans. They can help. But only nationals can save their own countrymen. Our schools must be strengthened and others must be established. Education is our greatest power. The most strategic work with this generation is to train the leaders for the next. Schools, more schools, and better schools for the young is our crying necessity. A thousand leaders for to-morrow is better than ten thousand converts for to-day.

Among the Moslems, industrial education must have a large place. Mohammedan communities need carpenters, masons, mechanics, and farmers as well as evangelists. A Christian carpenter may be quite as effective in turning a Moslem village to Christ as a Christian preacher. A thousand carefully trained Christian craftsmen would win Moslem North Africa to Christ in two generations. We have the beginnings but they are small and inadequate. We must have help and have it generously. We have the plans. We need the money to mature them.

Larger administrative freedom must be given to the Church abroad if it is to grow in strength. Our ministers and people must be allowed a larger measure of control over their own affairs. They know the field. They know its needs. And they can be trusted. They will make mistakes, but they will unmake them also. They will learn by doing, and only by doing. The present policy of controlling everything from America even to "the putty in the window panes," can only result in a weak and sickly church, without initiative, strength or power. Continued administrative domination by American boards and committees means strangulation and death. The field must have freedom if it is to flourish.

REPORT OF THE ZURICH AREA

JOHN L. NUELSEN, RESIDENT BISHOP

During the past four years the nations within the boundaries of the Zurich Area have been kept in a state of constant unrest, uncertainty, and anxiety. The two storm centers of the economic and political history of the present time, Germany and Russia, are in the Zurich Area; the other countries are the small remnants of formerly large and powerful nations, namely, the present republic of Austria and the decapitated Kingdom of Hungary—still a Kingdom although without a King—and, besides the newly formed republics separated from the former Russian Empire, namely, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania. Little Switzerland is the only country in the area that has not taken part in the war nor has passed through a political or social revolution nor suffered a diminution of its former territory. Political disturbances, social unrest, economic uncertainty, international distrust and enmity have kept these countries in constant foment; prolonged physical suffering, mental bewilderment, moral perplexities and religious anxieties have shaken the very foundations of life and have thrown the masses into a state of intense perturbation.

This is the background upon which the Methodist Episcopal Church has endeavored to carry on the work of the Master with an increasing conviction that God has called her to render a large and significant contribution in the building of the new Europe, a conviction which has been confirmed by her growing visible success both in numbers and in influence.

Let it be stated most emphatically that we are not in Europe merely to build up our own ecclesiastical organization at the expense of other evangelical bodies. We are not wasting our time or our money in the attempt to make Methodists out of Lutherans or even of Catholics. Small business this would be—unworthy of a large body of Christians in these harrowing times. We are there by Divine Providence to assist the other followers of the Christ in their impossible task; to bear our share of the common burden, and to make our contribution to the religious, moral, social and economic life of Continental Europe.

INCREASE

In all sections of this area there has been a remarkable growth. The number of members of the Church has risen from 43,033 in 1920 to 52,868 in the summer of 1923 when the Conferences met, an increase of 9,835. During the winter months enough accessions were reported to warrant me in reporting a gain of 11,000 church members; that is more than 20 per cent. In our Sunday schools we have 63,144 scholars, an increase of 10,562; in our Epworth Leagues there are 25,494 young people enrolled, an increase of 6,247. In our three Annual Conferences, two mission Conferences and two missions, we have now 315 preachers in full connection—on trial, an increase of 48.

Owing to the unprecedented depreciation of the money in most of the countries of the area it is impossible to make at this time an adequate estimate of the value of our Church property. We have been able through the Centenary to acquire very valuable property at a comparatively small cost.

SWITZERLAND

In Switzerland the work shows an encouraging growth; not by leaps and bounds, but steady and healthy. The outstanding fact is the admission, two years ago, of the Methodist Episcopal Church into the Church Federation of Switzerland. This Federation comprises the Evangelical National Churches in the various cantons of Switzerland, the Methodist Episcopal Church being the first free church admitted on equal standing with the national churches.

Financially our Swiss Methodists have done most remarkably. The country has been seriously affected by the economic conditions prevailing in Europe. There is a great deal of unemployment in the industrial section of the country and the influx of tourists, one of the main sources of income, was until a year ago alarmingly small. In spite of the economic hardships the Swiss Methodists have not only heroically supported all the activities of the Church but have taken thousands of children from Austria and Germany into their homes feeding them for one or two months and supplying them with clothing; and they have collected and sent to the suffering countries provisions and clothing enough to fill more than sixty freight cars.

AUSTRIA

In Austria there is a strong Roman Catholic reaction. The revolution swept the Socialists into power and they granted religious liberty, not because they particularly cared for religion but in order to weaken the Roman Catholic Church. However gradually the Catholics recovered. While not in absolute control of the government as before the war, they determine the policy. Yet Austria is still an open country, the masses are hungry for the gospel; large crowds attend the evangelistic services. We have many open doors. Our embarrassment is the lack of equipment. In the city of Vienna we could open a mission in every one of the twenty-two districts into which the city is divided and would have it crowded with people if we had the means to rent or buy or build. The Superintendent, Rev. Hinrich Bargmann has conducted evangelistic meetings in a number of cities; everywhere the doors are open.

Money in Austria is now stabilized, but like in all countries where currency was inflated stabilization has resulted in a steady rise of prices involving great hardships and privations. Our social work is more necessary than ever. We have an industrial work in Vienna employing over fifty women in manufacturing of Viennese handicraft, as beaded purses, and embroideries. The products are sold in Switzerland, England, Australia, and America. In our Children's Home at Tuernitz, we give every year to approximately 800 underfed children a four weeks' vacation. This work has received high commendation from municipal and state authorities.

HUNGARY

There is no field in the Zurich Area, perhaps none in the whole Church, where more has been accomplished with pitifully small resources than in Hungary under the energetic and sacrificial leadership of Superintendent Martin Funk. Paltry five thousand dollars per year for the support of the superintendent, seven ordained preachers, and eight other helpers who give their whole time to the work as well as for the evangelistic, educational, literary, social, and administrative work. During the quadrennium, Hungary received $4,000 for building projects. And yet we have 662 church members, an increase during the quadrennium of 547, or 500 per cent. We have 727 children in our Sunday schools, an increase of 687 or nearly 600 per cent. We have an addition to our headquarters in Budapest properties in three other places, we have a Book Concern, a preparatory seminary for preachers, an orphan home, a children's home located in Budakesy, a charming mountain resort, where we take care of more than two hundred underfed children from the slums of Budapest; we operate an industrial school for girls, a day nursery for children in one of the most densely populated sections of the capital city; we manage a young men's home; we have started a temperance restaurant, the only one in the city of Budapest; we publish a temperance paper in the Hungarian language and are considered the leaders in the prohibition movement in the country. The story of our work in Hungary is a marvel. I question a better anywhere in the world; an investment of $5,000 per year is yielding larger returns. But the appropriation is pitifully inadequate. With $15,000 to $20,000 a year we could revolutionize the religious life of the nation. The Hungary Mission requests to be allowed to organize as a Mission Conference and I recommend that this request be granted.

GERMANY

Every report that comes to me from our District Superintendent and Pastors in Germany emphasizes two outstanding facts—(1) the hunger for the bread of life among multitudes of the German people; (2) the physical hunger and distress of our own Methodist folks and the great mass of the people. The newspaper reporters, the tourists, the politicians, coming from foreign countries see neither the one nor the other. Their attention is arrested by the movements on the surface, the luxurious hotel life, the gay night life, the noisy slogans of political parties, the propaganda of the daily press. Yet I am convinced that the two most momentous movements, shaping the life of the German people of to-morrow are the religious revival and the physical suffering: the hunger for daily bread, and the hunger for the bread of life. Methodism has the opportunity and is under the divinely imposed obligation to meet this need thus making a contribution to the new life of Germany, larger and more influential than was ever thought of.

The revival fires are aglow in all sections of the country, conversions and accessions to the Church by the hundreds, by the thousands. In most places our churches and halls are too small. We should enlarge almost every one of our places of worship; we should build in twenty or thirty of the leading cities large central Mission Halls containing full equipment for the spiritual and social program of the Church; we should have half a dozen tents for evangelistic meetings. They would be crowded every night during the season. We are absolutely cramped and hindered on account of the lack of equipment. Our Methodist young people are in the forefront of Germany's Youth Movement; abstaining from its excesses, deepening its moral significance, its social usefulness. Legal obstacles have fallen. A number of German States have given legal rights to the Methodist Episcopal Church, in others the question of our legal recognition is pending. In every moral and social reform movement the Methodists have an active part. In the fight for prohibition they are the recognized leaders. It was one of the greatest surprises the German politicians ever experienced when as the result of a three weeks' intensive campaign, a Methodist delegation marched up to the Reichstag in Berlin and presented a petition for local option signed by half a million German voters. But these victories are bought with a price. Not only are our workers pouring out their lives in sacrificial service, they are sharing the burdens, the privations, the suffering, and hunger with their fellow citizens and are making superhuman efforts to render assistance. It is a wonder to me that not more of our pastors and deaconesses and other workers have broken down. Some of them did. More of them would have broken down, our retired brothers and the widows of our departed brethren would have starved, our 635 deaconesses would have starved, our four deaconess hospitals would have had to close their doors, our orphan Home at Domdorf under the auspices of our Nuremburg Deaconess, our five Children's Homes where we take care of about 4,000 children every year, and our two rest Homes for Mothers, our Home for the Aged would have had to close their doors if it had not been for the help from America. The Methodists of Germany will never forget the assistance given by the Board of Foreign Missions, the Board of Sunday Schools, the Board of Conference Claimants, the General Deaconess Board, and especially by the German-speaking Methodist churches in America. In addition to their Centenary gifts the German-speaking Methodists kept up a steady stream of gifts enabling us to repay the debt of $70,000 which we had to incur during the years of the war, when the appropriations could not be paid. We were in hopes that this amount might be recovered since the same lump appropriations were made to Europe during the time of the war but this was not done. The contributions of the German Methodists in America and the Christmas Offering given us in 1922 by the Board of Sunday Schools enabled us also to acquire our five Children's Home, and our two Rest Homes for Mothers, to feed and clothe thousands of children and to keep our preachers and their families as well as our deaconesses and other workers, and especially hundreds of aged people who have been reduced to hopeless poverty from despair and death. The Board of Foreign Missions has made a special emergency appropriation of $50,000 to meet the actual needs among our people and has appealed to the Church to contribute this amount. We are deeply grateful for the action of the Board; for the response of the Church.

However, the economic situation is very serious. All our vested funds have disappeared owing to the inflation of the money. To cite but one instance: the Methodists in Germany had accumulated a fund of 600,000 marks equal to $150,000 for the support of the retired preacher and the widows. This fund is gone; the number of retired men and the widows has grown larger. They need help more than ever, because everyone of our preachers has lost all the savings and the money which he or his wife may have inherited. There is now not one of our preachers who has one penny over and above his salary. Most of our church members are in the same position. It is true the debts encumbering our church properties have been paid off, but we had to incur new debts in order to pay for the necessary repairs. Our people are impoverished. They are bringing heroic sacrifices, but their contributions are hardly sufficient to meet the exorbitant taxes on property, and the cost for heating and lighting the churches. They are now farther removed than ever from self-support and it is utterly impossible for them to sustain their charitable institution and their theological school at Frankfort. They cannot think of meeting even the most pressing needs for enlarged equipment.

And yet the keynote of all the reports and conversation is not discouragement or despair but faith and hope and gratitude and even great joy. Our Methodists in Germany are convinced that the Master has called them to a great task. They are confident that the Church will not forsake them but put them in a position to do for their nation and for their Kingdom a work which is even more fundamental than the labors of General Dawes and his associates.

RUSSIA AND THE BALTICS

I mention the work in these countries under one heading, because in our Methodist administration it still is one unit. The General Conference of 1920 established two missions, the Russia Mission comprising the work in the Republic of Russia, and the Baltic Mission comprising the work in the Baltic and Slavic republics contiguous to Russia. It has also passed an enabling act authorizing the Russia Mission to organize as a Mission Conference. Previous to 1920 the Russia Mission comprised the work in the Empire of Russia in which the Baltic provinces were included and our preachers in Russia were members of the Finland Annual Conference. In the year 1921 the Russia Mission Conference was organized and all our preachers working in Russia as well as in the Baltic Republics were transferred from Finland Annual Conference into this newly organized Mission Conference. Since General Conference did not pass an act enabling the Baltic Mission to organize into a Mission Conference and since in Russia we have no preachers in full connection but exclusively preachers on trial, I allowed the preachers in full connection in the Baltic Mission to meet together with those from Russia, who were at liberty to attend, to meet as the "Russian Mission Conference and Baltic Mission." The Rev. George A. Simons remained as Superintendent of the whole work. He has been abundant in labors. His residence is in Riga, the capital city of Latvia, but he has received permission from the Soviet Government to travel in Russia and he has visited the work in Leningrad and vicinity several times last year.

The growth of the work in the three Baltic Republics is marvelous. We began the quadrennium with five workers, we now have 38; most of them speaking from two to five languages. Our membership increased from 625 in 1920 to 3,212; our Sunday School scholars from 825 to 4,327. We have good properties in the three capitals, Riga, Reval, and Kovno. Periodicals and pamphlets are being published in the Estonian, Latvian and Lithuanian languages; we have the beginning of social work but are lacking in equipment; we are leading in the temperance reform which is greatly needed in these countries.

These three republics, independent commonwealths after centuries of oppression by foreign conquerors, now carving out their own destinies, endeavoring to find suitable forms for the expression of their national characteristics, deserve the wholehearted support and the sympathetic friendship of the Christian people of America. Even if their new national consciousness should, at times, assume forms which may appear exclusive, we must understand this seeming narrowness on the background of their century long oppression. There are splendid qualities in those staunch folks along the shores of the Baltic. They will make their contribution to the coming Europe. It is a great privilege to be of some assistance, and in this formative stage of their national history.

The Baltic Mission asks authority to organize as a Mission Conference. This permission, I trust, will be granted. The work in the Baltic should be separated from any connection with Russia and be left free to develop according to Baltic usages and ideals.

Concerning Russia so many questions have been asked in the course of the last year, but I beg to report more fully. In the present Soviet Russia the Methodist Episcopal Church is at work in the city of Leningrad and in the section of the country adjacent to Leningrad called Ingermanland and inhabited mostly by people of Finnish descent using the Finnish language. We have recently also commenced work in the old city of Novgorod and in Jablowitz. Prior to the revolution the services were conducted in the German, the English and the Finnish languages. We had no work among the real Russians, nor did we have any Russian workers. At the present time the services are held in Russia, although all of our workers are of non-Russian extraction. I met all of our workers in August, 1923, in the city of Leningrad. According to their reports we have in the city of Leningrad 45 probationary members and 140 members in full connection; in the country appointments 33 probationary members and 64 in full connection, a total of 282 members. In our Sunday School we have about 400 children. All of our members in the country are of Finnish extraction; of our members in Leningrad more than half are of German, Swedish, Finnish or Baltic extraction. Of real Russians we have approximately one hundred members. It is evident that as a church we are just beginning to touch the Russian problem.

Our influence, however, reaches far beyond the small circle of our membership. This is due to the heroic work of our Dea-coness Sister Anna Eklund. Her story is a noble chapter in the book of the acts of the elect ladies in the Church of Christ. She is respected and honored by the Soviet leaders. Neither her work nor our church work has ever been interfered with by the government. We enjoy as much religious freedom as we do in any country in the world.

It stands to reason however, that if we want to make an impact upon Russian life we must plan our work on a much larger scale. We are now spending $6,000 a year on Russia. I submitted to the Board of Foreign Missions an estimate calling for an expenditure of over a million. While I firmly believe that we should strengthen our own work to the utmost of our ability I am just as firmly convinced that the bulk of the 130 millions of Russians can best be reached by the Russian Church. Hence I am in favor of assisting every reform movement in the Russian Church that has any promise of evangelical power. There are such movements. Not yet clearly defined, not unified, not yet baptized with a full measure of the Holy Spirit. But there is among hundreds, yes thousands of Russian priests as sincere a yearning for the power of the gospel of Jesus as there ever has been in any section of the Church at any time in her history. That great Church which has lived for centuries its own life, not touched by any of the great movements which made Western Christianity, is now shaken and torn by the leading ideas and ideals of the Renaissance, of the Reformation, of the French Revolution, of Socialism, of Communism, is fighting against a tremendous atheistic propaganda. Many of her leaders are stretching their hands out to American Methodism pleading for counsel and instruction, for spiritual, moral, and material help.

The issues have been blurred by some American writers. The religious questions have been confounded with political and economic problems. What if some of those men are leaning toward Communism in their economic views. Is the gospel of Jesus identical with our capitalistic order of society? One of the greatest mistakes which the state churches of Europe committed was to identify organized Christianity with monarchical form of government. Let us beware of the mistake of identifying organized Christianity with either Capitalistic or Communist order of society.

In view of the whole situation as I can see it I am not shaken in my conviction that the hand of Divine Providence has guided me in bringing to the Board of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church an invitation from the leaders of one of the reform movements to send a fraternal delegation to the All Russian Church Congress and that the same hand has guided Bishop Blake in offering to the Congress concrete assistance for the purpose of training their ministers. Let that help remain an unofficial contribution. There are other possibilities of helping the Russian Church. I have submitted to the Board of Foreign Missions the following recommendations in addition to the strengthening of our own work—1. Send one of our most trusted evangelistic leaders to Moscow to serve as Pastor of the American Church and to render whatever assistance he may to every evangelical movement within the Russian Church—2. Send every year one of our leading professors of Theology and one of our leading pastors to deliver courses of lectures before the theological seminaries of the Church of Russia—3. Bring to America every year from six to ten of the brightest, most promising candidates for the ministry in the Russian Church or young pastors, let them study for a year in one of our schools of theology. Then attach them for an additional six months to one of our leading churches, so that they may study not only our theology but also our church life and then return to their own country. If we could follow this plan for ten years we would make a conspicuous and lasting contribution not only to the Church of Russia but to the Nation of Russia. And our ultimate aim is not to strengthen any specific ecclesiastical organization but to strengthen the moral, spiritual, intellectual and social life of the people.

CONNECTIONAL MATTERS

The various departments of church activity have been greatly strengthened by our Connectional Boards. The Board of Temperance and Prohibition has made it possible to push the prohibition campaign in all countries of the area. The Board of Sunday Schools has, in addition to financial grants, given to the three European Areas the help and inspiration of personal leadership through its Secretary for Europe, Rev. Ernest Lyman Mills, the Board of Epworth League has made it possible to place a secretary in the field. The General Deaconess Board and the Board of Conference Claimants have come to the help of our Deaconesses and retired ministers and the widows of our deceased preachers. The condition of these and other agencies will, in an increasing manner, engage the attention of the Central Conference.

Thus far all the Conferences and Missions in Europe and also North Africa were comprised in one Central European Conference. The last session was held in Frankfort, Germany, August 30 to September 5, 1922. It was a gathering of high inspirational value, made memorable by the presence of Bishop William Burt, than whom no one is more beloved among the Methodists of Europe. But it also was evident, that on account of the diversity of languages, interests, enterprises, it is impossible for the Central Conference to exercise the administrative function of a Central Conference as provided for in the Discipline. Even before the meeting of this Central Conference the Annual Conferences and Mission Conferences of the Zurich Area have asked to be allowed to organize a separate Central Conference.

The Deaconess work has become more unified during the quadrennium. The four Deaconess Societies in Germany and Switzerland, which are legally incorporated bodies, have formed the "Union of the Deaconess Association of the Methodist Church in Germany and Switzerland." The Annual Conferences memorialize the General Conference to recognize and thus to legalize this form of Deaconess administration that has been evolved in Central Europe during the last half century. Fifty years ago Methodist Deaconess work was commenced in Germany. It is the pioneer Methodist Deaconess work. At the end of fifty years we have 785 Deaconesses, many of them working in our five Deaconess Hospitals, and others performing invaluable service in our Children's Homes, Orphanages, Rest Homes and in local churches. It is planned to commemorate this coming summer the fiftieth anniversary in a fitting manner.

There is in the area but one school—the Theological Seminary at Frankfurt-on-the-Main. In this school almost all the preachers in Germany, Switzerland, Austria and Hungary have received their training. In this school some of the great men of Methodism have impressed their saintly character and their thorough scholarship upon the older generation of Methodist preachers in Germany.

The names and the labors of William F. Warren, John F. Hurst will never be forgotten. Just when the war broke out the new buildings were finished. They were built to accommodate fifty students. When, after the war, the seminary opened its doors again, sixty students asked for admittance, now seventy-two, now eighty-five. They come not only from the countries of the area including the Baltic republics and Russia, but also from Jugo-Slavia and Bulgaria. The house is overcrowded, the equipment insufficient, the teaching staff overburdened. If Methodism is to give to Europe the leadership which is needed: men of God with a burning heart and a flaming tongue but also fully trained, so as to meet the questions and doubts and difficulties of to-day and of to-morrow, men who understand modern life and interpret it in the light of the Divine Will, we must pay much more attention to our school. We must enlarge its facilities, increase its faculty, endow it so that it may take its place aside of the schools where Martin Luther, Melancthon and John Calvin trained the leaders of former days and where to-day the theologians and philosophers of Europe are molding lives and shaping destinies. Methodism needs everywhere, but to-day, nowhere more urgently than in Central Europe, a well-trained, fully equipped ministry. Methodism in Central Europe is preparing to celebrate next year the seventy-fifth anniversary of its beginning. Devoutly grateful to God for all the many blessings the Methodists of Germany and the other countries where the German language is spoken, consecrate themselves anew to more devoted service, to more passionate evangelistic efforts, to more sacrificial social service, and have pledged to make this coming anniversary the beginning of a sweeping forward movement. It is also planned to place the needs of our school in Frankfurt in a special way before the Church and concentrate the liberality of the Church upon the need of training our coming leaders. We need bread, yes; clothing, yes. Misery and distress are still abounding. But Central Europe needs even more urgently the bread of life. May God use us to supply this need.

REPORT OF THE BOOK COMMITTEE

To the General Conference to be Held in Springfield, Massachusetts, May, 1924

DEAR FATHERS AND BRETHREN:

In conformity with the provisions of the Discipline, Paragraph 382, Section 1, the Book Committee herewith makes report of "the condition of the affairs of the Book Concern" at the close of this quadrennium, together with such "record of its proceedings" during this period as it judges of interest and profit to your body.

The Committee met for organization in the Fort Des Moines Hotel, Des Moines, Iowa, Thursday, May 27, 1920.

The District representatives, under the provision of Paragraph 180, Section 1, were:

I. George C. Douglass	IX. Horace M. Havner
II. Dorr F. Diefendorf	X. Claude C. Hall
III. William A. Notman	XI. Anson L. Parker
IV. William F. Conner	XII. Joseph S. Ulland
V. William H. McMaster	XIII. Charles A. J. Walker
VI. Thomas H. Kiah	XIV. Frank S. Wallace
VII. Matthew S. Davage	XV. Charles C. Rarick
VIII. J. Luther Taylor

These together with the local committees "from New York City and the territory contiguous thereto," Paragraph 180, Section 2:

Morris S. Daniels
Frank A. Horne
Silas Peirce
James E. Holmes
Ezra S. Tipple

and "from Cincinnati and the territory contiguous thereto":

Jesse R. Clark
Edward E. Shipley
Henry S. Henschen
Cyrus M. Van Pelt
Herbert Scott

constituted the Book Committee as a whole.

An organization was effected by the election of William F. Conner, Chairman; Ezra S. Tipple, Secretary; Edward E. Shipley, Assistant Secretary.

Pursuant to the direction of the Discipline, an election for the duties of Book Editor was then held, and David G. Downey was elected. Under like provisions, George P. Mains was elected Treasurer of the Episcopal Fund, and Oscar P. Miller, Treasurer of the General Conference Expense Fund. Under the provisions of Paragraph 388, Section 2, the Book Committee at its meeting for organization designated one of the Publishing Agents to "have immediate charge and administration of the publishing interests at New York City," and so designated Edwin R. Graham. Like action resulted in the designation of John H. Race for like duties at Cincinnati, and Robert H. Hughes for like duties at Chicago.

The Local Committee at New York was organized with Silas Peirce as Chairman, and James E. Holmes as Secretary; and the Local Committee at Cincinnati with Cyrus M. Van Pelt as Chairman, and Edward E. Shipley as Secretary.

Of this Committee of twenty-five members, four have died since the organization in 1920:

Anson L. Parker, member from the Eleventh General Conference District, died February 19, 1921. Judson L. Transue was elected by the Book Committee as his successor.

Jesse R. Clark, a member of the Cincinnati Local Committee, died September 25, 1921. Lewis N. Gatch was elected his successor.

Silas Peirce, a member of the New York Local Committee, died December 10, 1922. William T. Rich was elected his successor.

Edward E. Shipley, of the Cincinnati Local Committee, resigned at the meeting of the Book Committee held in Chicago, April 18, 1923. Jesse R. Clark, Jr., son of Jesse R. Clark, the member deceased this quadrennium, and grandson of Bishop Davis W. Clark, who died in Cincinnati in 1871, was elected his successor.

Edward E. Shipley died November 13, 1923, eight months after his resignation.

These men departed had all shown themselves to be workmen approved. They were of diverse talent, and the varied work of the Book Committee gave each opportunity for the best use of his special ability. Each had won a high place in the estimate of the Church and Conference from which he came. Each had won the esteem and confidence of his fellow members of the Book Committee. Some, by reason of many years of continuous service in this relation, had come to be deemed almost essential to the Committee's work. The going of each one was certainly a distinct loss. Their successors have entered into the office with intelligent zeal.

Herbert Scott, of the Cincinnati Local Committee, resigned April 18, 1921, because of his assignment to a pastorate in Des Moines, Iowa, which removed him from the territory that meets the Disciplinary requirement. He too had wrought faithfully and profitably in the Committee's work. Charles E. Bacon, who had served as a member from the Eleventh District in former years and who was valued for his wise counsel, was elected his successor.

Paragraph 380, Sections 1 and 2, provide that each of these vacancies "shall be filled by the Book Committee until the next session of the General Conference."

Edwin R. Graham, Publishing Agent designated to have charge of the interests in New York, died February 19, 1921. Doctor Graham had carried on his official work under ever increasing bodily infirmities with a loyalty to duty most admirable; but at length the weary wheels of life must needs stand still.

The Book Committee directed:

"That Committee No. 2 be instructed to present to the Book Committee some plan by which the vacancy caused by the death of E. R. Graham be definitely provided for. This Committee reported as follows:

"1. That the vacancy caused by the death of E. R. Graham, Publishing Agent, be provided for by assigning the duties heretofore performed by E. R. Graham to John H. Race and Robert H. Hughes, the remaining Publishing Agents.

"2. That the following designations and distribution of duties be ordered by the Book Committee:

"John H. Race to have charge and administration of the publishing interests at New York City and Cincinnati and designated to have supervision of the Manufacturing and Merchandise Departments of the Book Concern.

"Robert H. Hughes to have charge and administration of the publishing interests at Chicago and all the various Depositories and designated to have supervision of the Advertising and Circulation Departments of the Book Concern."

This plan of providing for the vacancy was adopted, after considerable discussion, by a vote of twelve ayes and nine noes, and of fourteen ayes and eight noes on test questions. The majority argued that to "provide as soon as possible for such vacancy," as stated in Paragraph 383, Section 5, did not necessarily mean an election of a Publishing Agent and voted, "that the election of a Publishing Agent be indefinitely postponed," and that a committee be instructed to present to the Book Committee some plan by which the vacancy shall be definitely provided for. The report of that committee is given in the action above recited.

Doctor Race has for three years since that action had charge and administration of the publishing interests in both Cincinnati and New York City. This plan has been carried out with satisfactory results.

The minority made no argument against the plan on the ground of efficiency. It did protest that it was illegal to adopt and put into effect such a plan for providing for this vacancy—a plan that commits to two Publishing Agents the task of charge and administration of the office of the Publishing Agency when the Discipline says there shall be three, and says further that one of these three “shall have immediate charge and administration at New York City, one with like duties at Cincinnati, and one with like duties at Chicago.”

The minority believed that the vacancy occasioned by the death of Edwin R. Graham has not been provided for from this further consideration.

The Discipline, Paragraph 383, Section 5, makes concurrence of a majority of the Bishops present to whom the matter is referred necessary to provide for such a vacancy. The minority believes such concurrence was not given though three Bishops were present and gave the case consideration. The following is their report:

“In reply to the question submitted by the Book Committee, the General Superintendents present desire to say that in their opinion the action of General Superintendents called for in Paragraph 382, Section 5, according to the usage of the Church and the intent of the paragraph means concurrence or nonconcurrence in an actual election of an individual to fill an actual vacancy.”

The Book Committee by clear majority, having adopted a plan of conducting the affairs of the Concern without an election to fill the vacancy caused by the death of E. R. Graham, it does not seem to the bishops present that they are called upon either to concur or non-concur in the action of the Committee.

WILLIAM F. McDOWELL,
WILLIAM F. ANDERSON,
E. G. RICHARDSON.

The Chairman recited the fact of the death of Doctor Graham and the vacancy occasioned thereby again to the Book Committee at the meeting of 1922 with the inquiry what steps it would take to provide for the vacancy. The statement of the Chairman was ordered spread upon the Minutes, and no further action was taken.

This statement of an incident in the “Proceedings” of the Book Committee that may establish a precedent is thought to be of sufficient importance as history to have an abiding place in this Report, which is assured of a far wider distribution than the Journal of the Book Committee, which has a very limited circulation.

REAL ESTATE

No building enterprises have been undertaken during the quadrennium. Much consideration has been given to the project of enlarging the building at Chicago in order that we may care for the increased business. The extreme high cost of building, however, made it seem unadvisable. Later the purchase of a new site at the corner of Superior Street and Fairbank Court, with the probability of erecting a building there, caused an abandonment of the plan of enlarging the present building. The new lot, which cost $135,000, is three blocks east of our present property at Rush and Superior, and is 125 by 216 feet. It is in the immediate vicinity of the property owned by the Northwestern University. This is a desirable location and could probably be well disposed of if thought best by the Committee. The purchase of the site was made with the assured expectation that the present property would be sold at a price which would go far toward financing the purchase of the lot and the erection of a new and larger building. A satisfactory price has not yet been realized, though proffers have been made that would show a profit over the original cost.

The removal of the Manufacturing Department in New York from the Fifth Avenue building to a location where the rental is reduced by fifty per cent for the same space has greatly increased the facilities for this department and, as well, enlarged the space for the use of the church officers and Benevolent Boards in the building at 150 Fifth Avenue.

We continue to hold the Fourth Street property in Cincinnati, believing that the business is so developing in our Publishing House there that this property, being contiguous, will probably soon be needed and can be readily made a part of our plant at 420 Plum Street.

ADVOCATES

The General Conference has for several quadrenniums past given time and careful consideration to the subject of the Advocates—management, number and circulation. This matter came to a crisis at the session of 1916 held at Saratoga Springs. A minority report came from the Committee on Book Concern proposing a consolidation which would combine the Western, the Central, the Northwestern, and the Advocate Journal to be published at Chicago, with one publication at New York, one at San Francisco and one at Portland. After prolonged debate, this proposal was defeated by a vote of 445 to 321. The session of 1920 found a sentiment still prevailing for some consolidation. It, however, did not prevail in the Committee on Book Concern, and no question came to the General Conference as a body. However, the following was reported from the Committee on Book Concern and adopted by the Conference:

"Whereas, The Church Press has an influence and importance so great that the subject demands fuller study and consideration than is possible at this Conference; therefore,

"Resolved, That the Book Committee be requested to make, through an impartial and disinterested committee of their own number or of others, a careful study of the entire subject, particularly as to the number of church papers needed, their character, management and editorial supervision, and report their findings and recommendations to the next General Conference."

Conforming to that direction, the Book Committee considered the matter at the session of April 19, 1922, and determined that this Committee should consist of nine members; five of these to be members of the Book Committee, as follows: Cyrus M. Van Pelt, James E. Holmes, J. Luther Taylor, Charles A. J. Walker, Frank S. Wallace; and four to be other than members of the Book Committee, as follows: David G. Downey, George R. Grose, Merton S. Rice, Glenn Frank.

The Book Committee received the report of this Joint Committee of nine at its session of March 5, 1924, and deferred final action to the meeting of the Book Committee immediately preceding the General Conference. The report of the Committee of nine is as follows:

First: That there be issued one National Journal for Methodism in a series of territorial editions to serve the territories now served by the various Advocates, each territorial edition to be made up as follows: Twenty-four pages of each edition to be uniform throughout the country with a section of eight pages in each edition devoted to the interests of that territory, with the news departmentalized under the Episcopal Areas that comprise the territory in question; this Journal to be known as The Christian Advocate, but carrying a subtitle for each territorial edition.

Second: That this National Journal shall consist of thirty-two pages, twenty-four pages to be uniform in all editions. The composition to be done in Cincinnati, and shells shipped to the different centers. Until otherwise determined by the Book Committee, the following editions shall be published: The New York edition at New York; the Western edition, the Advocate-Journal edition, and the Southwestern edition at Cincinnati; the Northwestern edition and the Central edition at Chicago; the California edition at San Francisco, and the Pacific edition at Portland.

Third: That there shall be elected by the Book Committee an Editor-in-Chief, who, together with two assistants to be elected by the Book Committee on nomination of the Editor-in-Chief, shall constitute an Editorial Board. This Editorial Board shall be responsible for the twenty-four pages of material uniform in all editions.

Fourth: That an Associate Editor for each territorial edition shall be elected by the Book Committee. Under the general supervision of the Editor-in-Chief, each such Associate Editor shall be responsible for the eight pages devoted to the interests of his special territory.

Fifth: The Committee recommends in the case of the Epworth Herald no change of policy. Since its circulation is not sectional, and it is aimed to provide for a clearly defined constituency, its policy is not affected by the problem of the Advocates.

Sixth: The Committee recommends that in the case of Der Christliche Apologete there be no change.

Seventh: Since steps have been taken by the Book Committee looking toward the syndication of the matter in the Methodist Review of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Quarterly Review of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, it is our judgment that no action should be taken at present affecting the policy of the Methodist Review.

Eighth: It is recommended that all cost, editorial, manufacturing, promotion and selling, be budgeted, and each department be expected to produce definite results at a cost within the budget.

Ninth: We recommend that all official editors be elected by the Book Committee.

DAVID G. DOWNEY, Chairman,
J. LUTHER TAYLOR, Secretary.

The Advocates have been rendering signal service to the Centenary. They have printed in their columns many thousand pages of information and appeal in the interest of this cause. In his last report to the Council of Boards at the meeting held in Chicago, January, 1924, the Secretary, R. J. Wade, gave recognition to our Journals in these words, "All of the papers have been most generous in giving space, and the editors have continuously contributed effective editorial support to the endeavors of the Committee on Conservation and Advance and the various boards. This attitude of sympathetic cooperation is an asset to the benevolent work of the church of enormous value." When the agreement was made between the Advocates and the Committee on Conservation and Advance, November, 1921, for publishing this Centenary matter, the Committee formally agreed "to use its organization diligently to cooperate with the publishers to promote the circulation of each of said periodicals." That the Advocates have rendered incalculable help to this Centenary cause, with little if any financial profit to the journals, is certain. This service has been gladly given. The "profit motive" is not uppermost in the administration of the Book Concern.

The Book Committee recognizes that this agreement quoted above was carried out in perfectly good faith to the best of the ability of those committed to it. Some of the Advocates did show increased circulation. It is, however, very evident that such agencies can only serve as helps in solving this serious problem of circulation. The organization and methods that make an appeal for sacrificial giving to the World Service program are not particularly fitted to get subscriptions for the Advocates.

The Pittsburgh, The Michigan and The Washington Advocates, Zion's Herald, and possibly others are serving their several constituencies well. Whether these regional or Area journals would be encouraged and their number increased by publishing "only One National Journal for Methodism in a series of territorial editions to serve the territories now served by the various Advocates," is the question which will come to your body when you consider the report of the Book Committee on Advocates as above given.

The report of circulation of the Journals as of January 1, 1920, and January 1, 1924, is as follows:

Name	1920	1924
California Advocate	7,548	9,117	+1,569
Central Advocate	24,729	28,141	+3,412
Christian Apologist and Hearth and Home	9,847	10,397	+550
Epworth Herald	49,807	85,620	+35,813
Methodist Advocate-Journal.....	5,310	7,025	+1,715
Methodist Review	6,425	6,880	+455
New York Advocate	49,145	50,995	+1,850
Northwestern Advocate	30,943	30,820	-123
Pacific Advocate	7,347	6,798	-549
Pittsburgh Advocate	42,357	36,195	-6,162
Southwestern Advocate	17,175	17,940	+765
Western Advocate	30,640	36,479	+5,839

It may be noted that the above publications, exclusive of the Epworth Herald and the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, show a net gain of 15,483 in circulation. The Epworth Herald shows a gain of 35,813 this quadrennium but its circulation as of January 1, 1916, was 91,016 or 5,396 more than January 1, 1924.

In the report of the Book Committee to the General Conference of 1920 it was stated that "the financial loss is not to be taken over seriously." This conclusion came from the fact that the four years' deficit on all the Advocates, Methodist Review, Epworth Herald, Christian Apologist for the quadrennium was $169,137.51. This was $42,284 for each year. It was suggested in that report that this was not a large annual expense when the promotion of the educational, benevolent and spiritual interests of a Church of four million members was concerned, since all the Journals were in a very literal sense "Advocates" of all such interests.

When it faces the deficit incurred in publishing the same Journals this past four years, your Committee admits that the figures are large. These are the amounts of the deficit:

Advocates	$522,252.47
Methodist Review	28,615.12
Epworth Herald	101,598.90
Christian Apologist	45,135.86
Total	$697,602.35 or

$174,400 each year. The increase in deficit on these periodicals above the last quadrennium is $528,464.84. There is, however, an explanation of these figures that should be called to your attention.

In the face of steadily increasing costs of production, the Book Committee has continued the subscription price of these important Journals at a figure far below their cost, feeling that the service rendered to the Church in its many enterprises amply justifies the annual expenditure. Advances in the price of paper alone have increased the production cost of the eight official Advocates by the sum of $216,183.58. Other increased manufacturing costs, such as composition, press work and binding, a very large percentage of which is due to increases in wages, bring the total increased manufacturing costs for 1920-1924 to a total of $448,243.01. In addition to these items there is $264,121.98 in rent, promotional and selling expense, and editorial costs, making a total increased cost for the quadrennium of $712,364.99.

There is an increase in earnings due to a somewhat larger circulation and a small increase in subscription price, which went into effect the last year of the previous quadrennium on certain of these papers. This amounts to $297,043.54, and when deducted from the increased costs, makes a net deficit on these eight official Advocates of $415,321.45.

When we add to this net increase the deficit on the Methodist Review, Epworth Herald and Christian Apologist, which amounts to $113,143.39, the total increase in the deficit on these several periodicals is $528,464.84.

Had the Book Committee increased the subscription price of these periodicals 50 cents per year, provided the circulation could have been maintained, this deficit would have been nearly absorbed. Or if the Benevolent Boards had continued their appropriation for promotion through the Advocates at the rate of $75,000 annually, as it existed in 1919 for the similar service which has been continued during this last quadrennium, this deficit would have been materially decreased.

The Book Committee still believes that the service rendered to the Church in its many enterprises is worth a very considerable annual expenditure.

DISTRIBUTION TO THE ANNUAL CONFERENCES

There have been set aside to this purpose the following amounts:

1921	$275,000
1922	200,000
1923	300,000
Total		$1,125,000

The distribution in 1922 was the lowest for thirteen years. It was in most business circles a year of unprofitable operations. The volume of business was large, but high expenses reduced the profits. In fact the percentage of net earnings distributed that year was larger than usual.

Ministers and members of other denominations hear with surprise our record of amounts given our retired preachers by the Book Concern. To them, without exception, it is most commendable. They look with admiration upon the plan and the fine results, and covet something similar. However, from our own Church the praise is not unanimous. There is no question about the variety of counsel the Book Committee receives concerning the amount that should be distributed to the Conferences each year for the retired preachers. This advice is literally as well as geographically "As far as the east is from the west."

The columns of one paper have the statement that the Book Committee in 1923, with net earnings of $447,000, yet chose to give but $300,000 to the retired preachers, the remainder being applied to deficits on the Advocates. The truth is that the $447,000 constituted net earnings after the deficits of the Advocates had been deducted. The Committee carefully considers each year what part of the net earnings shall be distributed to the Conferences. It has not been thought good business judgment to fix a standard percentage for distribution, since the absolute necessities for equipment or building in the business may be greater in one case for the coming year than in others. Then, too, it may appear that the prospect for a prosperous year may vary greatly, and in view of this fact it may be wise to husband the earnings one year but not in another. There is a settled policy to disburse all that is possible each year, due regard being always given that there shall be "retained a sufficient amount with which to carry on its affairs." This is in obedience to a specific direction of the Discipline.

On the other hand, some would reduce or eliminate the amount set aside for retired preachers and use it for the greater "promotion of Christian education and the dissemination of moral and religious literature."

It should be remembered that the Book Concern is the oldest organization in the Church; that it originally was the only Missionary Board, the only Educational Board, the only Sunday School Board, the only Temperance Board, the only distinctly Benevolent Board of Methodism. Yet even then the framers of the law provided for a distribution of as large an amount as possible to the Conferences. We now have very efficient Boards for all these other objects. They make urgent, compelling appeals to the generosity of the people. The responses are really remarkable. The Book Concern, instead of being loaded with more of this missionary work, should now be relieved of the burden it was compelled to carry before these new helpers came. In fact, it should be freer to purchase and issue good literature, and at the same time to make still larger distribution to the men whose life service and sacrifice have made possible this new and better day. "The claim to a comfortable support inheres in the Gospel Ministry. . . . Such claim is not invalidated by his being retired." Moreover, in our Constitution we have sacredly guarded it by the Sixth Restrictive Rule, declaring "The General Conference shall not appropriate the produce of the Book Concern, nor of the Chartered Fund, to any purpose other than for the benefit of the Traveling, Supernumerary, and Superannuated Preachers, their wives, widows, and children." Certainly if there is this Constitutional restriction guarding this produce after the Book Committee has determined what that produce in any given year shall be, neither the Book Committee nor yet the General Conference can by indirection accomplish the same end. Very true, "the Book Concern is not an institution for profit but for service"; but it is a distinctly double service it renders: First, the dissemination of moral and religious literature; second, helping to keep faith with the men who have the claim both in law and equity upon such profits, "after the Book Committee has determined and retained a sufficient amount with which to carry on its affairs."

Retired ministers are generous contributors to all these Benevolent Boards. It is not just to tax them an additional amount for benevolences by diverting the fair profits of the Book Concern from their purse to do this benevolent work.

TREASURERS' REPORTS

There is committed to the Book Committee the election of the treasurers of two important collections: The Episcopal Fund and the General Conference Expense Fund, and the laying of the apportionments for the same.

The increase in the number of Bishops, together with the large number assigned to foreign fields, with necessarily far greater traveling expense, led the Committee to make the apportionment for the first three years two and one-fourth per cent of pastoral support. This was reduced for the fourth year to two per cent.

The fine response of the Church is in large part accounted for by the very efficient methods of collection used by the Treasurer, George P. Mains, and his assistant, John R. Huff.

But we should not be unmindful of the drastic provisions of the Discipline as to prorating deficiencies in ministerial support, and as well of the pressure brought by District Superintendents on the churches to meet all ministerial claims.

The General Conference Expense Fund does not have the advantage of prorating. The apportionment for the quadrennium was one and one-fourth per cent. This, according to the Discipline, is spread over the last three years. The Treasurer, O. P. Miller, has used great diligence and, it is hoped, will be able to meet all legitimate expenses. It, however, requires always careful attention on the part of those interested to prevent the General Conference from authorizing the payment of expenses from this Fund that in all justice should be paid by the Boards or bodies in whose interests the Commission was created.

PUBLICATIONS

The book output of the quadrennium is proof that the folk called Methodists are eager and inquiring. This is preeminently so in the case of Methodist preachers. Our itinerants, following the habit of John Wesley, are prolific writers and avid readers. Our constituency is a varied one with regard to culture, capacity and need, and books widely varying in theme, content and treatment are necessary to meet the demand.

To say that all the books published are of equal merit would not be an accurate statement, but that there are none without merit of some special sort, fitted to a particular need, is a statement that we believe will stand the test. One of the purposes of The Book Concern, as declared in the Discipline, is "the spread of Christianity by the publication, sale, and distribution of moral and religious literature." That the book publications of the quadrennium have served this purpose is the confident belief of those entrusted with this serious responsibility.

The Biblical Introduction Series, by Professors Eiselen and Hayes, of Garrett Biblical Institute, has been brought to completion and the student now has at hand everything needed in this important department of Bible study.

The Abingdon Texts for use in Week-day Schools of Religion are lacking only two or three volumes and these remaining units will be issued during this year. Here again, as in so many other instances in the past, your Book Concern has pioneered the path in placing worthy and serviceable tools in the hands of forward-looking Christian teachers.

The general list, including biblical, evangelistic, ethical and social discussions and interpretations, together with volumes of travel, essays and wholesome stories, is large, and has received merited recognition from the publishing trade and the religious and secular press.

The Book Editor is the one of the company of Editors whose election is committed to the Book Committee. His eminent fitness for the task, his assiduous attention to the duties of his office, his discriminating judgment as to the need of the Church to-day; these, together with his wide recognition by the Church at large as counsellor in most important affairs conspire to approve this method of election.

SUNDAY SCHOOL PUBLICATIONS

In the field of literature production for the Sunday school, the four years of the past quadrennium have been among the most fruitful in the history of The Methodist Book Concern. There has been a very substantial increase in the circulation of the Sunday-school publications, both textbooks and periodicals. It is gratifying to note that this increase is most marked in the case of the better types of literature, that is, the publications prepared with reference to special age groups. The largest increase has been in the International Graded Lessons, in the story papers for Juniors and Intermediates and for Young People, and in those periodicals devoted to the Improved Uniform Lessons serving the Home Department and the organized adult Bible classes. There has likewise been an increase in the circulation of elective and teacher training courses in textbook form. Together, these increases in circulation closely parallel and are somewhat larger than the recorded increase in Sunday-school and teacher training enrollments and in the accessions to the Church from the Sunday school.

New publications deserving special notice in a record of the past four years include the following:

The Church School, an interdenominational magazine of religious education started in October, 1919, devoted to a discussion of educational theory and practical methods for all departments of the school.

The Target, a story paper for boys, and The Portal, a story paper for girls, two publications which together continue the service of the Sunday School Advocate with special provision for meeting the interests and needs of boys and girls of Junior and Intermediate ages.

The Officer, a monthly magazine devoted to the problems and work of the superintendent and other administrative officers of the school.

World Neighbors, a monthly magazine of missionary education with special missionary information, programs and method suggestions for all departments of the school.

The Bilingual Lesson Quarterlies for foreign language groups in the United States, prepared in cooperation with other denominations for each of six language groups: Czech, Italian, Spanish, Magyar, Russian and Polish.

The Sunday-school textbooks produced during the quadrennium including the following:

Elective Courses for the Sunday school.....	9
Textbooks in training for leadership
General	12
Specialization courses	19
Textbooks on Improved Uniform Lessons.....	8
Program Guides for Daily Vacation Bible Schools..	3

GENERAL REFERENCE

The erection of the Chicago Temple in the very center of that great city led the Book Committee to consider the question of establishing a book store in that building.

A proposition from the officers of the Temple organization was submitted to the Committee, which was accepted. By the terms of this agreement a trial lease was taken for twenty-three months and an option at the same rental for eight years beyond. The room occupied is one of the most desirable, being on the street floor and at the corner of the entrance to the auditorium of the Temple.

Duly authorized members of the Chicago Preachers' Meeting appeared before the Book Committee with assurance that the pastors of Chicago and vicinity would give unstinted, loyal support to the store.

At the meeting of the Committee, April 18, 1923, the Publishing Agents were authorized to organize and put into operation a News Service at Washington, D. C. Conforming to this instruction, they secured the service of H. E. Woolever, formerly Assistant Editor of The Christian Advocate at New York, who has been furnishing informing articles to the different Advocates since 1923.

GENERAL CONFERENCE ENTERTAINMENT

Conforming to the direction of the General Conference, the Book Committee raised a Commission on General Conference Entertainment, the following being elected: J. Luther Taylor, George C. Douglass, James E. Holmes, Joseph S. Ulland, William E. Conner, Silas Peirce, Jesse R. Clark, and Oscar P. Miller, ex officio, as Treasurer of the General Conference Expense Fund. Silas Peirce was elected Chairman, George C. Douglass, Vice-Chairman, and James E. Holmes, Secretary. The vacancy caused by the death of Jesse R. Clark was provided for by the election of Henry S. Henschen, and that by the death of Silas Peirce by the election of Morris S. Daniels. George C. Douglass succeeded Silas Peirce as Chairman, and Morris S. Daniels succeeded James E. Holmes, resigned, as Secretary.

Three cities formally applied to the Commission for the privilege of entertaining the General Conference of 1924: Kansas City, Mo.; Milwaukee, and Springfield, Mass. These cities were visited by the Commission and representatives from each city presented the respective claims and accommodations to the Book Committee.

Springfield was chosen by a decisive majority. The Commission has found active and efficient cooperation from the Local Committees at Springfield in preparation for the comfort and convenience of the Conference. All endeavor has been made to this end.

There will probably be some criticism and complaints. The kindly forbearance and assistance of the Conference are asked. No arrangements can be perfect. Not all the delegations can have the most desirable seats. Not all the delegates can secure the exact kind and price of lodgings they desire.

The Commission has done its best to prepare for your Conference, and will continue to serve you as new occasions arise.

REPORT OF THE PUBLISHING AGENTS OF THE METHODIST BOOK CONCERN FOR THE QUADRENNIUM ENDING DECEMBER 31, 1923

DEAR BRETHREN:

Our colleague and friend, Dr. Edwin R. Graham, died February 19, 1921, at his home, Richwood, Ohio. For seventeen years he held intimate and active relation to The Methodist Book Concern, as one of its Publishing Agents. His outstanding characteristic was loyalty. He was intensely loyal to his family, his home, his friends, and to the large business interests entrusted to his care. Loyal to his country, to his God, and to those ethical and moral convictions which are the ripe fruitage of a Godly life. Those who were privileged to know Dr. Graham intimately and to whom he revealed the inner springs of his life knew how tenaciously he cherished a simple, strong, and childlike faith in God. The shadows that came strengthened rather than weakened his faith and hope. As his own strength ebbed away his hold on God and the eternal verities grew stronger. When the end came the everlasting arms were his refuge and strength.

We, his colleagues, miss the stately form and gracious bearing of him who for so many years met with us and shared the deliberations concerning the publishing interests. We are saddened by the sense of personal loss, but we are cheered by the hope of the future and confidently anticipate the fellowship and service of the eternal life.

The comprehensive report of the Book Committee covering the activities of The Methodist Book Concern for the quadrennium is such an admirable and exhaustive survey of the work that it leaves for your Publishing Agents opportunity to review some of the less generally recognized results to which the great publishing interests of the Church can point with satisfaction. This institution of which we are the administrative officers, is one of the vital agencies of our Church, supporting and serving every part of our connectionalism, and notwithstanding the fact that it has done a very creditable business from a purely commercial viewpoint, we feel that there are many values which cannot begin to be measured in dollars and cents. The sales for the quadrennium under review amount to $20,489,489.46, or an increase of $6,827,732.59. The net produce from this business is $1,642,539.95, an increase over the previous four years of $137,553.43, and the distribution made to Annual Conferences is $1,125,000. These financial results would be a credit to any organization but there is a contribution made by The Methodist Book Concern which far exceeds the commercial aspect. In fact, the present physical assets of your publishing interests could be sold for cash which, if securely invested so as to bring the modest return of 5 per cent per annum, would permit the distribution to Annual Conferences of over $300,000 per year, or more than the average distribution of the past four years. But the primary purpose of The Methodist Book Concern is the production and distribution of Christian literature, and it is believed that through cooperation and coordination, the quadrennium under review has been signally successful in accomplishing this purpose. For, in addition to the financial result there has flowed from our presses a stream of Christian literature whose influence it is impossible to compute. Would any one attempt to measure the influence of over a quarter of a million Advocates that have weekly found their way into our Methodist homes throughout the land? Or who can tell the effect of the more than five million annual circulation of our excellent Sunday school periodicals and books? Or of the millions of books and leaflet literature which have been published—all designed to meet the intellectual and spiritual need of our people, edited from the Christian and Evangelical viewpoint, in several different languages and at such modest prices that the humblest person or Sunday school could afford to buy? This tremendous and growing output synchronizing with the avalanche of corrupt and demoralizing literature of the day, helps to neutralize the influence which the latter exerts. Where is the antidote for this stream of pollution to come from if the Church does not maintain a virile press which will aid the pulpit in the spreading of Christianity?

The Methodist Book Concern is one of the strong arms of the Christian Church, fearlessly opposing sin and iniquity and evils of every kind. It rejoices that profits accrue for distribution to the retired ministers, but its first object and purpose are: "the promotion of Christian Education; the dissemination of moral and religious literature; the spread of Christianity by the publication, sale, and distribution of moral and religious literature." The Methodist Book Concern was organized for service; it is operated and maintained as a service organization. Our Sunday school literature is of the highest grade and is sold more cheaply than are the publications of any other denomination. Our books are priced from twenty to thirty-three and a third per cent lower than books of equal size and quality issued by other publishers, and it is our constant aim to enlarge this service as opportunity affords.

The service of The Methodist Book Concern extends even beyond our own constituency. Many of our sister denominations are not equipped with publishing facilities as is the Methodist Episcopal Church. Many editorial departments are not in position to secure with ease the best editorial and teaching material for their periodicals. To all such denominations The Methodist Book Concern has extended the helping hand in placing at their service both the manuscript materials and the manufacturing facilities required by our own larger program of literature production.

During the quadrennium The Methodist Book Concern has served in greater or smaller measure no less than 18 denominations through its program of cooperation and syndication. It is a privilege to work for others. It is a greater privilege to work with others, especially in the production of a larger and better teaching literature for simultaneous use by many Protestant groups.

The Methodist Book Concern has been able to secure the cooperation of authors of distinction both within and without the denomination, and from across the seas. Our catalogue has been enriched with volumes covering the various fields of travel, biography, belles lettres, philosophy, psychology, sociology, and theology.

An examination of our catalogue will show a long list of books dealing with the practical aspects of evangelical Christianity. Evangelism in its many forms has been especially emphasized and every effort has been made to enrich the religious life of the ministry and laity.

The Biblical Introduction Series has been rounded out and we now have for the use of our preachers and people everything that is needed in this important field of Bible study. In the Abingdon Religious Education Texts we have provided what is generally acknowledged to be the outstanding series in the Department of Week-day Religious Instruction and Community Training Schools, and on every hand—in the press secular and religious—the high character of the publications of The Methodist Book Concern and The Abingdon Press is cordially recognized.

We desire to emphasize the following paragraph contained in the Annual Report of the Book Editor:

“The continuous advance in scientific discovery, in philosophic ideals and in the social application of these discoveries and ideals, has necessitated a new appraisal and a restatement of religious truth. Within the limits of the generally accepted evangelical fundamentals our Christian scholars must be allowed full freedom from philosophic and theologic discussion. No narrow censorship must be allowed to close the door of opportunity to competent and reverent students and writers. If it was necessary for Christian thought of the second, fourth and tenth centuries to formulate its belief and to express it in the thought categories of those ages, it is no less necessary to-day. Devout and earnest Christian scholars met the attacks made upon Christianity in their time by using the intellectual method and weaponry fit for that time. They spoke and wrote an understandable language, a language in harmony with the social, scientific and philosophic knowledge of the age. Christianity owes to such men an unpayable debt. But knowledge has increased, vision is vastly widened, the material universe is immeasurably expanded and life itself is well nigh inconceivably more complex. The enemies of the faith are making their attacks upon the basis of these new and altogether unimagined material and intellectual expansions and conceptions. They must be met upon their own ground; a weaponry and a method suited to the time must be used. To all reverent and capable scholarship essaying to meet the attack of the new day with a method, a weaponry, a spirit suited to the emergency, The Methodist Book Concern accords a cordial and unequivocal welcome."

The Publishing Agents have been deeply concerned regarding the Advocates. The emphasis of General Conference action has been upon circulation of these indispensable periodicals rather than upon profits. Persistent effort has been exerted to increase the circulation, and despite the prevalent tendency downward in the circulation of Church papers generally, we are able to report a slight increase. We have had cooperation from the Council of Boards of Benevolence. Regular observance of Good Literature Day and intensive canvass by pastors have been very helpful and are duly appreciated.

In our annual reports to the Book Committee attention has been called to the fact that subscription prices are not sufficient to cover the cost of these papers, greatly increased as these costs have been in this quadrennium by reason of the rise in paper, labor, etc. (See Report of the Book Committee, page 47.) But the Book Committee has felt that the great service rendered to the Church in its many enterprises amply justifies this annual expenditure for publicity, especially during the Centenary period when such unusual emphasis has been placed upon our benevolent interests.

Let us look at this last point somewhat more closely. A careful analysis of the contents of these papers for four years shows that approximately one-fourth of their measured space has been devoted to promotional matter in behalf of the interests represented in the Council of Boards of Benevolence, much of this matter being furnished by the Boards themselves or by the Committee on Conservation and Advance. For this space no charge has been made by The Methodist Book Concern, this extraordinary service being rendered entirely without compensation although its value considered as advertising is manifestly worth more to the Boards and agencies concerned than the same amount of space used and paid for as straight advertising.

It is well within the mark to say that if the papers could have received credit at regular rates for this service there would have been no deficit. The Council, Boards, and Committees have repeatedly, by formal vote, acknowledged their obligation to the papers, and we believe that in bringing this offset to the attention of the General Conference we are contributing to a more intelligent understanding of the immense service which the Advocates are performing for the common good.

One of our discriminating Editors has said: "Financially The Christian Advocates are certain to show a deficit so long as the size and subscription price remains unchanged. With printing paper and the wage scale at their present level no economy in management will show a surplus unless the outlay per subscriber is offset by an enlarged revenue. The books of account can have no way of crediting the papers with the constantly accumulating items of gain to every reader, and to every denominational interest as a result of the stream of publicity ever flowing from the Church Press. If this could be written into the books before the balance is struck, the profits of the Church Press would be stupendous in proportion to the cost of the service."

Inasmuch as it is difficult to express the work of the Church in other than the language commonly used in describing secular affairs, the net results must be given in figures whether in reference to units of membership or in dollars and cents representing annual operations of the Methodist Episcopal Church as a going business concern.

Let us give attention for a moment to the latter point of view. We find that the fiscal operations of the Methodist Episcopal Church for a given year amount to something over $105,000,000. The greatest loss on the Advocates for any year in the quadrennium is $229,641.69. Without the Advocates this enormous business of the Methodist Episcopal Church could not have been carried on in such successful manner. Therefore the loss on publishing these Advocates should be considered simply as general publicity in the same way that corporations treat their national advertising as distinct from special and local publicity. As an illustration we cite actual figures taken from the reports of six large corporations:

	Amount of Annual Business	Annual National Advertising	Per- centage Cost
Corporation A	\$150,000,000	\$2,000,000	$1\frac{33}{100}\%$
Corporation B	23,000,000	200,000	$1\frac{8}{100}\%$
Corporation C	7,000,000	2,000,000	$28\frac{57}{100}\%$
Corporation D	75,000,000	3,000,000	$4\frac{\quad}{100}\%$
Corporation E	110,000,000	2,500,000	$2\frac{27}{100}\%$
Corporation F	40,000,000	1,500,000	$3\frac{75}{100}\%$
Methodist Episcopal Church	105,000,000	770,000	$\frac{7}{100}$ of 1%

From these figures it will be seen that neither in volume nor in percentage does the total cost of promoting the work of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as represented by the expenditures of the Boards for general publicity plus the cost of the Church papers, bear any comparison to the expenses in this one item of these great corporations in securing their annual sales.

The Methodist Book Concern endeavors to maintain Christian standards in all its business and industrial relationships. Goodwill and cooperation are the keynotes of our policy. Group insurance and retiring allowances are features of our economic system. Wages, hours, and working conditions are so adjusted as to promote human values. The 44-hour week, the union wage scale as a minimum, and consideration in cases of sickness and other emergencies, are only some of the features that make our plants attractive to workmen and contribute to the devotion and loyalty of our people.

The Book Committee and each of the Local Committees have held their regular meetings throughout the quadrennium, at which times the affairs of The Methodist Book Concern have been given careful and thorough-going consideration. As Publishing Agents we cannot pay too high tribute to the exacting work of our brethren on these Committees.

Our contract with the West Virginia Pulp and Paper Company, from whom we have been receiving for six years our main supply of paper, expired December 31, 1923. Last August we sent our requests to the representative paper manufacturers throughout the country setting forth our needs and specifications and asking samples and bids. When these were in hand we called into conference with us those in immediate charge of paper purchases in our three manufacturing plants who counseled with us relative to a new contract. After most careful consideration decision was reached by which practically 40 per cent of our paper supply would be purchased from the Champion Coated Paper Mills at Hamilton, Ohio, and the balance, or 60 per cent, would be furnished by the West Virginia Pulp and Paper Company for the period ending December 31, 1926.

The price per pound, f. o. b. mill, is the same from each company, and the quality of the paper furnished practically identical. Substantially all the paper we purchase from the Hamilton mill is used in our Cincinnati plant and on account of the short haul will make an annual saving to the Book Concern approximating $10,000. The annual consumption of paper included in these contracts is a little more than ten million pounds.

Carrying out the instructions of the Book Committee given at Chicago, April 21, 1923, regarding the establishment of a News Service at Washington, D. C., we report that very careful consideration was given to this subject. Dr. Harry E. Woolever, for eight years Assistant Editor of The Christian Advocate, was selected as the Editor and Director of the National Methodist Press Service. Dr. Woolever began this work at Washington as of October 1st last. This service brings before the reading public represented by Methodism in the United States trustworthy news and a sympathetic interpretation of events, persons, and legislative proposals from the national capital. Dr. Woolever reports monthly to the Publishing Agents and Local Committee at New York. The budget as approved by the Local Committee at New York is well within the authorization given by the Book Committee. This service is being received with favor by our constituency.

Among the authorizations of the General Conference of 1920 was a suitable recognition of the one hundredth anniversary of the establishment of The Methodist Book Concern in the West. Acting under this authorization, and with the sympathetic counsel and support of the Book Committee, this event was celebrated in Cincinnati, October 6, 1920. This date was agreed upon, due to the fact that the first entry in the first ledger at Cincinnati was "October 6, 1820." One of the features of this centennial celebration was the presentation of a film entitled, "Along the Years From Yesterday," which shows certain of the historic and picturesque incidents connected with the beginnings of Methodism and the development of the unique institution called The Methodist Book Concern.

During the past year Dr. Mains has moved from Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, to Altadena, California. He is very comfortably domiciled and his last letters indicate that he is in good health.

Dr. Jennings is now living at 64 East Eighteenth Street, North, Portland, Oregon. During the year he has completed his manuscript giving the history of The Methodist Book Concern, which institution, during his twenty-four years of active relationship as Publishing Agent, he so well served. This manuscript is now in the hands of the Book Editor and will be published at an early date.

Each of these honored brethren constantly seeks to be helpful in his relation to The Methodist Book Concern interests. We all join in the earnest prayer that the lives of these dear brethren may be spared to us yet many years.

As Publishing Agents we cannot accord too high praise to all who are associated with us in The Methodist Book Concern family. Frequent conferences are held involving all those who share with us administrative responsibility for the proper conduct of the affairs of The Methodist Book Concern.

Is it too much to say that probably never before throughout its long history has The Methodist Book Concern made a larger contribution to the work of the Kingdom than that which is now being made through the book, periodical, and leaflet literature issuing from our presses?

It is with thanksgiving to Almighty God, under whose leadership we all serve, that we submit this report.

Faithfully,

JOHN H. RACE,
ROBERT H. HUGHES,
Publishing Agents.

REPORT OF THE COUNCIL OF BOARDS OF BENEVOLENCE

*To the General Conference to be held in Springfield, Mass.,
May, 1924:*

The quadrennium records the most stupendous benevolence advance in our church history. Both in original vision and in practical execution the Centenary Movement of Methodism must always call forth the deepest gratitude of the Church. Through this movement the Church has been enabled in some fair measure to play its part in days of tremendous responsibility and opportunity.

The Centenary was an adventure so massive in its proportions and so embracing in its plans that it was not surprising that our people thought that for it everything could be ventured. Faith and works won in 1919. Beginnings are always interesting. Earlier Centenary days were naturally heroic, halcyon, dramatic, as well as trying and difficult; the later period has been more prosaic, less spectacular, but supremely important. It has been characterized by fidelity and sacrifice, heartbreak and victory. To-day we come to the end of the Centenary road. To-day in very large measure promise has become achievement.

We can say to-day at the close of the five-year Centenary period, "We have kept the faith." Not all that we set out to do has, of course, been done. There have been failures to fulfill carefully laid plans which occasioned deep distress. Nevertheless there has been in all of our world-wide work a record of expansion and actual achievement in building the Kingdom, which, perhaps, has not been reached in a similar time in Christian history. That record of achievements would have been a great one in any period of history, but it is only when we set it against the background of the crucial days of the war and the equally crucial days of the post-war period that we see its truly providential character.

Although it is difficult for us as contemporaries to gauge correctly the trend of world events, there can be little doubt but that we are in a transitional stage of history, a stage of history in which in many respects the transition is more cataclysmic than that which accompanied the submergence of the Roman Empire in the dust and ashes of the Dark Ages. The die has perhaps not yet been finally cast, and it has perhaps not been determined absolutely in what direction we are hastening; but the events of the last few years have at least made it certain that the old order has changed never to return, and that we are either moving toward a wiser, more humane, and less tempestuous international regime, or else toward an anarchy and a degradation in which the funeral pyres of civilization may be lighted.

The high significance of the Centenary is that just in these days when the world's future is being decided, our Church, in the providence of God, has been able to set its work—the healing and creating forces of the Spirit of Christ—on a scale never before realized or even attempted.

Whoever the historian may be of this period of our Church life, he will be compelled to note that in the midst of economic readjustment, general business deflation, and the recognized loss of the high idealism characteristic of the World War period, the Methodist Episcopal Church highly resolved to remain true to her benevolent interests. Subscribing during the quadrennium 1920-1923 more than $51,000,000 to educational advances, and more than $16,000,000 to philanthropic interests as represented in her hospitals and homes, increasing her ministerial support by $7,500,000, her church property by more than $74,000,000, she has in addition laid upon the altar for apportioned benevolences during the same four years $57,000,000. That corresponding spiritual advance has been made is indicated by a Church membership increase of 307,007.

As accurately as the compilation can be made, the Church has given to disciplinary benevolences during the last quarter century:

1904-1908 " "	16,620,821
1909-1913 " "	19,200,467
1914-1918 " "	24,792,674
1919-1923 " "	85,428,355

For the causes represented in the Centenary the Church has given during the quarter century:

1899-1903 (five years)	$8,956,361
1904-1908 " "	11,928,890
1909-1913 " "	13,001,405
1919-1923 " "	67,910,229

(The figure last quoted gives the total receipts for the Centenary and apportioned benevolences during the five fiscal years, November 1, 1918, to October 31, 1923. It therefore includes seven months prior to the beginning, June 1, 1919, and of necessity omits receipts of the last seven months ending May 31, 1924, of the five years' Centenary period.)

THREE QUARTERS OF A CENTURY OF PER CAPITA GIVING TO APPORTIONED BENEVOLENCES

umn headed "Disciplinary Benevolences" and illustrated by the heavy black line.

One important task during the quadrennium has been to stabilize giving so that the Church would not return to the former low level of benevolence contributions. That this has measurably resulted is manifest from the comparison of the preceding charts with the chart exhibited at the last General Conference indicating the sudden rise of benevolent giving during the Centenary Celebration of 1856 and the immediate decline of income to pre-Centenary levels. There has been no such debacle.

A study of the per capita giving to our apportioned benevolences since 1850 will be suggestive.

ORGANIZATION

The General Conference of 1920 created a central agency for the unification and promotion of our apportioned general benevolences. The legislation was adopted after the most careful consideration of numerous memorials relating to the correlation and coordination of the Benevolent Boards. The Committee on Temporal Economy evidently sought to meet the desire of the membership of the Church, without disturbing the status of the existing Boards and without in any manner jeopardizing the wonderful results of the Centenary. The declared intent was an organization "to take the place of the recognized and official agency, the Commission on Finance and of the unofficial agency, the Centenary Conservation Committee."

In harmony with this legislation (Discipline, Paragraphs 407, 408, 409, 410) the Council of Boards of Benevolence held an initial meeting in Atlantic City, June 25, 26, 1920, provided for the Executive Committee and the Committee on Conservation and Advance, elected Bishop F. D. Leete, President, and J. R. Joy, Recording Secretary of the Council, unanimously chose Chicago for headquarters, and acted upon other items of immediate necessity. Subsequent meetings of the Council have been held as follows: Boston, Mass., November 17-19, 1920; Detroit, Michigan, November 19-22, 1921; Chicago, June 28, 29, 1922; Chicago, January 23-25, 1923; Chicago, January 23, 24, 1924.

The Executive Committee organized by electing Bishop J. F. Berry, Chairman; W. W. King, Vice-Chairman, and E. C. Wareing, Secretary. The Committee on Conservation and Advance named Bishop Thomas Nicholson as Chairman, Bishop Homer C. Stuntz, Vice-Chairman, and Charles E. Guthrie, Recording Secretary. This committee by two-thirds vote elected R. J. Wade, Corresponding Secretary, and M. W. Ehnes, Treasurer.

Three general departments were authorized, Administrative, Finance, and Education. Ralph E. Diffendorfer was secured to direct the Department of Education, which includes the divisions of stewardship, publicity, literature, pageants, exhibits, surveys, church training, missionary education and stereopticon activities. The treasurer has charge of the Department of Finance, which includes collection, receipts, disbursements, audit, apportionment, statistics, charts and graphs. To the corresponding secretary in addition to the general supervision of all departments was commissioned the particular task of personnel service, field organization, including area offices, training conferences and unit organization. The location for the central promotional work was arranged at The Methodist Book Concern, 740 Rush Street, Chicago. Economy of time and space, together with efficiency in the work, has been secured not only by the elimination of private offices, but through careful office management. On one floor are housed all general offices and departments—executive, field, personnel, finance, apportionments, statistics, surveys, charts, graphs, education, stewardship, pageants, exhibits, stereopticon, publicity, church training, printing, service, filing, stenographic, together with the Transportation Bureau and Commission on Life Service, including the Foreign Board Chicago Personnel and Home Cultivation quarters.

FINANCIAL ADJUSTMENTS

The transfer of financial headquarters to 740 Rush Street was made on August 23d and an initial deposit recorded of almost $12,000. Peter W. Finger, from the Commission on Finance, was selected as cashier and C. M. Barton was placed in charge of the entire division of apportionments, statistics, surveys, charts and graphs. He is also the assistant treasurer. A system of triplicate vouchers for all Centenary payments was inaugurated and these have been sent simultaneously to pastors, district superintendents and area offices. This plan, together with frequent charge reports, has answered every legitimate desire for information and has enabled officials to know approximately the standing of any charge to date.

The Statistical Branch has compiled and issued each year to all Charges, Districts, Conferences, and Areas, a tabular statement in two columns of fifteen important statistical items with three per capita reckonings. Special charts showing the trend in Centenary giving and other items have been prepared whenever requested. Various calculations of helpful value have been made for the Boards and church groups.

The Graphics Branch prepared all the charts, maps, and diagrams which appear in the World Service volume. Like service has been continuously rendered the publicity channels of the Church. A system of graphic records showing amounts due and paid with percentage reckonings graphically representing the comparative payment of each charge has received the highest commendation.

The Apportionments Branch has each year compiled for all Charges, Districts, and Conferences, the four statistical items which are made the basis of our grade calculations and apportionments to pastoral charges. Grade reckonings have been furnished upon request to many districts and Annual Conferences for special items and apportionments.

A very careful study of the basis of apportionments is continuously being made, and several distinct improvements have been put into effect. Our work is being used as a basis for similar reckonings in several denominations.

In the interest of accuracy and economy the central statistical group should be made officially responsible for the preparation of all the tabulations and statistics published throughout the connection. Your central office, through frequent correspondence with district superintendents, has been able to serve usefully all church agencies with constantly corrected mailing lists of pastors and district superintendents.

INTERCHURCH WORLD MOVEMENT RELATIONSHIPS

It will be remembered that the Interchurch World Movement took over from the Centenary Conservation Committee the Stereopticon, Lantern Slide Manufacturing and Coloring, Pageants and Costumes, Statistics, Graphs, and Service Departments.

The Committee on Conservation and Advance on July 22, 1920, adopted the following:

"Resolved, that the Administrative Committee be requested to obtain an adjustment of our account with the Interchurch World Movement with power to take in settlement such assets as it may deem expedient."

In harmony with this action, following several conferences with our own leaders, with Interchurch authorized representatives, and after careful legal counsel, it was agreed that the various departments should be returned to our possession; and for that period in which the departments were operated by the Interchurch World Movement that there be charged a reasonable rental. Due allowance was made for depreciation; where materials were missing proper substitution was made or needed supplies accepted. These items, considered with the charges for service rendered the Centenary organizations by the Interchurch World Movement in printing, stereopticon supplies, etc., almost exactly balanced, and the account was justly and happily settled.

STEREOPTICON AND LANTERN SLIDES

The manufacturing division was temporarily continued in New York while stock was being reduced and lecture sets completed. The lease for a portion of the space in New York expired and a greatly increased rental charge proposed. Available space in Chicago cost in the neighborhood of but $1 per square foot. It was discovered that the cost of removal to and installation in Chicago would be absorbed in the difference of the first year's rental. Furthermore, the transfer meant the advantages of close contact, coordination, direct supervision, and cheaper distribution.

A quadrennium of most remarkable achievements has resulted. From July 1, 1920, to December 31, 1923, this division, under the supervision of Joseph Milligan, has produced:

132,228 slides
114,593 prints
8,837 negatives
7,583 enlargements.

To the area offices for distribution 2,067 separate lecture sets have been delivered, consisting of:

914 large lecture sets
884 story lectures
269 illustrated hymn sets.

In 1923 the experiment was made of placing all lecture sets on the free rather than rental list, with the result that a 90 per cent increase in usage was recorded, amply justifying the determination. The 2,830 sets now in circulation have a valuation of $169,567.87, while there are additional assets of approximately $150,000, consisting of photographic equipment, furniture, photographic albums, negatives, photographic material and supplies, plain and colored slides.

The present cost of production may be compared with the cost of production under the Interchurch World Movement. The latter's cost, not including rent, heat, and light, was thirty-one cents for each plain slide against our cost of eighteen cents, and ninety-eight cents for a colored slide against our cost of sixty-three cents.

At the time of the transfer the employees numbered ninety-eight. An immediate reduction was made to sixty-nine. Further reductions reduced the employees to twenty-seven, the number at present employed.

Lecture sets and slides have been manufactured during the past year alone for the following churches and religious organizations:

The Disciples of Christ
Reformed Church in the United States
Northern Baptist Convention

Congregational
 Presbyterian Church South
 Lutheran Church of the Brethren
 The Salvation Army
 International Sunday School Council of Religious Education.

The following lectures on January 1, 1924, were in various stages of production.

- 20 sets of "Our Schools in the Southern Highlands."
- 20 sets of "Isabella Thoburn College."
- 20 sets of "First Church, Steubenville."
- 20 sets of "Twigs for Bending."
- 20 sets of "American Bible Society Hymn."
- 20 sets of "Manitou Listens to Me."
- 125 sets of "Easter Story."
- 20 sets of "Ginling College."

An illustration division must be maintained of highest grade to make it possible to achieve results such as are tabulated above, and are generally recognized in our superior and up-to-date stereopticon slides. The superintendent, H. G. Conger, has added 22,839 negatives to our permanent files, of which 13,868 are listed as foreign and 8,971 as related to the home field. There are approximately 100,000 negatives in our permanent files. The largest task of 1923 was the illustrating of the World Service volume. The 631 pictorial illustrations in the book represent but a part of the thousands of pictures which were assembled and studied for this purpose. Many pastors, missionaries, and local photographers cooperated in making this result possible. Special help was also rendered in preparation of the World Service Lecture, the Japan Earthquake Fund publicity, and the Centenary Calendar. The production and distribution of films for moving picture machines has not been attempted because of numerous obstacles, not the least of which inhere in the question of expense. During the early part of the quadrennium this division published a recommended white list of religious and educational films for churches and community buildings prepared by Chester C. Marshall.

Arrangements were made last year for the continuation of this white list through the magazine, "The Educational Screen." Chester C. Marshall, who pioneered for us in this work, conserves for the churches this valuable development by personal relationship with this corporation.

The advantages of centralized operation of work like that of the stereopticon division may be noted. Both economy and efficiency suggest one agency for collecting and handling photographic material which is held in common for all Boards and church agencies. Frequently several agencies advantageously use the same material. This is equally true of graphs and statistics. Centralized photographic cooperation is quite essential to a centralized publicity policy. For this purpose material must not be widely scattered and somewhat inaccessible. Reduction in cost is possible with increased output and quality can be preserved. A half dozen or more separate departments prevents these results. Overhead expense of supervision, rent and equipment is reduced when duplication of approach and effort is avoided. Quantity production means lower purchasing cost. All of this has been repeatedly demonstrated during the quadrennium in reference to maps, charts, prints, etc., and whatever arguments may be adduced from the viewpoint of production are equally applicable to distribution.

PAGEANTS AND COSTUMES

Usable costumes from the Interchurch World Movement were preserved and became the foundation for a growing division at Chicago headquarters, where now besides flags, etc., over 1,700 complete costumes are listed. The extensive scenery and exhibit material from the Missionary Centenary at Columbus and "The Wayfarer" did not appear to be serviceable and was disposed of by the Joint Centenary Commission. The expenses of the year 1923 outside of salaries, heat, etc., totaled $782.79, while the income was $1,625.25 received from rentals distributed over twenty-nine States.

However, the biggest work of this division is to be found not in the preparation and handling of costumes, but in the counsel and correspondence with the churches and church organizations, concerning dramatic presentations, mainly missionary, the teaching and direction of Miss Helen L. Willcox and her assistant, Miss Iona M. Easley in Institutes, Conferences, Schools and Colleges, and the creation of dramatic presentations suitable for missionary, stewardship and general church use. Miss Willcox has personally written a number of these dramas, edited and criticized others, and is the Associate Editor for a Biblical Drama Series now being printed by The Methodist Book Concern.

STEWARDSHIP

Luther E. Lovejoy was asked to succeed Ralph S. Cushman, who had resigned after giving several valuable years to the general church in this fundamental work. Available material and equipment was shipped to the Chicago office and the office force at once reduced to the lowest terms compatible with efficiency—one secretarial assistant with two regular stenographers. Early in 1923 the assistant secretary and one stenographer were discontinued. A very small budget has provided for all salaries, all traveling expenses, various contingent items and a vast amount of free stewardship literature for the entire church. The director has personally supervised the correspondence, created much of the literature, directed the activities, and cooperated in extensive field cultivation. Many annual and district Conferences, colleges, universities, seminaries, as well as local churches, have been visited, and fraternal relations maintained with the Stewardship Department of the Y. M. C. A., "The Layman Company" and kindred organizations. Contact is secured with the stewardship leaders of all Protestant bodies through the United Stewardship Council and the Federal Council of Churches. A special committee to provide a united statement of stewardship faith for all Christian churches has been appointed, of which our director is the chairman.

The steady growth of stewardship sentiment is partially revealed through the amount of literature distributed in 1921, 35,000,000 pages; in 1922, 80,000,000 pages; in 1923, over 100,000,000 pages. This vast distribution has been possible in part because of the cooperation of that remarkable layman, Mr. Thomas Kane, of The Layman Company. All of our literature has been furnished free, but none, except samples, without specific request and on condition of personal, judicious and economic distribution.

The gratifying response to the stewardship message has been due to careful but virile leadership, a willingness to experiment in new fields as in storehouse organization, and the fact that in our list of contributors we can name some of the most eminent religious leaders, such as Drs. Jowett, Calkins, Hough, Cushman, Elliott, Magee, Dean Brown, Professors Rall and Flewelling, Bishops Henderson and Richardson, Senator Pepper, Messrs. Babson, Linn and Sailer.

During the quadrennium special stewardship seasons have been promoted. One of these closed Stewardship Year with the New Methodist Million enlistment Watch Night, December 31, 1922. Easter week Tithe Offerings were promoted in 1922 and 1923, the first of which played a major part in the increase of receipts in May, 1922, of $570,834.34 over May, 1921. Perhaps 500,000 stewardship enrollments have actually been listed in the central office, while thousands are unrecorded by name.

Constant attention has been given to the promotion of stewardship according to the provisions of the Discipline, and at the meeting in Detroit in November, 1921, the Council of Boards of Benevolence recommended that, "a literature and textbooks covering the whole subject of stewardship" be prepared and urged the organization in all local churches of associations for mutual helpfulness, study, and the promotion of the practice of tithing stewardship.

This instruction was followed by the preparation of a manual for The Quarterly Conference Committee on Stewardship and the projection of "The Christian Stewardship Guild," adaptable for local organization. Manuals of instruction designed for pastors have been entitled, "Stewardship Legislation," "The Stewardship Self Starter" and "The Accelerator."

Continuous emphasis has been placed on Stewardship Study Classes and Reading Contests. The Epworth League and Sunday School Boards have given gratifying cooperation, and the stewardship enrollments from the Epworth League group especially have been steady and sizable.

The attitude of the entire Church toward stewardship is to-day most encouraging. The opposition which greeted those who pioneered in this emphasis a few years ago has almost wholly disappeared. To-day stewardship is a welcome teaching in all parts of the Church. In parts of the Buffalo and Philadelphia Areas the Storehouse plan is in great favor. Almost all of our alert pastors at favorable periods have projected successful stewardship campaigns. The greatest difficulty of to-day is not opposition but inertia. New interest is developing in university, college and theological school centers. To-morrow is full of hope! To-day has been fraught with not a little victory! Who can doubt that genuine stewardship is more and more becoming a part of the life of our people, when the 1924 Methodist Year Book tabulates payments for our own religious purposes in 1923 of $100,819,730? This is an outpouring of consecrated money by our people without precedent and without parallel in magnitude in any communion. May not a measure of it be attributed to the quiet, unostentatious but consistent campaigning of this invaluable division of necessary correlated denominational activity?

PUBLICITY

This division has endeavored to use every agency that was open for the purpose of conveying information and inspiration to the Church and the general public regarding the work of the Methodist Episcopal Church through its Boards of Benevolence in this country and all parts of the world. There have been three purposes underlying the work. First, to sustain and increase interest in the work of the Church and thus continue and increase the support of that work. Second, to feed the springs of religious feelings and conviction which are fundamental to the support of the benevolent work of the Church. Third, to help the various Boards represented in the Council to carry forward the actual work they are doing, not merely by telling the story about the work done, but by publicity to help in the prosecution of the work. An example of this kind of work is found in the publicity on the Epworth League and Sunday School Institutes by which the number in attendance has been augmented. Similar examples are to be noted as to Church Training Night, Life Service Recruiting, the Summer Schools of the Commission on Courses of Study, and the Schools for

Rural and City Pastors supported by the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension.

It was not thought wise by the Committee on Conservation and Advance to take over World Outlook from the Interchurch World Movement, and Men and Money, the special stewardship organ having but seven hundred and forty-seven paid subscribers was discontinued. Missionary News, an eight-page monthly publication of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension and the Board of Foreign Missions, with a circulation approximating 50,000, has been edited by our publicity staff. Several special editions have been given wider circulation by offering it as a pamphlet for free distribution.

It has been clearly the conviction of the Committee on Conservation and Advance that the Advocate family constituted the best denominational approach with the printed page. By agreement an average of four pages a week and eight pages the third week of the month has been furnished by this division to the following eight papers: The Christian Advocate, Northwestern Christian Advocate, Zion's Herald, California Christian Advocate, Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, Pacific Christian Advocate, Central Christian Advocate, Western Christian Advocate. The following five papers have used two pages each week and four pages the third week of every month: Washington Christian Advocate, Michigan Christian Advocate, Southwestern Christian Advocate, Methodist Advocate-Journal, and the Christian Apologete. Exclusive material is furnished the Epworth Herald. All of the papers have been most generous in giving space, and the editors have continuously contributed effective editorial support to the endeavors of the Committee on Conservation and Advance and the various Boards. This attitude of sympathetic cooperation is an asset to the benevolence work of the Church of enormous value. The Division of Publicity has prepared the program and special material for Good Literature Day, and all departments have sought to aid in securing subscribers to the Advocates.

A wide variety of material has been used in this syndicate. In addition to that which is obviously of human interest and of our regular promotional character, articles on general religious and social questions have been furnished to the Advocates for the purpose of enriching the papers and stimulating the religious life of the people. As contributors of this class of material, we have had some of the foremost religious leaders, both of our own churches in the United States and Great Britain.

The extensiveness of this syndicate material becomes apparent when it is known that every month there is sent out and used in the different Advocates an average of twenty pages; for the year 240 pages; for four years 960 pages. If the combined circulation of the Advocates is 250,000, then 240,000,000 pages of material printed during the quadrennium has been furnished by the Committee on Conservation and Advance.

Articles syndicated in the Advocates have frequently been reviewed in the Literary Digest, thus giving them an additional circulation of a million. The widest publicity arises from cooperation with the Sunday school publications. Henry H. Meyer, the editor, and his staff, have been eager to open the columns of their publications to suitable material having an educational value. Our staff has given much effort to avail themselves of the opportunity. General articles have been sent to The Classmate, The Portal, and The Target, which have a combined circulation of over a million copies a week, and also a special series of articles on home and foreign missions projects extending over three months. A very unusual piece of cooperation was effected during October, November and December in the teacher and pupil publications dealing with the international Sunday school lesson. The subject of the quarter was the missionary message of the Bible. During that time one member of the staff wrote the entire senior quarterly with a circulation of a million and a quarter copies. Another member of the staff conducted a lesson treatment in the Adult Bible Class Monthly dealing with these lessons. Another member of the staff conducted a similar lesson treatment in the Sunday School Journal linking up the Sunday school lessons with the World Service volume.

PAMPHLET LITERATURE

Pamphlet publication may be divided into two classes—issues of regular publications appearing monthly, and special pamphlets. There have been two regular publications. First, The Pastors' Bulletin, of which there have been twenty-four issues, giving exclusive material to the pastors and sent only to them. In this bulletin all of the various interests of all the Boards have been featured. There has also been published what is known as the Area Bulletin, which is sent out to the pastors from the area office, the two inside pages of which are devoted to material supplied from the central office.

The guiding principle in the preparation of a pamphlet has been that of trying to meet the need for pamphlets and that without any unnecessary printing. The policy of distribution only upon request from samples avoids waste. Some idea of the demand for this literature may be gained from the fact that 13,047,000 pamphlets were printed and distributed for the calendar years of 1922, 1923, or an approximate total of 25,000,000 for the entire quadrennium.

More pretentious booklets have been issued devoted to special objects, such as Church Training Night, the Every Member Canvass, and similar undertakings. The special campaigns which have been carried forward have also demanded pamphlet literature in their prosecution—such campaigns as the “I Will Maintain” Campaign of 1922, the special emergency campaign of 1923, and the Japan Earthquake Fund, etc. In addition, Christmas programs have been prepared for special collections at Christmas. Another form of useful publication has been the preparation of special speech material for different groups, pastors, district superintendents, and other speakers. Every year the Division of Publicity has given much attention to promoting Good Literature Day for the purpose of increasing the number of subscribers to the Advocates. The Publicity Division has prepared the program and special material and assisted in other ways. This is likewise true of the Lincoln Day and other programs.

May I quote from my January, 1924, report to the Council:

“Promotion palls without publicity. Add publicity and your strength becomes the strength of ten. One of the demonstrated necessary features of our modern Methodism is a unified policy, program, and organization as to publicity. Halford E. Luccock has captained this division. Each Board is assigned a member of the staff, whose duty it is to cooperate in preparing adequate material for the Board and likewise to arrange for its appearance.

SECULAR PRESS

“While the daily newspapers are using more space for advertising and less for news material, there has been a constantly increasing amount of space given to news of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Practical tests have proven that the publishers and editors of the daily and weekly newspapers are growing interested in and asking for church news. The newspaper clippings coming to our desks prove conclusively that, in the last four years, there has been a tremendous growth of news matter regarding the Methodist Episcopal Church printed in the daily and weekly press. J. T. B. Smith is in charge of this bureau at the Chicago office, while H. C. Foster cares for the Eastern section.”

Sufficient news material was printed last year in the daily newspapers throughout the United States to supply any great metropolitan paper with six pages of news material for six editions in the week for one year and four months.

RADIO POSSIBILITIES

Our representatives have very generously been invited to speak in many radio stations, and their messages have been broadcasted from many pulpits and platforms. In one area in December last, over half a million listeners heard the message of Kingdom challenge in one day. A unique field of possibility has opened in this direction which merits study, use and cooperation. A central broadcasting station for the entire church merits consideration. In January the Committee on Conservation and Advance appointed and the Council approved the appointment of a committee for this purpose, consisting of John H. Race, George W. Dixon, and R. J. Wade. It is hoped that the General Conference will give general approval to this investigation and enterprise.

CHURCH TRAINING NIGHT

This innovation in the activities of the church grows apace. It has been wisely fostered by the Church Training Night Division under the leadership of Paul P. Rugg. Many pastors are reporting a rejuvenated mid-week service and the church prayer meeting in many places has been saved from falling into innocuous desuetude by this plan which leads to high missionary, educational, inspirational, and religious service. Over 1,580 churches have been reported to our office as having developed in some form Church Training Night. It may frequently become the entering wedge for a larger program of week-day religious instruction. May it not continue permanently as a method by which the local church may bring to its constituency which has passed beyond the age reached by regular week-day religious education the newest and finest materials on general church life and activities?

Through this division constant advice and help is being given missionary study classes and a manual of "Suggestions to Leaders" of Young People's Groups and Adult Classes studying the World Service volume has been prepared. So valuable did it prove to be that it was sent out January 1, 1924, as Pastors' Bulletin No. 23.

The Methodist Episcopal Church cooperates in the Missionary Education Movement through the Church Training Night division. Through this Movement, in consultation with representatives from the Woman's Home and Woman's Foreign Missionary Boards, agreement is secured regarding the themes for the study of Home and Foreign Missions from year to year. Through this Movement our Church is provided with the best written, the most carefully edited, the most scientifically constructed literature for children, boys and girls, and young people, as well as for adults. Our Church also takes advantage of its summer training conferences held under this Movement, for the training of missionary leaders for its own summer schools and institutes and for missionary workers in local churches.

LAY ACTIVITIES

Never have laymen appeared more eager and willing to enlist for definite service than during this quadrennium. In many quarters Minute Men have continued active and in other sections have latterly been known as World Service Messengers, or World Service Broadcasters.

It has been our policy to endeavor to enhance the value of existing organizations and church committees, rather than spectacularly to project new organizational schemes. For the Committee on Apportioned Benevolences, The Stewardship Committee, the Every Member Canvassers, the Unit Leaders and Lay Lenten Preachers, helpful pamphlet literature has been repeatedly prepared. Our aim has been to strengthen the Area, Conference, and District organization of the laymen, and successfully mobilize this great, largely unused asset of the Church.

COMMISSION ON LIFE SERVICE

Conflicting legislation as to life service agencies has been remedied in actual practice by the recognition of the Commission on Life Service as the agency for the determination of policy and the Committee on Conservation and Advance as the coordinating medium and place for administration. By agreement the Executive Committee of the Commission nominated and the Administrative Committee of the Committee on Conservation and Advance elected W. J. Davidson the Executive Secretary. Upon his resignation, September 22, 1922, Benson Baker served for a few months as Acting Executive Secretary, since which time the Corresponding Secretary of the Committee on Conservation and Advance has carried the added responsibility.

The secretary brought to the Commission his wide experience as pastor, chancellor of university, professor in Garrett Biblical Institute, administrator in cooperation with the Board of Sunday Schools and Centenary organization. He began without a member of a staff or stenographer but soon, by the cooperation of the various Board agencies and committees, a fine working organization was secured. He was bequeathed a heterogeneous mass of more than 40,000 names of miscellaneous gathered life service recruits, old and young, educated and unequipped, with hazy ideas of work, the vast majority looking forward to part time service; he planned in conjunction with the staff the measures by which this list became properly allocated and related to the most effective service. His administration won the esteem of his associates, the confidence of the Church and gave fine direction to the challenge of young life.

The present staff consists of Evans A. Worthley, Vocational Guidance; Elton R. Shaw, Director, College Conferences; Margaret Bennett, Research; together with representatives whose salaries are paid by the several Boards as follows: W. E. J. Gratz, Board of Epworth League; C. M. McConnell, Board of Sunday Schools and Board of Home Missions and Church Extension; Charles S. Braden and Mary A. Randolph, Board of Foreign Missions; Muriel Day, Woman's Home Missionary Society; Mrs. Clyde Collison, Woman's Foreign Missionary Society; Jessie E. Arbuckle, General Deaconess Board; N. E. Davis, Board of Hospitals and Homes; J. P. MacMillan, Board of Education; I. Garland Penn, Board of Education for Negroes.

The members of the staff deserve the highest praise for devotion and high quality of service. A conscientious and efficient corps of clerical workers has been employed. Several have been life service recruits and some workers are now serving in life service positions both at home and abroad.

RECRUITING

Last year 7,508 new names from various sources were received by the Commission. When decision cards arrive they are immediately checked up with our files to ascertain whether any previously have been listed. If found, any added information is tabulated and a proper communication is sent; if not previously entered then a letter of acknowledgment is sent and an information blank is enclosed. When this is returned it is acknowledged and correspondence follows based upon education, qualifications, and choice of life work.

Our records include names received from bishops, district superintendents, pastors, evangelists, missionaries, deaconesses, educators and educational institutions, the Epworth League, Older Boys' Conferences, Young Men's Christian Association, Young Women's Christian Association, Student Volunteer Movement, Students Fellowship for Christian Life Service and occasionally a few reported to us from other denominations.

COLLEGE CONFERENCES

For more immediate use in actual life service tasks, the college conferences are most productive fields. It is for this reason that we have placed much emphasis on this phase of our work. Last year was the most successful year as tested by recruits, interviews, reports of team members, and college or university authorities. In the college year 1921-1922, fifty-seven institutions were visited while in 1922-1923, sixty-three visitations were made, thirty-seven of which were institutions visited for the first time. For the current year it was determined that our first approach should be to the eight Methodist institutions of college grade not yet visited by the Commission, to a number of our secondary schools and particularly to our institutions under the Board of Education for Negroes, to State institutions and places where there was a definite opportunity to try out some experiments in the direction of better and improved methods of visitation.

A recently conducted appraisal of college conferences led inevitably to the following conclusions: First, that the Commission on Life Service and representatives are held in high esteem for work done. Second, that there is an earnest desire for more light, happier approach, better methods. Third, that continued cooperation by the institutions will be given, and that the only assurance of that cooperation lies in the unified approach. Institution and student alike demand the unified appeal.

OLDER BOYS' CONFERENCES

Cooperative arrangements with the Epworth League and Board of Sunday Schools in correspondence, printing and distribution of literature, field visitation and promotion, have resulted in widely extending this avenue of training. Assistance was given to more than three-fourths of the Older Boys' Conferences held last year.

VOCATIONAL GUIDANCE

The task of directing adequate correspondence with the more than three thousand persons whose names are carried, who have not made specific choice as to vocations, has been conducted with discrimination by E. A. Worthley, Vocational Counsellor. This task also embraces the cultivation of those who have made choices but whose educational preparation is so limited that it is not yet necessary or deemed wise to place these folders with the Boards for more definite direction. The field of vocational guidance is constantly assuming increased proportions and significance and the Commission can well be congratulated on the steps taken in this field.

LITERATURE AND RESEARCH

Choice pamphlet literature covering almost every phase of endeavor has been published, and a quarterly issue of the Personnel Needs Bulletin, with a mailing list of over 4,000 persons, has been maintained. Its value is certified by appearance, contents and the increasing number of requests for its use. The Church is debtor to the Commission for the thorough survey of the educational qualifications of the ministry as prepared by Margaret Bennett, Research Secretary. The booklet bears the title, "The Ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church."

THE FUTURE OF THE COMMISSION

From the report made to the final meeting of the Commission on Life Service, this quotation is made:

"The approach of the end of the quadrennium raises the question of the continued direction of the important life service interests. Not all has been accomplished during this period that had been hoped, but steady progress has been recorded toward the objective—‘one unified system of recruiting, guidance and selection of candidates for Christian service in the Church; and all agencies shall become a part of the system.’

“Let it never be forgotten that the Commission on Life Service came into being as the result of an insistent demand. The Centenary did not institute that need but did accelerate the necessity for coordination of effort. This organization is the outgrowth of a very normal and usual experience. It is the trend in State and church. Youth expects and demands it. There is no challenge that will secure the finest and best in our institutions without enlarged opportunity. The student is discouraged and disheartened by unrelated appeals. He is almost maddened by competition and overlapping of effort. Before this period of united endeavor be it remembered that some colleges had closed their doors to special representatives of boards and agencies, while all too large a number of students were choosing fields outside of the Church. Three interrupted pioneer years are too few to indicate all that can be accomplished by an organization of this character. Will more be accomplished by returning to the old methods, which, while effective in certain ways, caused the Church in desperation frequently to turn to untrained workers? Shall we now about face when colleges, universities and other groups have strongly endorsed the work of the Commission and have welcomed the relief from the competitive and numerous appeals to students? Should not the effort be in the direction of perfecting the organization and of completing and strengthening its personnel? To-day other churches are coordinating their work of recruiting and guidance and have been watching the program of our Church with a great deal of interest. The Lutheran Church has 8,000 names of young people to whom it is sending information and literature. The Congregational Church has its mailing list of young people to whom it is sending a bi-monthly information sheet. The Presbyterian branches are perfecting their organizations for more effective approach. We have had in these years magnificent cooperation from our several Boards in almost every detail and a genuine esprit de corps is to be found among the members of the staff that is delightful and wholesome. It would appear that there is every reason for us to pursue our objectives to unify our college and church visitation, to unify and centralize our correspondence in cultivation, to continue our endeavor to set up high and higher standards and to clarify all misunderstandings as to true Life Service ideals. Certainly all are convinced that the Church must make one unified appeal to local church, to educational institutions, and to young life. Certainly we must care for these recruits in a unified way. Certainly the organization must be closely integrated with the several Boards and with whatever central promotional or unifying organization the General Conference may approve."

FIELD ACTIVITIES

This important task committed to the Committee on Conservation and Advance has been carried on in a thoroughly coordinated and systematic way. The Area system has given an exceedingly advantageous approach to the Church. The resident Bishop with the Area Secretary has been able to organize and carry out the Centenary program in a more satisfactory manner in all probability than could have been possible in any other way.

The central office has kept in constant touch with the Area Offices, and has attempted to furnish them with sufficient speakers to bring to the District Superintendents the inspiration needed to maintain the morale of the Church. Members of the Centenary Staff have been deputed to the visitation of the Annual and District Conferences, and the entertaining pastors and committees have usually made provision for the presentation of the whole program. These addresses have been given with or without the stereopticon according to circumstances. Pageants have often been favorably received.

All of the Bishops have been willing to place their energy and ability and all the time they could possibly spare from their areas, at our disposal. Bishops Fred B. Fisher and Edwin H. Hughes, who upon request were released from Episcopal visitation, together with others gave their whole time for two months in the "I Will Maintain" Campaign in a manner that will long be remembered by the Church. The result marked a wonderful epoch in the midst of the Centenary period.

The general field personnel has been composed of five men, who formerly had been in the mission field under the Foreign Board, but who have been home on extended furloughs. They have been kept constantly employed in the field summer and winter during the entire quadrennium. By their strong appeals and personal touch they have been of great inspirational and informational value to the entire Church. In addition, five men who as pastors had demonstrated unusual capacity have been likewise employed, representing American interests. Two women, widows of missionaries, have given their time to deputation work.

About twenty furloughed missionaries per month for full or part-time service have been assigned through the cooperation of the Board of Foreign Missions. Their salaries have been paid by the Board, while we guaranteed traveling expenses while in the field. As soon as released by the medical adviser they have been deputed to us for a period of months according to health and length of furlough. Several used the lantern and were especially effective with slides made from photographs which they had taken in their respective fields of service.

The policy followed with all field workers has been to arrange with the Area Secretary to place one or more of our regular field men and as many of the missionaries as could be conveniently used, and to assign these workers to the Area for a period of weeks and in some instances for months. In turn the Area Secretary has arranged with the District Superintendents to use these men in the bounds of their districts for as many days as deemed wise, either in district meetings, group meetings, or upon the individual charges. Care has been exercised in assigning furloughed missionaries to the different areas, so that at different times the various parts of the Foreign Field could be represented.

The Board of Home Missions and Church Extension has also arranged to furnish for field cultivation frontier preachers and city workers as well as the employed evangelists. The workers have given inspiration by their earnest appeals and vivid descriptions of the results of the work carried on in the various mission fields in our Home Land.

Emphasis has not only been placed upon our financial needs, but an attempt has been made to show the Church that our supreme task is to win the world to God. This has been done by indicating both what we have accomplished and what still remains to be done. Staff members as well as Corresponding Secretaries of the several Boards have earnestly cooperated as tasks have been permitted. Experimental campaigns have been attempted and varied types of helpful field approach promoted.

CORRELATION OF INSTITUTES

A unique promotional opportunity is afforded in the normal work of the summer and winter Training Institutes of the several Boards. Substantial progress has been registered in securing the presentation of the total church program, and the adoption of more perfect life service methods. Additional ground can be gained in a new quadrennium by securing co-operation and correlation as to time, method and program of all Institutes and Summer Schools.

CHILD WELFARE

At the beginning of the quadrennium a representative of the Methodist Child Welfare Society appealed for support but the consistent action has been to place these activities with the Board of Hospitals and Homes in harmony with the action of the General Conference of 1920. This was finally effected and the Board has given due consideration to the interests involved.

BOARD ADJUSTMENTS

After most careful investigation as to the intent of General Conference action, financial provision was made for the Board of Epworth League budget, to which dues, Anniversary Day Offerings, twenty-four hour day money, etc., should apply with Centenary credit. The annual budget of the Board of Hospitals and Homes was undertaken and likewise the expenses of the Commission on the Conference Courses of Study and the Commission on Life Service. Practical difficulties in financial adjustment as to the Board of Conference Claimants led to agreed upon action, by which previous methods of support were in the main continued. Sympathy with requested larger financial co-operation with the Federal Council of Churches was found to be prohibited by the limitations of General Conference action. Helpful transportation arrangements have been secured for all agencies through the Transportation Bureau, of which E. K. Copper has been the efficient secretary.

BUDGET SAVINGS AND SALVAGE

When the processes of operation have been studied, administrative actions examined, and procedure investigated, confidence in the Council of Boards of Benevolence and the Committee on Conservation and Advance has been inevitable. In no period of allowed budget have expenditures exceeded appropriations. As commendable a record as can be found in any organization anywhere will be noted when a study is made as to the careful scrutiny under which budgets for promotional work have been allowed by the Council and then these same budgets under office direction have been expended.

The following tabulation should be remembered:

	Allowed—Expenditures—Savings
Nov. 1, 1920—Oct. 31, 1921.....	$923,168.00	$808,464.04	$114,703.96
Nov. 1, 1921—May 31, 1922.....	490,889.76	481,495.19	8,394.57
June 1, 1922—Dec. 31, 1922.....	490,826.00	319,339.98	71,486.02
Jan. 1, 1923—Dec. 31, 1923.....	862,360.00	844,168.88	18,191.12
Total Budget Savings			$212,775.67

Has any organization ever made a better record in this regard? Each year the total budget on office recommendation has been decreased and in each period such economies have been practiced and so great care exercised, that over two hundred thousand dollars has been saved, in addition to a considerable saving by the Commission on Life Service amounting to $12,019.21 in 1923 alone. The most painstaking effort has been made to guard every expenditure and to utilize all old material. Over 75,000 old letterheads and 1,250,000 envelopes bequeathed from former organizations have been re-imprinted and made to serve the Committee on Conservation and Advance.

SPECIAL OFFERINGS

An early decision was registered by the Council that Sunday School Rally Day and Epworth League Anniversary Offerings, etc., should be given Centenary credit, and should constitute a part of our total voucher funds. The correct basis appeared to be that no Board should have the right of offerings not to be prorated, received on a special Sunday, unless all Boards have the same privilege. To grant that privilege it was thought was not contemplated by the General Conference and would not be tolerated by the local congregations. To lift our offerings toward full expectation it was decided to ask our people to concrete their generosity at Christmas time toward some of the outstanding Centenary objectives at home and abroad. Very general and liberal response was made. The unparalleled disaster in Japan led to the determination to cooperate this last Christmas with the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society in an effort without usual credit

"To build in a day
What fell in a day."

EMERGENCY APPEALS

Retarded Centenary payments and remittances together with an absence of continuous educational effort in the local churches culminating in the every member benevolent canvass created difficulties, as the Board of Foreign Missions and the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension Society faced the close of their fiscal years in 1921, 1922, and 1923. The "I Will Maintain" effort of 1922 saved the day, while the "Centenary Climax Movement" of 1923 produced results at once noteworthy and occasioning genuine thanksgiving. We shall never be able to get away from the calendar, but genuine and universal stewardship properly methodized will give us needed relief. It is dangerous to stifle giving, but machinery sufficiently mobile and plans sufficiently flexible should be provided to properly authenticate to Methodism every appeal whether emanating from organization or individual. To-day's demand for coordination of appeals is stronger than a quadrennium ago.

ADVANCE PROGRAM

Early in the Centenary period plans were inaugurated looking toward the future. At the Council Meeting in Boston in November, 1920, a Committee on Larger Program made brief report and was commissioned to prepare a tentative report covering a term of years beyond the Centenary for the next meeting of the Council. Midway in the Centenary period, November 15-17, 1921, the historic National Methodist Episcopal Conference of one thousand delegated men was held in Detroit "to decide the direction of our going," using the program theme "The World's Need and Our Reply." It was the third great gathering in the interest of the Centenary and was the natural precursor of that meeting of the Council immediately following in which the Committee of Twenty-five on Advance Program was chartered, ten of whose members were not members of the Council. The work of this Committee was prosecuted in a thorough, scientific, and democratic manner. Every effort was made to secure counsel from the whole field. When presented to the Council in January, 1923, it covered divisions of lay activities, educational program, stewardship, evangelism, needs and apportionments, culminating in a call to advance. It is an historic document, and was enthusiastically and unanimously approved. By it we were to be ushered into a period of

WORLD SERVICE

The name seems to be the clear leading of Providence. It is broad, descriptive, and challenging, but withal a program of possible achievement. Its financial objectives include an apportionment for the first year of $18,500,000 and a statement of approved needs of $28,045,173. It affords informational and educational opportunities of superior importance. "The World Service" volume is its partial product—the most encyclopedic and interesting statement of connectional needs and possibilities ever produced by a religious organization. The editor of this unique book was Ralph E. Diffendorfer, who was assisted by Paul Hutchinson and William F. McDermott in the Foreign and American sections. The placing of a half million copies of this historic volume will not merely constitute an epoch-making achievement, but will prove to be an inexhaustible mine of missionary, educational, and benevolent ammunition for years to come. Confident because of new and clearer vision, deeper and holier enthusiasm, large and ever increasing numbers, our Methodist Episcopal Church may well leap forward

"TO SERVE THE PRESENT AGE."

In harmony with the Discipline, Paragraph 410, Section 1, this present report is submitted, together with the report of the Committee of Twenty-five on Advance Program, and the volume itself, entitled, "The World Service of the Methodist Episcopal Church."

The following statement was approved by the Council in session in Chicago, January 24, 1924:

"The General Conference of 1920 authorized the movement known as 'The Centenary' as our general benevolent program for the quadrennium 1920-24. This period has been marked by the most extraordinary development of our varied activities. The quadrennium 1924-28 should register a steady development commensurate with the growth in numbers and in wealth, and in an increasing recognition of the obligations of Stewardship. If this is done, the results will be as significant as those of the past quadrennium.

"Two years ago the Council of the Boards of Benevolence provided for a most thorough study of the field and the opportunities for service looking toward an adequate program which should succeed 'The Centenary.' As is well known, a Committee of Twenty-five was created, made up in part of members from outside the Council itself. Probably no more thorough study of the needs of the Church has ever been made than was made under the direction of this committee. Its report was approved at the last session of the Council and has formed the working program of the Church for the closing year of the quadrennium and the fraction of the Conference year which extends beyond the period of the General Conference. The World Service volume has been a most significant attempt to put before the Church some of the results of the Centenary, the substance of the investigations and determinations of the committee on advance program, and a series of significant facts presented in graphic form. The distribution of five hundred thousand copies of this volume indicates unusual interest and marks the high tide of benevolent enterprise for the Methodist Episcopal Church. This marvelous volume records the achievements of the past, clearly states the present situation, and outlines a program of benevolent activities suggestive not only for the current year but practically determinative for the succeeding year and prophetic of the program for the remainder of the quadrennium.

"The Committee on New Legislation appointed by the Council has submitted or will submit during this session its recommendations for the benevolent organization of the Church to be presented to the General Conference of 1924.

"For the program of benevolent activities we ask the Council to recognize that the current year is fractional. The Centenary pledges extended to May 31, 1924. This left in the Fall Conferences the remaining fraction of the year unprovided for. After mature deliberation the Committee on Conservation and Advance decided, with the approval of the other section of the Council, that the program submitted by the committee of twenty-five, calling for an apportionment of eighteen million five hundred thousand dollars and a statement of needs amounting to approximately twenty-eight millions, should be the program and asking of the Church for the Conference year of 1923-24, and the appeal to the Church is proceeding on that basis.

"In accordance with the original intention of the Committee on Advance Program, we recommend that this same statement be the basis of asking and appeal for the Conference year of 1924-25 with proper adjustments to the Spring Conferences, that for the remaining period of the quadrennium 1924-28 the matter of the askings, the plan of informing the Church and of securing contributions for the support of our benevolent Boards be committed to the organization which may be finally approved by the General Conference of 1924 following the report of the Council to that body, the presumption being that it will follow the general outline of policy and asking suggested by the Council through the adoption of its report of the Committee on Advance Program with such modifications as the circumstances from year to year may indicate."

NEW LEGISLATION

The Council gave serious and prolonged discussion to the question of the wisdom of the consolidation of various Benevolent Boards of the Church together with the best possible type of central promotional organization. Concerning the question of consolidation the following conclusions were voted:

1. A general statement showing the consideration and study given to this subject, and outlining the difficulties of the situation and the importance of arriving at a just and permanent solution of the problem involved.

2. The appointment by the General Conference of a Commission composed of six clerical and nine lay members, three of whom shall be women, to make a careful study of all the interests involved in connection with our Benevolent Boards with a view toward consolidation and reorganization, and that the duties and powers of this Commission be determined by the General Conference.

The following plan of central organization is submitted with almost unanimous approval by vote of the Council:

"WORLD SERVICE COUNCIL

Discipline of 1920.

PARAGRAPH 407, SECTION 1.

There shall be a Council to be called The World Service Council of the Methodist Episcopal Church composed as follows:

One representative, minister or layman, from each Episcopal area in the United States, said representative to be nominated by the General Conference delegates of the respective areas and elected by the General Conference. Area representatives shall be chosen from persons who are not members or officers of any constituent Board.

Five Effective Bishops, resident in the United States, to be appointed by the Bishops; the Executive Secretary and the Treasurer of the Council ex officio.

Each Board created by the General Conference to designate from its membership members of the Council as follows: The Board of Foreign Missions, 5; The Board of Home Missions and Church Extension, 5; The Board of Education, 2; The Board of Education for Negroes, 2; The Board of Sunday Schools, 2; The Board of Epworth League, 2; The Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals, 2; The Board of Hospitals and Homes, 2; General Deaconess Board, 2; The Board of Conference Claimants, 2; one of whom in the case of each Board shall be a Corresponding Secretary. The American Bible Society shall be entitled to one member, who shall be a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

A sufficient number of ministers and laymen, in as nearly equal numbers as possible to bring the total membership of the Council up to 60. The members at large shall be nominated by the Bishops, and elected by the General Conference. In making these nominations the Bishops shall consider the relative number of ministers and laymen in the designated groups and shall seek by their selections to equalize the number of ministers and laymen. Members at large shall be chosen from persons who are not members or officers of any constituent Board. The Bishops are requested to present their nominations for all the Boards and Commissions connected with the Boards not later than the first day of the closing week of the General Conference and the list shall be printed in the Daily Advocate at least one day in advance of the election and confirmation of the same. The date for the selection of Area representatives by the Area delegations shall be fixed on the day after the lists as suggested by the Bishops shall have been printed in the Daily Advocate. In case of duplication by accident or after selection, the Area representatives so duplicated shall be invalidated and a second choice shall be made. When such duplication occurs during the quadrennium, the Area representative's place should be invalidated and this vacancy filled in the regular way.

APPRECIATION

This report would not be complete if it did not register sincere appreciation for the splendid help during the quadrennium of both ministry and laity, the high quality of leadership of the officers of our organizations, the capable services of the members of our staff together with the constant assistance of the corresponding secretaries and staff members of the several Boards. Never has the Church beheld so much of cooperation between her agencies. The hope of future closer coordination lies in the fact that so large a measure has actually been secured in this quadrennium through the Council of Boards of Benevolence.

MEMBERS CALLED BY THEIR MASTER

Four valuable members of the Council heard the Master's call during the quadrennium, William Nottingham, Frank L. Brown, M. E. Summers, and E. R. Burkholder. They served well their Church and age.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS

To the General Conference of 1924,

DEAR FATHERS AND BRETHREN:

No quadrennium has registered in the foreign fields results so striking as that beginning June first, 1920. The Centenary, we have been reminded, was merely a celebration. It was clearly, also, an achievement. It produced for the Church and especially for the Board of Foreign Missions a new set of facts. It affected the viewpoint of a thousand missionaries in over forty mission fields. It everywhere changed dread to expectancy, suspense to assurance. The mental attitude which had for years been that of urgent appeal for resources became that of eager use of them. The time, it was believed, had come when the outline sketches of programs might become working plans. The Church had seen the vision of need and opportunity, it had pledged its support in generous sufficiency, it expected of its far flung lines throughout the world not only that they should dig in but that they should complete their alignment, advance their forces, and effectively occupy and build. The enterprise of other denominations and the broad scope and purpose of the Interchurch World Movement strengthened this conviction and gave force and focus to this purpose. The stimulus to missionaries and national groups throughout the world cannot be overstated. As a consequence the range and the complexity of administrative tasks were at once greatly enlarged. It was not alone the responsibility of justly and safely distributing the gifts of the Church for its overseas work, which in the four years have amounted to over twenty-two millions of dollars, which confronted the Board and its officers. They were required, on the basis of dependable information, the study of facts and tendencies, the interpretation and comparison of official opinions, the appraisal of priority of need within a field and among fields, the significance of movements both within and without the Church, educational, social, political, religious, in what was early in the quadrennium seen to be a new and agitated world, to meet in a larger way than ever before the obligations committed to the Board of Foreign Missions by Charter and by General Conference, namely, "the general supervision of all work in the foreign fields."

THE RETIREMENT OF CORRESPONDING SECRETARY S. EARL TAYLOR

Scarcely had the new quadrennium begun when Dr. S. Earl Taylor, worn by the stress of the Centenary Movement and by the excessive labors which fell to his lot in the Interchurch Movement, felt under the necessity of asking for a leave of absence, in order that he might bring himself back again to robust physical condition. In June, 1920, the Board voted him a year's leave of absence for the purpose as specified. Dr. Taylor immediately proceeded out into the open spaces of the great West and gradually began to regain the physical vigor which had so remarkably characterized him. However, early in the spring of 1921 it became clear to him that in all probability he would not again be able to take up his work as Corresponding Secretary of the Board, and in due time his resignation was presented and was reluctantly accepted by its Executive Committee. In November of that year, pursuant to a request of the Board of Foreign Missions in response to the recommendation of Corresponding Secretary North that the vacancy be filled, and following Disciplinary procedure, the Bishops elected Titus Lowe, pastor of First Church, Omaha, Nebraska, as a Corresponding Secretary of the Board. He assumed the duties of the office on February 1, 1922.

THOSE CHOSEN FOR HIGHER TASKS

Every hour belongs to eternity, but the light of realization flashes through to us in the moments when we record the names of those comrades in service who "are not" because God has taken them. They are in number thirteen, eight Honorary Managers, in the order in which they left us, George W. F. Swartzell, James B. Faulks, Henry A. Buttz, William H. Falconer, Lemuel Skidmore, Benjamin C. Connor, Charles R. Barnes, Summerfield Baldwin; four active members of the Board, George P. Eckman, Frank L. Brown, John Franklin Goucher, James W. Kinnear. Their counsel and service were rich with the experiences of the pastorate, the theological school, the secondary school and college, the Sunday school work, the law and large business. They represented the Methodist life of seven great cities. They accepted as their own those high ideals of the Gospel which among us command the devotion of ministers and laymen alike. To their initiative, constancy and resources of mind and money the Board, the Church and the world owe a debt which is beyond our poor system of registry. To this shining list one other name is added, Bishop Wilson S. Lewis, who ever, even in the intensity of his zeal for China, placed at the command of the Church at home his faith, his prayer, and his sacrificial service. The effort to add to the memorial projected in China for Bishop James W. Bashford, a vital, permanent testimonial to Bishop Wilson S. Lewis, in the heart of the great city on the Yangtse River, Chungking, where he held his first Conference in China, and where he spent many of his last months in the vast field of his love and his labor, will surely win the substantial endorsement of the Church of which he was a Bishop—but more, an apostle.

Other apostolic men have passed into the greater freedom after resting a bit from their ardent missionary service. Bishop James M. Thoburn, Bishop John E. Robinson and Bishop Merriam C. Harris came into the episcopacy by the missionary route. It is a road not yet wholly closed we venture to believe. Two belonged to India, the third to Japan. Whatever their power in the homeland to inspire and instruct, it was in his chosen field that each found the delight of toil and fellowship. The Church still hears the prophetic pathos of the missionary Thoburn's voice, and feels the pulsing of his lifting faith, and the burning spirit of John E. Robinson still lights the way, and scattered throughout the Japanese Empire in places high and low are the men and women to whom the missionary Harris was the beloved spiritual guide. A gentle woman, eager in service for the womanhood and childhood of India, who twenty years before had tested, at her missionary husband's side, life among its wonderful people, again gave a brief year to that high service and from Darjeeling passed without a fear into the life complete. To Bishop Fred B. Fisher the heart of the Church has gone out in unfeigned sympathy, and missionary service everywhere is more sacred for the devotion of Edith Jackson Fisher. From the splendid roster of the retired missionaries of the Board, in addition to Bishops Thoburn, Robinson, and Harris, thirteen names will henceforth be omitted because to those who bore them the new names have been given. Among these are Dr. Herbert W. Schwartz, for thirty-six years the cherished friend of Japanese people, the lowly as well as the high born, bringing to them the healer's ministry and distributing to them the Holy Scriptures; Harry E. King, long Vice-President of Peking University, beloved and revered by many of the strong young men of China to whom he had been teacher, and counselor, and friend; Charles L. Bare who had given fifty-three years to India, and among his tasks helped most effectually to lay the foundations of Lucknow Christian College, an institution, it may be recorded here, nurtured in its early days by the wisdom and the personal resources of Dr. John M. Reid, once corresponding secretary of this Board; Hiram H. Lowry, nearly sixty years a missionary in China, whose life of devotion, whose friendship with the Chinese, whose patient consecration to the noblest aims of missionary service, have given him a place in the history of the Christian Church in China which will be undisturbed through the centuries. These from Japan, India, China—and from South America, the breezy, greathearted, courageous Thomas Bond Wood, the protagonist for education and religious liberty in the Republics of South America, whose forty-five years of strenuous, undaunted service cleared the ground and laid the foundations upon which those who come after may safely build.

In the active fellowship of achievement very familiar names will no longer be found. Memory will be eager to cherish the deeds and the personal worth of them all. Henry S. Leitzel, of Taianfu, China, in full vigor at the beginning of his second term, in spite of every precaution, overtaken by typhoid; William P. McLaughlin, a veteran, beloved, indefatigable, of Buenos Aires, The Argentine, who brought his fine, self-supporting church first over the line in the beginning of the Centenary; Dr. and Mrs. J. C. Butcher, whose was a missionary life together of thirty-five years in North India, who were separated but twenty-four hours when the summons came for the beginning of the new life beyond; F. B. Price, long beloved as a pastor in the homeland, over twenty years in India, editor of The Indian Witness, industrious, useful, sound, friendly; Bowen Bruere, eager, spiritual, intense, going suddenly, leaving to loneliness and struggle his young wife and the babies; Dr. W. C. Berry, caught by an inexorable malaria while far up in the Belgian Congo, on a doctor's errand, but three years on the field, for the carrying on of whose work the young wife, bereft but undaunted, offers herself in eager consecration; these and the others, of the same spirit and mind, bring to the church the appeal of their broken lives and their unfinished tasks. These all belong in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews and the seventh chapter of Revelation. Lest we forget, they have their place in this official message of the Board. Their names follow:

REINFORCEMENT OF EPISCOPAL LEADERSHIP

The General Conference of 1920 ushered in a new day in episcopal administration in foreign fields. Stirred by the mighty appeal of the Centenary vision and by the expected collections from Centenary subscriptions, the Church marked out an entirely new line of operation. Seventeen of the General Superintendents of our Church were assigned to residences abroad. During this quadrennium our great missionary divisions have been more carefully and efficiently supervised than was possible in any preceding quadrennium. These episcopal leaders have given themselves to their varied tasks with a devotion and a sacrifice worthy of all praise. Each of them will tell his story to this General Conference and in each case it will be a story of undaunted faith, of untiring labor and of heartening victory.

RECRUITS FOR OVERSEAS SERVICE

During the days of Centenary cultivation, it might be said that there were four major objectives presented in every congregation throughout the United States:

First. A very distinct call to prayer; gratitude to Almighty God for one hundred years of providential leadership and for courage to face properly the obligations of another hundred years.

Second. A call to Christian stewardship; a frank recognition of the right of our Lord Jesus Christ to a very definite share in the total possessions of all His followers.

Third. The appeal to the young life of Methodism solemnly to consecrate itself to specific forms of Christian service.

Fourth. A definite effort to have the Church squarely face and honorably accept its total missionary responsibility, both here in our great homeland and in the mighty mission fields of the earth.

In stressing the third of these objectives, hundreds and in the aggregate thousands of young people in every section of the Church throughout the world were stimulated to offer themselves to the service of God and these young people were prepared to make the most extensive preparation in college, theological seminary and medical school to fit themselves for service of the highest sacrificial value. During the quadrennium this Board has had the great privilege of sending out to our far flung battle line recruits in the number of 537 which is by far the largest group that this Board or any Mission Board has ever sent out in a single quadrennium. These young missionary recruits were of such caliber as has never been surpassed in Christian history and they have given themselves to their tasks with noble and inspiring devotion. They are crusaders of the Sir Galahad type and repeatedly they have proven that "their strength is as the strength of ten, because their hearts are pure." Methodism has abundant cause to return devout thanksgiving to our Lord and Saviour for calling such a godly group into our sacrificial fellowship. The Board is glorying in the fact that there is no diminution in willingness of Methodist young people to respond jubilantly to the challenging call of a mighty Christ.

THE HEART OF THE HOME CHURCH

Knowledge of the world was never as extensive among our people as it is now. In many respects we live in a constantly shrinking world. The telephone, the telegraph and the radio are absolutely revolutionizing all our ideas of our neighbors the world over. With increasing knowledge has come increasing interest, and we are persuaded that the heart of the home Church never beat so warmly for the depressed and misguided people of non-Christian lands as it does at the present time. The more we know of non-Christian customs and habits and ideals, the more our people are persuaded that nothing but the salvation offered in Jesus Christ our Lord will ever meet the world's great need. The more we understand how little non-Christian faiths have been able to lift the people up toward light and truth and righteousness throughout the long centuries of the past, the more our people are persuaded that only intimate knowledge of the heart and peace of Jesus Christ can ever bring either personal or social redemption to any race or tribe anywhere. The heart of American Methodism is unalterably convinced that there is no other Name given amongst men whereby the nations may be saved. In unfaltering trust and unfailing prayer the heart of the home Church beats steadily and strongly, assured that every to-morrow will but record greater triumphs of our gracious Lord.

THE COUNCIL OF BOARDS OF BENEVOLENCE AND THE COMMITTEE ON CONSERVATION AND ADVANCE

The last General Conference called into being the Council of Boards of Benevolence and also the Committee on Conservation and Advance, the latter being the applied end of the Council. To the Council and the Committee on Conservation and Advance there was committed a task of enormous magnitude, a task which had extraordinary difficulties in the way, difficulties which were radically increased both in size and number by the financial depression which struck America in the opening days of 1921. It must be frankly added that one of the greatest obstacles in the way of the Committee on Conservation and Advance is the unhappy eclipse of idealism which is the most unfortunate consequence of the war. The Committee has found it exceedingly difficult, notwithstanding all of the help that the constituent Boards were able to bring, to maintain these idealistic values in the life of the Church, without which such a connectional program as ours can never be carried on successfully. Dr. R. J. Wade, the Corresponding Secretary of this Committee, and Dr. M. W. Ehnes, the Treasurer, together with their efficient assistants have given themselves without reserve to this task. When all of the difficulties have been justly measured it is the judgment of the Board of Foreign Missions that the total givings of the Church during the quadrennium have been remarkable in the extreme. Working under the charter, given to it by the State of New York decades before the Centenary arrived, which has never been annulled, and the Constitution given to it by the General Conference, which has never been revoked, the Board has loyally supported the common movement of these later years, and to the interests represented by the Council has given the service of its literature, of its officers and of its missionaries. It has recognized and valued the cooperation provided for in the commission given to the Council. It does not deny that with the gains in this fine effort to combine the connectional forces of the Church there have been losses serious and far-reaching in their effect upon the world wide work which it represents. This General Conference, it is hoped, will carefully appraise both gains and losses. Whatever modification of plan in the wisdom of the General Conference may be effected, without doubt it will be found that some form of centralized promotional activity must be discovered and sustained.

A crowning achievement has been the World Service Volume. The detail and completeness of its material assembled by the cooperation of the several Boards, its generous illustrations of every phase of the work under their care, its fine editorial statements, the very bigness of its program, constitute what must prove an irresistible appeal for courageous advance in the post-Centenary period. To the Rev. R. E. Diffendorfer the Church is under a large debt for the production and circulation of this potent book.

PUBLICITY

It is a safe statement that in no quadrennium of the Board's history has there been presented to the Church such an array of missionary information, varied facts and scintillating inspiration as has been broadcast through our Church press during the past four years. The Publicity Department has utilized the missionary and other available resources in all sections of the world to gather photographs and statements. Bishops in all lands, missionary evangelists, educators and doctors have vied with one another in providing for the Church a bewildering display of missionary lights and sidelights. The richness of this information has been without parallel. In attractiveness of presentation and in volume, it has been a full-orbed story, and month after month the Orient, Africa, Europe and Latin America have made great contributions to the readability of all the papers of the Church. Halford E. Luccock and his collaborators have been untiring in their efforts to declare and illustrate age-long truths in new and unique ways.

CONCERNING FINANCES

It is our high duty and thankful privilege to report that the amount received and disbursed by the Board for the extension of the Redeemer's Kingdom in all mission lands during the quadrennium under review reached the unprecedented total of $22,353,504. When the vastness of this sum is realized we cry out "Bless the Lord, O my soul: and all that is within me, bless His Holy Name." They who in faith dreamed the Centenary dream and charted it from the realm of dreams into a work-a-day reality, builded far better than they knew. If our income had remained on the pre-Centenary level, this Board would have been facing a calamity of first magnitude, if not actual bankruptcy. Three definite results of the war enormously increased the cost of our missionary operations:

First. The extraordinary loss in exchange which in a single year cost us approximately $500,000, and since 1917 a grand total of $895,067.05.

Second. The doubling of all travel costs, both on sea and on land.

Third. The great increase of the living expense which is a phenomenon common to the whole wide world.

In addition to saving the Church from unparalleled disaster in its foreign work, this increased income has made possible such an extension of operations both in physical equipment and in human effort invested in all mission lands, as has never before been known. Reports from all our mission centers are stimulating in the extreme. In every land decided progress has been made and in some lands progress at a rate which was undreamed of a short decade ago. With the continued upward development of our national workers and the fact that they are more and more developing into higher efficiency as soul winners, it seems a fair forecast that hereafter the rate of the evangelization of the world will be mightily accelerated.

Notwithstanding the thanksgiving which is in our souls when we call all these things to mind, the quadrennium has not been without its very acute financial problems. We call attention to a paragraph from the report of the Board to the last General Conference, printed on page 1051 of the General Conference Journal of 1920, which reads as follows:

"The Board at its Annual Meeting in December made actual appropriations of $5,352,973, the same amount as that received the previous year, it being forbidden, by a rule in its Constitution, to appropriate in any one year more than the amount received the year before. Since, however, the total expected under the Centenary offerings for the year is $10,500,000, the Board gave power to the Executive Committee to authorize the Treasury to make advances of an additional amount to each field up to a total of $5,147,027, such authorization to be made upon the basis of representation from the fields as to specific preferred projects in the field program and upon the condition that funds are available or in sight. The several mission fields, therefore, are making their plans upon the basis of the total expected income of $10,500,000 for the year 1920, and any failure to realize that amount would create most serious disappointment and confusion."

While this expectancy should have been slightly modified by the guarantees, possibly by $500,000, yet it was clearly justified in the main as shown by the official statement of the General Conference which fixed the total Centenary subscription at $115,003,375. A later official statement, after errors and duplications were eliminated, placed the total subscription at $107,369,228. The Board has appropriated each year approximately but half the estimated annual subscription. The actual average yearly income for the Board was $5,588,376. Let it be said with perfect frankness that in the early days of the quadrennium when the whole land seemed to be in a heyday of prosperity, the expectation of this Board and its officers was marked by enthusiasm and optimism. Furthermore, we were living in a day when idealistic humanitarianism was a dominant sentiment in the hearts of millions of Methodists. This was expressed and measured by the inclusion in the Centenary askings of $5,000,000 a year for War Relief and Reconstruction. In this psychological atmosphere, and led as we believed by the spirit of our Heavenly Father, certain definite commitments were made which have thrown a considerable burden of indebtedness upon the Board. The first of these commitments was the very large amount of money and food and clothing which was sent to depressed thousands and tens of thousands in Germany, Austria, Italy, France, the Baltic Provinces, Russia, Roumania, Serbia, Finland. When the Board made the advances they were applauded by the church press, approved by the church leaders and welcomed by the fields. We are grateful for the Christlike service of relief which our great Church bravely carried out at that time, and we are persuaded that there are thousands of children and youth who are alive and well in the world to-day who would have died from starvation lacking the aid which our Church rushed into the stricken territories. Furthermore, certain advances were made on property account in Europe and elsewhere, where the Methodist Episcopal Church is carrying forward its saving gospel, with the full expectation that these advances, which in the aggregate were large and generous, would be recovered from the income received as a result of the Centenary Movement. In addition it will be remembered that this Board gave an underwriting to the Interchurch World Movement of $750,000, and that our part in the deficit of the Columbus Centenary Celebration was $367,276. These advances, together with the loss in exchange mentioned above, gave us a total obligation of most serious proportions. Nevertheless, it seemed certainly not unreasonable to look for realization on Centenary subscriptions up to seventy-five per cent of their face value. Had income on that basis been received by this Board every obligation from these advances would have been cleared before the end of the third year of the Centenary period. We submit to the General Conference that the expectation of this Board was well founded. We hold with positive conviction that no body of men in 1920, having at that time what might be designated a normal expectancy of $10,000,000 a year, would have dreamed that their income for the quadrennium would average just a little over fifty per cent of that amount, or to be precise, $5,588,376. When, however, in 1921 it became evident that Centenary collections would probably fall far short of the total amount subscribed, immediately this Board set itself with determination to attempt to meet the obligations incurred in the manner above stated, and it has no little satisfaction in the fact that on these total obligations it has paid during this quadrennium, principal and interest, the sum of $2,063,631.23. The financial record of these years will give courage and confidence to every Methodist who will appraise carefully, critically, and sympathetically the actual facts involved.

After a committee of which he was a member had made a critical investigation of the Board's obligations, (in November, 1922), Bishop Edgar Blake wrote the following statement for "The Christian Advocate":

A DEBT OF HONOR

"Some debts are a discredit to the debtor, others are an honor. The debt of the Board of Foreign Missions belongs to the latter class.

"When Europe staggered out of the war broken, bleeding and hungry, the Methodist Episcopal Church borrowed money on its credit and rushed relief across the sea without delay. It will ever stand as a memorial to her Christian spirit and generosity that she was the first great religious body to answer the mute appeal of Europe's stricken and starving people. 'Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these, ye did it unto Me.' Methodism never manifested the mind of her Master more beautifully than when she placed her financial credit at the service of those who could not help themselves.

"When certain leaders of vision and daring dreamed of a united Protestantism, united to save a broken world, the Methodist Episcopal Church, with nothing to gain, unselfishly pledged her resources to the fulfillment of that dream. Without hesitation she pledged her resources to the realization of the prayer of the Lord 'That they all may be one.' That this dream has not yet been fulfilled is not the fault of Methodism. To her honor be it said that she backed to the limit one of the noblest ideals of the Christian centuries.

"The debt of the Board of Foreign Missions is not the debt of a Board, it is the debt of the Church. Let it be told to our children and to our children's children for a memorial, that in two great crises their fathers neither feared nor failed to do their duty. They pledged their credit to a great cause and they paid it like men."

While deeply regretting the partial failure in the collection of Centenary subscriptions, which brought about the debt here referred to, the Board finds it in its heart and conscience to say that as individuals and as officers they are proud to have had a part in this humanitarian movement which will redound to the honor and credit of American Methodism as long as the Great War is remembered.

THE PRESENT FINANCIAL CONDITION

While the present debt of the Board is a great handicap to our expanding foreign missionary operations, it has been so greatly reduced that it does not constitute the critical embarrassment which it did three years ago. The present financial condition may be considered from two viewpoints.

First, the standpoint of assets and liabilities. When so considered one really asks the question, how much money would be needed if the Board were to quit business and close all of its work on the mission field?

The last annual report of the Treasurer shows liabilities of $4,112,590, and quick assets of $1,864,639, and other resources, not considered quick assets, $1,821,503.

Crediting the quick assets only, the Board's net liabilities are $2,274,951. Crediting the other resources, the net liabilities are $426,448.

In connection with a statement of this kind it should be borne in mind that the balance sheet of the Board of Foreign Missions does not include the value of any of its real estate on the foreign field. Such an asset would undoubtedly be included in a balance sheet of an ordinary business house. These foreign properties according to the last annual report, show a net valuation of over $23,000,000, but are not included in the balance sheet because they are used for missionary purposes and are not to be sold to meet obligations.

The second viewpoint is to consider the obligations of the Board from the standpoint of the amount of money which is needed to clear the books of the Board. All advances made on account of home base activities have been paid, except the balance of the Board's underwriting of the Interchurch World Movement for the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society which the Society is gradually liquidating. There remain only two items, unpaid loss of exchange $249,155; loans and advances to the mission fields $1,524,600; a total of $1,773,755.

The former is a net loss, due exclusively to the war, which the most careful judgment could not foresee or forestall. Every foreign Board in the country has had extensive losses on the same account.

The advances to the mission fields are loans on property which is worth many hundreds of thousands of dollars more than the advances themselves. This item, therefore, is something akin to the millions of dollars of debt on church property in this country. Since 1921 the Board has made no advances to the mission fields.

If the Church will continue the present income of the Board this debt will be gradually met without serious difficulty. If the Church will give the Board, for one year, the full amount of its share of the World Service apportionment, the total of these two items will be wiped out.

DESIGNATED GIFTS

With the inauguration of the Centenary there came into practice the policy of reckoning all designated gifts as a part of the income of the Board for whose units of work the designations were made. Since the total income is pro-rated among the Boards this process is inevitably applied to designated as well as to undesignated money. The plan can most easily be made clear by illustration:

A donor gives $1,000 to the Board of Foreign Missions to be used to erect a chapel in India. The Board receives this $1,000 from the central Treasurer and uses it for the purpose designated. According to the Board's invariable practice the donor's money all goes for that purpose, but the $1,000 is made a part of the pro-rated income of the Board. The result is that a sufficient amount of undesignated money is paid the other Boards to bring their total income up to the percentage fixed, while out of the designated $1,000 used to build the chapel, the Board's income is advanced about $360 because it receives about thirty-six per cent of the total benevolent income.

This has caused great dissatisfaction among donors. They desire not only the designated project to receive the total gift, but they desire also the income of the Board to be increased by the total amount of their gift. In these days of democracy they demand greater freedom of designation. They feel that the present plan practically takes from them any possibility of doing with their money that which they believe the spirit of God directs them to do.

This course of action will continue to be a source of constant irritation until some equitable solution is found. The shackling of the spirit of benevolence, the repression of the earnest love of the individual Christian for special Christian work is a serious blunder in denominational policy. If donors are not permitted larger freedom of action in the matter of directing the use of their gifts, their money will be turned into channels where such freedom is offered.

Other great denominations which began their enlarging movements with such arbitrary division of funds have been compelled to institute radical changes. We too must change or run the risk of losing the superb loyalty of thousands of Methodist givers who very properly are especially interested in some specific form of missionary activity.

We believe that this rule is literally costing the church hundreds of thousands of dollars and that some way could and should be devised which would make it possible for one hundred per cent of a designated gift to go, under the administration of the Board concerned, to the special object for which it is designated, and at the same time protect the local church from the unfortunate results of unauthorized appeals from all the Boards for designated gifts and provide full World Service credit to the church of the donor.

The Board has regretted its inability, under the existing agreements, to meet the desires of donors in these particulars and now earnestly recommends that the whole matter be given careful analysis by the appropriate committee of the General Conference and that a report be submitted to that body for its action.

THE EMERGENCY CAMPAIGNS

During the quadrennium certain emergency conditions seemed to face the Church. There occurred an alarming sag in the regular collections from the churches. After most careful thought and prayer, it was decided in the spring of 1922 to launch the "I Will Maintain" Campaign. This campaign, thoroughly organized from one end of the land to the other, by the Committee on Conservation and Advance, was one of the most successful ever carried on in the Methodist Episcopal Church. All the Boards cooperated and threw into action every available man. Two of our Episcopal leaders, Bishop Edwin H. Hughes and Bishop Fred B. Fisher, assigned especially by the Bishops to this task, were the outstanding figures in this campaign, and inspired by them and by other leaders equally sacrificial, the Church registered a total of receipts on the thirty-first day of October of that year unprecedented in our history.

Following this victorious campaign there came another disheartening depression, and once again, in the spring of 1923, it seemed as though the great missionary projects of Methodism were facing disaster. The officers of all the Boards were exceedingly reluctant to plan another campaign and yet it seemed perfectly clear that there was absolutely no alternative and the Centenary Climax Campaign was begun. Under the tireless and stimulating leadership of Dr. Ralph A. Ward, who had been loaned to the Committee on Conservation and Advance by this Board at the request of Secretary Wade, a further effort was made to reach preachers and people. This campaign was not nearly so spectacular as the campaign of 1922, but was exceedingly fruitful in its results. When the fiscal year was over it was a comparatively small reduction that was sent down to the mission centers of the world. These two campaigns clearly indicate what Methodism is capable of when stirred by a vital emergency.

This Board, however, makes bold to say that in its judgment we are under imperative obligation to find some more productive and less spasmodic plan of financing our great world enterprises. Preachers and people are weary of "campaigns." For not only the tender pity of the Church must be stirred, but somehow her spiritual imagination must be touched, and imperial conscience must be the real guide and standard for the continuation of our Christly service.

Early in the quadrennium the famine appeal came from China. Our own people were suffering; our own missionaries were trusted ministers of relief. The Board cooperated with the organized forces at home, aiding and supplementing general appeals. No definite canvass of the Church was made. Approximately $500,000 was contributed through our treasury, of which the major part was distributed for immediate need, the balance being most effectively used for famine prevention in central and north China.

On September 1, 1923, there occurred the heart-rending Japanese earthquake. In the history of Christian missions there had never been so great a calamity as this frightful earthquake. In a single day hundreds of thousands of homes were destroyed, the city of Yokohama almost wiped out of existence; at least one-half of the great city of Tokyo a mass of smoking ruins; 200,000 dead, killed in the actual earthquake or incinerated in the resulting fire, an additional 100,000 people that have never been heard of since. The Methodist Episcopal Church was a very great sufferer. When the accounts were all in hand it was found that our losses total $1,600,000, two-thirds of this being properties under the direction of this Board and one-third under the direction of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. It was a colossal calamity, utterly staggering to both mind and heart, and for a while fears were in all our hearts lest many of our missionary force and our splendid national leaders had been lost in the disaster. By some strange providence of Almighty God, none of our missionaries lost their lives, for which we return thanks from the very depths of our beings.

By the gracious consent of all the Boards the Christmas offering was devoted to Japan Relief. Dr. D. D. Forsyth, representing the Board of Home Missions, promptly and generously offered cooperation. The Board of Sunday Schools and the Board of Epworth League used their facilities for this Church-wide effort. Wherever the appeal was presented a very warm response was given, and at this writing nearly $600,000 have been contributed in response to that appeal on the 23rd day of December. This gift, great as it is and deeply grateful as we are for it, leaves us far short of the absolutely necessary amount for carrying on our work successfully in the Japanese Empire. This is one of the problems still before the Church.

The facts concerning the hunger and destitution in Germany have been placed before the Church and nearly $50,000 have been contributed to relieve this acute suffering.

THE FADING OF THE INTERCHURCH VISION

The first days of the quadrennium saw the fading of an imperial vision, a vision which had been called the Interchurch World Movement. Possibly the fading of the vision was inevitable. Undoubtedly in the effort to make the vision a reality, mistakes at one point and another occurred. Possibly the leaders most intimately connected with it had been swept off their feet by the idealism which moved the world during the days of the war, when millions of men throughout our great land were dedicating themselves with utter and joyful abandon to making the world a safer and holier place for humanity. Whatever the reason, the vision faded and went into eclipse; not, however, before it had registered upon the Christian consciousness of the world the fact that organized Christianity has a world task and that organized Protestantism has a joint responsibility which no member of the Protestant family of churches can either evade or postpone without peril to itself. Nor did the vision fade until one arm of the Interchurch Movement had directly challenged the unsocial, oppressive and destructive working conditions of the mightiest industrial corporation that the world has yet known. The challenge of the Interchurch Social Service Commission to the great United States Steel Corporation resulted in a stream of pitiless publicity being turned on the labor handicap of tens of thousands of men in the great steel works of that corporation, and to-day it is a matter of record that the worst of the practices pointed out by the Social Service Commission have been amended. There are those amongst us who think that even the great cost of the Interchurch Movement was justified in this one significant humanitarian result.

In the Interchurch World Movement were ideals. Dimmed for a time, they will surely come again with mightier appeal. In it there were purposes. These are beating, it may be unconsciously, in the very life pulses of the Church. The imagination, the faith and the conscience of the Christian world will again some day be compelled by these purposes and captured by these ideals. The great multitude of evangelical Christians, in their common love for the one Saviour and Lord, will unitedly face the obligation which rests upon them for the world's redemption and will together move mightily forward to win the reality in which they have believed, the unfading conquest for which they pray.

INTERBOARD RELATIONS

The lift of the horizons of the Church has revealed the activities of Methodism in the foreign fields and has stimulated the desire of every specialized organization of the vast Church in the homeland to find its true relation to the kindred work overseas. The Board of Foreign Missions has conceived of its commission from the Church as inclusive of every type of the Church's activities. The missionaries it has sent out from the beginning have understood themselves to be charged with the responsibility of organizing and building churches, translating, teaching, guiding the young people, working for reform, developing plans for religious training, setting up systems of primary schools, comforting and curing the sick, promoting hospitals, high schools, colleges, Bible schools, theological schools, universities. Side by side with these missionaries of the Board from early days have been the noble representatives of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society sharing within the special range of their service in these varied plans for education, social service, medical work, more and more as the years have come, and, as is the case with this Board, finding the better methods and securing the workers of special skill and training. The Joint Committee of Consultation formed of members from the Society and the Board has proven not only delightful in its fellowship, but most effective in securing clearness of understanding concerning the problems and mutual relations of the two organizations, and in developing plans of cooperation where such action has seemed desirable.

With a definite purpose to convey to the fields abroad the best influences afforded by the specialized organizations of the Church in the homeland, the Board has been convinced not only that under existing constitutions it is the authorized agent of the Church for all administrative action in the foreign fields which does not inhere in the Bishops and the local groups, but that it is the true policy of the Church that it should be so. It considers it a matter of primary concern that on the mission fields there should be one type of missionary as to support, privilege and responsibility, not several; one source through which funds may be secured, not several treasuries subject to appeal; one guardian of the missionary's interest, in pension, in necessary special grants, in government protection, in adjustment to the policies of the Church, one legal entity for the holding of titles and the control of the property of the Church, so far as it is not in the hands of the national groups. It is believed that as rapidly as possible such responsibilities should be transferred to the local organizations, but that until that time comes the morale on the field will be best maintained by a unity rather than a diversity of administration.

Yet this unity of administration does not preclude a real cooperation. The Constitution of the Board clearly refers to this fact in the paragraph which says, "The Board shall have authority . . . to invite the cooperation of other agencies when such cooperation will increase the efficiency of the work in the foreign field." This is to some a disturbing statement, because it provides that initiative should be taken by this Board. Others prefer not to be invited to that which they consider a right. Still this indicates a purpose for the cooperation which secures the specialized help in terms which does not involve administrative competition. It is well known that in harmony with this suggestion there have been set up certain provisional working agreements between this Board and the Board of Sunday Schools and with the Board of Epworth League, and there are certain understandings between this Board and the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals. None of these have been tested so far as fully to demonstrate their effectiveness. They, at least, should prove to this Conference and to the Church that their agents in this field have had the mind to find a way in a matter which is not merely a Board concern, but which will affect widely the entire policy of the Church as the interests of the foreign fields assume larger importance. It is the earnest request of the Board of Foreign Missions that the General Conference may give adequate examination to the facts and principles involved in this matter, and make provision for definition so clear and direction so authoritative as shall free both the Boards at home and the workers on the field of confusion which every thoughtful leader must deplore.

MISSIONARY COOPERATION A PRINCIPLE AND A FACT

Certain habits or aims of comity came early into missionary experience. Later they became actual desires, even purposes of practical fellowship. In recent years there have emerged certain principles of cooperation which quite definitely define and in a degree govern missionary policy. Such associations in common service as the Laymen's Missionary Movement have tended to deepen these convictions. Often overlapping is wasteful. It should be avoided wherever possible. Coordination of effort strengthens each unit concerned. Such coordination should be sought. There is power in common action and expression. It is good strategy for the forces to move together and speak together. In some instances one agent can act for all. It is worth while to know when combination is power. Economy and efficiency are the two words most frequently urged upon the attention of executives. They often come to their own, not in isolation but in contact. The agitations, the examples, and the influences of the war and post-war experiences have given emphasis to these principles, at large, in the churches, and, in particular, in matters of specialized tasks and organization. Examples are on every hand; perhaps the missionary enterprise offers the most striking illustrations. They are found at the home base and in the foreign field.

IN THE HOME ADMINISTRATION

In the homeland for example, the Federation of Women's Boards of Foreign Missions of North America in which thirty-one organizations are represented rapidly widens its influence. The Foreign Missions Conference of North America, whose annual meeting brings together representatives of fifty or sixty foreign mission organizations, increases in importance. Its Executive Committee, The Committee of Reference and Counsel, acts as a clearing committee for the Boards in many matters of common interest. The International Missionary Council is representative of North America, Great Britain and the Continent, and makes provision for members from the Near and Far East and from South America and Africa. It is organized to deal with large questions of missionary policy which often have, by necessity, an international character. The Latin America Cooperation Committee is a coordinating agency for missionary work in all Latin America. Smaller groups are organized which deal with different countries, Europe, Africa, the Near East, with different subjects, education, literature, Sunday school work, agriculture, Mohammedanism, the Oriental churches, reform. In all these combinations there is possibility of friction, lost motion and loss of power. On the other hand, one can hardly see how intelligent guidance can be given to the forces in the field or how resources can be conserved and applied without the contacts and association which effective organization is sure to demand.

IN THE FIELDS

In the fields themselves, new emphasis is given to the process of cooperation. It is idle, of course, to urge that the nationals everywhere are indifferent to the medium through which the message of the Gospel comes to them. Not all group distinctions are yet obsolete and there may be still something to be said for the shape and texture of the earthen vessels in which the treasure is conveyed. But quite apart from the extremes of insulated individualism and an ideal unity, there is a community of possession of truth, of essential purpose, of well tested processes, which makes cooperation in mission fields not only alluring but actually necessary. Sheer common sense requires it and few missionaries or missions fail to seek for it and welcome it. We find, therefore, such examples of the principle as the division of Mexico among the several Boards so that each has its own field of action, the arrangement of territory in Europe by which the two American Methodist Boards are not at work in the same countries, understandings between the missions as to some of the work in Africa. In India, China, Japan, Korea, there have long existed cooperative groups, the crystallization of which into more definite forms has gone on very rapidly during the four years past, which have marked enlargement of the work of all the Mission Boards of North America. Notable are the Union Universities in China.

Discussion of these principles and movements would not be germane to the main purpose of this report, were it not for the fact that they force upon your Board and its representatives requirements for time, thought, service and funds which cannot lightly be disregarded. As a matter of fact, we have ventured to believe that our Church with its vast constituency and influence would desire not to be a follower only, perhaps not to be a leader, but at least to keep abreast of world movements such as these. Recognizing the limitations properly established by just thinking in such matters and with a minimum of expenditure of time, the officers, staff and committees of the Board have borne what has seemed their rightful share of responsibility in the organized advance of the forces of the Church of Christ upon the strongholds of the non-Christian world.

WORLD CONDITIONS DURING THE QUADRENNIUM

The briefest review of world events and movements in these four years discloses the new conditions under which this work of the Church outside of the United States has been carried on. In the homeland the test was being given to every high ideal which had led the sons of the nation to their graves in the fair fields of France scarred and broken by the ravage of ruthless war. The concrete proposals which sought to make secure the peace for which the cruel battles were fought became the football of party politics, and though administrations were changed no goal was won and only acrid feeling survived the contest. A profound discouragement brooded over the heart of the nation. In every phase of the life of the people were revealed discontent and dislocation. These were the years of dissent. There had been in the nation and in the Church a certain ecstasy of mind and spirit, a sacrificial purpose to do the larger things, upon a new plane broad and high. Certain fine purposes survived and beat their way through into action, as in the Disarmament Conference and, in the churches, in the loyalty of multitudes of people to the noble tasks which had been undertaken. But with the spiritual reaction came a revelry of criticism, a misinterpretation of motive and a suppression of enthusiasm against which only faith in the unseen Power and consecration to the inevitable tasks of human progress have been able to prevail. In some strange way the powerful, sympathetic purposes of our nation were early in the quadrennium short circuited. It may have been the preparation for the radio treatment of human affairs which laughs at poles and wires and ticktack inventions. Whatever may be our viewpoint as citizens or churchmen, there can be little doubt in any mind that in this quadrennium now closed, the work we here represent has been profoundly affected by the general influences of postwar reaction and by the nation's extraordinary confusion as to its international relations.

MISSIONS AND GOVERNMENTS

And, further, as never before the relation of missions to governments has come into focus. The Board at its session in November last gave instructions that a memorial be prepared "to bring before the General Conference the questions involved in the relation of the Board and the Church to governments and ecclesiastical organizations in the various foreign countries." This memorial is in the possession of this Conference for its consideration. This is not only the Board's matter, it concerns the Church. Careful definitions of relation have been given. They should be standardized and recognized. The agitation for democracy, the clash of political parties and theories, and the decisions of States, require of the Church that it understand its rights, its privileges and its limitations.

The Far East

Consider for a moment the governments under which our foreign work is conducted. Japan is a hereditary monarchy with a shadowy representative government supported by a franchise that extends to but three millions of its fifty-six millions of people. The mission work in Korea and the educational program in both Korea and Japan proper have been most intimately related to the sanctions of the government, sanctions, be it said, which ever move toward greater breadth and tolerance. China is a Republic; a dozen years ago the General Conference acclaimed it and urged upon our own government its recognition. It has withstood from without assault upon its integrity, and has successfully by powerful moral aid resisted encroachment. But that integrity is threatened from within. Military groups contend for control in different sections of the great territory. Banditry has become a science and a vocation. Goodwill, in the main, toward the missionaries scattered through the several provinces, does not hide from us the fact that it is the persuasion of high authorities, both in the state and in the Church, that so far as government, central and responsible, is concerned, our people in China are without protection. And this is held while full and hearty credit is given to the fine courtesy and high purposes of many of the officials and other leaders of the nation, both at Peking and in other centers of the land.

India, Malaysia, Africa, Latin America

In Malaysia and the Netherlands Indies our relations are with Colonial governments, those of Great Britain and Holland. In both instances we are the guests of proxy hosts of great governments. We deal, sometimes most happily, with the lieutenants, not with the chief. "Colonial policy" is in itself a governmental phase to be reckoned with. India with its native states, its British control, its national feeling, its political purpose, its vast Hindu and Mohammedan populations, is the world's problem, some would say, with China, the world's hope. The delicacy of the missionary work of Americans in this complex of feeling and organization, no one will question. Our work in Africa brings us under five foreign flags, the British, the Portuguese, the Belgian, the French, the Liberian. This great continent is in the hands of absentee owners. Again principles of national order are expressed in colonial regulations which affect land tenure, educational policies and religious toleration, all accentuated by the readjustments of boundaries and programs which have followed the war. Latin America in forms of government gives us the norm with which we are most familiar, but all the more thoughtful must be our procedure in the republics where revolution is the pastime of politicians, or in those where a normal self-interest lies close to the suspicion of the motive of a dominant government of the same type. To be wise in South America and Mexico is one of the prime requisites for both the state and the Church of North America.

Europe

To Europe at the beginning of the quadrennium and in the months just previous, the prompt and generous relief authorized by the Board and provided for by the Centenary contributions through the War Relief and Reconstruction addition to the original budget for the foreign work, reached Finland, Russia, the Baltic Provinces, Germany, France, Switzerland, Austria, Hungary, Jugo-Slavia, Czecho-Slovakia, Rumania, Bulgaria and Italy. Our Methodist work is to-day organized under the governments of Spain, Italy, Jugo-Slavia, Bulgaria, Hungary, Austria, France, Switzerland, Germany, Latvia, Esthonia, Lithuania, Russia, Finland, Norway, Sweden, Denmark. The seething agitations of the four years need not be described. In but one or two instances has an attitude of opposition threatened our freedom under the law. It would not be difficult to find occasions for care and concern. Where government is stabilized our tenure and privileges are apparently secure. Our people belong to the body politic. They have their rights which are recognized. We crave a larger liberty in Spain. In Italy the temporary entente between the Papacy which as a world power is a spiritual autocracy, and the present government, which is the most curious brand of democracy a free people has yet produced, creates conditions which may need the attention of both Church and State in America. In the Baltic States, influences are at work which demand of us wisdom and may require unexpected firmness. The four years in Russia have seen the death of Czarism, the disappearance of the revolution with the expatriation or other disposal of its supporters and the organization of a Soviet government, with all that it may mean for the great people, 125 millions of them, and the world. Steadily our Church and its Board have maintained their occupancy and with new opportunity are prepared for the action and advance which a true policy may promote.

It is in this maze of governmental formation, reformation and malformation that the program of the Board has been advanced, in material relief, in social service, in education, in church building, in evangelism—in a dozen languages, among people representing every racial type in Western civilization. Thus the world around, our missionaries owe respect and, either as residents or citizens, allegiance to forty different governments representing every type from absolutism to communism. And during the four years now ended no government has been undisturbed or unmindful of its prerogative and power.

CONTACTS AND CONTRASTS WITH OTHER RELIGIONS

Even more significant of the range of the missionary service than the political and economic agitations the world over is the contact our workers have with the non-Christian faiths.

In China and India

Loyalty to the Confucian ethics belongs not only to the history but to the present culture of the Chinese people. Whatever one may say of the modern movement in India, our leaders, friends of Gandhi and Tagore, will not let us forget that the philosophy and the mysticism of the religions of a wonderful people are still deep and vital in their influence. The removal of barriers of language and of custom, hastened by the larger resource and efficiency of our missionary forces in the few years past, permits constant contacts which before were but occasional and tests the values of both our message and our methods in new and sometimes unexpected ways. The superiority not to say the supremacy of the Christian faith must have the demonstration not of didactics but of character. This was always true. But we now front these faiths more closely and upon a longer line. They ask our proofs not only in terms of individual life but of group conduct. They inquire what our religion does for a nation or a civilization as well as what it does for a man. It is a Christianity only of the purest, deepest, most thoughtful, most sacrificial type, that can win in the very homes of these other age-long faiths. The story of these years will show, on the part of our missionaries, both the leaders and the rank and file, not only devotion but a wise, forceful, tolerant, constructive policy in all the forms of approach and ministry which should awaken the enthusiasm of a progressive church.

The Moslem World

Clearly a new phase has come to the Moslem world. Our missionaries in North Africa, in Malaysia, the Netherlands Indies, and India, realize this even though they have not shared the tragic experience of the Missions of other Boards, which have borne the brunt of the disasters and political changes in the Near East, in Arabia, in Turkey. But what affects the Moslem in one land affects him in all lands. As this is written the Caliph, the head of the church, is in exile on the shores of Lake Geneva. Feisal, the political head of Arabia, has been acclaimed also the head of the Moslem world. The man who apparently is master of new Turkey, Kemal Pasha, has led the Angora Assembly to declare itself, as a corporate entity, to be the Caliph—the spiritual head of Mohammedanism. Our missionaries, some of them expert in the Moslem language and literature, as they confront this changed alignment of the one religion which contends with militant missionary fervor and purpose for the mastery of the world, are profoundly grateful for the new equipment, the increased staff, and the larger program which this quadrennium has brought to them.

Roman Catholicism

This Conference needs no reminder that the Methodist Episcopal Church, and this Board in representing and promoting its policies, bears its witness and brings its help in lands where other forms of the Christian faith have interpreted it in ways which we believe to be inadequate, misleading, and destructive. This is not the place to discuss, much less to denounce the history, the dogma, the practices of these churches. We resist their encroachment upon truth, upon personal liberty, upon community rights. We deplore arrogance, superstition, the debasement of conscience, the exploitation of ignorance. To them and to the people to whom they appeal, we seek to show a better way. In the Republics of South America, in Mexico, in Spain, in Italy and in a measure in Germany and in France, the new forces supplied by our Church's gifts during the quadrennium have enabled Methodism to measure itself against one of its mightiest tasks with a courage, a dignity and an effect which in its past it could not present. Our schools, our social ministry, our evangelism, our friendliness, have won for us a place in the hearts of the people and have secured the approval of their leaders. The world field is large, its experiences are uneven. In Catholic countries on the West Coast of South America and in Mexico, our schools are firm in the favor of the people. In what we call Catholic Europe where the influence of the Roman Catholic Hierarchy, strangely strengthened by the issues of the war, is penetrating into every state, a self-reliant liberty, masked and silent for the moment, awaits its day in the court of high decisions. To give courage to the faint and disheartened not by political action but by the spiritual forces of the faith which makes men free is a high privilege and a challenging duty. In Poland our brothers of the Methodist Church, South, are being driven from their Christlike ministries. In Spain our heroic leader in Alicante with his model school and church meets the opposition of the priests with the enthusiastic demonstrations of his scholars and his congregation. The crisis of our Collegio on Monte Mario in Rome is widely heralded even where the facts are not clearly known. We stand within the law. By the franchise of your gifts, already made and yet, we believe, more generously to be made, and with the sympathy of all lovers of freedom which we unfeignedly seek, we are testing our right, which is the right of the Gospel and of the Reformation, to serve the youth of Italy and the adjacent countries, in the name of the Evangelical faith which in that same Rome Luther lifted from the worn stone steps of penance, and flung out upon the free air for the use of an awakening world.

The Eastern Orthodox Church

Never before have the churches of dissent and the churches of orthodoxy come so close as they have come during these later days. The mysticism of the Orthodox Greek Church, of one type and spirit in all the countries of its development, and the open-minded candor of Protestantism have rarely come into spiritual fellowship. More recent personal contacts have deepened mutual respect. The welcome given to ecclesiastical leaders from Russia, from Athens, from Asia Minor, who have been guests of Evangelical groups in this country, in the early part of the last quadrennium has promoted friendship and opened the way to a wider fellowship. In Bulgaria and Rumania our Methodist relief work did not pass unnoticed. The fine constructive program developed in Jugo-Slavia was in part by invitation of and in cooperation with the established church and our work has won its favor. In Russia, until the revolution, our leaders had none but friendly relations with the church authorities and in the dire days of famine and distress the food and supplies sent by this Board in the name of the Church strengthened the bonds of good will. Events which have affected the organization of the Church during the two years past, the reforms, the alignments and realignments, the relation with government or if it is preferred, the non-relation to government, the parties and the programs, are not appraised alike by all observers, nor is it the purpose here to review them.

What we ask for this record and for the thinking of the Conference is the emphasis upon the fact that just as our missionary forces are in new relations with every non-Christian religion, and with the Roman Catholic Church, so are we facing a new opportunity in the changing conceptions and the readjusting inner relationships of the Eastern Orthodox churches of Western Europe. Opportunity is here which challenges us to give it our best, in resources, in wisdom, in service.

CENTENARY ACHIEVEMENTS AND NATIONALISM

Two influences, interacting, have been potent in their effect upon the work of the Church and the policies of the Board in these fascinating areas of races and nations. The first is the new conception of the Church as a challenging and adequate organization. Elsewhere the specific achievements of this extraordinary movement will be registered. The point here is that in no one of these forty governments is Methodism a negligible factor. Forget for the moment the hopes yet unrealized, the projects listed but untouched, the churches, schools, hospitals, homes, started but yet unfinished, and concentrate upon the fact that in every Methodist Mission field in the world, this quadrennium has marked the lift of the total enterprise, so that to Government, commerce, education, travel, religion, the Mission has become a unit of power and the missionary a man of destiny. So true is this that they who measure success by the standards of four years ago are missing the mark. Had we achieved all that then was set as our task we should still be urged to new endeavors. For the missionary is ever on the move, he is a man "sent" and the measure is the measure of life, not of form. The static view of the enterprise has in some quarters prevailed. Let us, it is said, complete the five years' task and rejoice that we can write "finis." But the finished task is ever the condition and the foundation of the new and larger undertaking where life and movement are concerned. We everywhere deal not only with larger budgets and expanding staffs but with greater concepts and stronger aspirations. In a significant sense Missions are no longer apart from the world's life, they have become a part of it.

The other influence is the new nationalism. The appeal for the international spirit is reckoning in an unlooked for and singular contradiction with the national mind. This is held by many to be the product of the great war. It is, at least, partly so. Its expression is everywhere, it is in every one of the national units where our work is established. With these nationals we deal. To them the Gospel message is given. Among them the principles and program of Methodism are set forth. They are taught the forgiveness of sins, the freedom of the Gospel, the sacredness of the individual, the essentials of democracy. The teaching harmonizes with the aspirations of the citizen for himself and for his group. The powers are released which make for independence of thought and life even while loyalty to the teacher commands obedience and fellowship. The new concept of the Church and the new concept of the nation interact, rather they combine, and we have wherever enlightenment has come, the urgency for the National Church.

THE BOARD AND THE INDIGENOUS CHURCH

These new phases of Methodist life and purpose have constantly throughout the years and now especially in this last quadrennium been reckoned with in the policy of the Board. It is true that the development of Mission, Mission Conference, Annual Conference and now Central Conference, that is, a wide ranging administrative system in territory which is still dependent to the extent of twenty millions of dollars in the four years under review upon the Church outside of the fields in question, creates problems which even the wise cannot at once solve and which the reckless only make more intricate.

But these problems can and must be solved. It is not yet decided by syllogism that this Church of ours is a world-wide Church, or if it is, in what sense it is. The assignment of seventeen bishops to residence in foreign fields was at least a discouragement to provincialism. The unchallenged rights conferred upon the units of Church organization in other lands are a brief for a Methodism that may find rootage in any soil and growth under all skies. The parallel development in world service of the other great Methodist Episcopal Church is something more than a coincidence—it is an intimation of Providence. The indigenous Church is the normal result of the effort “to spread Scriptural holiness” throughout any land. To produce that Church in every land to which God has seemed to lead our Methodist missionaries is the unalloyed desire and the avowed purpose of the Board of Foreign Missions and of those who herein speak for it. Recognition of national leadership and participation in conferences, in finance committees, in the headships and staffs of schools, in the superintendence of the churches, has never brought challenge from this Board or its officers. On the other hand by personal and official influence the policy of transferring responsibility to the nationals, individuals or community, has been steadily advocated and promoted. This purpose involves no vacating of the trust imposed upon the Board by the Church. It does not ignore the educative value of association. It distinctly upholds the evident aim of the Church to develop through its agency the policies and to apply the resources which shall effect the desired result. The procedure is not always simple nor is the purpose easily understood.

But it is the conviction of the Board that through all the administrative detail, in every adjustment of responsibility, in all the contacts and contributions should move the unfailing purpose, first, to win men to Jesus Christ, and, then, to bring into being and power as a part of a Methodism of the world those who in every land may choose to share its inheritance of truth, its experience of personal salvation, its service for world redemption.

CENTRAL CONFERENCES

The General Conference through its appropriate committees will give keen and wise consideration to the status and powers of the Central Conferences. The study of the questions involved will be found in the report of the special Commission on this subject appointed by the last General Conference. It may be pertinent to the purposes of this report to state in general terms the views held by the representatives of the Board who have been, on the one hand, by correspondence closely familiar with the progress of opinion in the various fields, and on the other have shared in the counsels of the special Commission. To the Board it seems that the functions of the Central Conference are:

(1) To provide for cooperative action on matters of common interest by Annual Conferences, Mission Conferences and Missions in the same or closely related mission fields;

(2) To provide a means by which provisions of the Discipline adopted by the General Conference with the conditions in the United States chiefly in mind, may be modified to meet the conditions obtaining in the several mission fields;

(3) To provide a means whereby increasing responsibilities for the conduct of the life and work of the Church in their native lands may be undertaken by the members of the church in the several fields;

(4) To provide for the administrative agencies that may be needed effectively to carry on such connectional interests and other activities as are common to these conferences and missions and to relate these activities to the general missionary operations of the Church.

A consideration of the geographical conditions and of the development of work in the several Central Conferences indicates clearly that to seek to have all the Central Conferences organize and carry on their work in the same way is impracticable and inadvisable. The differences between the problems of the Europe, the Southern Asia, the South Africa, and the Latin America Central Conferences bring this sharply to the fore. Take the matter of language alone—Europe Central Conference, fourteen or fifteen different languages, no general common tongue; Southern Asia Central Conference, twelve or more languages, but with one accepted common language; South Africa Central Conference, eight to twelve languages, three official government languages; Latin America Central Conference, eight different widely separated countries but with one language. Or again observe the matter of governments with their effects on property holding, educational work, and other aspects of organized Church life. In one Central Conference area are eight republics; in another, republics, constitutional monarchies, fascism, sovietism; in another, three different colonial governments, American, British, Dutch; in another a constitutional imperialism, a republic and a colonial government.

Not only do these conditions make desirable a freedom to adjust legislation to conditions or to take common action where action truly common can be taken, but in each of these areas there are native forces, points of view, powers to bring new enrichment of life into the Church which can only strengthen the Church as a whole as liberty is given to these elements to develop in the ways best suited to bring forward their contribution.

Yet this contribution does not enrich the whole Church if it is made in a unit of organization that is not vitally related to the whole Church. One may venture the opinion that if the Methodist Churches in China can develop with freedom yet without separation from the Methodist Episcopal Church as a whole, they will, assuming other things equal, do more to help the Methodist Churches in the United States to follow the full gospel of our Lord, than will the churches of Japan which are separated. Moreover, the thought and life and historic purposes of Methodism within the Methodist Episcopal Church as a whole are resources yet only partially invested in the growing sections of the Church overseas, resources which must yet be drawn upon heavily to support those who are confronted, as churches are in every mission field, by plagues, spiritual and temporal, and as yet, not overcome. It is our conviction that in this just and normal movement for increasing the responsibility and the autonomy of those points of the Church which lie beyond our own national borders is a challenging problem not only for its bearing upon present conditions, but for its significance for the expansion and integration of Methodism in all its forms.

A memorandum of more explicit suggestions has been placed in the hands of the Commission for its consideration.

THE MATERIALS FOR BOARD DECISIONS AND ACTION

The sources of information and of material upon which judgments could be formed belong to this record. The statement will carry with it also an indication of the cooperation in which the administration of this great trust is carried forward.

OFFICIAL VISITS TO THE FIELDS

The fact that from June, 1920, when Corresponding Secretary S. Earl Taylor was obliged because of the state of his health to seek a leave of absence which a year later was followed by his resignation, to February, 1922, when Dr. Titus Lowe was able to assume the office to which the Bishops had elected him, a period of twenty months, there was but one Executive Officer, necessarily prevented official visits to the fields which were urgently requested from the fields themselves and were deemed desirable by the Board. The admirable organization of the staff of Associate and Assistant Secretaries, with its arrangement of departments and its distribution of responsibilities, effectively cared for administrative processes at home, but release for official travel abroad was for a time most difficult. However, the visits of Associate Secretary Ward to Eastern Asia, which included as an event the National Christian Conference at Shanghai and as a new field, Manchuria, in a part of which visit Mr. Charles Gibson, by appointment of the Board, shared; of Treasurer Fowles to Europe, where he observed our work from Italy to Scandinavia and represented the Board at the Central Conference at Frankfort; of Associate Secretary Donohugh to Africa, who spent ten months in Central and South Africa in an arduous journey of inspection of all our fields; and of Secretary Lowe to South America, Mexico and Central America, examining the work, in company with Bishops Oldham and Thirkield in practically all our mission centers in Latin America, have freshened our thinking and have leveled up our understanding of present-day conditions.

CONSULTATIONS WITH BISHOPS OF FOREIGN RESIDENCE

The conferences with Bishops at home from their fields during the four years have been of inestimable value. Such visits, rightly timed both for the work on the field and the opportunities at the home base, should be commended and provided for as a part of the system of administration if the order established by the last General Conference is to be continued. It is believed to be good strategy that every large missionary division should at least once during the quadrennium have official representation at home by one of the administrators of the work. This should be so arranged, however, that distant fields should not be put to disadvantage. Important consultations here as to persons, policies and programs have been held with Bishops Lewis, Smith, Fisher, Oldham, Thirkield, Locke, Bast, Blake, Nuelsen, and Welch.

MISSIONARIES EN ROUTE

As ever in the past the missionaries en route to and from the field are not only living epistles, they are messengers of fact, flesh and blood witnesses and reporters. They specialize, whatever generalizing others may do. Rarely do they complain. They are reticent where faults of others or personal hardships are concerned. They are fluent when their work is under review and ever eager for return to it with new resources in their hands. These are representatives of that group at the Jubilee meeting in Foochow who last fall broke into praise and sang the doxology when the cable advised them that because of the response of the Church those last grueling weeks of October, the appropriations for the next year would not be appreciably reduced. The fund of exact and intimate information that thus accumulates through the incidental conferences with the missionaries in transit, forms one of the richest assets in the possession of the administrative officers.

CORRESPONDENCE AND REPORTS

The closer contacts with the mission fields in the regular correspondence cannot be overlooked. The long reach of the world interests involved works at times inevitable embarrassment. Delays are avoided by increased use of cable and radio. Processes are speeded up by concentrating responsibility. The volume of new business which the Centenary resources and programs have brought, is by constant attention and experiment managed with ever increasing simplicity, accuracy and despatch. Both the fields and the home office know that we are not "as though we had already attained." Yet the regular correspondence will show constant gains in reciprocal understanding. There is a new sense of the community of knowledge and fresh evidences each day of the considerateness of those who must often form their opinions in the absence of the facts or must accept decisions, the grounds for which cannot reach them until long after the decision has become effective.

Patience and tolerance are virtues indeed in this fellowship. We may not speak of the home brand of these qualities, but that of our foreign correspondents can hardly be surpassed. Who are these correspondents?

THE MISSIONARIES ON THE FIELD

The regular missionaries, of course, against whose direct approach to the executive officers of the Board on any matter of personal interest or general policy no barrier has ever been raised. They send also the news letters to special churches and donors who are interested in them. Copies of such letters are an ever enjoyable part of our material.

THE MISSION CORRESPONDENT

The regular mission correspondent. He may also be treasurer. In either case his burdens are many. Sometimes he is inexcusably overtaxed. The effort to secure business administration in the missions is unrelenting. Rapid progress is being made. Combination of activities and concentration of responsibility is working for new efficiency. In three major divisions a central treasury has been established. But the subject of correspondence is not always finances. The correspondent represents the interests of the missionaries and the work in the broader sense. In this routine the mails bring us a dozen letters where ten years ago there was one.

THE HEADS OF INSTITUTIONS

Then the heads of institutions write. They are bearing responsibilities quite apart from the routine of the regular work—as much so as the heads of institutions in this country. They deal with large enterprises—schools, hospitals, universities, colleges, publishing houses. They are not detached from the mission program. Often they are the wisest and most sympathetic advisers of the regular missionaries. But they are at times in touch with broader policies and more helpfully interpret them. They find common ground with the Board's Department of Education and Literature, with its Medical Department, with its Department of Designated Gifts, and keep touch with the Department of Surveys and Records. The designation of gifts for institutions in all parts of the world and the lift of the educational and medical service to new levels, have increased this phase of correspondence and administration many fold.

THE BISHOPS

Chief among these correspondents are the Bishops resident abroad. One who knows their fields and their activities must wonder at the detail, the fullness and the discrimination of their frequent communications. The free and unremitting interchange of information, views and opinions between the sixteen bishops on the field and the executive officers of the Board, is one of the strongest safeguards of the ideals and policies of the Church. There is common interest in the administration and investment of funds designated for specific units of work, in the maintenance of a just balance of appropriations between sections of the work, in the qualifications, the health and the effectiveness of the missionaries, in the standards of conduct among new converts, in the values of educational processes and organization, in the promotion of a sound literature, in the development of self-support and of the spirit and method of self-direction in the national churches, in the adaptation, without essential loss, of the principles, the customs, the ritual, the total inheritance of Methodism to the customs of life and the modes of thought of the people to whom as representatives of a vital Church we are commissioned to preach and teach the gospel. In the main these tasks of administration are carried forward in complete harmony. In some fields new conditions are created by the rising national feeling which is to be not suppressed but guided. The larger investment of life and money, at times, suggests the removal of safeguards which the Church, in good faith, has fixed. In some fields a new self-possession urges the possession also of instruments and resources of service for which the transfer of title has not yet been authorized. The development of the area, with its concomitants, area consciousness and area responsibility, finds in foreign fields elements to which the homeland is a stranger—Conferences in which both missionaries and nationals are members, finance committees which must deal with large subsidies for work received from other parts of the world Church, Central Conferences with centripetal convictions and methods, Mission Conferences and Missions with real but limited powers, institutions—schools, colleges, hospitals, publishing houses—which not being self-supporting must have a different standing from that of similar units of work in the land where the world-wide Church has, as yet, its largest development and its chief resources. It would be an administrative miracle if under these conditions there should be no margin for doubt in the estimate of responsibility, no shadow to flit across the sunlit path of executive procedure! But this rich correspondence will be searched in vain to find a sinister sentence, an unkind personal word or an essential variance in the interpretation of the main purposes and policies of Methodism. Whatever may have been the burdens placed upon the sixteen Bishops by the correspondence of the Board, the Board, through its executive officers, bears witness to the industry, fidelity and devotion of these general superintendents of the work in foreign fields, assigned by the last General Conference to tasks, than which the Church has in her gift none more difficult, and gratefully acknowledges the contribution to knowledge, the stimulus to faith and the communion of spirit with which they, in the conversations and correspondence of the four years, have enriched its resources.

METHODIST TRAVELERS

To these sources of information, two must be added. The war, the Centenary, or both, stirred in many the desire to see the world. News from a far country has reached America and our own Church circles through tourist observers. Many of these have reported to us their observations. Usually their inspection of work has been hurried and their contacts with missionaries casual. Some have traveled at greater leisure. There exists in the Church to-day a more general knowledge of missionary enterprise than ever before. To the missionary office the information from these travelers has been ever welcome. It has been discriminating, at times a restraint upon undue optimism, at times an unexpected stimulus to courage.

THE PRESS

Finally, the world enterprise of the press has discovered the news value in missions. This may be one of the by-products of the Centenary and kindred movements. To it the remarkable publicity department of the Council of Boards which for its foreign section has been centered in the office of the Board of Foreign Missions, has had access to all fresh news in correspondence and has been continually in contact with our missionaries as they have arrived from the field, has made a significant contribution from the world field which has enriched the columns of the Church press for these four years bear witness to this excellence of news service. But far deeper into the thought of the world than ever before has gone the significance of the missionary movement. It is not an exotic notion where men discuss world affairs. Governments give it thought. It is not ignored in current literature. It is worth reporting upon. It has belonged to the Church, it now belongs to the world. Facts, suggestions, criticisms, interpretations have come from departments of government, from newspaper offices, from correspondents of current periodicals on watch in every center of the world's life, from commercial and educational and scientific groups at work on their special problems, from writers of books, fiction, travel, history, economics, which tell the story of missions and reveal the widening sense of the import of that divine compulsion which sends men out into all the world to preach the Gospel to every creature.

A RAPID SURVEY OF FIELDS AND TYPES OF WORK

The Board of Foreign Missions has unceasingly throughout these wonderful four years been conscious of viewing and reviewing its worldwide work under two forms. Each mission has its history, its life, its achievement. The geographical unit affords data for comparisons, estimates of growth, study of peoples, appraisals of opportunity. A perfectly normal inquiry is, what are we doing in China? How fares the work in South America? Are there actual gains in Netherlands Indies? The organization and superintendence of the work as expressed in terms of territory or land or nation have been sanctioned and emphasized by the very nature of the Church's expansion and by the inevitable order of the Church's adjustment of its tasks. The members of the Conference will receive a handbook wherein will be found summaries of the remarkable results of the Centenary movement field by field. In booklet and the Church press the story has been told. Com-packed in the World Service volume each mission has its paragraph or its chapter. Happily, with greater fullness and precision than ever before each section of this round the world enterprise of the Church will live before you in the person and the words of the Bishop who, from his close contact with it, comes back to you with its needs and tasks burned into his very heart. The other form under which the work is viewed is expressed not by place but by type. Every field is cross sectioned with well-defined kinds of work which are common to all. The spirit of the Gospel in Korea, in Burma, in the Belgian Congo expresses and embodies itself in the very types of service which are so familiar to us here. It is of the very genius of the Gospel as it was in the very nature of our Lord, to preach, to teach, to heal, to cast out devils. The evangelism of the Apostles carried not only truth and power but churches, schools, hospitals, the organized ministries of Christianity. In the saddle bags of the Methodist pioneers was the seed corn from which have grown the agencies of help, the institutions of teaching, the permanent centers of spiritual power. It is the inevitable process in every mission field. The preacher is himself the demonstration of the message. The teacher is himself the truth. But there must be language. This means learning and teaching. Suffering must be relieved. The lancet and the hospital become essential. The logic of service is inexorable. Organized activities must be housed. They are the mandate for the Church and the school. The life expands not by formulas and buildings which can be constructed, but by men and women who are born from above. Come then personal needs, centers of domestic life, communities with customs, a religious system with its statement of truth, its manner of life, its conservation of forces of redemption. Children are to be trained, youth is to be inspired and directed, old age is to be comforted, the vigor of manhood and womanhood is to be sanctified. In the homeland these spiritual energies, these aspirations for service have expressed themselves in varied forms and are crystallized in our various organizations. Whether in outward form they are too many or too few, in essence they register the eager purpose of Christian hearts to find the way to the need of the world.

TYPES OF MISSIONARY SERVICE

Against this background we see the range of our work on the foreign field. There is difference in setting and in emphasis. Race, language, government, environment affect procedure and form. But invariably in these far lands the essential message of redemption embodies itself in organized church life, in measures for social service, in institutions for relief of suffering, in education. The progress of these four years is registered in concrete terms in the churches, the philanthropies, the hospitals and the schools, with their products in the more abundant life of the multitudes of every land to whom, by the grace of God and the good will of this great Church, they have been able to minister.

THE ORGANIZED CHURCH ON THE FOREIGN FIELD

The lift of the level of the organized church work as such and its expansion have been general throughout the whole world field. As the life of the church has deepened, it has also broadened. It has been a rising tide which has swept around the world. In other parts of this report, and in other statements, the details of growth will be found. Those who seek to set forward the Kingdom of God in these great mission lands realize the values in the specialized forms of missionary service, but they would despair of permanent success if it should appear that the individual and community life of the people did not show increasingly the power of the organized church as such. The Centenary contributions where designated for individual projects in the educational, medical or philanthropic field promptly command attention. It is significant that those developments which are not unique, but belong to the general movement of the Christian organization or community, have registered so important an advance. On the foreign field the Church finds itself at the end of the Centenary period so much stronger in membership and in other phases of the regular church life, that the workers often feel that they have been swept on by a Power outside of all human planning.

The goals in the preliminary surveys were set so high as to strain the faith of the days which preceded the Centenary. These goals were often early reached, and in many instances had to be set ahead in the very middle of the five-year period. There have been added to the staff during these years over 6,500 national workers. The gifts of money have been greatly increased and, while there has not been as large a development of self-support as has been desired, on the whole—measured by the amount of the indigenous resources disclosed—the advance has been exceedingly gratifying. Church membership has been increased by approximately 115,000. There has been an increase in Sunday Schools of over 1,700, and of Sunday School scholars of nearly 105,000. Property aid has been given to over 800 churches and schools. Many hundreds of the church buildings are new, and have schools and a pastor's home in connection with them. To house the missionaries and national workers and those already on the field, who have never been properly housed, over 600 new residences or parsonages have been built. It is perfectly clear that the line has been advanced and extended, and that the result of the scouting and the choosing of positions has justified the conviction that the Church is now not only pioneering but occupying these lands. If the lines of communication with the base of supplies can be maintained, and resources and reinforcements can be brought steadily forward, an extraordinary advance should mark the next decade.

Of special work in the field of church organization and of evangelism, there are many illustrations which appeal for record:

There are: The new Mission in Costa Rica among a unique type of Western-Spanish population.

The extension of the work in the country districts of Panama.

The effort to establish definite work among the Indians of Bolivia, a work which is reported to have "grown beyond anything any of us dreamed possible."

The special advance among Moslem populations, as in North Africa and Malacca, the former being emphasized by Dr. Zwemer who has stated that it surpasses anything he has seen elsewhere.

Special development in North Sumatra.

The experiment in the Wannan District in Central China.

Remarkable evangelistic results in the districts of the Hingwa Conference, and in the mountain regions of the Yenping and the new South Fukien Conferences in spite of the perils from the bandit hordes.

Continual upward pressure by multitudes of the village folk of India, and the spread of the influence of the Gospel among the upper classes of India through the extraordinary work of our own missionary leaders.

Impressive results from evangelistic efforts in Central Europe, and the Karelian borders of Finland and Russia.

This is not an exhaustive record. It simply is an intimation of the vivid, vital, productive evangelism which moving from the church centers by its very life strengthens them, and reaches out to the untouched millions of the world. It is recorded of the past year that of the increase of membership in our Church, by far the greater proportion comes from the Foreign Field. At this one must rejoice with restraint, and if here were but a flash of light for a day or a year no record would be worth while. But it is not a flash, but a flame, and tells the story again of the burning heart which glows and brightens the dark places in every country of the world.

A HINT OF THE MEDICAL PROGRAM OF THE QUADRENNIUM

The broad medical program laid out by the Centenary surveys has been modified, partly by lack of Board funds, partly by failure of government funds (Netherlands Indies) for co-operative enterprises; partly by changing ideas as to the wise procedure after a closer study of local needs and possibilities. In Eastern South America, for example, our workers are asking for nurses for health programs, rather than for doctors and hospitals. No doubt, lack of funds in amounts expected, helped to modify plans, but the quick success of nurses in stations without doctor or hospital has revealed a new medical service.

Netherlands Indies

Our missionary nurse in Palembang, South Sumatra, points out the fact that eighty per cent of the medical service in the United States is non-hospitalized. Her own pronounced success with non-hospitalized medical work in Palembang has led her to question whether that is not as fruitful, at least for the present, as the more expensive hospital service, though she would not, of course, think of abandoning all hospitals. Her non-hospitalized work has brought her into contact with the Moslem community in Palembang—into the homes—as hospital work could never have done. About one-eighth of the program has been carried out. The one hospital, at Tjisoroa, is an unqualified success. The non-hospitalized work is equally so. Two dispensaries have been opened in North Sumatra. Borneo still waits. The value of medical work among the Moslems has had abundant demonstration by what has been done to date. When the Dutch Government and the Methodists of America are ready to make further contributions of money and men, the tested method of procedure is clear.

Mexico

In Mexico, the Mission has cooperated in the Puebla Hospital with the Baptists by furnishing a doctor and a nurse, and making a contribution to the current expenses. In Mexico City three dispensaries, one with twelve beds, making it a small hospital, are maintained. The pioneer medical work of the Board in Mexico is that at Guanajuato, where Dr. Levi P. Salmans has worked for a generation. He developed a hospital without expense to the Board for building. During the Centenary, for the first time, he received money for needed additions to the plant. Nurse-training has been carried on effectively and many of the graduates are in active service. The nurse who represents our Church in the Puebla Hospital is a graduate of this training school.

South America

In South America, exclusive of Lima, Peru, there are at least six dispensaries. In Chile, there is a fine cooperation between the Chilean doctors and the Mission in the management of the dispensaries, the doctors giving their services without remuneration when the nurse requests it. Supervision of the health of children in the Mission schools is a valuable result in Chile. The Lima Hospital is "booming" at last report. It has gained public confidence. Peruvian doctors are asking to send their own patients to the hospital. Nurse-training is well started; a small but promising class is in training. Since nursing is not on a professional basis in South America there is desperate need for help in creating a profession of nursing.

China

The China Medical Board has set the standard for medical instruction in China, and for hospital equipment and staff.

The Methodist contribution of men and funds enabled the Mission to take its part in the preliminary cooperation of the Missions which afforded the foundation for the Union Medical School in Peking; to meet the Medical Board's proposition for the Methodist Hospital at Wuhu, involving the expenditure of at least $100,000 from missionary sources; to build the first unit of the hospital at Nanchang; to reinforce the staff and increase the equipment of every one of the other nine hospitals wholly dependent upon the Methodist Missions, including the reopening of the two large hospitals at Chungking and Chengtu, West China; and the assuming of the cost of a new one at Tzechow, and the manning of it.

The Yenping Conference medical unit (The Alden Speare Memorial Hospital and contributing dispensaries) has added two small hospitals into which went much local money. Additions to the staff (nurses) and new equipment are a substantial contribution and have increased the efficiency of the medical organization as a teaching unit for the training of nurses and assistants who care for the dispensaries.

The Hinghwa Conference medical work has had the gift of a dispensary in the important industrial center at Ng Sauh—the Jakway Memorial.

Korea

The Methodist share in the Severance Union Medical School and Hospital in Seoul; reinforcement of the fine series of Methodist hospitals by two doctors and six nurses; advanced training for doctors during furlough; equipment for hospitals; buildings at the Haiju Hospital; are among the results in this great field.

India

The Centenary has given to India a doctor, equipment and money for repairs to the hospital at Bidar in South India, making the reopening of the hospital possible; a nurse to the hospital at Nadiad; help in paying for the new wards; a doctor for the Crawford Memorial Hospital at Vikarabad; Reed Memorial Hospital, a small hospital at Lahore; provided medical supervision for the schools of the Central Provinces; supported a program of medical itineration and dispensaries in and about Calcutta. There are other dispensaries in the North India and the Indus River Conferences, which are so much a part of the routine of the Missions that they do not receive special mention in the reports.

Africa, Central and South

There is a fascination in the story of the development of our medical work in Bantu Africa, of which here only a hint can be given. The sacrificial work in Rhodesia under the British flag, the extraordinary ministry of medicine and surgery in Inhambane under the Portuguese flag, the two hospital centers in the Congo under the Belgian flag, are chapters in a book of thrilling service which, some day, must be written. One chapter will tell of the heroic life and tragic death of Dr. W. C. Berry, who only three months ago on duty, far away from wife and home, gave up his life as one who went with his Master to the end.

The medical work, to which these five years of planning and resources have given impulse and scope, will be an ever increasing factor in the program of the Board.

THE GOSPEL IN TERMS OF SOCIAL AND COMMUNITY SERVICE

The ready response to the social program on the foreign field may certainly be interpreted to mean that the program is sound. The World War left men in all lands bewildered, waiting for something, they knew not what, but a something they wanted and that they felt they would get from the people of the United States. The expression of this conviction on the part of the peoples of the world has been reported so often as to have become a commonplace.

The Macedonian cry is not a single voice, it is a chorus. It is as if a Macedonian man in the form of every continent, and every variety of every continent, stood in the manner of a suppliant, with eyes directed to us here. From the Bolivians, who ask for fruit peelers, and washing machines, and farm implements and basket balls, to the bandit king, who asked for a girls' school managed by the Mission, "because the fathers must know that it would be run right, or they would not permit their daughters to come to it," and the Battak sultans who ask for a preacher, because they must soon decide between Christ and Mohammed, and think they prefer Christ if they may have a preacher, it is the same—the same naïve faith, that the missionary has what they want, and that he is willing to share.

The universal appeal to the missionary—a sort of instinctive turning to him, as a child turns to his mother—is one of the beautiful things in the realm of Missions. Is it not a testimony to the validity and sincerity of the movement? The proposal of a man in Mexico, that the Methodist Mission develop a certain fishing industry from which a large number of the poor live, seems a bit fantastic to those who understand the limitations of missionary administration, but it indicates that he has got the point that the missionary is there to serve, and he comes asking in rather large faith. It is true that the social program in Mexico—not merely in the conspicuous enterprise at Aztecas—is a pronounced success. The young preachers from the Seminary have grasped the significance of it and are “putting it over” successfully in the country districts.

The Social Ministry as a Means

Aside from the fact that the social program is the incarnation of the spirit of Him who went about doing good, it makes contacts for the evangelistic program in ways that would be otherwise impossible. The sight of supervised play impresses a Chinese business man in Malacca, whom even a school has not attracted. In China, and in Japan, the reading room is at the top of the popularity list. All through the country districts of Mexico the men gather in club centers and discover that the Protestant is a real man and is safe for friendship. There is an intimate connection between these centers and the increase of church membership. Many of the centers are Centenary “unit” centers, too, and more than one such center has become a congregation and has built a church, sometimes with a school attached, all within the short period of the Centenary; often with a minimum of help from the States.

Types of Social Work—Clubs, Boy Scouts and Other Forms

In Hinghwa City, China, there is a remarkable club work—a system of clubs for boys and girls—which takes in the whole region about Hinghwa. It radiates from the high school as a center. Clubs are conducted in different parts of the city, and in the villages round about. In a celebration given by the clubs two thousand children marched in procession and took part in a program given in the church which seats two thousand five hundred. Imagine the chance to teach health, alone. Twenty-three boys from this school took the examinations for Fukien University; twenty-three boys passed!

The Boy Scouts of Bolivia have made a record for themselves. During their annual hikes (strange that it should be a matter of comment) they keep sober. This is a total abstinence demonstration of great value and almost national scope.

In India, summer camps, in which the best physical results accrue to boys normally underweight, and positive results in character development from team play and contact with camp leaders, are increasingly useful since more missionaries trained in boys' work have been sent out in accordance with the Centenary program. In Singapore, Methodist students have taken part in athletic contests with government schools with credit, and these same young people have attended Epworth League institutes in throngs.

Health Instruction

Health instruction for mothers, boys, girls and for the general community is in the year's calendar in South America, Mexico, China, Africa (Bantu and North), in parts of India.

The peripatetic service in Bengal, Calcutta's milk stations (in cooperation with the government), the memorial dispensaries, fall under this head. The health supervision for the schools of Central Provinces belongs also to the newer program.

In China, Methodist missionaries cooperate with the China Health Council, of which our own Dr. R. C. Beebe was long treasurer. This organization circulates in a year more than a million pages of health literature, and its health demonstrations, so organized that they take in every department of city life and reach the last man with some information, are apt and effective. Methodist missionaries are the largest users of the material prepared by the Council. For example, the use made of such material in the student summer campaigns of evangelism and health teaching in the villages, and in the cities in which William Nast College and the Anglo-Chinese Christian College are located, have been conspicuously successful.

The Social Center (Institutional Church)

The contrasting standards of life in all its phases which this sets up in most of the cities in the countries in which our missionaries work, must make a strong appeal to any imagination not hopelessly dull. There it stands, whether it is the large church with a numerous paid staff as in Chengtu, a large hive of activities, such as the settlement at Cerro de Pasco, Montevideo, an Arabic center in North Africa, a tiny center in the heights of Tehwa District in South Fukien Conference or a village in Africa's brush—there it stands proclaiming a fullness of life in this world, here and now—not to mention the next world—which it had never entered into the heart of the boys and girls and men and women to imagine.

For the men, reading rooms, discussion clubs, recreation. For the boys and girls, play, education, health, friendship. For the women, sympathy, baby bathing demonstrations, baby feeding instruction, and in one enterprising center baby food for sale at cost. "In Christianity, woman has a name," said a Chinese woman. In a Christian center, then, the woman has her own part.

To the practical Chinese mind this form of service has appealed particularly, and has brought forth much local financial support. Not less than ten of these centers are in operation in the largest cities of the Methodist territory in China, besides others in market towns and in some rather small ones.

Commercial Training

Insistent demands from many institutions which serve commercial communities for commercial training—in the case of Lucknow Christian College, of college grade—have been made from the field at intervals during the Centenary period. The opportunity in Tientsin, for example, could not be passed by, and a missionary equipped for commercial education was sent out. Ward Commercial School, Buenos Aires, is another case in point. Enlarged plant and reinforced staff are the Centenary's contribution there. The commercial departments of the Bolivia schools and of Huancayo, Peru, long a substantial aid to the country's business life, have had consideration in plans for those two Missions.

Lucknow Christian College, it is well known, was a pioneer in the teaching of shorthand. A system of Hindustani shorthand was invented there years ago, and government clerks were trained on contract—so many clerks in so many months. The School of Commerce asked for has been made possible. It is ranked as a department of the National University—the University's School of Business.

Famine and Missions

Famine has driven the Missions—those who have not given attention to it before, for a few have—to think in terms of agriculture and industrial education. In China, India and in Africa, during the Centenary years, the Methodist Missions have been face to face with the necessity of saving large numbers of the Christian natives from starvation. The men on the field and the men responsible for administration at home are thinking seriously about the question of how to put the Christian community on a basis far enough above the hunger-line to insure a margin of safety in times of crop failure.

Africa's Unique Relation to Agricultural Training

In Africa the whole program of the Mission has its base in agriculture—industrial training based in agriculture. The Bantu tribes with whom we deal in Central and South Africa are agricultural nomads. They till the soil by the "worst methods of agriculture in the world." With fertile soil at hand they use the less fertile, because the plants grow in it quickly and they are deceived thereby. Soon it is exhausted and they move on as the manner of the nomadic agriculturist is.

In Rhodesia a program of agricultural training has been growing through twenty years. About seven thousand persons are, as a result of that training, self-supporting agriculturists, living in Christian villages, able to give to the support of their churches and schools—men who had before lived in the squalor of smoky mud huts. These people are brought quickly through a degree of development which the race went through from the stone age up by slow stages. They have taken as long a step as can be taken to advantage in a score of years. It is a long one and they are ready for the next.

At Quessua, Angola, a new Centenary Missionary has begun to develop the agricultural department of the Central Training School for the Mission. He is improving the crops, introducing new varieties, and is toning up the cattle. A tractor (the native boys call it "the machine that hoes") has been sent out for the heavy work of road making and of plowing for the first time the virgin soil.

The transformation that has gone on in Rhodesia and in the other Angola station, Quiongua, is beginning here.

Agriculture here meets economic need, tends to ameliorate the pernicious elements of an imported industrialism unrelated to the normal life of the native, and hastens processes of civilization and evangelization.

The agricultural program for Africa is supported by all the implications of psychology and anthropology, has been tested by twenty years, or more, of experimentation, is well defined and well started. In each of the four Missions of Central and Southern Africa there is abundant land, cheaply bought or donated and there are missionaries trained in agriculture, and in the nature and need of the native.

Progress in development of policy and in the inauguration of the necessary processes of education for carrying it out has been steady during the Centenary. It is a really brilliant achievement.

The Kolar, India, School—A Generation Ahead of the Times

Before the Centenary, agricultural-industrial education in Methodist Missions had little place. Famine, combined with the presence of an unusually far-seeing missionary with a fine pedagogical sense, did occasionally produce an institution known for its industrial work—an institution which the missionary must perforce support either by his own genius for administration or by his persuasive powers in asking for money, or both.

Such an institution—a conspicuous success—was the Kolar, India, school, which the Kolar plow made famous both in India and the United States. There are other grounds for its excellent reputation. The first is that the veteran missionary here had pedagogical insight and knew the value of manual training for everybody, rich or poor. He advocated manual training for India's schools from primary through the college—as a means of grace and culture, as much as for economic independence.

In 1890 an English lady who had been conducting the school as a faith mission (famine had forced her into it to care for children left without relatives), gave it to the Methodist Mission. By 1921 the missionary in charge had added 200 acres of land, buildings, equipment, and had set out 2,300 tongray trees and 3,000 tamarind trees; this plantation will be an endowment in time. During all this time the Church has furnished no money outside of the missionary's salary and a few scholarships.

Its results are: a self-supporting congregation; a community, many of whom live in houses of masonry which they own; trains its own teachers; sends scores of young men to good positions; trains preachers for the district. In the first seven years, the school sold five plows; in the last ten years, 3,600; in the three months before the war checked sales, 3,600.

Increased Demand From the Field for Agricultural Instruction

The notable increase in the number of references to agricultural and industrial teaching in schools to be found in the Board Report for 1922, shows that missionaries, particularly in India and China (leaving Africa out of account, because it is in a class by itself), are giving thought to such training as an economic consideration. Some emphasize the pedagogical implications more than the economic. It seems to be agreed that if the Church is to become self-sustaining in agricultural countries it will be through missionary aid to agriculture. Famine has forced the question.

India: In India the three schools, which had their inception in post-famine conditions, are flourishing as never before. At Bidar the making of Bidar ware has been begun; at Vikarabad, lime-making and brick-making. Many schools have added, or pushed more vigorously, school gardens. The three schools referred to are Aligarh, Kolar and Nadiad.

China: Agricultural instruction has been incorporated into the curriculum at the Universities of Nanking and Peking. Support is assured through the application of left-over famine funds—this is a famine-prevention measure.

In the high schools at Changli, North China, in Yenping, and at Ng Sauh, Hinghwa Conference, agricultural instructors have been appointed during the Centenary period. At both Yenping and Changli, fortunately, Chinese trained in the United States are in charge; the former from Iowa State College, which provides most of our workers in agriculture; the latter from Illinois University School of Agriculture.

Changli is in the midst of a fruit-raising country. The thousand trees set out by our agriculturist have all lived. The start made here is most encouraging. As always, a group of promising boys were eager to begin.

The Chinese district superintendent in Lanhsien, North China, during the famine, wished to begin industrial work to give support to boys in need. He presented his plan to Conference and said that he could do it on $500 Mexican ($250 gold). The preachers promptly subscribed to it. He began with 25 boys. He requires them to sign a contract to stay five years. In that time they get three grades of school work and a trade. They weave cloth and mosquito nets.

The Bunster Farm in Chile: This is in a class all by itself—the largest attempt to serve through agriculture, measured in terms at least—ever made by a Mission. Nobody but a seer of courage would have attempted it. To date it has accomplished these things: Inaugurated and conducted a farm school, from which six have already graduated; started a church; improved the workers' cottages (hovels they were), and caused social work to be organized among them; built summer cottages for missionaries; erected a tabernacle for summer meetings—a sort of Chautauqua is growing up in the Pine Grove at the Farm (there have been held in this tabernacle Epworth League Institutes, the Annual Conference, the interdenominational Christian Workers' Conference). At the National Exhibition of agricultural products, the fly which is the enemy of the wooly aphid which is playing havoc with the apple orchards of Chile, was put on exhibition and the offer was made to supply it free to all who applied. This act of brotherliness has introduced the Bunster Farm to all Chile.

Bishop Oldham may have foreseen the spiritual value of the farm. It is doubtful if anyone else did. It is proving to be the rallying place for all Christian forces in South America. A trained observer says of the Workers' Conference, "It is the best thing that has happened to Missions in South America."

For the Methodists themselves, it is helping to visualize to the scattered groups of believers, who are in the minority in their home communities, and are often persecuted, the unity of the great Church of which they are a part. This result has been definitely helpful among the Epworth Leaguers.

These paragraphs give but a glimpse of the varied social ministries through which by the aid of Centenary resources the spiritual messages of the Gospel are being carried by our missionaries to the backward peoples of the world.

EDUCATION—ITS RANGE AND METHOD

The educational aspect of our missionary enterprise is both evangelistic and educational. The schools themselves reach young hearts with the Gospel message and build into young spirits the purposes and habits of life that go with allegiance to our Lord. It is in our schools also that workers in evangelism and education are trained—apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers—and by whose training the fruits of evangelism and education are made the greater. Moreover it is the extent and quality of our educational work that will determine whether the Church of the next generations will be literate or illiterate, ignorant or knowing, and able or impotent to bring to bear upon public opinion and political and economic actions the Christian convictions.

To meet this challenge requires an amazing variety of institutions and agencies. Day schools, boarding schools, hostels, elementary schools, secondary schools, colleges and universities, medical schools, theological and Bible training schools, night schools, English schools, village workers' training schools, kindergartens, schools for missionary children, language and missionary training schools, Sunday schools, schools of agriculture, of forestry, of dentistry, of commerce. Even the bulk of our elementary and secondary school work is carried on under the regulations of more than twenty-five different governments and in a dozen distinct types of systems.

Small wonder that to so widespread and varied an educational work the Church's increased investment in the past quadrennium has brought far reaching effects. Had it not been for this the depression in exchange would well-nigh have wrecked our educational system, for example, in China, developed so carefully through so many decades. To have been able to save this when, on all sides of our missions, others were closing schools and withdrawing staff, is to have gained a great victory for all the future. Yet there has been not only the holding of ground won but even genuine advance. In the last five years, the number of pupils in schools under our Church on the foreign field has increased sixty per cent. This represents a numerical increase in five years equivalent to that made in twenty-five of the years preceding the Centenary. In the schools supported in whole or in part by the Board of Foreign Missions there are now over a hundred thousand pupils, to which the work of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society would add half as many more. Think of your own home town's school system and your own college and reckon the requirements, the responsibilities, the hopes that lie in seven universities and colleges, two score theological and Bible training schools, nearly seventy secondary schools, and over twenty-five hundred elementary schools. These and half a hundred special schools are the measure of the investment of the Church through the Board of Foreign Missions in education.

There are other ways of noting the progress of the quadrennium in education. In the period 227 new missionaries, including replacements, have been sent out specifically for educational work. To these must be added in any reckoning of our new investment of life in mission education the many other new general missionaries whose work inevitably involves some phase of education.

Fully as much, if not more than for missionary educators, is the field dependent upon the home base for aid in the construction of the physical elements of the educational plant. Rare indeed are the occasions when the mission and the Board can rejoice in the gifts of alumni, such as the $150,000 college building Mr. Katsuda gave to Aoyama Gakuin, our Tokyo College. Alas that the devastation of the earthquake should require its rebuilding at even greater cost and without such exceptional aid! In India and Malaysia grants toward land or buildings are not infrequently made by the Government. A notable grant of this kind was that of $103,000 to Lucknow Christian College for the construction of additional buildings. This, with the Centenary grants, has resulted in one of the finest college plants in India. Centenary giving has also made possible on the new campus of Peking University the administration and auditorium building, a memorial to Bishop James W. Bashford and the central building of the academic group. Other school projects made possible by the Centenary in the last four years may be illustrated by such varied items as these: new land for Fukien Christian University, buildings for the boys' and girls' schools and the Bible Institute in Peru, a new building at the Mexican Institute at Puebla, dormitories for the high schools at Tientsin and Taianfu, the new buildings for the high schools at Hinghwa, Chungking and other points, the Ninde Memorial Theological School building at Peking, model elementary plants in many places, new buildings for the theological and women's training school at Santiago, Chile, at Pauri in the Indian hills, a building for the Messmore High School reported to be "the finest in Garhwal," as well as scores of structures for elementary schools in every part of our work, and repairs and reconstruction of buildings generally. At another point a fuller list of these achievements and other achievements is given.

Yet with even these achievements we are far from insuring even a literate church on our larger fields. In India hardly more than twenty per cent of the children of our Methodist Christian community are receiving any education whatever. On good authority, the present program of Christian education in China will not prevent half the church from being unable to read the Scriptures in their own tongue. The significant interdenominational studies of Christian education in Africa, China, and India made in the last four years have thrown so much new light on the whole task that the reshaping of many parts of our educational work in view of higher standards, new knowledge and changed government policy is made necessary. In India the transfer of education from British to national control through the provincial assemblies, together with the effects of the elaborate report of the Calcutta University Commission bid fair to have far-reaching effects on our policy. Already our Lucknow Christian College has had to reduce itself to the status of an intermediate (junior) college. In Malaysia, the government has adopted the policy of limiting future cooperation with mission schools in the interest of more government institutions.

All these and many other factors give us ground for great gratitude to God for the splendid foundations already laid for an educated church in our mission lands. Upon these foundations we must now build far more thoroughly and strongly, both in the work of the schools and in the religious educational work of the local church, if we are to do our full duty in making Christ Lord both of men and nations.

A SUMMARY OF ACHIEVEMENTS IN ALL FIELDS

In a special handbook of Centenary results which will be presented to every member of the Conference the statements here summarized will be found in more ample descriptive form.

Six hundred thirty-two missionaries were sent to the foreign field during the Centenary period (October 31, 1918, to January 1, 1924). Some of them replaced older missionaries who were worn out from years of service or had died at their posts; others were added to the hundreds of consecrated men and women who are giving themselves to Christ's cause in many lands. This is the greatest single outstanding achievement of the Centenary and the greatest fact of the quadrennium, from the point of view of world-Methodism.

Of these 632 new missionaries, 19 are physicians, 54 are trained nurses, 16 are engaged in agricultural or industrial education, 20 are in specialized secretarial activities. One hundred seventy-one of the missionaries went to China; 157 to South America; 109 to India and Burma.

As a result of the new enthusiasm for missions produced by the Centenary enterprise, it has been possible to secure for our service afield young men and young women unusually well qualified for their tasks. We have drawn them from the best colleges, seminaries, hospitals, medical schools and agricultural schools.

New Converts

One of the immediate results of this increase in missionary staff is to be found in the rapidly increasing number of church members on every field. Reports in 1923 showed 114,694 more members in our foreign churches than there were in 1918. And that does not include the increase in constituents, and in the number outside the church vitally influenced by its precept and example.

Our missionaries are adding 551 Christian converts per week to the church roll, over and above all losses by death. Contrast that with the story of James M. Thoburn who preached two years before finding his first convert; or of William Carey who preached seven years before finding a convert; or of Henry Martyn who had only one convert at the end of his first year. In India, where these men labored, we are gaining converts at the rate of 216 per week.

Forty-five thousand of the 114,000 converts gained during the quadrennium were in India; China gained 27,000; Europe, 13,000; Africa, 6,000; the Philippines, 8,000. "Where we have the largest number of missionaries, we reach the largest number of people."

Thoburn and Carey and Martyn—and other pioneers in other lands—labored almost single-handed in India. Now our Indian missionaries are assisted by 7,757 native pastors and teachers and other workers. Our world mission staff is assisted by 20,000 such workers. Thirty per cent of these—in all 6,529—were added during the quadrennium.

New Buildings

Those who expect to see their Centenary contributions made visible in brick and stone and mortar and land, can find 837 new structures or properties used for schools or churches, besides 51 buildings or properties secured for medical purposes. These have all been erected or purchased during the Centenary period. (These include only building erections and property purchases reported for the Annual Report of the Board: the list must be considerably larger.) This means that we erected four new buildings or purchased four new properties each week of the quadrennium. In addition there is to be noted an increase of 616 in the number of parsonages and missionary homes owned on the foreign field by our church.

China has 188 of the new churches and schools; India and Burma, 162; Korea, 98; Latin-America, 94.

Think for a moment what 837 buildings and properties mean to missionaries who can write, "If we have only a mud hut it is of inestimable value to our village for it lets the village folks know that we have come to stay. Of how much greater value then is a well-constructed building adequately equipped to serve."

Schools

There are enrolled in our Methodist schools (all grades) 47,000 more pupils to-day than there were at the beginning of the quadrennium.

During the same period the number of Sunday schools was increased by 1,714 and the number of Sunday school pupils by 104,138. In other words we have opened new Sunday schools oftener than once per day; we have added 71 new Sunday school pupils (above graduation and other losses) each day of the quadrennium.

Eight hundred and seven of the new Sunday schools and 46,000 of the new pupils are to be found in India and Burma. China has 20,000 of the new pupils, and Japan 11,000.

A practical helpfulness to the needy peoples of the earth was the opening of agricultural training farms and schools during the quadrennium in India, China, Africa, Mexico and in South America; and the opening of industrial schools in these same countries. The 16 agricultural and industrial missionaries have been a valuable addition to the missionary forces.

Medical Work

We have noted that during the quadrennium the Methodist Episcopal Church sent 19 physicians and 54 trained nurses into foreign service; and that 51 new hospitals or dispensaries have been built or properties purchased for them during the same period.

What these 73 medical workers and 51 medical institutions mean to mankind can be realized only when one grasps the full significance of that other statement: "Two thirds of the earth's population is not within reach of competent medical aid."

China—where only one person in 100 can call upon a physician—secured during the quadrennium 9 new physicians and 13 nurses.

Something of the extent of Methodism's medical service may be gleaned from the fact that its staff during these years gave an average of 981 treatments per day, performed 26 operations per day, and that its hospitals cared for 231 new in-patients each week.

Finances

Our mission properties have greatly increased in value during the quadrennium—partly because of increased costs and values everywhere, but also partly because of new buildings erected and new properties acquired. Estimated values indicate that our foreign properties—exclusive of those in Europe—are worth $8,000,000 more to-day than they were four years ago.

India's and Burma's properties are estimated to have increased $2,275,000 during the four years; South and Central America's by $1,500,000; China's by $1,370,000; Korea's by $945,000.

The giving of the peoples on the field has increased in every Conference during the same period. India gives $95,000 more per year for all purposes than it gave before the Centenary thrilled it into new sacrifices; Korea gives $110,000 more per year; Japan, $86,000 more per year; Mexico $39,000 more per year; South and Central America, $35,000 more per year; Malaysia and the Netherlands Indies, $19,000 per year; the Philippines, $18,000 more per year; China, $17,000 more per year; Africa, $12,000 more per year. Elsewhere these and kindred facts have more extended notation.

The statements presented in this report are but hints and suggestions of the significance of the worldwide enterprise in which the Church of our love is engaged. The Board of Foreign Missions submits the work of the four years with the earnest desire that everywhere the facts may be known and justly interpreted, that enthusiasm may be stirred, that faith may be set aflame, that the new victories may not be far off, that in this Methodist Episcopal Church—the largest evangelical force in America, perhaps in the world—the Master may not be disappointed.

REPORT OF THE WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY

To the Bishops and Members of the General Conference of 1924:

We bring to you the record of another four years of the work of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. It is an account of plans brought to fruition, of labor receiving its reward, of souls and bodies saved from sin and disease, of darkened minds illumined. But there is no way to count the prayers of the saints, no register of the volume of power thus brought to bear upon the machinery we use, no measure of the joy which service brings. God knows, and knowing grants His blessing.

After a noble and distinguished service of thirteen years as president, our beloved Mrs. William Fraser McDowell asked to be relieved from the onerous duties of that office. It would scarcely be possible to place too high an estimate upon the greatness of her service during those years, or the power of her leadership. Retirement from office has marked no diminution of her interest or of her activity and her presence with us at all our meetings is a continual inspiration. Mrs. Thomas Nicholson was elected president. Mrs. Francis J. McConnell was made vice-president and chairman of the Foreign Department to succeed Mrs. Nicholson, and Mrs. McDowell became vice-president-at-large. In 1922 Mrs. Orville N. Townsend was also elected a vice-president-at-large.

Two official correspondents, Miss Ella M. Watson and Mrs. J. M. Avann, have made official visits to the field. Miss Watson gave more than two years to a close study of the work of the Society in Northern Europe and the Orient and Mrs. Avann to China, Korea and Japan.

AT THE HOME BASE

The last quadrennium closed with the Jubilee years, the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the Society. "After the Jubilee, what?" was the question upon many lips as the five years' campaign came to a triumphant end. The response was a rallying call, "From Jubilee heights upward!" Therefore, at the beginning of this quadrennium, not knowing whether the women of Methodism would maintain the high standards just reached, the Society set still higher goals. The outcome has proven the sure foundation of its faith, as the following statistics show.

Each fiscal year of the quadrennium shows an increase over the preceding year except 1922, when total collections were $12,027.05 less than in 1921. The amount received in 1923 was more than $300,000 greater than that received in 1920. The total collections for this quadrennium exceed those of the preceding quadrennium by $3,267,535.67, or 58.77 per cent, and are more than one-fourth of the total receipts for fifty-four years. Each year increased appropriations have been met in full.

The disbursements have amounted to $8,821,406.67. Those of 1923 ($2,424,653.19) were typical of the period. They may be presented graphically as follows:

Note—Detail of miscellaneous items—Interest (earned on annuity investments) paid to annuitants, interest on money borrowed for work abroad, loans repaid, sums reserved for future expenditure abroad, etc. No overhead items included under "Miscellaneous."

Real estate was reported in 1920 as totalling $4,495,623. In 1923 it totalled $6,040,136, cost prices being used in almost all cases, although market values, in many of our stations, have enormously increased over original cost. Many new buildings have been erected for colleges, high schools, primary and model day schools, Bible training schools and workers' homes, two hospitals and homes for missionaries. The investment in land and buildings for the quadrennium has been $1,660,225.60.

But the increase that counts for immediate returns and brings light and gladness to the faces of native women in foreign lands as well as to our workers at the Home Base is shown by the following:

Active Missionaries

The Society has been able to increase the salaries of missionaries and indigenous workers so that they can live in somewhat greater comfort, and it has increased its Endowment Fund for their "sunset salaries" more than fifty per cent, from $151,450 in 1919 to $313,837 in 1923.

How has all this been brought to pass? Under the leadership of God, by education and a close contact with the foreign field, painstakingly maintained. The year 1919-20 was "Medical Year" and effort was centered upon the medical work on the field which, because of pressing calls in other directions, was in great need. A survey indicated that besides having hospitals closed for lack of physicians others were very imperfectly equipped. Some were without lighting systems, some without water supply, all were in need of medical supplies. For a year Medical Missions were studied by the women, the young women and the children. The results are shown as follows: The Society has now twenty hospitals in operation with more than twice as many foreign physicians as it had at the beginning of the campaign, a gain of 16; it has more than twice as many foreign nurses, a gain of 21; also an increase of 382 in the number of hospital beds, an increase of 4,700 in the number of patients treated in the hospitals in 1923 over 1919 and an increase of 110,570 in the number of patients treated at both hospitals and dispensaries. In addition to the rebuilding of two hospitals and the remodeling of others, four heating plants have been installed, four lighting plants, three water systems, two elevators and two X-Ray machines. Thousands of dollars' worth of hospital supplies have been sent each year to the field which have not been counted in the receipts of the Society, their value in one year alone being $30,000.

Evangelistic Year followed. In was found by a survey that, although the need for evangelistic missionaries was appalling, there was a way to lessen that need by increasing the efficiency of the missionaries already on the field, giving them faster means of transportation and more and better trained native helpers. The year's campaign added two hundred Bible women to the evangelistic force, strengthened the Bible training schools and sent more than forty motor cars to treble the amount of work being accomplished. Where there were no roads new sedan chairs, wheelbarrows, ox-carts and motor boats were provided. Largely as a result of this campaign the quadrennium shows an increase of 32,303, or 19 per cent, in the number of women uniting with the church and an addition of 280,000 women and children to the number of those under Christian instruction.

In the next year, 1921-22, began a three years' Educational Campaign which is not yet finished. The first year was devoted to the colleges for women on the field, of which three are supported by the Society and seven are carried on by the cooperation of Women's Boards. The Society cooperated in the Union College Campaign which was conducted interdenominationally and which raised for the Union Colleges $2,917,740.84. It will be remembered that of this amount about one-third was given by the Laura Spelman Rockefeller Foundation. Our Society was instrumental in turning over to the Union Colleges $482,088.03 and raised for our own Methodist women's colleges $101,373.

The second year of the Educational Campaign, 1922-23, was devoted to strengthening primary education on the field and the "little red school house" of the far East received much attention, model day schools, lower and higher primary schools being built, equipped and staffed. The third year, now in progress, completes the cycle with emphasis upon normal and high school efficiency.

In the meantime, the women at the Home Base have been educating themselves. A course of study was prescribed, a yearly test given, and diplomas and seals issued to those who met the requirements. Another educational feature that is fast growing in popularity and effectiveness is the Summer School of Missions. Thirty-three were held last year, both Methodist and interdenominational, but this report is probably not complete as these schools, so broad in their scope and so inspiring in their outlook, are springing up spontaneously in many parts of the country so fast that it is impossible to keep a correct list of them.

The quadrennium has seen two great disasters on the foreign field which had to be met at the Home Base by urgent appeals for additional funds. These were the famine in North China in 1921 and the recent earthquake in Japan. On both occasions the Society did all in its power to help its missionaries to minister to those in distress. The losses of the last named disaster, despite the churchwide appeal, have not been met and the Society still faces a perplexing situation with regard to rebuilding in Tokyo and Yokohama.

A new feature of the work is Library Service through which the Society endeavors to supply its missionaries with the latest books and provide our schools with permanent libraries. To the lonely missionary in the distant station this book service is beginning to bring help and comfort and the shelves of the school libraries, before reported by travelers to be practically empty, are being filled with the best. Most of this work is just another labor of love for which no credit is given in receipts.

The Life Service Commission, created at the last General Conference, working in close association with the Student Department, carries over one thousand names of prospective candidates on its lists and aids our Young People's and Student Departments through correspondence and college visitation.

The four years have seen a large increase in the number of women who are pledged to give themselves to intercession and also in the number who are acknowledging their faithful stewardship by the payment of the tithe to the work of the Church. In these two directions and in the increase in interest of the young girls and children lies much of our confidence for the future.

ON THE FIELD

Fields—India, Burma, Malaysia, Netherlands Indies, Philippine Islands, China, Japan, Korea, Latin America, Europe, Africa.

Types of work—Evangelistic, Educational, Medical, Industrial, Social.

Expansion on the field during the quadrennium has been found in intensive cultivation rather than in extensive growth. The three campaigns for education and promotion at the Home Base were reflected abroad in enlarged and improved medical facilities, in increased activity in evangelistic effort, as such, and in raising the standard of the school systems by new or enlarged buildings and better equipment. What has been done, however, is but a small fraction of what is urgently needed in all departments.

Gratifying evidences of self-help in the indigenous Christian community are seen in many lands. Alumnae have come forward with gifts and municipalities have contributed to building funds. Government grants-in-aid are important factors in maintenance of schools in British territory and self-support in the schools is increasing, receipts from all these sources in one year being $350,000, not included in the regular receipts of the Society.

The missionary spirit is being cultivated widely among the women of indigenous churches. In the Japan Church the woman's missionary society has 150 auxiliaries with 2,000 members; the domestic missionary society in the Philippine Islands numbers 2,000. China reports more than 1,600 members of the woman's missionary society for foreign and home service. In Bulgaria and in Denmark there is an organization of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society in every Methodist church. Sweden reports a membership of more than 5,000.

Finland has 800 members and is sending out a missionary. In Switzerland, Germany and Austria there are signs of recovery.

The educational work of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society begins in the kindergarten and completes the training of the young woman in the college. Two Fellowships, the one founded by the Society in honor of Clotilda Lyon McDowell, the other by Edith Jackson Fisher, provide further study in the United States for young women who have already availed themselves of the most advanced courses in institutions in their own country and expect to continue work with the Society. About fifty high schools and a few normal schools train the teachers for the middle and primary schools. Missionaries have general supervision of the educational systems but teaching is done largely by nationals. Increased facilities seem to bring only increased demand and the Society finds it impossible to keep pace. Aoyama High School in Tokyo was in 1923 the largest school of the Society with a registration of 921. More and more, as the custom of very early marriage gives way before advancing education, is pressure brought to bear to erect high schools that girls may continue to study. Prejudice against Christian education for girls is retreating before the enlightenment of women trained from early childhood in mission schools.

The interdenominational campaign for Union Colleges resulted in adequate provision for women's Christian colleges in the Orient. This Society is closely identified with all of these. The Woman's College of South China (Hwa Nan), conducted by the Society, received a provisional charter from the Board of Regents of the State of New York and its graduates are granted the A.B. degree. Ewha Haktang in Seoul, Korea, and Kwassui Jo Gakko in Nagasaki, Japan, are developing college departments.

OUTSTANDING EVENTS

INDIA—We leave to others the discussion of influences, political, social and religious, which have profoundly affected the work of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society in India. We have to deal with the results of those influences as they are found in the new freedom of women, leading to a new attitude toward education for girls; in reform movements affecting the status of women in home and society, and which have brought the teachings of Christ into the thinking of millions; and in the demand for a Christian literature for educated women. To the extent of its ability the Society has endeavored to meet the new demands. The missionary staff has been increased 37.3 per cent, indigenous workers 18.4 per cent, property values 46 per cent, and appropriations have been 64.4 per cent more than in the previous quadrennium.

Report of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society 1247

Miss Ella M. Watson, official correspondent for four Conferences in northern India, spent the year 1921 as official visitor for the Society to all its work in India. Miss Watson was a guest in every mission station, save one, in which the Society has workers, giving sympathetic hearing, advising, stimulating, encouraging. Under her leadership an All-India and Burma Council on Woman's Work was organized to survey the whole field of our activities.

The peril of the church in India is uninstructed converts. Teaching the way of the Christian to village women and children who have entered upon the Christian life, no less than reaching the non-Christians with the gospel, is the work of evangelism. Missionaries, accompanied by Bible women, visit thousands of villages, teaching shut-in women in zenanas, holding meetings in open spaces, pitching their tents beside the road and talking long into the night with earnest seekers after God, attending the great religious festivals, preaching and distributing the Scriptures, inspecting day schools, dispensing medicines, conducting training classes and institutes, all the time exemplifying preaching by practice. The training of children in Sunday school and Junior League constitutes no small part of their service to God and the church. Many of the wives of missionaries of the Board of Foreign Missions give much time to supervision of the work of the Bible women. The gift of many motor cars for evangelistic touring has greatly increased the ability of the workers to reach the waiting women. Baptisms of women and children have increased 22.2 per cent in 1923 over those of 1919 while the number of Bible women has increased 21.2 per cent. A new field among the Santali people in Bengal has been entered with a center at Pakaur.

Three Bible training schools and seven training schools for village workers give instruction to women preparing for special service. There are 2,201 Bible women connected with the Society, many of them as children having been orphaned by famine and disease and sheltered and trained in our schools.

There are 672 schools in India with a registration of 19,635. Of these 85.8 per cent are of lower primary grade, largely city and district day schools, affording the only training which most of their pupils will ever receive. These schools are taught by Indian women under the infrequent supervision of the district missionary. In Northwest Conference is a promising development in village education to which a missionary gives full time in the direction of the work in 71 schools with a model day school at the center. In the older conferences we find a well developed system of higher schools, providing the teachers for the day schools. There are fourteen high schools and high school departments. A modern normal school is well established at Godhra and a normal department at Jubbulpore. Isabella Thoburn College crowns the educational work for women. "From day school to college is a long way in India and few go the length of the road. The day schools, whose importance is greatly stressed these days, show the least development. Village schools are for the most part taught by Bible women with little training. Even so, the village children are by them lifted above the level of the village. City day schools, with better equipment and teachers, do better work. Boarding schools provide for the intensive cultivation of selected children. The ideal of this is not education, per se—though government inspection and rule make that essential—but evangelism and training for service. An experienced observer says, "To my mind the greatest need to-day is trained Indian workers, but that is impossible without more missionaries, many more missionaries, double, triple, quadruple the present number." No accepted candidate is detained for lack of funds to send her out, for the money must be forthcoming.

The Gondia-Kampti school has been moved to Nagpur and new buildings provided. The Society accepted from the Board of Foreign Missions the responsibility for the school at Jagdalpur which brought with it money for a new building. Grants have been made for a building for the new Santali school and for buildings for the English self-supporting high school at Queen's Hill, Darjeeling.

In April, 1920, Isabella Thoburn College celebrated its Jubilee. It enters upon the next period of its history as the Woman's College of Lucknow University. In the reorganization an intermediate college was formed by uniting the two upper classes of the high school with the two lower classes of the college and on the 15th of August, 1923, the college formally opened the new buildings to which it has removed. On a new campus of thirty acres has been erected the first unit consisting of five buildings, made possible by the Union College Campaign.

Pressure for admission to our schools is everywhere. Shutting the door in the face of girls from Christian and non-Christian homes means sending them back to ignorance. Out of these schools through the grace of God and the infinite patience of the missionaries and teachers is coming the new womanhood of the Indian Church for the making of a better day.

There is very little Christian literature available in the vernaculars. The zenana paper, published in five languages by this Society, continues its work. The Treasure Chest, a magazine in English for young people, has passed from the experimental stage into a position of wide usefulness. So successful has Miss Ruth Robinson been in her editorship that there is a demand for its publication in several vernaculars. A Marathi edition is authorized.

Medical work of the Society in India centers in five hospitals, one tuberculosis sanatorium and five dispensaries. Ten missionary doctors and seven nurses, four native doctors and fifteen nurses, with fifty-four pupil nurses constitute the staff. As a result of the medical campaign two hospitals, at Brindaban and at Sironcha, were opened for full service with staffs of doctors and nurses; new buildings have been erected at Bareilly. The quadrennium opened with the ravages of influenza and famine still apparent and out of these have grown two baby folds in new buildings, one at Bareilly and one at Kolar. Health campaigns and "better babies" exhibits have been promoted. Cooperation in the new medical school at Vellore was authorized in 1922, to which have been appointed a doctor and a social worker. A large field for medical extension work is open to doctors and nurses who, in association with evangelistic missionaries, tour the villages. Inadequate staff makes entrance possible only to a very limited extent.

The following statistics give but a faint impression of the service rendered, since one cannot compress into figures loving devotion and varied ministry to body and soul.

	Beds	Patients	Out-Patients	Dispensary Treatments
1923	367	3,234	6,750	138,842
1919	204	1,002	1,099	84,338
Increase	163	2,232	5,651	54,504

BURMA—The quadrennium opened with twelve missionaries on the field and two on furlough. Since then six new missionaries have been sent out, but owing to retirements, resignations, and marriage our force has decreased and we close the quadrennium with ten missionaries on the field and two on furlough. The completion of the Burmese school building gives us one of the finest and best planned buildings in all India or Burma. Extensive repairs have been made at Thandaung; the Thongwa Bible training school building has been erected and property purchased for the large and important Chinese school.

Our five schools, three boarding and two day schools, are full and pupils had to be turned away in 1923. The life and work in these schools is emphatically Christian. Out of an enrollment of 275 in the Rangoon English school, 250 are active Christians. In a series of revival meetings last year every girl in the middle and high schools either made the surrender to Christ or reconsecrated her life to Him. The earnestness of the Christian girls in the Burmese school and their determination to win the non-Christian girls to Christ is the most important feature of the school life. This school has an enrollment of over 300.

MALAYSIA—Educational work in English is the chief activity of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society in Malaysia. The first and most insistent need is for more teachers. In every school the enrollment grows and the staff barely holds its own. Government grants and contributions on the field make the schools largely self-supporting, the greater part of the appropriations of the Society being used for salaries and buildings. Several building projects, notably the enlargement of Fairfield School for Chinese girls in Singapore, the improvement of Nind Home in Singapore and Lady Treacher School in Taipeng have been partly financed on the field. Winchell Home and the missionaries' residence in Penang have been rebuilt and a site acquired in Malacca for new buildings to house the Rebecca Cooper Suydam School.

Eveland Bible Training School has graduated a number of Bible Women who are working in the Tamil, Chinese and vernacular churches of the Conference.

NETHERLANDS EAST INDIES—So far as visible results and material development were concerned, the Training School for Christian Women was apparently little nearer the realization of its hopes four years ago than it had been during the former eight years of endeavor and trial. The past three years, however, have seen steady increase and blessing. Three new missionaries have gone out, and four classes have been graduated. The school began to appeal to those of superior educational advantages, so that the quality of the student body and the curriculum are considerably raised. Some exceptional young women have come to us from the Dutch Mission to which they are returning as the first Christian women teachers among their own people. As each year adds its class of graduates to the steadily increasing number of helpers there has been marked advance in the work of schools, churches and Sunday schools as the result of the efforts of these consecrated women. It does not need the substantial new building now in process of erection to assure us that educational and evangelistic work for Moslem women and girls in Netherlands East Indies is of God's own planting.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS—School work is not a part of our missionary program in the Philippine Islands, the fine government school system making this unnecessary. Hostels are being established by the Society in connection with provincial high schools in which, under home influences, young girls may be cared for during their schooldays, their study supervised, habits formed, health safeguarded, social life directed and character established. In 1923 four of these homes were training 193 girls in Christian living.

Two Bible training schools, Harris Memorial in Manila, and one at Lingayen, have accommodations for one hundred students and many more are applying for admission. The standards for entrance and graduation are ever being raised and finely equipped young women sent out to district work. Second only in importance to living a blameless life emphasis is laid on work among children, of whom more than ten thousand are in junior training organizations of League and Church under the instruction of training school graduates. District work occupies a large place, in one district three thousand visits a month being made in homes. Institutes are frequently held in which instruction is given to women, numbering 600 in 1923, who gather for a two weeks' training course in Christian service.

More than nine hundred babies each year first see the light in the Mary J. Johnston Hospital in Manila, the only hospital for women in the Islands. Every day in the dispensary the waiting crowds hear the gospel and receive portions of Scripture. Fifty Filipina girls are in training as nurses and eight graduates went with the government relief ship to the aid of Japan. With the assistance of the government and a dairy products company a milk station is maintained in the city.

CHINA—New China through her Commissioner of Education declares that "the firmness of the foundation upon which the republic has been founded depends upon education. We must hereafter make our best effort to develop and encourage women's education as well as that for men." There are few girls, however, as yet being educated by the government. The missions have eight times as many in elementary schools, nine times as many in secondary schools, and ten times as many in higher institutions. And yet the missions are educating less than one-half as many girls as boys in elementary schools, a bit more than one-fifth as many in secondary schools, and only one-tenth as many in higher schools.

Educational Work—About one-fifth of all the girls in mission schools in China are in the schools of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. These grade from the four hundred lower primaries (the first four grades) through twenty-five higher primaries (the next three), fourteen doing middle school work from two to five years (ten of them doing not less than four years), to our own college, Hwa Nan, and cooperation in two union colleges of liberal arts.

Increased interest in the higher education of women is apparent in many ways: in the general tendency to hold girls in school longer; in the insistent demand for more middle schools; in the large per cent of increase in the enrollment of middle schools and colleges; in the increasing number of parents who are willing to pay partial or full fees; in the gifts of individuals and organized groups toward land and buildings and equipment. The alumnae of Hwa Nan College and High School, Foochow, have raised $10,000 of the $50,000 gold needed for the Lydia Trimble Dormitory. The Alumnae Association of Gamewell, Peking, on the occasion of their fiftieth anniversary, undertook on their own initiative a campaign for $40,000 Mex. for the land for a new plant. Dr. Chen Wei Ping gave them $1,000 and the preachers of North China Conference took as the object of their China Jubilee gift $10,000. The raising of this amount required an average of fifty cents per church member, and proved a means of splendid propaganda for Christian education as well as spiritual uplift to the church. The fund was completed long enough before the end of the year to accumulate sufficient interest to pay all expenses of the campaign.

Enrollment in the three Arts Colleges in which the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society is interested has just doubled in the quadrennium, and more than a hundred girls have been graduated. These colleges are giving all round training to Christian leaders. Yenching has just inaugurated a department of Home Economics; Ginling has a strong department of education with practice schools. The newest feature and one of great significance for the future of Chinese life is the Chair of Public Health and Welfare planned for Hwa Nan.

The spirit of the young women and its significance is well illustrated in their activities. Yenching's famine refugee camp a while ago was an unknown adventure in social service for Chinese women. Ginling cooperated with the Y. M. C. A. and South Eastern University in a health week program, giving demonstrations and exhibitions that were witnessed by an average of three thousand people daily. Hwa Nan is rendering a conspicuous service in twenty-one villages nearby in Sunday school work and patriotic work. Nearly a thousand children are by their efforts alone brought under Christian influences.

Four years ago the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society set apart Dr. Ida Belle Lewis as an associate to Dr. Frank D. Gamewell in his office as General Secretary of Education. A large part of the quadrennium has been given to a survey of our schools in all parts of China. In this completed and published work, in the practical help given to those engaged in this department, in the inspiration she has been to all of our missionaries, in the spiritual uplift to student bodies that has come from her life and work everywhere, as well as in the large place in general organizations that she has occupied, Dr. Lewis has rendered an invaluable service.

Literary Work—This field, representing one of the greatest needs of new Christian China and offering one of the most challenging opportunities in a land where the literati form the aristocracy and the printed page is revered, is one almost wholly unoccupied. Miss Laura White, a missionary of this Society, and her small force of Chinese assistants, are editing the Woman's Magazine and translating and producing other literary material for the women and girls that is a marvel of accomplishment and very satisfying to their hungry minds so far as it goes.

Medical Work—Our Woman's Union Medical College, formerly in Peking, has been amalgamated with the Medical School of Shantung University. Funds from the Union College Campaign amounting to more than $100,000, supplemented by the boards cooperating, and a gift of $50,000 from the China Medical Board, are furnishing the school with the necessary buildings and equipment to accommodate the women students at Tsinanfu, the seat of the University. The school has graduated fifty-seven women, most of whom are now serving in women's hospitals throughout the country.

The capacity and the efficiency of our eleven hospitals have been largely increased during the quadrennium. We have a bed capacity of about 750 and property valued at nearly three-quarters of a million. Danforth Memorial at Kiukiang, having the largest bed capacity, has a Chinese doctor in charge, with three Chinese associates who do a large out-dispensary work and together with the nurses and evangelistic missionaries a splendid district itinerating work. The Military Governor of Kiangsi Province has recognized our work in Women's and Children's Hospital in Nanchang under Dr. Kahn by two gifts during the past year, last summer $500 and this winter $1,000. On the occasion of his birthday, instead of making a great feast to the officials, he announced that he was distributing four thousand dollars to charities, naming our hospital as one of three. This has given the hospital both prestige and publicity.

The Council on Health Education—This is a national organization having for its object the promotion of better physical conditions by means of an extensive program of education in schools, hospitals, churches, homes and communities. One of the half dozen specialists in medical and public health training now devoting full time to this great task is Dr. Iva Miller who is supported by the Society.

Miss Eva Gregg, one of our missionaries, is president of the China Nurses' Association and another, Miss Cora Simpson, is released from our work and supported by us as its executive secretary, devoting all her time to supervision and promotion.

Evangelism—The agencies for direct evangelism have increased along with distinctively educational and medical work. From the splendid Union Training School in Nanking to the station classes in the remote country districts training schools are aware of the new day that calls for a better trained leadership, an instructed constituency, and an application of the gospel to the whole of personal, community, national, political, social and economic life. An increasing number of young Chinese women of high educational qualifications are choosing some form of work in this realm. The emphasis in all of our work is on deeper spirituality and an increased loyalty and devotion to Christ.

The Society has two hundred and twenty-nine missionaries in China, a gain of 38 per cent during the quadrennium, while the number of Chinese associates has increased about four hundred per cent. More than half a million dollars a year now pass through our central treasurer's office in Shanghai. Increase in the value of property, not counting the large investments in union institutions, is 95 per cent.

JAPAN—The event in the history of Japan which closed this quadrennium looms so large and imposes such a responsibility that it is difficult to see anything else. The material evidences of nearly fifty years of work in Tokyo and Yokohama were destroyed in a few moments by the earthquake which shook the region on September 1, 1923. These, however, can be replaced and courage comes as the Society recalls that these four years have been the best in the history of the mission.

A study of the educational work shows, first, strategic location, a strong center at Tokyo, two high schools in the hardy, progressive north, and two in the south, two of these having college departments; second, concentrated effort, specializing in kindergarten, high school and college courses since Government makes ample provision for grade schools; third, steady development of self-support; fourth, spiritual results as shown by profession of Christianity, 40 per cent more women and girls being baptized in 1923 than in 1919, and by consecration to Christian service. Graduates of Kwassui have gone to the Loo Choo Islands and to Korea as missionaries.

Owing to changing conditions one day school and two boarding schools have been closed, Aizawa, Nagoya and Sendai. In 1921 a social evangelistic center was opened in the school buildings at Sendai and another in Tokyo in 1923 which, since the earthquake, is still carrying on. A marked development is the Christian social service rendered to women and girls in factories and in business, nearly every mission home being a community center.

Building projects have been numerous. At Hirosaki old buildings were remodeled and a new dormitory added. In Fukuoka four new buildings have been erected. The students are 100 per cent Christian and the community is in sympathy with the school which has grown large and influential. One new building for Aoyama High School on a new site, part of the plan for a new school to accommodate 1,000 girls, was completed and occupied and another in process of construction when the earthquake came, destroying both. A month later the school reopened on the old site with 561 girls in attendance. The Union Training School for Christian Workers recently reopened, after extensive repairs, for enlarged usefulness, was entirely destroyed by the earthquake. The old buildings housing Kwassui Jo Gakko in Nagasaki were badly damaged by earthquake in December, 1922, and a new plant must be provided. Facing the necessity for expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars to rebuild in Tokyo, Yokohama and Nagasaki, there is no note of discouragement, because of the evidences of spiritual progress on every hand.

KOREA—Korea's social life and national spirit are changing very rapidly and the outstanding feature is the complete change of attitude toward the education of girls. All our schools are filled to overflowing and the turning away of hundreds, closing the door to their one chance to be trained in the principles of Jesus Christ, is the heart break of the missionaries. The great problem is how to add the fifth and sixth grades now permitted by the government, calling, as it does, for additional rooms, teachers and equipment. The kindergarten work is the big opportunity. The Koreans want it and are calling for it from every part of the country. The only hindrance to the development of the school work, from the kindergarten to the college, is lack of money.

Union of Christian forces has been emphasized in Korea by three different projects, the Union Methodist Woman's Bible Training School giving higher grade work, graduates of the higher common and primary schools being admitted; the Union Social Center in Seoul, an evangelistic agency carrying on all the work of the Young Women's Christian Association; the Pyongyang Union Christian Hospital.

To the Lillian Harris Memorial Hospital, which includes the out-work and nurses' training school, a contagious ward has been added; a pre-natal clinic, with a native girl in charge, and baby welfare work have been established.

Great advance is seen in the evangelistic work. The country classes have doubled in attendance and show greatly increased interest in the home study course, many ending with a revival of great power.

LATIN AMERICA—In South America this quadrennium has marked a steady growth in the work of our Society, with three outstanding achievements. First, the launching in 1922 of a Bible Training School in Buenos Aires, in cooperation with the United Christian Missionary Society. This school offers comprehensive courses in Spanish designed to thoroughly prepare young women for distinctively Christian work, the first institution of its kind on the South American continent. Second, the acquiring, through a bequest, of property in a needy section of Rosario and the development of Gleason Institute, a Christian social center in which are carried on a kindergarten and Spanish elementary school, industrial classes, a modest dispensary with dental clinic, a Sunday school, preaching services, etc., and from which our missionary evangelist goes out into the surrounding homes. Already Gleason Institute is a powerful Christianizing agency.

Methodism may well be proud of our third achievement, the new building for Crandon Institute, Montevideo. That important school is now adequately housed. Over three hundred girls are enrolled in the various grades from kindergarten through two years of high school and normal department. The advanced course for 1924 is so shaped that students who desire may take the University examinations. A committee from the Department of Education of the City of Montevideo who visited the Keator Gymnasium exhibit were most enthusiastic over the value of the training the girls are receiving and expressed a desire to introduce a similar health program into the public schools. To meet their need for teachers, Crandon proposes to add a course of special training for physical culture teachers. To make the science of the kitchen as interesting as belles lettres, and as dignified, is perhaps the most important thing Crandon is attempting to do educationally through the Grary Domestic Science department. Twelve of our students last year united with the Methodist Church. Given up-to-date buildings and equipment our three other schools in Rosario, Buenos Aires, and Lima would make equally effective contributions to the life of the womanhood of their cities and republics.

Quiet, persistent growth has characterized the work of our schools in Mexico. The industrial school in Mexico City has strengthened its courses to meet the need of students coming from outlying sections and fit them to be self-supporting. Sarah L. Keen Colegio is full to capacity and has a long waiting list. Reaching as it does the children from the very upper class homes, it is increasingly exerting a pronounced evangelical influence on the life of the country. Within the past two years Bishop Thirkield has received forty of the Keen students into the Methodist Church. The Bible training school is carrying forward its program for the training of Christian workers, and one of our missionaries is actively at work in the Aztecas school settlement. Guanajuato, Pachuca and Puebla schools, our day schools in Amecameca, Atlixco and Tezontepec, the district evangelistic work—all are powerful influences in strengthening the growing Protestant population of Mexico and in lifting the whole country up to the heart of God.

EUROPE AND NORTH AFRICA—The past four years have witnessed the reopening of our American Girls' School in Lovetch, Bulgaria. Founded in 1884 and through the years training more than five hundred young women for positions of usefulness, the school had been forced to close for a time, due to the war. It is noteworthy that three-fourths of the entering students are Greek Catholics and three-fourths of the graduates are Protestants. Our school, the city of Lovetch, and friends scattered throughout Bulgaria, united in celebrating the thirtieth anniversary of the arrival of Miss Kate B. Blackburn and in establishing the "Kate B. Blackburn Foundation" to aid worthy students. A similar expression of love for Miss Dora Davis and appreciation of her twenty years of service has taken the form of a fund toward the urgently needed new building and a request that the building bear her name. A Christian publication for women, the "Vestitel," met with instant favor several years ago. Three new missionaries went out in 1923, and the present enrollment is 111 students, with scores turned away.

It is with great joy that we record the decision of every girl in our Grenoble Orphanage to give her heart to Jesus Christ and lead a life of uprightness and of service to Him. Two of the older girls are taking nurse training in the hospital at Strassburg.

Crandon Institute, Rome, has a capacity enrollment, many nationalities being represented among the students. A gratifying interest is shown in the Sunday school conducted by the school.

Additions to staff and property have permitted the expansion of our work in Algiers. We now have nearly fifty children in the home. One missionary is living in a downtown apartment and conducting classes among the French women and girls; classes are held in the Arab quarter. Twenty-four girls are gathered in our Constantine home, where Bible study, physical training and industrial classes minister to their three-fold needs.

AFRICA—For the native negro women and children the Society has developed educational and agricultural stations in three provinces, Angola on the west coast and Rhodesia and Inhambane in the southeastern part of that great continent. Four years ago we were represented there by twelve missionaries while now eighteen are at work and this year two others expect to begin a life of service for the young women and children in Inhambane where a whole new plant, including school, dormitory and a good home for the missionaries, is promised for next year. At present a boarding school is being conducted with very inadequate facilities.

Our largest work is in Rhodesia where we are established in three centers, Old Umtali, Mutambara and Nyadiri, with some country evangelistic work also. At each station academic and agricultural training advance together. A farm at each place is a necessity, with mules, trucks, plows and garden tools continually in use. Some capable native leaders have been developed, the schools are growing and the whole outlook is more encouraging than ever before. Of our work at Mutambara the British Government Inspector recently wrote: "At no mission in Rhodesia have I seen such rapid and sound progress as has taken place here during the last two years. Not long ago there were forty or fifty pupils, while now I find two hundred and eighty-three girls and boys attending school fairly regularly and the organization throughout is sound."

On the west coast in Quessua, Angola, we have just completed a new plant consisting of school, a dormitory for two hundred girls and a home for the missionaries, thus housing our educational work in an adequate way. During the erection of these buildings more than two hundred workmen received the gospel message at evening services, many of them deciding to begin the Christian life and carry the good news back to their home towns.

The growing need for more commanding educational programs; the complicated problems of administration resulting from the world war; the ever more complex problems resulting from the multiplying and enlarging agencies upon the field; the demand for autonomy on the part of nationals on the various fields; the increasing costs of living and of operation of all our plants; the "divine discontent" of nations in commotion, very much of which is the result of the leaven of the gospel we have preached and taught; the new status and self-realization of women in oriental lands; and those ever-increasing demands which make many of our embarrassments the immediate results of our highest success—all these and others tax our consecration, our initiative, our resources, our ingenuity, and our spiritual illumination, but they have been our opportunities and we thank God that we have gone forward. We are on higher ground and still "the best is yet to be." With profound gratitude to God and to the host of women in our auxiliaries we make report for the quadrennium just closed and avow our purpose of greater achievement in the years just ahead.

THE BOARD OF HOME MISSIONS AND CHURCH EXTENSION

To the General Conference of 1924:

DEAR FATHERS AND BRETHREN:

We record with sorrow that, during the quadrennium just completed, two members of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension have died, Mr. William Nottingham, of Syracuse, New York, and Mr. Gilbert Gutterson, of Saint Paul, Minnesota. The loss of these two useful men has been keenly felt by the Board.

The Board of Home Missions and Church Extension is engaged in two main types of activities, namely, the building of churches, or church extension; and the doing of missionary work in the United States and its possessions, or home missions.

CHURCH EXTENSION

In the early spread of population over the United States the Church followed the settlers quite generally and immediately sought a home for itself. Those homes were usually crude affairs thrown up almost in a day and consisting chiefly of four walls and a roof with something in the way of a reading desk and seats to accommodate a congregation. The building of such churches was a matter of great importance. The needs of the moment had to be met. It is to the everlasting credit of the Christian Church that in thousands and thousands of communities over the country, as population extended itself, these crude little structures came into being. The unfortunate thing, however, is that, as the decades have passed, in many communities, the same little church has continued to minister in the same old way, while other community enterprises have far outstripped it.

The studies made at the beginning of the Centenary period revealed strange things. Thus we found the anomaly, in many towns, of schoolhouses valued at $100,000 or $200,000 and other public buildings of similar character standing side by side with churches valued at a few hundred dollars. The pioneer school has been able to make a better home for itself while the Church has in many cases been unable to do so. There are a number of reasons for this. New communities build schools by issuing long term bonds to be redeemed in later years. The Church is unable to adopt such methods. Then, too, when a school house is to be built, the entire resources of the community can be taxed for the enterprise. Not so with the Church. There must be counted out first of all the resources of Catholics, Jews, Mormons, and other groups, who, in the very nature of the case, are not interested in the enterprise of a Protestant church. Unfortunately, too, Protestantism itself is divided, and, too frequently, the entire resources even of the Protestant group are not at the disposal of a given building enterprise. When we remember that many individuals of the nominally Protestant groups are selfish, lack vision, or are relatively uninterested in the enterprise, it is clear that the resources which can be called upon for the erection of a satisfactory church building in a new town, even where the need is very great, are totally inadequate. These circumstances resulted in a curious situation. We discovered States, particularly in the West, where we maintain several hundred preaching points, but had adequate church plants at scarcely more than a score of those points.

In the East the situation was equally distressing, and in the South it was almost too bad for description. Most of the Negro churches were one-room affairs, utterly unsuited to any sort of modern church program, and many of them were shacks of unbelievably crude and ancient construction and were almost bare of furnishings.

It would be difficult to picture adequately the progress which has been made in church building during the last quadrennium. The average number of building projects aided in the years preceding this quadrennium was less than 200 per year. During the last four years the number of projects aided has reached a total of 3,476.

Those figures alone tell a remarkable story, but they do not give the full picture of the situation, for the type of buildings erected during the past four years shows a great advance over those built in previous years. The buildings formerly aided varied in cost from a few hundred to a few thousand dollars. Many of them were entirely devoid of adequate facilities for purposes of religious education and a seven-day-a-week ministry, and were out of date before they were completed. The aid granted was always small and the product resulting was correspondingly unsatisfactory. The past quadrennium has witnessed the building of the most substantial and adequate home mission churches which we have ever erected.

In terms of money we have actually paid on home mission building enterprises nearly 50 per cent more cash during the past four years than in the previous fifty years of church extension history. The total paid by the Board for the quadrennium on building enterprises is $9,605,816.11. The total for the fifty years from 1869-1919 was approximately $6,500,000.

Of the total number of building projects during the past four years 933 have been in cities, 2,195 in rural districts, 677 in Negro communities, 205 in foreign-speaking communities, and 9 in Indian communities.

PARSONAGES

An important feature of the building program is the providing of homes for ministers. In the past home mission work has been greatly handicapped through the lack of homes for the workers. Under those conditions large sums of money had to be spent for rent or else fields were necessarily left without workers. During the last four years the Board has assisted in providing more than six hundred parsonages for its missionaries and this has done much to increase the efficiency of the work all along the line.

EMERGENCY NEEDS

Unless one looks out over the entire field he can little realize how many churches meet with calamities from fire, wind, or flood. During the quadrennium aid has been granted to nearly three hundred churches in dire need from unexpected calamity. In many of these cases rebuilding would have been practically impossible without the aid granted by the Board. In other cases totally inadequate and unattractive buildings would have resulted had it not been for the encouragement made possible by these emergency appropriations.

THE LOAN FUND

The Loan Fund now totals $3,043,561.47, the increase during the quadrennium being about $600,000.00. About one-half of this fund is still subject to annuities, the balance being available for loans to churches. During the quadrennium about 200 churches have taken advantage of the loan fund—these loans totalling $808,275.93. During the same period other churches which have received loans in previous years have been steadily repaying the same.

MUCH TO BE DONE

In spite of the large progress made in church building the need which remains unmet is still enormous and we must remain steadily at the task of church and parsonage building until our present unfit structures are replaced with worthy ones.

THE BUREAU OF ARCHITECTURE

Perhaps no greater contribution has been made during these years, however, than the influence of the Church Extension Department in raising the standard of the type of buildings erected by local societies. A Bureau of Architecture has been maintained; and many churches, which have not received missionary aid for the building of their enterprises, have sought the aid of this department and have received suggestions, which have not only decreased the cost of the building enterprise as such, but also made the resulting structure far more useful to the church and to the community. We still have a considerable distance to go in this respect, for some churches are erecting new buildings without adequately considering the community needs for the years which are ahead.

About 3,000 local churches have availed themselves of the service of this bureau during the past quadrennium. In the case of those churches which have received missionary aid, effort has been made so to administer the aid bestowed that the architect's plans should be submitted, and after any necessary modification approved by the Bureau of Architecture, to the end that we might make sure that the money granted was wisely expended.

HOME MISSIONS

Under home missions, we include the entire program of activities in local missionary fields, which are not involved in direct building enterprises. There was a time when the main function of a home mission board seemed to be that of subsidizing the salaries of preachers, and the program of the church consisted of Sunday school and preaching on Sunday and, where conditions favored, a mid-week service. Home missions in those times was a relatively simple matter, and home mission agencies were chiefly collecting and dispensing bureaus. As the years have gone on, the functions of home mission boards have radically changed. It is expected today that these agencies will be far more than subsidizing bureaus, granting aid for a stereotyped program. Instead they have become leaders in developing methods for the meeting of new situations for which the older methods would not suffice.

As the needs of local fields have been studied, the necessity for the securing and training of new types of workers has become increasingly clear while at the same time the importance of training the workers already at the task has been emphasized. So we have during the quadrennium brought together between four and five thousand rural pastors in summer schools and have attempted to give them a glimpse of the broader function of the church in the community and to train them in the application of the program involved to their respective communities. So successful has been this work that literally hundreds of pastors have returned to their fields to remake their local program. As a result, they have found their grip upon their communities increasing and the effectiveness of their efforts greatly enhanced.

A similar method has been followed with the city pastor and a similarly striking result has been obtained. With the adoption of a seven-day-a-week program, the demand for a staff of workers has appeared and the employment of such specialized workers has justified itself in the results achieved. In the foreign-speaking communities, where one man with the full responsibility of the situation upon his shoulders was finding the tide turning against him, the employment of specialized workers in the field of religious education, club work, home visitation, and other related endeavors has brought new life into the entire work and has produced results in character and church accessions which have been most gratifying. Thus far we have but made a beginning. There are still thousands of communities where special workers, particularly in the field of religious education, ought to be employed. The brief period of religious training in the Sunday schools on Sunday must be supplemented by a seven-day-a-week program of religious instruction and training in classes and club activities, and so coordinated with the public school program that it will not be possible for a committee of investigation again to say, as did a committee which studied the religious situation in our military camps, that the young men of America are ignorant of the principles of Christianity and of the things for which the Christian Church stands.

RESULTS

It is not so easy to tabulate the results of home mission endeavor because those results are to be found in the lives of redeemed individuals and of redeemed communities neither of which lend themselves to statistical tabulations. Gains in church membership and in enrollment in Sunday schools, clubs, and other church organizations have been most gratifying; but in numerous communities, where excellent work is being done, such numerical gains are slight. This is particularly true in foreign-speaking communities in our cities from which families are continually moving to better residential sections in America or returning to their native lands. The results of such work are not lost; instead they are multiplied by the very breadth of their outreach. Even among those who never join a Protestant church our efforts are not lost, for their influence is felt in their own circles, prejudice is broken down, and America is a better place in which to live as a result.

In Porto Rico, among our Spanish-speaking peoples in the Southwest, and in other fields we have been able for the first time to employ full-time instead of part-time workers with greatly increased efficiency in the work. All along the line we have been able to increase the compensation of missionaries, although it is still far below what it ought to be. Through co-operation with a number of our educational institutions, we have been enabled to train a substantial group of greatly needed special workers for local fields. We are now employing more than six hundred such workers.

WEEK DAY RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION

One of the striking developments of the quadrennium has been the remarkable growth of the Daily Vacation Bible School and week-day religious instruction in home mission fields. Thousands of children in foreign-speaking, Negro, and other communities are now being reached by these methods more effectively than they have been reached by other means. There is a vast opportunity for the extension of this work in all our home mission fields.

THE FIELD

To understand the outreach of our program we must endeavor to visualize the vast extent of the home mission field. Geographically, it extends from Alaska on the north, to Mexico and the gulf on the south, and from Porto Rico and San Domingo on the east, to the Hawaiian Islands on the west. Within these broad limits a great variety of life is found. More than three score of different languages are spoken, and the race of the peoples included varies from the whitest Anglo-Saxon to the darkest African, through all the various shades of brown and yellow and red. In general, however, we may say that the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension is at work in two types of fields—the rural field, including the small open country town and village centers, and the city field.

THE RURAL FIELD

When home missions began in America the rural field was practically the only field, or was the predominant factor, in the missionary enterprise. From the standpoint of people there is still approximately 48 per cent of the population to be found in rural regions and this in itself means a tremendous situation with which to deal. So far as Methodist work is concerned, however, this does not tell the whole story, since the census treats as rural only those places under 2,500 population, while Methodist work in communities under 10,000 population is classed as rural. For the last century there has been a steady decrease in the relative proportion of rural populations, and there are reasons for believing that the decrease will continue with a relative city increase. At present, and for many years to come, some of our most needy and some of our most difficult home missions situations will be found in the country.

It is impossible to give any very valuable generalizations concerning the situation to be found in our rural churches. As a matter of fact, rural communities differ so much among themselves that it is of first importance that we shall know the particular type of community to which reference is made before any broad statements can be made relative to the work. In the distinctly farming sections the widest variation in conditions exists. In some sections the market value of the land which is being used for agricultural purposes does not exceed $10 per acre, while in other sections the price for an equal area of land runs as high as $500, or $1,000, or even more. When we remember that the proceeds from the land vary almost in as great proportion as does its value, it is clear that we can think in only very general terms of the rural situation as a whole.

It is difficult to attempt any classification of rural agricultural life which is altogether satisfactory, but we may suggest some of the varying types. In sections of New York State and New England, there are extended farming areas where the land is rough and where the dependence is chiefly upon dairying and upon the raising of a great variety of vegetable and fruit crops designed, primarily, for the consumption of the families concerned, and, secondarily, for market. In these regions prosperity varies relatively with the price of milk, but, in general, the incomes are not large. Many of these farming areas are now being taken over by foreign-speaking families.

When we move farther south we come into a mountainous section reaching from West Virginia on the north to Georgia and Alabama on the south, and involving the mountainous areas of eight States. Even here a great variety of conditions is to be found, but in general the land is rough and cheap, living conditions extremely poor, and the average income of many families, including the price of the materials raised and consumed on the farm, does not exceed $200 per year. It can readily be seen that the outlook upon life of these people is limited and that the work of the Church is greatly affected by the conditions of agriculture.

Throughout the vast country areas of the South the farming has largely been done by the Negro. Within recent years the sweep of the boll weevil up through Texas, and now on through all the cotton-growing States, together with the demand for Negro labor, growing out of industrial prosperity, and the cutting off of the supply of immigrant labor, has resulted in widespread, chaotic rural conditions. Crops have been planted and then abandoned before the season for gathering the fruits of the planting has arrived. Communities which were prosperous in a small way have had their community life broken up and community institutions have decayed as a result. In some cases, the loss in Negro church membership owing to migration has been as high as 50 or 75 per cent of the total membership. Similar causes have brought about similar results in communities populated by rural white people in the South. These facts merely suggest the complexity of the situation in this cotton growing area.

Out through the Middle West, where some of our most valuable farm land is to be found, agriculture is distinctly a business enterprise. Large sums of money are needed for the purchasing of land and for the financing of a crop. There is little effort to produce a variety of fruits and vegetables for the support of the family as is found in the East. Instead the welfare of owner and tenant, if there be a tenant, is dependent upon the market value of the one or two crops produced. This fluctuates according to the law of supply and demand, and is greatly affected by freight rates and other economic considerations. In times of prosperity the farmers of this section are prosperous with plenty of money to use.

In the far West we find many different methods of extracting a living from the soil. In the extended grazing areas, the dry grass furnishes food for millions of cattle, sheep, and horses, all of which find a more or less ready market in the more congested centers of our country. Large numbers of people are engaged in these herding and grazing enterprises. In general, however, the population is scattered in the grazing regions, and many boys and girls grow up on ranch homes without having heard a Christian sermon or having the advantages of an ordinary Christian training at the hands of the Church.

Scattered among the ranches, and many times interfering to some extent with the wide sweep of ranging, are to be found the homesteaders. These people are usually possessed of small capital and are trying under difficult conditions to acquire title to land whose value is still undetermined, and, in the meantime, either by the products of their own homestead, or by the labor of their hands, to secure for themselves and their families the necessities of life. The homesteader welcomes the church, but often his support of it is of necessity limited.

In the irrigated sections of the great West, we find a situation different from anything already described. The great problem here is usually that of securing water and ordinarily large investments must be made before an adequate water supply can be established. This involves either courageous local initiative or the cooperation of the United States government. Large risks are taken by individual farmers, and oftentimes distressing calamities result. Particularly has this been the case recently in the irrigated sections of southern Idaho, and other neighboring States, where a falling market and prohibitive freight rates have combined to make large production valueless and have resulted in the ruin of hundreds of courageous souls who had invested their all in high-priced and very productive land, whose products they were unable to sell. In other sections a shortage in the water supply has brought about similar conditions. This has affected both the irrigation farmer and the dry-land farmer.

In Montana the failure of sufficient rainfall has, within recent years, created conditions which for their severity have rarely been equaled, and they have driven from the soil many who had not the resources to withstand the impact of repeated crop failures.

There are many irrigated sections throughout the West, but some of the outstanding regions are those reached by the Elephant Butte Dam in Southeastern New Mexico; the Grand Valley in Western Colorado; the Salt River Valley, extending out from Phoenix in Arizona; the Gila River Valley in southwestern Arizona; the Imperial Valley including a large section of southern California, as well as a section of old Mexico; the other great irrigated sections of California where enormous crops of fruit and grains and vegetables are produced; the Columbia River Basin in the State of Washington; the Snake River Valley in southern Idaho; and scores of other projects scattered throughout all of the western States. Each project brings quickly into being its own community or groups of communities, all of which are new and all of which need the ministry of the Church. Unfortunately local resources are often unable to supply such ministry unless the encouragement of outside help can be made possible.

RURAL INDUSTRY

Not all of the people who live in our rural sections are dependent directly upon the soil for a livelihood. There are hundreds of industrial rural communities of all sorts and descriptions with problems quite different from those to be found in agricultural communities. The number of such rural industrial enterprises seems to be steadily increasing. These include small factory towns where manufacturing costs can be kept at a minimum, mining camps, stone and marble quarries, saw-mill towns, logging camps, pine-tar enterprises, and other varieties of industries.

We are not likely to over-emphasize the importance of the ever-increasing manufacturing communities in rural regions. These communities demand labor, and while they secure much of it from the surrounding agricultural areas, they also bring in various groups of outside workers including many foreigners. Oftentimes, the establishment of a rural industrial community tends to demoralize the farming enterprises in the regions round about because of the higher wages which can be paid in the factories and the consequent dearth of farm labor thus created. The religious problems in these manufacturing centers are more or less unique and often among the most difficult to be found in the rural regions.

MINING CAMPS

Another group of rural communities, which have their unique problem, is made up of the thousands of mining camps to be found over the country. The greatest number of these is in Pennsylvania, where many of these small communities are populated almost entirely by foreign-speaking groups. Centenary surveys of these sections, particularly in the bituminous coal regions of western Pennsylvania, have shown that scores of these villages are entirely without religious ministry either from the Catholic or Protestant Churches. Boys and girls in these communities are growing up in foreign-speaking homes entirely without contact with the Church. This is one of the most needy and most difficult of our rural situations. During the last quadrennium we have greatly extended our work in this field. There are large mining areas also in Ohio, West Virginia, Michigan, Illinois and Wisconsin.

The mining camp, however, is not limited to the East. These camps are scattered through the southern States, along through several of the middle western States, and in the Rocky Mountain regions, they are multiplied over and over. Nevada presents the saddest example of what dependence upon mining does to a State. Nevada has been one of our richest mineral producing States. As early as the sixties it played a very important part in our financial economy as a nation by supplying the necessary gold and silver for our national undertakings. In spite of that fact, and a more or less continuous development of mining in the State, the population has fluctuated, sometimes being up and sometimes down, and the wealth which has been created by the multitude of mining enterprises has, for the most part, been taken away so that the natural resources of the State have been exploited for the benefit of other regions. Here we find large numbers of abandoned or semi-abandoned mining camps, still with populations varying from a few score to several hundred people and many of them entirely or largely without religious ministry. Somewhat similar conditions are to be found in other western States. A Methodist home missionary recently took up work in a mining town in western Washington with a population of more than 1,000 which for nearly forty years had been almost without religious ministry and which in recent years had been entirely unreached by the Church. A fine work has been developed and a community house erected.

LOGGING CAMPS

Our logging and sawmill communities extend from Maine and New York State in the north, southward through most of the eastern States, and then north again to Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota. Some of the middle western States are largely without logging enterprises, but in the far west are to be found the most numerous and most productive logging areas of the country. In these regions, many hundreds of camps with scores of thousands of population are to be found. The workers in these camps are, for the most part, migrants. A survey of the camps in western Washington has revealed the fact that the average time of a worker on a given job is not more than thirty days. Most of them work less, and a few for longer periods. In general, the logger in these regions works over one or two pay days, then takes a rest, and very often goes on to another camp. After working in several different camps he may again return to the camp from which he first came. This habit of migration makes it impossible to carry on in these camps effective religious work of the sort which is ordinarily done in rural communities, and a special type of ministry has to be provided. Because these people are homeless, landless, voteless, and womanless, they are among the most discontented groups which we have either in the country or in the city, yet they form a part of our rural problem and their needs must be met before the task in rural America can be completed.

We do not need to go into detail in regard to the stone quarry communities, many of which employ considerable groups of foreign-speaking workmen, the pine-tar areas of the southeast, or the variety of other enterprises of a more or less similar sort around which rural communities center. Each of these presents its own peculiar problems. Many of these enterprises involve large numbers of migrant laborers, such as harvesters, cannery workers, vegetable and berry pickers, oyster workers, and the like.

In Porto Rico much of our work is rural and in Hawaii it includes the laborers on the large sugar plantations and other agricultural enterprises of Hawaii. Even Alaska has her rural problems.

It will be seen, therefore, that the rural field is a most diverse one and that before we can make any comprehensive characterization of it, we must know just which phase of the rural field we are talking about. It is sufficient here to say that the problems created by these various conditions are such as, at times, to baffle the best thinking and the best efforts of the workers of the Church, as they attempt to build the kingdom of God in our rural communities.

PROGRESS

In spite of difficulties the quadrennium has marked great advances in our work in rural fields. A vast amount of information concerning rural needs has been disseminated, and this in itself has helped to solve the problems involved.

Nearly five thousand rural ministers have been gathered in summer schools for specific training and standards of work have been greatly improved as a result.

Support for men in rural fields has been greatly increased although taking the field as a whole the rate of increase has not exceeded that of the rise in the high cost of living.

Among the most important results must be recorded the growth of a rural consciousness which has given a feeling of confidence among rural ministers in the worthwhileness of the task and the dignity of the positions which they occupy.

By organizing some fields into "larger parishes" with centralized responsibility new life has been brought into the work, while in other fields the division of a circuit into several stations has made possible a better support for two or three men than was formerly possible for one man. Intensive cultivation has in these cases yielded unexpectedly large results.

RURAL EXTENSION SERVICE

One of the newer ventures in the rural educational program has been that of cooperation with Methodist educational institutions in developing a program of rural extension service. Beginning with Iliff School of Theology in 1919, the plan of encouraging teaching of rural sociology in educational institutions and the establishment of rural extension departments has expanded until during the year 1923 the rural message was being given at six theological seminaries, three Wesley Foundations at agricultural colleges, sixteen Methodist colleges and six secondary schools. A total of thirty-one educational institutions have cooperated in this service.

The general plan has been for the joint representative of the Board and of the educational institution to teach a limited number of courses in the institution. The purpose of the teaching has been to give contact with the student body and to stimulate interest in rural life as a challenge for service to both laymen and prospective ministers. In the secondary schools and in connection with Wesley Foundations teaching has constituted the major portion of the work. Local conditions appeared to make emphasis on teaching necessary.

In addition to teaching, the rural leader is expected to have advisory relations to student pastorates. Many of our schools still have student supply charges near them to which are appointed students who must earn all or a part of their living while attending the institutions. The attempt has been made to increase the effectiveness of student pastoral service while at the same time utilizing the student charge as a training station or laboratory for rural work.

The rural leaders have also been called upon to render a great variety of service in the fields to which they have been assigned. They have assisted in making field studies whereby, for a large part of the United States, maps have been prepared showing location of churches, pastoral residences, circuit systems, whether churches are in villages or the open country and other facts necessary for preliminary organization of district programs. The maps are in constant use by district superintendents and are consulted in the office in connection with proposed missionary grants. They are the basis for intensive organization of the field for the purpose of giving to every rural family adequate and definite pastoral care. They have been made the basis for district wide evangelistic campaigns. They have made more definite the knowledge of the service to be rendered by the Methodist Episcopal Church in the rural field.

The rural leaders have provided the major part of the teaching staff in our summer schools. They have given courses at Epworth League Institutes. Their services have been requested for camp meetings, district programs, state and national rural religious, social and educational conferences. They have been active, public spirited members of the communities in which they live and have done much to harmonize the religious and social forces in rural progress. They have conducted rural life institutes for country churches, thus bringing to the laymen for groups of churches an enlarged vision of the place of the Church in rural life.

CHANGES IN ATTITUDE TOWARD RURAL WORK

The effect of this program upon the attitude toward rural work in our educational institutions is illustrated by the large number of young men now interested in the rural ministry in our theological seminaries. At Garrett Biblical Institute over half of the young men recently giving their preference for the ministry indicated the rural work as their choice. Boston and Iliff School of Theology both rank high in the number of young men of exceptionally high grade who are preparing for the rural work. At Athens School of the University of Chattanooga, life service representatives were impressed with the interest of the young mountaineers in the rural work and with the intelligence displayed in asking about it. Real progress has been made in strengthening the interest in rural life in Methodist colleges. A new group of laymen as well as ministers are being sent out with a broadened vision of the task of the Church and with a sincere purpose to serve rural life through the Church more efficiently.

One of the most marked experiments now under way is the Lake County Parish, Chicago Northern District, Rock River Conference. Realizing that it was impossible for one representative of the rural work to act in an advisory capacity to nearly one hundred student pastors attending Garrett Biblical Institute the plan was adopted of centralizing efforts on a limited group in one parish. Weekly conferences are held with the student pastors of the parish. Their problems are discussed and their plans criticized and perfected. The fullest cooperation of the district superintendent has been enjoyed. The results have been an enlarged program of service and increased local salaries, improvements in buildings and increased membership.

One result indicating the success of the work has been the bringing of student charges to a financial basis enabling them to support a regular pastor. This change is taking place generally in the environment of educational institutions where rural extension directors are stationed. The indications are that in the course of time provision should be made for assistance of students who wish to do laboratory work on rural charges under the supervision of trained ministers appointed as regular pastors.

The parish plan, which has had conspicuous success in Michigan, Nebraska, New Jersey, Ohio, Massachusetts and Oregon, should be studied and the lessons learned by the experience of these sections made available for the entire country.

RURAL DIRECTORS OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

The need for a better organization of rural religious educational and social and recreational activities calls for the expansion of the program of providing trained religious educational directors. The experiment in trained religious educational leadership on the Chicago Northern District of the Rock River Conference has demonstrated both the need for such leadership and the possibilities of improvement. During the coming year plans are under way for establishing directorships of religious education for groups of rural churches on seven additional districts throughout the United States. These leaders are expected to give attention to the regular Sunday school work and in addition to plan for vacation Bible schools and week-day religious education. The need for such leadership is recognized by pastors as well as by administrative officials of the Church. On charges where such leadership has been established local support is increasing in a satisfactory way. It is believed that the work will be self-supporting on many rural districts in a short time.

IN THE WEST

The opportunity for service throughout the West has not been confined to that of merely opening new work. The frontier to-day is not in the initial stage of its development. It is well on its way, from many standpoints. It is true that church organizations are still to be formed in mining and logging camps, new and old, in sections opening for settlement through irrigation, and amidst special groups and rapid city developments. Aside from these exceptional situations, which of course vary from time to time and must have attention, the problem to a large extent is one of a second lift to struggling churches. The fact is Methodism is marvelously well represented in the West. The results that have been wrought out through the years are astonishing. Hardly a strategic center or a rural point of any significance is to be found that is without the organization of our Church in some form. The explanation of this lies in the fact that the Church through the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension has backed the men and women who have volunteered to serve as pioneers in this field.

A SECOND LIFT

The new vision that has come to us has stirred our people everywhere with a new sense of responsibility before newly discovered needs. The early type of building is seen to be inadequate to the larger service that now is felt to be necessary. At last we have seen that the entire life of the community has outrun the life of the Church in point of adaptability to new and changing conditions. The spirit of indifference so common in frontier life and the inferior leadership sometimes prevailing, coupled with unattractive and inadequate buildings, presented an almost hopeless situation. Except help had come from some outside source furnishing the opportune lift to many of the churches, the outlook would have been uncertain and dark. With a second and substantial lift by the Board, new leadership and equipment have been made possible in numerous places. The result is that Methodism, begun feebly and running weakly, has taken on new life. Sufficient points at least have been strengthened and such a quickening of interest secured as to promise a new day.

In the logging camps we have for the first time been able to employ full-time workers and to put on a constructive program of service.

Our Indian work has also responded in a very remarkable way to the increased attention given to it and we can for the first time speak without apology of the things which are being accomplished among our native red men.

CITIES

A century ago cities did not loom large in our national thinking. We were essentially a rural people, closely tied to the soil, and the program of Methodism was a rural program. Francis Asbury touched the cities, but he spent his life on the frontiers, which then extended from New England to the southland and westward. Since our establishment as an independent nation, however, there has been a steady movement from the rural regions to the cities, and, in addition, the growth of cities aided by the excess of births over deaths and more particularly by the influx of immigration from Europe. Gradually the relative importance of cities has been increasing until the census of 1920 revealed the fact that for the first time in our history 52 per cent of our total population was to be found in our cities. Inasmuch as there seems to be no decrease of the cityward tendency, but rather an increase, as the number and size of cities increase, it seems likely that the importance of cities in our national life will increase greatly in the coming decades, and that we may possibly look for a situation such as has already developed in some European countries, where three-fourths or more of the people live under city conditions.

When we speak of city conditions, we must bear in mind that cities are not all alike. Although they have been built up in general around modern industry and transportation, they are as different in many respects as individuals are different from each other. There are cities which are predominantly residential. There are others which are tied up primarily with large factory enterprises; still others which have gained their importance because of their location on the seaboard; and others which have developed from other causes or a combination of the causes already mentioned.

More important, however, than the differences between cities are the differences to be found in the various communities within a given city. These communities are so different, and the problems which they face are so varied that it is almost impossible to apply lessons learned in one set of circumstances directly to another or to draw comparisons between institutions in different parts of the same city. In general, we have, particularly in our great cities, what is known as the downtown section. This is usually the section which was formerly inhabited by the older residents of the community and around which the original business center grew up. As time has gone on, private homes have been driven out by shops and stores of various sorts, by office buildings, and by huge tenements or apartment houses which have tended to increase and congest the population in these areas, even though the original settlers have been driven out and their places have been taken very often by people from across the ocean. So marked has been this movement that the latest census reveals the fact that now, taking all our cities as a whole, more than 50 per cent of the population is of foreign birth or foreign extraction. In many places the proportion runs far higher than that, as in New York, where approximately four-fifths of the people are of foreign birth or foreign parentage. The downtown congested sections form a unique social phenomenon and their problems are of a sort not to be found in the same degree elsewhere.

With the coming in of foreign and other strange elements to the downtown sections, and the driving out of the older population into the suburbs, new situations develop in the suburbs. A downtown community is not transplanted entire and complete at any one given time to a suburb. The result is that the suburbs suffer from all of the growing pains which can well be imagined. The first pioneers who get into these suburbs are not able to pay for their homes and to build churches at the same time, and the problem of church support becomes a very difficult one. In other communities, where there is prospect of great growth, the present resources available have made necessary the erection of small, sometimes one-room churches, entirely unfitted to the needs of the community. As time has gone on the community has increased in size, but the church has not been able to build a satisfactory structure. One result is that the leadership is not what it should be, because of the lack of facilities, and the church becomes a drag on the community—the constituency always having to apologize for it or be more or less ashamed of it. All these problems of the church in the suburbs are very real and no figment of the imagination. They are repeated over and over again, and they tend to make missionary problems among people who ordinarily would not be considered as those who stood in need of missionary help.

In general, the rural program which was evolved in the decades of the past has proved to be unfitted to city needs, particularly of our downtown congested city centers with their changing populations. The proof of this lies in the fact that up until eight years ago downtown Methodist churches, along with the churches of other denominations, were steadily closing their doors and going out of business altogether, or moving into the suburbs from communities where the population was either steadily increasing, or, at least, remaining equal to what it had been in the past. One of the greatest home mission triumphs of the past eight years has been the fact that this retreat has now been checked, although the ground previously lost has not been regained. We have, however, in more than 130 city centers demonstrated that the city church, even in the congested areas, can still be a real factor in city life. Churches which were actually closed, or were on the point of being closed, are now rendering large service and ministering each week to crowds, varying from several hundred to several thousand, and are showing thereby that they have discovered the secret of making themselves effective in our cities. So many different types of communities have been entered with this new program of work that we are practically in a position to guarantee that, if certain specific adjustments are made in the plan and program of now failing city churches, they can find again a great field of usefulness right in the communities in which they are standing. In general the shift is from a Sunday program with a mid-week prayer service, to a seven-day-a-week program involving education and recreation, and aimed, primarily, at the saving of the young life of the community.

LEADERSHIP

The general practice of our Church has been to appoint its best ministers and to employ its best qualified workers in the more prosperous and thriving churches. There was a more or less silent assumption that inferior leadership would do for home mission fields. That assumption has been proven to be false. Nothing but the very highest type of leadership can achieve ultimate success in the face of the complicated problems presented in our home mission fields.

Our greatest handicap in home missionary work is the shortage of qualified leadership. Where the problems are most acute, the salary has usually been less than a living wage. Inadequate leadership and equipment have been provided. Under such conditions it is impossible to make satisfactory progress. A shortage in leadership is always felt most in the smaller and weaker churches, which are the missionary churches. It is always the places with the poor equipment, the difficult problems, and the low salaries that are hardest to fill with capable workers. It is frequently stated that more than twenty-five per cent of our ministers are supply ministers. This body of supply ministers and part-time ministers in our Church is to be found very largely in missionary fields. This result is, in some measure, due to our policy and thought in the appointment of ministers. We tend to care for the men rather than the point of greatest need. As a result, a weak missionary charge is in danger of continuing as such.

Just as it is necessary to face the fact that we have, in many cases, inadequate buildings that need to be replaced with equipment commensurate with the responsibility, we need to recognize the fact that we have inadequate leadership with inadequate programs of work which need to be improved.

The present policy of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension is to secure a thoroughly trained and able leadership.

This leadership program includes:

1. Further training of present leaders.

2. Selection and training of a sufficient number of new leaders to carry on the work of the program.

3. Placement of these workers.

At the completion of their training, many of these workers must go out to work with men who have not had special training, but who have had years of experience, and to work in churches which, because of years of habit, stand for the traditional program with inadequate standards. Difficulties have arisen, but churches are gradually coming to see the fundamental importance both of a broader program and a trained staff.

In order to carry out this program the Board, in cooperation with colleges, theological schools and special schools of religion, must provide a specialized training. A plan is already in operation whereby all special students under the Board are doing actual missionary work during the period of their training, thus rendering a very real service to the field, while they are preparing for still larger service in the future.

The training program includes the following items:

1. Scholarships for special training for home missionary work awarded on the basis of merit to students who are definitely preparing to work in the home field. In this work, the Board is cooperating closely with the schools and the nearby churches where laboratory work is done.
2. City and rural summer schools to which are invited pastors and special workers for short courses along the lines of their special interests.
3. City and rural institutes—two or three day conferences on program and methods.
4. Encouragement of training for home missionary work in educational institutions through the work of rural leadership men and special city workers.

FOREIGN LANGUAGE WORK

The definitely organized foreign-language work of the Methodist Episcopal Church includes more than 1,100 organized churches and missions with a total membership of nearly 100,000 and a Sunday-school membership considerably larger than that. Those figures, however, represent but a fraction of the work which is being done for foreign-speaking people, for they do not take into account the multitudes reached by local English-language and polyglot churches. Nor does it include those specialized forms of service such as immigrant port work; work among foreign students in American universities and colleges, of whom there were 7,944 in 1922; the preparation of foreign-language literature; and the work of lumber-camp missionaries, Goodwill Industries, and special evangelists who reach foreign-speaking groups.

THE AIM OF THE WORK

The aim of this work is not, first of all, to build up the Methodist Episcopal Church, or even the Protestant Church, but rather to make Christians. As a matter of fact so many of the foreign-speaking people of America have severed all active connection with the churches of their childhood that unless the Protestant Church does reach them, they tend to become permanently divorced from organized religion. This is worse for the second generation than for the first, because these young people lack the restraints which even the superstitious religion of their parents placed upon them. One by-product of this is that a considerable proportion of our youthful criminals are the children of immigrants. Our aim, then, is to make Christians, whether they chance to be Greek Orthodox Christians or Roman Catholic Christians; although many do join the Methodist Church. Among those who never join, prejudice is broken down, superstition loses its power, ideals are built up, communities are rendered more Christian, and America is a better place in which to live, as a result.

INTERNATIONAL IMPLICATIONS

To those who have an opportunity to watch the work with foreign-speaking groups, there are few things more interesting than its international aspects. One never knows just when the individual with whom he is dealing may become a power for good or evil across the water. Both Lenine and Trotzky were members of a foreign-speaking group in America at one time. Many other examples might be cited.

When the Treaty of Versailles established the Republic of Latvia it was discovered that more than one-half the Letts in the world were in the United States, and chiefly engaged in the coal and steel industries of Pennsylvania. When the Letts across the water set out to organize a government, they invited their brothers in the United States to vote for the officers of the first republican government. The result was that a Pittsburgh lawyer of Lettish stock was elected the first president of the new republic. Immediately he gave up his legal practice, sailed for Europe, and assumed the duties of his new office. Can you calculate the possible influence of such a man?

The school system established in Czecho-Slovakia, since the war, was set up by a boy who attended a Protestant Sunday school in America.

The new constitution drafted for Poland, after the war, declared that no one but a Roman Catholic could be president of Poland. The Poles in the United States said that that limitation could not stand and the provision now is that the president of Poland must be a Christian. Protestantism had touched the Poles in America.

Thus in a great variety of ways our foreign-speaking work is making its contribution both to our life in America and to countries across the water. Remarkable stories of the achievements of local foreign-language churches and missions could be greatly multiplied. The quadrennium has seen a very striking advance in our foreign-language work in the matter of buildings and equipment, in the raising of the standards of leadership, and in the development of an educational and recreational program. The results of this work do not always appear in the communities where the work is done, as the work itself tends to encourage the families concerned to find their places in other neighborhoods. One such church recently sent more than one hundred members out into other communities. The results thus scattered are, however, not lost.

NEGRO WORK

At the beginning of the Centenary period there were very few church buildings for Negroes in all the South that in point of architecture reflected credit upon our denomination. Here and there in a few large centers were to be found substantial buildings—not one of them however more modern than would have been built by a congregation in 1850. Four wonderful years of enlarged church extension activity has made our Church one of the chief directing forces in practically every Southern city. Ill-appointed, poorly constructed, one-room buildings are giving way to modern brick churches equipped for programs of social service and religious education, and in many centers such programs are being carried forward with commendable zeal.

In many places where our denomination was not reckoned with at all in community affairs, we now rank with the leaders. Examples of this may be found in San Antonio, Waco, Austin, Fort Worth, Temple, Houston, Orange, Beaumont, Port Arthur and Galveston in the State of Texas; at Lake Charles, New Orleans; Baton Rouge, the seat of Southern University, and Monroe in the State of Louisiana; at Meridian, Jackson, Bay St. Louis, Brookhaven, Clarksdale, Greenwood, Starkville, Tupelo and New Albany in the State of Mississippi; at Birmingham, Tuskaloosa, Bessemer, Mobile and Lannett in the State of Georgia; at Greensboro, Reidsville, Laurinburg, Winston, and Lexington in the State of North Carolina; at Memphis and Nashville in the State of Tennessee; at Washington in the District of Columbia; at Baltimore, Annapolis and Frederick in the State of Maryland; at Philadelphia, Chester, Pittsburgh, Verona and Woodlawn in the State of Pennsylvania.

The Church Extension program in New York City has given our colored group leadership in Harlem among 150,000 Negroes, and in the Central West, Dayton, Youngstown, Columbus, Louisville, Chicago, St. Louis, Indianapolis and Kansas City are centers where Negro Methodist Episcopalians, because of the types of buildings they have been able to secure, are saving to the Kingdom thousands of migrants.

An enlarged church extension program in the South was probably the most timely agency for the keeping up of the morale of our Negro membership. The Methodist Episcopal Church in the South, however, is very largely a rural institution and the fact that the vast majority of our Negro population lives in the open country makes it imperative that our church extension program undergird the church life of these rural people in a very large and definite way. In most rural communities the church is built of the crudest material and in too many instances is a mere shack. Very generous aid has been given to churches of this type, and there is not a district in the entire South that has not benefited by donations from this Board, to remodel, build, or construct a church or parsonage. The following is an illustration of what happened in one rural community.

NEW ALBANY, MISSISSIPPI

1918—A Denominational Liability	1923—A Methodist Asset

DONATIONS STIMULATE LARGE UNDERTAKINGS

A small donation to our Negro work is usually stimulus enough to prompt a local congregation to undertake a task large enough to tax their resources to the point of sacrifice and in almost every case where a donation has been made, this has been the result. For example, in the Upper Mississippi Conference the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension has authorized for church extension to date $46,389.50. With this stimulus the Conference is undertaking a building program calling for an expenditure of $255,000. Nor is this building program being carried on at the expense of the other interests of the Church, for this same Conference, which during the four years prior to the Centenary averaged $4,265.33 for the benevolent boards, has in addition to its budget for pastoral support, current expenses and building programs, paid to May 31, 1923, $106,079.53 for the Centenary. This is generally true of all Negro Conferences, for at the rate of benevolent giving the year before the Centenary these Conferences would have given $400,000, whereas under the impact of an enlarged missionary program they gave $1,650,667.10 to May 31, 1923.

At Boynton, Texas, a small donation has made possible the building of a $36,000 community house with swimming pool and all other facilities for a community program in the heart of dense population, entirely Negro. A paid worker is employed here.

The People's Church, New Orleans, has a community house with a staff of three workers.

Wesley Church, Greenwood, Mississippi, is equipped with a community house. A library has been installed, and systematic community work is being done.

A community program is carried on in St. Paul's, Birmingham, and a worker is kept at the Juvenile Court. A paid worker is employed at Central Avenue Church, Atlanta, Georgia, and a regular seven-day program is in operation.

Wesley Church, Charleston, South Carolina, is developing a social program under competent workers and is serving hundreds of people in a densely settled Negro community. Its Daily Vacation Bible School of 300 pupils was an outstanding feature of its summer work.

In Baltimore, Maryland, with support from the Board of Home Missions, the finest community house owned by Negroes has been in operation for its third year with a constructive program that reaches almost every phase of community life.

In Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, a paid worker is directing the social activities of Zoar Church. A part time worker is employed at Haven Church.

A worker has been employed at Chester, Pennsylvania, to take care of the hundreds of migrants who have gone to that city, and with a well-defined program relate them to the church.

At Mt. Zion Church, Baltimore, a social worker directs a program which is making anew the entire Negro community congested around the church.

In Chicago, the Hartzell Center, through its well-defined program, is not a mere social agency in that city, but a veritable life-saving station for hundreds of migrant girls. At St. Mark's Church, the working mother finds helpful service through the well-established Juanita Day Nursery.

Louisville has a seven-day church with a social director.

Cincinnati is one of the distributing centers of the exodus. Our Park Street Church has a community agency which not only supports a worker to meet the trains, but keeps an open church and a ready hand for the hundreds who come to that city.

Annapolis, Maryland, has a community house, a feature of the work being the serving of Negro sailors and employees of the Naval Academy.

These are some of the centers where a program has been sufficiently developed to employ paid workers. It should be said, however, in this connection, that through the Conference of City Workers, which is directed by the Bureau of Negro Work and the Department of City Work, fully a hundred churches have caught the vision and are doing some type of community service which will eventually come to the point where a full-time worker will be employed.

IN GENERAL

Home Missions, as such, has become a greatly varied task. We must press on to the doing of far more of the type of work which we have already found to be effective in needy communities, and we must be ever alert to discover and adopt new methods of procedure as the study of situations reveals them to be necessary.

America can be made Christian, but it will never become so by chance. The most consecrated efforts of all of us will be required in the process, and, in it, home missions must play a leading part, for our greatest needs and our scantiest resources meet in our home mission fields.

To the Bishops and Members of the General Conference, assembled in Springfield, Massachusetts, May, 1924.

This report covers the four years between July 31, 1919, and July 31, 1923. It is with joy and thanksgiving to the God who has called us to serve Him that we record the service of four years.

In October, 1923, the Membership Campaign which had extended over a period of ten years was closed, as a special Campaign. This Campaign had brought to the Society an increase of 246,365 members (in all Departments) or nearly 123 per cent net gain. While the Membership Campaign has been closed, the campaign for members can never cease so long as the Woman's Home Missionary Society exists.

FINANCES

During the stress and strain of financial obligations of the past four years there has been a most healthful advance in income. Reviewing the Quadrennium we find the

Total income 1919-1920	$2,405,029.90
Total income 1920-1921	2,765,249.79
Total income 1921-1922	2,893,277.10
Total income 1922-1923	3,212,562.90
Total income 1919-1923	$11,276,119.69
Total income 1915-1919	4,992,550.86
Total increase for Quadrennium (1919-1923)	$6,283,568.83

It will be noted that the increase for the past Quadrennium is larger than the total income of the preceding Quadrennium.

Included in the total income are the special funds secured through Thank Offerings, Lenten Offerings, Mite-Boxes, Permanent Missionary and Permanent Deaconess Funds and bequests.

During 1922 all the editing and publishing interests were moved from New York to the Cincinnati Headquarters (420 Plum Street). With all these interests centered in one place, and greatly increased facilities, the Society is already reaping the increase of efficiency and economy.

Sales offices of the Society are located at 150 Fifth Avenue, New York City, N. Y.; 581 Boylston Street, Boston, Mass.; 77 West Washington Street, Chicago, Ill.; 3 City Hall Avenue, San Francisco, Cal.

Three Conference Woman's Home Missionary Societies also have Sales Offices: 1701 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.; 2000 Fifth Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa.; 1047 South Hill Street, Los Angeles, Cal.

DEPARTMENTS

Deaconess Department.—The largest Department has for its special activity the Deaconess Work of the Woman's Home Missionary Society.

The General Deaconess Board reports 922 Deaconesses in the United States. These Deaconesses serve under three Administrations of Deaconess Work (the Methodist Deaconess Association, the German Central Deaconess Board, and the Deaconess Department of The Woman's Home Missionary Society), which have been recognized by General Conference. To these Administrations the General Deaconess Board sustains an advisory relation.

May we call your attention to the responsibility of this Society in the development of, and provisions for, its Deaconess Work.

In all phases of its activities perhaps none has more local interest than that of the Deaconess Department of The Woman's Home Missionary Society. Except in a few instances, this department is dependent upon local support from the community which the institution serves. Every Deaconess Home does, however, have some support from the National Treasury, in that one half of the dues of all members of the Woman's Home Missionary Auxiliaries in the town or city in which the Deaconess Home is located is given to its support.

Beginning in the Auxiliaries and the organizations of the Young People's Department (Young Woman's Auxiliaries, Queen Esther Circles, and Wesleyan Service Guild Units), going on to the District and Conference organizations, there is constant appeal to young women and girls to prepare for this service. In order that this preparation can be made under the Society, the establishment and maintenance of Training Schools became a necessity. Seven such schools are in operation, and here those who desire to enter Deaconess service may have the necessary training. Many most worthy and consecrated young women cannot provide their scholarship ($175) and other expenses of travel and personal necessities.

The next step, therefore, is for the women of The Woman's Home Missionary Society to raise money for these scholarships. Back to the Conference, the District, the Auxiliary, or Young People's organization is sent this responsibility, and right generously is it met—as thousands of dollars are gathered for what is called "Student Aid" or "Scholarship Funds." For three years of training-school work, students must have this aid, which is so gladly provided for those who otherwise could not have the training for Deaconess service.

After graduation the Deaconess who has accepted a scholarship is expected to give one year of service (for which she receives the regular Deaconess allowance and her living expenses) for each year of training.

Assignments of Deaconesses to fields of service make necessary a home in which they may live—hence The Woman's Home Missionary Society has established thirty-one Deaconess Homes which (together with Settlements, Rest Homes, and Hospitals under this department) have a total property valuation of $1,631,359 (on which there is an indebtedness of $293,-914).

In the most recent publication of the General Deaconess Board there are reported 922 Deaconesses in the United States. Serving with the Woman's Home Missionary Society in its various activities, and residing in these institutions are 574 Deaconesses for whom this Society is responsible. For the current expenses of these Homes and institutions there was expended last year $282,315.

As the General Conference of 1920 gave to each of the three forms of Deaconess administration the privilege of governing its work, The Woman's Home Missionary Society took the following action: "That Deaconesses serving with The Woman's Home Missionary Society wear the prescribed garb when on duty, and receive a uniform allowance. The Society to provide for its care in protracted illness."

The quiet, beautiful garb of the Methodist Deaconess is so well known that we do not need to describe it at this time. It may not be so well known, however, that the allowance for "the Deaconess serving with The Woman's Home Missionary Society" has been fixed at $30 per month (with living expenses and vacation allowance provided).

But this is not all the women of this Society are responsible for in this Deaconess Department. When these "servitors," as our Deaconesses have been called, can no longer serve because of age or physical limitations, they are numbered among our blessed "sunset members." Rest Homes are provided for recreation and vacation periods, as well as for those who need more or less permanent care. For this purpose Bancroft-Taylor Rest Home (Ocean Grove, N. J.) has ministered for many years. We would that every reader of these lines might look in on this family gathered in this home by the seaside. Here many a weary Deaconess and Missionary (both Home and Foreign) have found a "welcome home," rest, and recuperation or permanent care, as has been needed. Arrangements are now being made to occupy a Rest Home in Pasadena, California, the magnificent property given for this purpose by Mrs. George O. Robinson, to be named "Robincroft."

In addition to permanent Rest Homes there are Rest Homes open for the Summer months as follows: Fenton Rest Home for Deaconesses, Chautauqua, N. Y.; Methodist Missionary Home, Chautauqua, N. Y.; Thompson Rest Home, Mountain Lake Park, Md.; Elvira Olney Rest Home, Ludington, Mich.; Wing Rest Home, Huntington Beach, Cal.; Beulah Rest Home, Fruitvale, Cal.; and Ruth Skeer Rest Home, Newton, Pa.

Even this does not complete the story, for these women of The Woman's Home Missionary Society have provided a last resting place for those who enter life eternal, in the beautiful God's Acre at Ocean Grove, N. J., in sight of the rolling sea.

Surely this department of work of The Woman's Home Missionary Society must commend itself to all who are interested in the welfare of humanity. Were it possible to tell in this report of all the activities of the Deaconesses, the surprise and joy of our friends would be unlimited; but that would be another story.

The work of the Deaconess Department is administered by the General Secretary and six Bureaus—one of which is the Bureau for Hospitals.

Field Department.—This Department lists eighteen Field Secretaries. Whenever opportunity offers these Secretaries present the General Work of the Society. Securing members, subscribers to the periodicals, distributing leaflets, securing special gifts, and in every possible way promoting the interests of the Society in all departments of organization.

Department of Mission Supplies.—Not only does this Department give aid to ministers and their families, but it also supplies many of the needs in our Homes and Schools. The work of this Department has steadily increased.

Department of Training Schools.—The need of trained workers for Christian service has never been more apparent than during the past Quadrennium. Seven Training Schools for Missionaries and Deaconesses have been in operation, with ever increasing facilities, which have made possible greater efficiency as graduates have gone into active service in both Home and Foreign Mission Fields.

Department of Homes and Schools.—A new feature in this Department is the appointment of a Secretary of Education and Personnel. This will make possible higher educational standards in the schools supported by the Society. The Department of Personnel will assist the Bureau Secretaries in securing the most efficient missionaries and teachers—while it will also make possible a more discriminating examination and selection of those making application for such positions. The office of this Department is in the Headquarters, 420 Plum Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Number of candidates approved during the Quadrennium.. 210

During 1919–1920, there were 559 missionaries and teachers serving with the Society in National Homes and Schools. During 1920–1921, 550; 1921–1922, 550; 1922–1923; 669.

During the same periods there have been (1919–1920) Licensed Deaconesses serving with The Woman's Home Missionary Society, 435; 1920–1921, 419; 1921–1922, 468; 1922–1923, 443.

To these should be added those who have served as Probationers and Associate Deaconesses. Including these there has been an average force of Missionaries and Deaconesses of 1,100 annually in the various fields of Home Missionary activities.

Forty (40) consecrated, unsalaried women give their time and services as Bureau Secretaries caring for the interests of the Homes and Schools operated under the auspices of the Society.

Department of Methods.—Standing Committees, the Chairmen of which are appointed by the Board of Managers at the Annual Meeting of the Society, promote the interests of Christian Stewardship, Evangelism, Migrant Work, Mite-Boxes, Permanent Missionary and Deaconess Funds, Temperance, Prohibition, and Christian Citizenship; Thank Offering, and Lenten Offering. These Standing Committees have prosecuted the work assigned to them with ever increasing interest and results during the Quadrennium.

INTERDENOMINATIONAL RELATIONS

With increasing activities, in which one Denomination cannot serve alone, Interdenominational Relations have grown in number and strength.

Affiliation with the Council of Women for Home Missions and the Home Missions Council, the Committee on Cooperation in Latin America, the Board of Christian Work in Santo Domingo, the Committee on Interracial Cooperation, have served to unite us with other Home Missionary Agencies in multiplied activities. With the Council of Women for Home Missions we have been very closely united in the use of the Home Missionary Text Books, Interdenominational Summer Schools of Missions, Work among Farm and Cannery Migrants, and the salaries of Christian workers in the Government Schools for Indians.

Because of membership in the Council of Women for Home Missions we with other Woman's Boards of Home and Foreign Missions and organizations of women for other than missionary service, are allied with the Woman's National Committee for Law Enforcement.

The Woman's Home Missionary Society has been honored by being privileged to furnish the salary for the Protestant Chaplain in the United States Marine Hospital No. 66 (for Lepers), Carville, La. The knowledge came as a surprise when it was learned that such need existed, but our women responded generously and gladly.

Work Among Chinese in San Francisco, Cal.—Three Trustees represented this Society on an Interdenominational Commission which met in San Francisco one year ago. The result of the study was the conviction that Protestant forces should unite in a program of Educational, Social, and Recreational activities as soon as practicable. That as far as it would not interfere with the continuance of Denominational religious activities there should be a program for union evangelistic and other lines of religious effort as might be deemed expedient.

The women of the Presbyterian and Methodist Home Missionary organizations have been prosecuting work for many years, in separate institutions for Chinese women and Children, and Rescue Work for Chinese girls. The work of the institutions will be so united that the Woman's Board of National Missions (of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America) and the Woman's Home Missionary Society (of The Methodist Episcopal Church) will hereafter cooperate in all these activities on a fifty-fifty basis.

A new Home for Children is being erected in Oakland, which when completed will make possible the re-adjustment of work as now conducted under the two organizations.

With the passing of the years co-laborers have gone into the great beyond. Mrs. Fannie Ambrose Aiken, Recording Secretary Emeritus, served The Woman's Home Missionary Society for thirty years as Recording Secretary. As the pen fell from her hands, her record was: "My life has been ennobled by the toil and sacrifice, and joy, of the thirty years' service, and enriched by association and fellowship with the good women of our grand Society." In the fellowship of the Heavenly Home she and other National Conference, District, and Auxiliary officers, and members, Missionaries, and Deaconesses of this sisterhood doubtless join in praise for the opportunities of service here and there. In the spirit in which they served and wrought we record our pledge and earnest desire:

Lord, if we may
We'll serve another day.

Respectfully submitted

MRS. WILBUR P. THIRKIELD,
President.

MRS. MAY LEONARD WOODRUFF,
Corresponding Secretary.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION FOR NEGROES

To the General Conference in Springfield, Mass., May, 1924.

DEAR FATHERS AND BRETHREN:

The most prosperous quadrennium in the entire fifty-eight years of The Board of Education for Negroes, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, successor to the Freedmen's Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, shows that in the nineteen schools there have been 468 teachers and 6,862 students enrolled, and that the numbers desiring admission to these schools have been larger than ever in the history of the Board. The facilities, although greatly enlarged, have not been adequate to accommodate the growing numbers and needs of the twenty Negro Conferences, having a lay and ministerial membership of 358,000. Practically all the ministers, Sunday-school teachers and other leaders of our Negro churches, are the products of these schools. Without the schools the Negro churches would be without leaders and helpless. It is coming to be more and more understood that the success of the Christian religion and the Church of the future in any race depend upon the training and education of the children. New and enlarged buildings, necessary equipment, extensive repairs and improvements, with increased salaries for teachers, have all been made possible by the magnificent response of the Church in the Centenary.

CHANGE OF NAME AND CHARTER

In accordance with the action of the General Conference of 1920, the name and charter of this Board were changed from the Freedmen's Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to The Board of Education for Negroes, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, incorporated under the laws of the State of Ohio.

CHANGES IN MEMBERSHIP OF THE BOARD

Soon after the close of the General Conference Mr. E. R. Graham, publishing agent, and a valued member of the Board for many years, was removed by death.

Mr. Harlan C. West, finding it impossible to attend to the duties of membership on the Board, sent in his resignation which was regretfully accepted.

Mr. E. S. Sawtelle and Mr. S. A. Mullikin were elected by the Bishops to fill these two vacancies in the list of laymen.

In the last year of the quadrennium Mr. S. A. Mullikin was killed when his automobile collided with a railroad train at a dangerous crossing. Two of his daughters were killed at the same time, and one was severely injured. This unfortunate accident removed from the Board a valuable layman whose interest in the work was thorough and sincere.

DEATH OF THE RECORDING SECRETARY OF THE BOARD, REV.
D. LEE ALTMAN, D.D.

Rev. D. Lee Altman, D.D., for thirty years a member of the Board, and during nearly all of that time its Recording Secretary, was called home October 4, 1922. A sincere Christian gentleman, a loyal Methodist, and a true friend of the Negro people, has passed on. He was sincerely devoted to the cause for which this Board is organized, and gave unstintingly of his time and abilities toward the welfare of the schools.

Rev. E. S. Lewis, D.D., formerly a president in one of the White schools of the South, when they were connected with the Freedmen's Aid and Southern Education Society, and for many years the esteemed and successful Associate Editor of the Sunday School Publications of the Church, was elected by the Bishops to the vacancy caused by the decease of Dr. Altman. While the Board loses an old and true friend in Dr. Altman, it gains a tried and experienced one in Dr. Lewis.

CHANGES IN SCHOOLS AND PRESIDENCIES

Some of the most important changes in the history of our work have been made during the quadrennium. These have affected all the schools in their physical plants and in their management. The more important items of growth and development in each institution are given in the summary, which shows that tangible assets, such as real property, equipment and endowment, have increased from $2,008,750.00 in 1920 to $4,026,900.00 at this date. In other words, the assets of the Board have increased $2,018,150.00 during the past four years, which is equal to the previous fifty-three years.

GAMMON THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, ATLANTA, GA.

In very many ways this is our most important institution. Trained Negro ministers are most needed by the Negro race at this time. Much has been done to make for a larger output from Gammon in the future. With $60,000.00 saved out of accumulated interest from the endowment, and $60,000.00 additional furnished by the Board, a new administration building, with classrooms and auditorium, has been erected. The main building formerly used for administration, classrooms and students' dormitory, has been remodeled and will be used entirely as a dormitory. A new central heating plant has been installed. The new administration building has been named Thirkield Hall in honor of the great and lasting services of Bishop and Mrs. W. P. Thirkield.

The Board has also approved of the naming of the new refectory Bowen Hall in honor of the long services of the senior professor, Dr. J. W. E. Bowen, who for thirty-one years has been a tower of strength to the institution and to his race.

Two new professors' cottages have been erected, costing nine and ten thousand dollars. One of these was paid for by the Stewart Missionary Foundation for Africa, and is to be the residence of the Professor of Missions.

The seminary has become a center of activities far-reaching in their influence for good on Negro life. Each year a Bible Conference is held for women of the Negro race on the campus of the seminary, under the auspices of the White Presbyterian Church of the South; also a summer school for rural pastors conducted by our Board of Home Missions and Church Extension.

An endowed lectureship of $10,000.00 has been provided under the leadership of Bishop R. E. Jones, an alumnus of the seminary.

The institution has graduated women from its School of Missions for the first time during this quadrennium.

The improvements and additions have doubled the capacity for students, so that the seminary easily leads all others as the largest, the best equipped and best endowed theological seminary in the United States for the training of Negro ministers.

THE STEWART MISSIONARY FOUNDATION FOR AFRICA, ATLANTA, GA.

The Foundation, now permanently located in Gammon Theological Seminary, was created by the Reverend William Fletcher Stewart, of the Rock River Conference, who gave $100,000 for its endowment. The interest of the sons, the Reverend G. Grant Stewart and Mr. Edward L. Stewart, the trustees, in carrying out the will of their father, continues unabated.

The new building at Gammon provides adequate rooms for the Foundation and its School of Missions; and the residence erected at a cost of ten thousand dollars permanently houses the general secretary who is a member of the Gammon faculty.

The Foundation is now in the best possible position to prosecute its high mission. Many Negro young men and women have gone to Africa as missionaries, the direct result of the work of the Foundation; while missionary information about the dark continent has been broadcast everywhere in the South among Negroes through the Negro institutions of learning and the Negro churches. The largest accomplishments for the Foundation are now ahead of it.

FLINT-GOODRIDGE HOSPITAL AND NURSE TRAINING SCHOOL, NEW ORLEANS, LA.

This is the only hospital on the Gulf Coast where Negro physicians and surgeons can take their patients and treat them. It is the only hospital where self-respecting Negro people may engage a private room for their sick.

During the quadrennium they have enrolled 64 nurses, 8 mid-wives, 1 interne, 12 post-graduate Public Health nurses; and have graduated 21 nurses, 6 midwives, 1 interne and 12 post-graduate Public Health nurses.

The institution has increased its endowment from $50,000 to $78,000. It has been recognized as an accredited hospital by The American College of Surgeons. They have never had a nurse to fail in any State Board examination. Six of their nurses hold positions in the United States Veterans' Bureau Hospital at Tuskegee, Ala. They have rendered during the quadrennium free service amounting to $34,939.19. Some of the best physicians and surgeons in New Orleans bring their work to the hospital, and many of them pronounce the case records to be kept better than those of any other hospital in the city. A member of the Louisiana State Board of Medical Examiners pronounced Flint-Goodridge Hospital the best managed hospital in New Orleans.

MEHARRY MEDICAL COLLEGE, NASHVILLE, TENN.

An outstanding accomplishment of the Board during the quadrennium has been the classification of Meharry Medical College in class "A" by the Council on Medical Education and Hospitals of The American Medical Association. The result is due to a combination of support by The Board of Education for Negroes, the General Education Board and Carnegie Corporation. The invested endowment of the institution is $590,050. In addition to this, a yearly appropriation is made by The Board of Education for Negroes and the General Education Board, which brings the total income to $50,000, exclusive of student fees. These appropriations cover a period of five years, pending the securing of an additional one-half million dollars, thus bringing the total endowment to a million dollars. On this second one-half million there is a subscription of $200,000 already made by the Negro doctors who are graduates of the institution. Other appropriations have been made by the above Boards, the most significant one being $89,000 by the General Education Board for the enlargement of the George W. Hubbard Hospital.

This appropriation made possible the addition of a fourth story to the hospital, and a full, modern equipment. The capacity of the hospital has been increased from 75 to 150 beds, and to an emergency service of 175. The American College of Surgeons now recognizes the George W. Hubbard Hospital as a class "A" institution, and has approved it for internships.

In order that Meharry might have ample grounds and buildings for expansion, a new site and buildings have been provided for Walden College, formerly Walden University. The entire grounds and buildings of the old Walden which joins the Meharry campus, have been transferred in fee simple to the Meharry Medical College. According to an appraisement by competent real estate agents, this represents an outright gift to Meharry of $100,000. This additional property enabled the institution adequately to house its Pharmaceutical Department and provide laboratories for research work, as well as additional classrooms so much needed.

The total contribution of our Board to the endowment and expansion of Meharry amounts to $375,000. With increased funds and additional buildings there have followed the installation of modern equipment in all departments, and notable additions to the faculty.

The one man who was the genesis, as well as the promoter, of Meharry Medical College, Dr. George W. Hubbard, retired during the quadrennium and is now President Emeritus. The alumni, "his boys," as he calls them, provided a house for him costing $10,000, on the grounds of the institution. In this comfortable home he is resting; but daily sees the institution grow into full fruition. This residence reverts to the college after the death of Dr. Hubbard.

He was succeeded by Dr. John J. Muldowney, Philadelphia, Pa., formerly a professor in Girard College. Dr. Muldowney took hold of the college with a vigorous mind, heart and hand. His zeal in no way has abated, and within three years after assuming administrative control he has seen the institution honored with the highest classification possible.

Meharry Medical College with a service unsurpassed, is at the dawn of its largest day of usefulness.

BENNETT COLLEGE, GREENSBORO, N. C.

The State of North Carolina is now in the lead of all the Southern States in the development of its Negro public schools and colleges. The amount expended by the State for Negro schools in 1922-1923 was four millions of dollars. This amount was as much as was expended upon the entire school system for both races in 1900. The educational standards in this State are the highest of any in the South, and every effort is being made to bring the denominational institutions to these standards. State conferences are constantly being held between presidents and principals of denominational institutions and the Department of Negro Education of the State, which checks up on the development and needs of all schools, both State and private.

A fire which destroyed Carolina Hall, a boys' dormitory at Bennett College, in which were located the auditorium and several classrooms, made necessary new buildings. In the erection and equipping of these buildings every effort is being made to meet State standards and requirements. The new buildings erected are a girls' dormitory, a refectory and classroom building, with special reference to housing the Science Department. A Carnegie Library upon the grounds to serve the city and school has also been erected; a residence for the dean has been completed. The institution continues to be one of the most popular in the State and its future is guaranteed. There are 38 acres with 8 buildings in the plant.

CLAFLIN COLLEGE, ORANGEBURG, S. C.

Clafin College continues to be an important factor in the education of the Negro in South Carolina and adjacent States. Dr. L. M. Dunton and Mrs. Dunton, who have done more than any others to develop Clafin College and place it among the best of the schools of the Board, felt it necessary during the quadrennium to retire from the leadership and responsibility of the institution. Dr. Dunton has served as President forty years. Mrs. Dunton, working by his side as teacher and financial agent, has taught, traveled, written, spoken and prayed thousands of dollars into the plant. Dr. Dunton has been equally industrious in cultivating friends for the institution, whose many gifts now form a part of that great heritage. When, therefore, these people determined to give up the active leadership of the college, there was a time of mourning among thousands of the people whom they had served. When President Dunton retired he was educating the fourth generation of Negroes in South Carolina. To few has been given the opportunity to see such fruits of their labors. Dr. Dunton was unanimously elected President Emeritus of Clafin College, and proper resolutions were passed and spread upon the records of the Board. Everyone wishes them peace and happiness the remainder of their lives. Clafin College is their monument.

In choosing a successor to Dr. Dunton, the policy of promoting those in the system who had shown ability and efficiency was adhered to. President J. B. Randolph, of Samuel Huston College, was transferred to the presidency of Clafin, thus assuring the continued success of the institution.

The Clafin endowment has been brought to $128,969.14, and a large sum has been expended in improving and equipping the plant. The student attendance is growing from year to year, and taxing the capacity of the college.

CLARK UNIVERSITY, ATLANTA, GA.

This institution located at Atlanta, Ga., is being developed as the university of the system. The plant comprises 370 acres and 13 buildings. The most notable addition to the buildings is Leete Hall, which cost $250,000. This building takes care of administration and classrooms, with a commodious chapel and gymnasium. It is regarded as the best school building on the campus of any institution for the Negro race in the South.

The Woman's Home Missionary Society has remodeled and enlarged their Thayer Home, expending $50,000, which makes one of the most finished and well-equipped home-economics buildings and model homes in the South for Negro girls.

Other improvements have been made in all the buildings, looking to the comfort of teachers and students.

Following the resignation of Dr. Harry Andrews King, the Reverend J. W. Simmons, A.M., Ph.D., Professor of Religious Education in Southwestern College, Winfield, Kan., was elected President.

Important changes and additions have been made in the faculty. There are now 25 professors, instructors and officers. The field agent for Clark University is also connected with the State Board of Education of Georgia, and is now working in the interest of the university. A law school is to be inaugurated as soon as funds will permit. Every effort is being made to have Clark a university in fact as in name.

SAMUEL HUSTON COLLEGE, AUSTIN, TEXAS

When President J. B. Randolph was transferred from this school to the presidency of Claflin, Reverend R. N. Brooks, A.M., B.D., then principal of Central Alabama Institute, Birmingham, Ala., was transferred to the presidency of Samuel Huston College. Under President Brooks the institution continues the growth begun under the former president.

There are 14 1/2 acres with 10 buildings in the plant. The amount of $32,000 has been expended upon the school in complete renovation, installation of new furnishings and equipment, and a heating plant for each building. Additional land has been purchased, upon which was a residence now used for the Industrial Department. This made possible the remodeling of the Industrial Building into a Science Hall, which provides space for as large a science equipment as may be found at any of the schools of the system.

There is now in prospect a co-ordination and unification of the two schools for Negroes located in Austin, known as Tillotson College under the auspices of The American Missionary Association, and Samuel Huston College, so that the two schools shall be operated as one under the probable name of Samuel Huston-Tillotson College. The expenses incident to operating the combined institutions under one management will be borne by the two Boards owning the property. In the combination, State requirements with reference to standards will be met, as well as increased efficiency, and avoidance of overlapping and wastage of funds.

MORGAN COLLEGE, BALTIMORE, MD.

This institution has made marked progress in its development during the quadrennium. It is now meeting the college standards of the State of Maryland. An exceptionally fine piece of property consisting of 85 acres has been purchased. The location is one of the most valuable school sites for a Negro institution anywhere in the United States, and is now within the City of Baltimore. Extensive city improvements are being made near it, which make the property more valuable. There are 20 buildings upon the campus. One of them is a newly erected stone structure known as Carnegie Hall, costing $100,991, of which the Carnegie Corporation gave $95,000, the balance being furnished by the two Negro patronizing Conferences, the Washington and Delaware, together with other friends of the institution. There is also a central heating plant.

The courses of study have been broadened in scope and considerably increased in number; also the faculty enlarged and special teachers are employed from the faculties of Johns Hopkins University and the Baltimore Teachers' College to give part-time courses in science and education.

The student attendance has rapidly grown. Students attend this institution from all over the United States, also from Central America, the British West Indies, Africa and Haiti.

This is the most northerly located college of any in the system, and therefore has a large number of students enrolled from Philadelphia, Boston, Providence and New York. The location of the school on the border meets the needs of and brings together Negro students coming from either North or South. The quadrennium registers for this institution an increasing service to the people, and its future is assured by reason of its advantageous location, strong faculty and large constituency.

NEW ORLEANS-GILBERT COLLEGE, NEW ORLEANS, LA.

This institution is located on St. Charles Avenue, New Orleans, La., with a campus of three acres and seven buildings, and is one of the most valuable properties of the Board. It is one of the few schools not having grounds adequate for expansion. The Board has a committee with Resident Bishop Jones, chairman, seeking a new site. There need be no haste in the matter, as the present property is so envired that it yearly increases in value.

The large Methodist constituency in New Orleans among Negroes, and the larger Negro population of Louisiana, makes this institution one having great opportunity for service. A few years ago it was really a grade school with only a few students in high school and college work. Now, out of an enrollment of 556, more than 400 are taking work in high-school and college courses. The Louisiana Conference loyally supports the institution. Its valuable property, large attendance and vast constituency, assures its future.

GILBERT INDUSTRIAL INSTITUTE AND THE ORPHANS' HOME

It seemed best to transfer the work of Gilbert Industrial Institute to New Orleans, and locate it on the same grounds with New Orleans College, in order that its work might reach a large number of young people, and that after graduation from Gilbert they might find it easier to take the wider preparation of the college. This arrangement has been working admirably.

The Orphanage, which was located at Baldwin and carried on in connection with Gilbert Institute, in recent years has had but a feeble existence. Recently the Woman's Home Missionary Society determined to establish an orphanage among our Negro membership in the South. After investigation of various sites, it was decided to build the new orphanage on the foundation of the one established by Dr. W. D. Godman and Dr., afterwards Bishop J. P. Newman, years ago at Baldwin. The Board of Managers has transferred to the Woman's Home Missionary Society the 30 acres of land in Baldwin on which for many years Gilbert Institute and the Orphans' Home were operated. We have also paid over with the land and buildings, the Orphans' Home endowment amounting to $14,000, held by the Board of Education for Negroes, and between six and seven thousand dollars held by the local Board of Trustees at New Orleans.

The Woman's Home Missionary Society has reconstructed the buildings and enlarged the facilities, so that it is a real orphanage, where the fatherless and motherless children of our Negro people in all that region may be taken in and cared for under the auspices of the Church of their parents.

RUST COLLEGE, HOLLY SPRINGS, MISS.

With 60 acres for a campus and 10 buildings this school is strategically located in North Mississippi, between Birmingham and Memphis, and has always served a large constituency. Improvements upon the plant have been made and equipment installed and new property purchased amounting to $30,000. A new classroom building is one of the additions; and another building to house the Science Department will be ready for the next scholastic year. Five houses and lots opposite the campus have been purchased and are being prepared for residences of married teachers. The institution is in the day of its greatest prosperity in patronage and usefulness.

GEORGE R. SMITH COLLEGE, SEDALIA, MO.

This school is located so as to serve the constituents of the two Negro Conferences and Negroes generally in Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma. It is one of the smallest of the system, but maintains an ever-increasing record. There are 24 acres and one large building in the plant which houses all of the activities of the school.

During 1921-1922 one of the students of George R. Smith won the American Legion medal for the best essay, and another a second prize for an essay on "Should the United States Prohibit Immigration for Five Years?" in a contest of all Negro colleges in Missouri.

The entire plant has been renovated and new equipment installed at a cost of $16,618.02.

The lady whose benefaction made possible the institution still lives and continues her interest.

The future of the school is handicapped by the need of additional buildings, which will be provided as soon as funds are available.

PHILANDER SMITH COLLEGE, LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

Every effort is being made to get the schools now located in congested, downtown sections out upon new sites with ample grounds for expansion in the years to come. In line with this policy, a new site of 42 acres costing $42,000 has been secured for Philander Smith College. The site is high, overlooking much of the city, two and one-half miles from the business section, and within two city blocks of two lines of street railway. When sale has been made of the old property and sufficient funds available from the Church, a group of buildings will be erected on the new site.

The Arkansas State Board of Education has given Philander Smith College a rating as the leading institution in the State for the education of the Negro. This school has supplied one-half of the Negro teachers of the State. In buildings, equipment and faculty, while it now leads all the rest, the new site provides a future for the school surpassing any in the State.

WALDEN COLLEGE, NASHVILLE, TENN.

In the paragraph upon Meharry Medical College reference was made to the transfer of the old Walden property to Meharry and the purchase of a new location for Walden. This new site of 9 acres with two large brick and one cement block building, is another outstanding achievement of the quadrennium. The new property cost $155,000 and is deeded to and entirely under the control of the Board. The old Walden property was jointly controlled by a local Board of Trustees and The Board of Education for Negroes, each having a deed to a part of the buildings and grounds of the school. This made difficult the handling of the institution. This joint control has been entirely eliminated, and the new Walden property sustains the same relation to The Board of Education for Negroes as does all other of our school property. Improvements have been made upon the new Walden and equipment installed amounting to $42,492.33, making a total of $197,492.33 expended in the location of the institution in its new home.

In line with the civil-service policy of the Board, a former professor of Philander Smith College, Thomas Russell Davis, a graduate of Howard University and Chicago University, was elected president, and the strongest faculty ever employed by the institution was secured.

The new Walden site overlooks the entire city of Nashville. Surrounding the site are many acres of vacant land which may be purchased for the future expansion of the school. This school never had a greater future than is now ahead of it. From the opening day it has had all the students that could be accommodated.

WILEY COLLEGE, MARSHALL, TEXAS

This school has the largest college student body of any in the system. The plant consists of 53 acres with 14 buildings. The growth in college students has been phenomenal. In 1920 there were 133 college students. The peak of college enrollment for the quadrennium reached 219 students.

In the enlargement of the Science Department and the library, together with other improvements, $45,000 has been expended.

The Texas State Board of Education has certified this institution for a class "A" rating as a college. This school furnishes more trained teachers for college and high-school work than any other in the system, and is regarded as the leading college in Texas for the education of the Negro.

CENTRAL ALABAMA INSTITUTE, BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

During an electrical storm in the summer of 1923, the main building and contents at this institution were totally destroyed. The building was known as Brainerd Hall, made possible by a gift from Mrs. I. D. Brainerd, of Waterville, New York, in memory of a deceased son. This building housed most of the activities of the institution, so that when it was destroyed there was nothing to do but to close the school until the plant can be rebuilt.

The school's patronizing territory is the State of Alabama. Its location, away from a car line or modern means of reaching same, has been its principal handicap. Adequate time is required to consult all the interests involved in the location of the school, so that this handicap to its growth may be removed, and that the re-established plant shall meet all the requirements of a first-class secondary school.

THE DAYTONA NORMAL AND INDUSTRIAL INSTITUTE, DAYTONA, FLA.

One of the most romantic and thrilling stories in Negro educational life is the founding and development of this school. Seventeen years ago Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune, then an humble Negro woman out of the cotton fields of South Carolina, but now one of the prominent women of the Negro race, had a vision of how to meet the needs of the Negro youth of Florida. She went over into Florida, as did Paul to Macedonia, and with this vision she secured five dollars which was paid as earnest money on a lot in Daytona, Florida. With the aid of friends, the Daytona school has developed until it now represents a property valued at $250,000.

It was proposed that Cookman Institute, a small school located at Jacksonville, Florida, be merged with The Daytona Normal and Industrial Institute. After a conference with the principal and Board of Trustees of the Daytona Institute, and full consideration of the same by the Board of Managers of The Board of Education for Negroes, it was agreed to take over The Daytona Normal and Industrial Institute, sell the Cookman property, and use the funds accruing from the sale, with other appropriations, to further develop the Daytona school. The Board of Trustees of the Daytona Institute deeded to The Board of Education for Negroes their entire property estimated at $250,000. Thus, over night, the plant of The Board of Education for Negroes in Florida leaped from that of a valuation of $62,000 to one of $312,000. From among the smallest, our educational plant now becomes the largest school for Negro youth in that State.

The institution is doing a valuable work in home economics and handcraft industries. There is a hospital which is training Negro nurses for both races in that section. With the merger, the school becomes co-educational, and the first year registers a student attendance of 325. Mrs. Bethune continues as president of the merged institution.

Its contributors and supporters include a large number of the most representative people of both races in the nation. The merger was approved by the important educational agencies in the East, having funds at their disposal for school endowments. A real far-sighted and statesmanlike task has been accomplished in this merger.

HAVEN INSTITUTE AND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC, MERIDIAN, MISS.

Just at the opportune moment when the Board was considering the future of Haven Institute, that it might more effectively serve the black belt of Mississippi, which is its patronizing territory, there came an opportunity to purchase the grounds and buildings of the Meridian College and Conservatory, an institution for White people. The plant consisted of 100 acres, 75 being in a state of cultivation, with three large brick and stone buildings, a central heating plant and five professors' residences, the whole plant being situated three miles from the Meridian Union Station. The entire property, real estate, equipment and furnishings, was appraised by the owners at $300,000. It was purchased by The Board of Education for Negroes for $155,000. By this change Haven Institute, formerly a small school with property valued at $32,000, becomes one of the most extensive secondary institutions in the South, with a minimum property valuation of $210,000.

During the first year all elementary grades below the fifth were discontinued, yet the attendance doubled. With an attendance of four hundred thirty-five, the institution advanced from that of an insignificant local school to one of national importance, with students from a dozen States.

It is the purpose to develop this institution along musical lines, and thus furnish in the black belt of Mississippi a training school for developing the musical talent for which the Negro is so noted. The purchase of this great property and the marked success the school has had in all phases of school life has been the greatest single influence in the history of Meridian in promoting cordial race relations. The glee clubs of the Conservatory have sung before the Kiwanis Clubs of Meridian and of the State.

MORRISTOWN NORMAL AND INDUSTRIAL COLLEGE, MORRISTOWN, TENN.

During the quadrennium plans, specifications and contracts were let for three new buildings at Morristown Normal and Industrial College at Morristown, Tenn., to take the place of the main building destroyed by fire. This main building contained dormitories, classrooms, with dining-room and kitchen. A dormitory for boys, Wallace Hall, and a dormitory for girls, Crary Hall, with the dining-room and kitchen, Kenwood Hall, located between these two buildings, far enough apart so that a fire originating in one may not necessarily destroy the other, and yet connected together by covered passageways, are about finished and will be used during the current school year. This whole outfit, including furnishings, cost $175,000, $100,000 of which is provided by the Board, $25,000 from the fire insurance, and the balance collected by Dr. Hill from friends of the institution. The City of Morristown contributes $10,000 towards these buildings, in view of the fact that the institution does the school work for the Negro children of that city. With these new buildings finished and occupied, this school has one of the most complete and up-to-date plants anywhere in the South. Land adjacent to our property has been purchased, so that, with the farm of 300 acres, there are 375 acres in our plant, with 8 buildings.

Great credit is due Dr. Judson S. Hill, the President, who was and is the first president of the institution, now closing more than forty-three years of service as President.

PRINCESS ANNE ACADEMY, PRINCESS ANNE, MD.

The work of Princess Anne Academy is being rapidly elevated to that of Junior College grade, to conform to the requirements of the Federal Government. The plant consists of 117 acres of campus with farm and forest land valued at $11,000; with twelve buildings and three teachers' cottages worth $85,000.

The courses of study are about equally divided between scholastic subjects and the industries. All the work of the place is done by the directors and students, excepting certain jobs demanding special skill. The addition of a director of horticulture and teacher of botany has aroused considerable interest among the students, and resulted in marked improvement in the appearance of the grounds and productivity of the orchards.

An annual farmers' conference, with county demonstration work, makes the teaching of the Academy of practical value to the community, and serves constantly to extend the influence of the school throughout the entire State.

STUDENT CHANGES IN ATTENDANCE AND GRADE

One of the most marked evidences of growth in the schools is in the attendance and grade of students. With but two exceptions in all the schools the elementary grades have been discontinued below the fifth, and this work turned over to the State. Model grade schools are maintained, only as a requirement of the State in the training of teachers. In the discontinuance of the grades each institution has been benefited, in that it is more largely doing the work of a college, or is giving secondary and industrial education, as intended in their founding. The State is more largely performing its duty to its Negro citizens

* The figures for The Daytona Normal and Industrial Institute, Daytona, Fla., are inserted instead of Cookman Institute, as deeds to this property have been made since Mar. 6, 1924. This is therefore an addition to the auditor's report in order to bring the list down to date.

† New endowment secured during the quadrennium added to the total property valuation would bring the figure to over four million dollars, as stated in the paragraph "Changes in Schools and Presidencies."

‡ The difference in figures given in the text and the above table is due to the time between auditor's report as of June 30, 1923, and date when this report is written in which we are also accounting for additions, as in Morristown and some other schools.

in the erection of new buildings and providing teachers for elementary and high-school education. The State is also raising the standards required by teachers. The 468 teachers and 6,862 students in our institutions is an advance over the last quadrennium, even though the elementary grades below the fifth have been discontinued. The growth in college enrollment may be seen as follows: In 1920 there were 332; in 1923 the enrollment was 632; an advance of 300 over the last quadrennium. The high-school enrollment in 1920 was 1,550; in 1923 the enrollment was 2,417; an advance of 867 over the last quadrennium.

GRADUATES, AND WHAT BECOMES OF THEM

The work of the schools is mainly that of educating trained ministers for the pulpit, physicians for the sick room, dentists and pharmacists, teachers for the classroom, business men, artisans and home makers. In this field no system of schools has contributed more than ours. Some of the most representative positions now held by Negroes in the United States are filled by graduates of these institutions. In Atlanta, Ga., graduates of our schools include 48 physicians and dentists; 30 public school teachers; 10 ministers; one real estate dealer; 8 clerks in government and other services; 16 housewives; besides proprietors of drug stores and grocery stores, and chiefs of departments of insurance. This is but a suggestion of what has really been accomplished by the more than 31,560 graduates from our institutions and the 206,545 undergraduates enrolled in the history of the Board's work. One-half of all the Negro pharmacists, physicians and dentists, practicing in the United States graduated from Meharry Medical College.

STANDARDS OF EDUCATION

In the development of education for the Negro in the Southern States standards are now higher than at any time in the past. In most of the States two years of college work are required to secure a certificate to teach in the elementary schools, and four years of college work with an A.B. degree to teach in the high schools.

The classification of Meharry Medical College carries with it the requirement that a student to enter the Freshman Class of the Medical School without examination must have graduated from an institution of learning, accredited by some recognized standardizing agency acceptable to The American Medical Association. Every effort is being made, consistent with the funds available, to secure accredited rating of the schools by all standardizing agencies, including State Boards of Education.

An effort is being made in co-operation with other denominational boards, to secure a new investigation of the schools, to take the place of one made by the Phelps-Stokes Fund and the United States Bureau of Education in 1912. The greatest advance in the development of our schools has been made within the last twelve years. Much of this has been made possible by the Centenary.

RELIGIOUS LIFE

Our institutions put emphasis upon Christian training. The schools have regular religious services during the week and on Sunday; while all religious organizations for young people, such as the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A., Epworth League, Bands of Africa, have organizations among the students. Revivals of religion are held in all the schools, and every attempt made to have the young people declare for Christ and join some religious denomination while securing their education.

In some of the schools during the quadrennium all the students became followers of Jesus Christ, and declared that their lives should be consecrated to Christian service. It is from these students we have been getting our Bishops, ministers, missionaries and teachers, and must get them in larger numbers in the future.

MINISTERS IN OUR NEGRO CONFERENCES FROM OUR SCHOOLS

In the report of the educational preparation of 1,183 ministers in the Negro Conferences, recently made in The Ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church, issued by the Department of Life Service, 933 are reported as having something of a high school, college and theological training. It is safe to say that seventy-five per cent of these men got whatever training they possess above the eighth grade in our institutions.

Our two active Negro Bishops, and most of our District Superintendents and pastors of our largest churches in the Negro Conferences, are graduates and undergraduates of the institutions. The truthfulness of the statement made in the introductory paragraph, to wit, "without these schools the Negro churches would be without leaders and helpless," is readily seen.

Moreover, these schools have furnished in hundreds of cases wives for the preachers and thousands of loyal workers in the pews.

SUPPORT OF NEGRO CONFERENCES

While the education of the Negro is the work of the whole Church, it must nevertheless be gratifying to know that the Negro ministers and members are registering increasingly as benevolent givers. Once they were entirely objects of missionary and benevolent interest; now they are partners with others in their own uplift and that of the world. The giving of the Negro members for the benevolent activities of the Church, amounting to $1,796,601.02 during the past four years, is remarkable. It is four times as much as they gave during the previous quadrennium.

This increased giving is one of the important expressions of the value of education which our institutions offer. The best and largest givers are those of the Negro members, whose progress, prosperity and ability to give, can be directly traced to their educational training and preparation for life's tasks. In the future, more largely than in the past, our schools must look to these Conferences for special help in endowment, and to supplement the giving of the whole Church in meeting their growing needs.

ENDOWMENTS

But few of the schools have any endowment. Some have made a beginning. Only one has an amount exceeding $100,000. The total amount held by this Board for endowments for the schools and for the general work amounts to $404,704.81. This does not include the Meharry, Morgan College, nor the Gammon endowment, each being held by the Board of Trustees of the institution. As rapidly as possible endowments should be provided for each school in sufficient amount to take care of at least the salaries of the presidents and faculties, leaving only the upkeep and increase of equipment to be provided for by the annual offerings of the churches. During the Centenary period some additions to the endowments have been made, and it is possible in the near future to put this question before the constituencies in such manner as that they shall be willing to make an annual contribution for this purpose. Philanthropists and persons of means should be encouraged to give large sums toward the endowments of these institutions. Buildings and equipments are necessary, but in the long run a school must have an adequate endowment to insure its permanency.

Realizing that the growing needs of the schools make imperative an endowment campaign, the Board through the Secretaries has already organized the alumni of the institutions in many of the leading cities of the country. These organizations are inter-alumni including groups of graduates of each institution who will give and work along the same general line, it being understood that whatever each group raises, the same will go to their Alma Mater. There is this nucleus of organizations awaiting the expiration of the Centenary period, which will be put to work in a large way throughout the United States in the interest of endowment. The purpose is that the endowment campaigns shall be thus kept out of the churches and in no way interfere with the World Service Program.

SCHOLARSHIPS

It is very essential that a school should have fine buildings, adequate equipment and a well-trained and competent faculty, but no school can be a success without a very considerable number of the brightest and most promising young people from among the people whom it serves. While conditions among the Negro people of the South are continually improving, and more and more parents are able to pay the expenses of their children in these schools where leaders are prepared, there are still a very large number of promising boys and girls who, through no fault of their own, are handicapped and prevented from taking the training necessary for their full usefulness. There should be provision to help all such young people. The race needs them, the Nation needs them, the Church needs them. In order, therefore, that such young people may be helped through school, scholarships ranging from fifty to one hundred fifty or two hundred dollars each should be provided in all of these schools. The Board already has a nucleus amounting to $9,271.32, the interest of which has been of great service to a few of the students. This ought to be increased to at least a half million of dollars, in order that some of the most promising young people of the Negro race might be helped to an education and to a place of useful service among their people.

A SUMMARY OF ACHIEVEMENTS DUE TO CENTENARY HELP

1. Increase in the number and salaries of the teachers, so that the annual salary budget is now $200,000 instead of $100,000 five years ago. The increase is necessitated by the growth of the schools and the rising cost of living.

2. Over $100,000 expended for repairs and improvements to the buildings and additions to the equipment.

3. Heating plants installed at all of the institutions. Not one smoky and dangerous stove or fireplace remains. Greater comfort and safety to life and property.

4. Very considerable additions to laboratories and libraries, with greatly improved provision for science departments.

5. An entire new school, appraised by the owners at $300,000, and valued by us at $210,000, purchased at Meridian, Miss., for Haven Institute and Conservatory of Music, making this one of the strongest institutions of the system:

6. A new site and buildings, with improvements and equipment, costing $197,492.33, purchased at Nashville, Tenn., for Walden College. Former site and buildings of Walden turned over for expansion and growth of Meharry Medical College.

7. Two hundred thousand dollars paid toward a $590,000 endowment for Meharry Medical College. Three hundred thousand dollars of this half million contributed by the General Education Board and the Carnegie Corporation, and in addition an annual appropriation of $10,000 toward its budget, which ten thousand was to supplement an appropriation of $15,000 for the same purpose by the General Education Board, making possible the listing of this school as an A-grade medical college, which has now been done.

8. In addition to above, the property of Walden College, valued at $100,000, transferred to trustees of Meharry Medical College.

9. Administration and school building with refectory erected at Wiley College, Marshall, Texas, and several old buildings renovated and improved, at a cost of $125,000.

10. Administration and school building constructed at Clark University, Atlanta, Ga., provided with modern furnishings and equipment, at a cost of $250,000.

11. Girls' dormitory, refectory and classroom building, erected at Bennett College, Greensboro, N. C., together with equipment, at a cost of $125,000.

12. Purchase of eighty-five acres for new site, and $150,000 expended in erection of Carnegie Hall and other buildings on this new site for Morgan College, Baltimore, Md.

13. Model elementary school building erected at Rust College, Holly Springs, Miss., and other property for professors' residences purchased, costing $30,000.

14. New administration and classroom building, with chapel and rooms for Department of Missions under the Stewart Missionary Foundation for Africa, at Gammon Theological Seminary, costing $120,000, half of which comes from Centenary and half from Gammon funds.

15. New site of forty-two acres for Philander Smith College at Little Rock, Ark., costing $42,000. Present location in cramped quarters, with no opportunity for expansion, to be sold.

16. Endowment of Claflin College, Orangeburg, S. C., increased to $128,000.

17. Three new buildings, boys' dormitory, girls' dormitory and refectory, at Morristown Normal and Industrial College, to take the place of the main building destroyed by fire, the three buildings at a cost of $175,000.

18. Cookman Institute, Jacksonville, Fla., merged with The Daytona Normal and Industrial Institute at Daytona, Fla., thereby adding to the value of the Board a quarter of a million dollars' worth of buildings, land and equipment, and giving to our educational work in Florida a secondary school of the highest grade, and in a more central location.

19. The enlargement of the Samuel Huston plant by the purchase of additional property and other improvements upon the plant and installation of equipment amounting to $32,000.

20. The renovation of the George R. Smith College interior and exterior and new equipment and furnishings at a cost of $16,618.02.

21. The repairing and equipping New Orleans-Gilbert College and increasing their endowment to $99,279.97.

22. "Methodist Adventures in Negro Education," an up-to-date statement of the work of the Board, published and copies sent to all pastors, district superintendents, bishops and colleges.

THE NEGRO'S EDUCATIONAL NEEDS, THE EXODUS, AND THE AWAKENED SOUTH

One of the real evidences of progress by the Negro race, the direct result of the education of their leaders through our schools and those of others, is the awakened interest in the education of their children. The exodus of nearly a million to the North has back of it, as one important reason, the desire to secure better educational advantages for the youth. In the past and, too, largely in the present, the appropriations by city and county in the South for public education of the Negro, have been wholly inadequate and out of anything like right proportion.

In the seventeen Southern States, including the District of Columbia, there are 8,900,002 Negroes as against 24,132,205 Whites. The investment in school property for Whites is $338,763,740, and for Negroes $31,609,252. There was expended for the education of the Negro in these same States in 1919-1920, $20,721,404, and for Whites $170,154,205.

This unequal distribution of public funds in the past has been among the causes driving Negroes away, while causing those who stay to arouse themselves and petition for more equitable treatment through inter-racial committees; so that there is a general awakening in the South in public education for the Negro. The awakening, however, imposes more responsibility upon our schools to care for those who are now better prepared to enter, because of the increase of public high schools and more efficiently conducted elementary schools.

THE SCHOOLS AND HOMES OF THE WOMAN'S HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY

In connection with many of the schools of The Board of Education for Negroes, there are model homes carried on by The Woman's Home Missionary Society. These homes are valuable additions to the work of the schools, inasmuch as they furnish an opportunity for many of the young women in attendance at the schools to receive training in all the arts of home-making. The home life of the graduates of these schools constitutes one of the principal means by which the uplift of the Negro race in the South is to be accomplished.

THE PROMOTION OF GOOD WILL BETWEEN THE RACES

One of the most humane and profitable movements at work in the South where our institutions are located is the inter-racial conference between the leaders of the White and Negro races. One of these movements, known as the Southern Inter-Racial Commission, has headquarters in Atlanta, and the other is the Inter-Racial Relations Commission of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. These movements have as their definite objective the promotion of good will and helpful service between the two races by conference and action in knowing the mind of each other, arriving at conclusions that are just and fair, and putting these conclusions into action, that results may be obtained. By this spirit and work of co-operation good feeling has taken the place of ill-feeling, the Negro is receiving justice in the courts, fair dealing in the administration of the public funds for education, and is being benefited in countless other ways. Our institutions have contributed through the efforts of Presidents and Principals on the ground as members of the Commission, and our Board through a small appropriation. Our purpose has been to have this work succeed, which makes for proper understanding of our common task. Our Bishops resident in the South are in active touch with the movement.

No more helpful piece of educational work is going on than through these movements that make for peace and the feeling of mutual helpfulness and dependence. This finds expression in new school houses built, better teachers employed, lighted and paved streets in Negro quarters, cessation of anger and bad feeling, and the bringing in of the spirit of tolerance and service. Our schools have been directly benefited by these movements, as in one case where the four streets were paved surrounding the campus of one of our institutions, the city paying for much of the cost.

RETIRING ALLOWANCE

No greater sacrifice has been made by any servants in the Church than that of the officers and teachers long in the service of our Board and the schools. Many of these have been connected with the Board and schools for decades. One of the imperative duties facing us in the future is that of providing a fund sufficiently large to care for these servants of the Church. The Board hopes to be in position during the next quadrennium to develop a fund that will in some measure meet the needs.

LINCOLN DAY

Each year increases the value of the observance of Lincoln Day in the interest of the work of Negro uplift and education. The programs prepared by the Board are being used more extensively each year. As the years go by, undoubtedly this day will be observed more and more by the churches as a sacred memory, not only of the immortal Lincoln, but also as a reminder of the duty that still remains to finish the work of freedom, by the emancipation of the mind and heart and developing the latent energies and abilities of the Negro race.

The Christian Educator is also sent out four times annually, and is a source of information on the work of the Board, and the general education of the Negro in Church and State. The effort is made to keep the Church informed upon the marvelous advance in the Southern States in the education of the Negro, for while one or two State Normal Schools for Negroes are located in each State, yet the large number of teachers to take charge of the new Public Schools must be furnished by the denominational schools.

If all of the publications of the individual Boards could be merged into one publication, and a part of the spaces be assigned to each Board, the putting of all the information under one cover and into the hands of the ministers from month to month in such compact and preservable form, would be more useful to the pastors and other leaders. Such a magazine would be available during the year as might be desired, and more likely to be kept for reference than a dozen or more smaller publications.

"METHODIST ADVENTURES IN NEGRO EDUCATION"

Mr. Jay S. Stowell, representing the Committee on Conservation and Advance, made a special trip to all of the schools, and as a result of his observations and studies wrote the book "Methodist Adventures in Negro Education," a copy of which has been sent to the Bishops, the District Superintendents and the Pastors, and has been kept on hand and sent out in answer to hundreds of requests from persons wishing information concerning the work of the Board.

ANNUITIES

The Board holds $115,209.86 in annuities, the interest of which goes to the annuitant during lifetime. The interest on these annuities takes care of the payments that are made to the donor semi-annually, so that they are no burden upon other funds of the Board. At the decease of the annuitant, the principal amounts are turned into the general fund, or otherwise, as the annuitants direct. Many persons not able to do without the income of their funds during lifetime, turn them over to this Board, or one of the other Boards of the Church, and receive the income during lifetime, with the confidence that after their decease the principal amount will go on forever fulfilling a noble purpose, according to their desires.

NEW SYSTEM OF BOOKKEEPING

From the beginning of the work of these schools each institution worked out a business and bookkeeping system of its own. The Board has been unifying and standardizing these systems for several years past. A year or so ago a committee consisting of experienced administrators and expert bookkeepers and accountants was appointed to consider the system of bookkeeping used in all of the schools and in the office at Cincinnati, and so to adjust these as to produce a new improved standard system both for the office at Cincinnati and for the schools. This has now been done. All of the bookkeepers were brought to Cincinnati and spent several days receiving instruction in the new system, and also familiarizing them with the workings of the business administrations of the Board and of the schools. A monthly, itemized report of all the business transactions of the schools is furnished to the office at Cincinnati, so that the entire business of each of the schools is recorded, audited and approved by the central office.

AUDITOR'S REPORT COVERING RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES FOR THE QUADRENNIUM

The total income of the Board from all sources for the four years of the quadrennium amounted to $3,283,743.40, which is an average of $820,935.85 per year. This is the largest sum that has been at the disposal of the Board in any quadrennium since the beginning of the schools.

Complete and detailed reports of the receipts and expenditures, with a full statement of all trust funds held by the Board, are included in this report. This statement is the audit of the Committee on Conservation and Advance and represents their findings after carefully going over all of the receipts and expenditures of the Board for the entire quadrennium.

The Board of Education for Negroes, Cincinnati, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:

In accordance with your instructions I have made an examination of the books of the Freedmen's Aid Society and its successor, The Board of Education for Negroes, for the four years ended June 30, 1923, and now beg to submit the following report thereon.

Owing to the limited time at my disposal and the large amount of work to be covered, I found it necessary to content myself with tests as to the accuracy of the records relating to cash receipts and disbursements. The assets and liabilities of the Board were also examined, and are shown in the following statement, together with those at June 30, 1919, which are given for purposes of comparison.

Yours truly,

(Signed) H. K. WRIGHT,
Auditor, Committee on Conservation and Advance.

INVESTMENT OF TRUST FUNDS

The trust funds in the care of this Board, amounting to $429,-574.92, are all carefully invested in real estate mortgages and other high-grade securities. An Investment Committee passes on all these securities.

The endowment funds of Gammon Theological Seminary are in the care of The Union Trust Company of Cincinnati, one of the strongest financial institutions in any city in the country. No losses of any kind have been sustained in any of these funds, and the interest on them has been paid promptly.

AUDITS OF SCHOOL ACCOUNTS

The books of the schools are audited regularly by the regular auditor of the Board. In the new system of bookkeeping and accounting for the schools, where duplicate records of all receipts and disbursements of the schools come to the office of the Board, an audit of the school accounts is made bi-monthly.

FIRE INSURANCE

Fire insurance is carried on all the buildings and their contents. The cost of this insurance for school buildings is high.

EDUCATIONAL DIRECTOR

Dr. John L. Seaton, as Educational Director, has given most valuable service during the quadrennium. The academic grade of the institutions has been raised, and there is marked improvement in the classroom work being done by the teachers. The work which has been accomplished by the Educational Director in co-operation with the Secretaries of the Board and the Presidents of the schools may be stated as follows:

1. Classification of teachers.

2. New courses of study for both secondary schools and colleges.
3. Card-record system.
4. Beginnings of effective library organizations.
5. Better organization of laboratories.

While these are outstanding results of the Director's work, he has also been of large service to the Presidents as he has gone from school to school. In the conferences with the teachers and visits to classrooms he has rendered a service which is telling in the results which follow.

FACING THE FUTURE

The Board faces the future with the brightest outlook in all its history. With no indebtedness upon any of its property, and with all of its schools in greater favor with the Church, patrons, alumni, students and the public, there is ahead of us the opportunity for the best work yet done in the education of our Negro youth.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION

To the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church:

FOREWORD

The Methodist Episcopal Church is committed to schools and colleges. If anyone doubts it, let him read the reports of the several Boards. The Epworth League has Institutes; the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension has special schools, and special students in the universities; the General Deaconess Board and the Woman's Home Missionary Society have their educational institutions of several types; the Board of Education for Negroes is wholly devoted to a system of schools, colleges and professional schools, and may justly boast of Meharry Medical School that has educated nearly one-half of the well-trained Negro medical and dental men of the United States; the Commission on Conference Courses of Study is rapidly developing as a school. Our Sunday Schools are steadily becoming more and more truly schools. Our universities are building up schools of religious education. Two of our Boards are following Methodist boys and girls into the State universities. Not only our rich men but our people generally are endowing colleges. Theological schools dare to make their wants known without apology, and no one prevents them. Once only a few rich men supported them; now they appeal to every one. Those who know foreign missions as they are, read with a thrill the long, long list of schools, colleges and universities. The Church has made the school its method.

An interest in education goes back to our very beginnings. Notwithstanding misgivings, the early American Methodists founded schools. Against very great difficulties the schools held on, and worked ahead.

Hardly realizing what she did, the Church followed an impulse characteristic of Wesleyanism. It has been said that the controlling impulse of Methodism may be thus put: "It needs to be done. Let us do it. Let us do it now." It is recorded somewhere that Wesley urged Methodists not to neglect "the means." He did not neglect them. Indeed, when suitable means were not at hand he used what he could get or invented new ones. If preconceived opinions got in his way, he amputated his opinions. He was prejudiced in favor of preaching indoors, but finding church doors were shut upon him, he refused to be silent and preached in a church yard from his father's tomb. A man of learning himself, he knew how to use unlearned men as preachers when others were not to be had. His life is full of inventions.

American Methodists used his inventions, and made inventions of their own. Without churches, they preached in school houses, in kitchens, in barns, and when these were not large enough, they worshiped in groves and lived in tented fields. Prejudiced mildly against schools, nevertheless they founded them; prejudiced enthusiastically against theological schools, they founded them, under the disinfected name of Biblical Institutes. If we smile at their inconsistency, we would do well to look to our own day and our own doings. And this leads us to the end for which this is written. The college has been a great force in the progress of the Church.

The schools related to the Board of Education include institutions of all types, from secondary schools to universities and professional schools of the highest grade. With the years they have grown in size and service. They are the sources from which the Church has drawn leaders and contributed a great company of trained servants of the public. They are fountains of sound thinking and inspiration.

Our colleges are in purpose, methods and character, the development of a few educational centers, which in early days laid foundations for the widespread educational work of to-day. To New England the Church owes a great debt. At Middletown, Connecticut, in earliest days were laid down solid foundations and from that center have gone out a multitude of leaders in every department of the Church. Scholars at Boston have had a preeminent influence upon the thinking of our ministry. Sons of Wesleyan and of Yale created at Evanston another center of influence of a distinct character. This statement is little more than a suggestion, for wherever the Church provides the scholar's chair, it sets up a throne of influence. Were we to count over the names of those who now carry the heavy responsibilities of the Church, the graduates of our colleges would answer again and again. Were such instances few, they might be accounted for on the ground of unusual ability or chance. But the instances are not few, but very many, and no explanation of this fact that leaves out the school can be accepted as sufficient. Education and schooling are not the same, but they are closely related. The school is the usual and surest method of preparation for leadership.

The attitude of the Church to its schools has been generous and trustful; the attitude of the schools to the Church has been generous and loyal. The Church has not attempted to control the teaching of the schools—it has not dictated in the choice of teachers or in the matter of their teaching. Nor have the schools been less generous in their attitude to the Church.

In general, the schools of the Church, though feeling the pressure of demands upon them heavy in view of their means, are yet in wholesome condition, and well equipped to serve well both the State and the Church.

It is a sad duty to report the sudden death of Mr. Charles Scott, Jr., who served as a Trustee, and as a member of the Finance Committee for years. Mr. James A. Develin, appointed to fill Mr. Scott's place, died suddenly before he was able to serve. Mr. John D. Slayback, once one of the most useful Trustees, for many years retired, died in March, 1924. How can words justly acknowledge the worth of these faithful servants?

To the Trustees of the Board, and particularly to the members of the Administrative and Finance Committees, to the Treasurer, and to the Legal Counsel, all of whom have served without pay, the Church is indebted for services highly efficient, rendered at the cost of much time. The Trustees have been faithful to their duties, constant in attendance at the meetings of the Board, fully informed upon all its affairs, and determining in its policy and acts. Their share in the work of the Board has not been perfunctory, but very real.

The administrative staff, of the Board is not larger in number than four years ago, or eight years ago. The total of salaries is about twenty per cent higher than eight years ago, but not greater than four years ago. The number of clerical and accounting force has not been increased nor the cost increased during the quadrennium. Without exception, these servants deserve the approval of the Church.

A. W. HARRIS,
Corresponding Secretary.

PREFACE

The Quadrennial Report to General Conference usually has taken a traditional form. A short historical statement and an account of specific developments during the four years occupied the larger part of the report. The remainder consisted mostly of statistical tables placed at intervals in the text or assembled at the end. In a few cases useful hortatory materials were added.

When the General Conference of 1924 drew near the Corresponding Secretary called a meeting of the staff to consider the content and form of this report. Since a great period is coming to a close and portentous changes may be in prospect, it was thought best to tell in brief and somewhat informal manner not merely the achievements of the Board of Education, but the thrilling story of Methodist education in the new world.

This decision has governed the arrangement of chapters and to a large extent the selection of materials. A glance at the beginnings is followed by a longer look at the processes by which many institutions with indifferent or conflicting elements have become a unified system. Attention is given also to methods that have proved necessary, to goals that have been gained, and to possible future victories that challenge the church.

In preparing this report I have been guided by the advice of the Corresponding Secretary and generously aided by all of my colleagues. To a degree that cannot readily be indicated I am indebted to them for suggestions concerning the materials here presented and the form in which they appear.

JOHN L. SEATON.

A GLIMPSE THROUGH THE YEARS

ROMANCE

The story of education is alive with human interest. How far has the race come? How well does maturity discharge its eternal debt to youth? Does it transmit with increasing effectiveness knowledge, the power to think, and the wisdom to act?

To an extraordinary degree the Methodist Episcopal Church is concerned with these questions. More than twenty millions of people in this country are less than twenty-one years of age. At least two millions of these belong by choice or affiliation to our own Church. As a rule the youth of the day find in the schools and other educational organizations the preparation that for better or for worse must serve the world of the morrow. It is vitally important that education be so organized and conducted as to result in good citizenship and Christian life.

Cokesbury College. The first venture of American Methodism in higher education was Cokesbury College, named for Bishops Coke and Asbury. The idea of a college, rather than a school, originated with Bishop Coke, a college man, and was reluctantly accepted by Bishop Asbury, a self-educated man. An agreement was reached by them and other leaders of the church before the famous Christmas Conference of 1784—the year after the close of the Revolution. With great enthusiasm the Conference heard the report, voted to found a college, and to locate it at Abingdon, Maryland. Thus began a romantic chapter in the history of education by the church.

The corner stone was laid in 1785. The building was speedily completed at a cost of about $20,000. That meant an average gift of more than one dollar for each member of the church in America. Translated into terms of labor it meant more than a day's wage—a long day at that—for the average working man.

A preparatory school was opened almost as soon as the roof was on the building, and the college department began work in 1787. Bishop Coke feared that the curriculum would hardly warrant the name "college." He said, however, in humorous explanation, "We give high names to things in America." Conflicts in administration and financial difficulties hampered the work. It came to a sudden end in December, 1795, when fire destroyed the building and its contents; "a sacrifice," wrote Bishop Asbury, "of £10,000 in about ten years. If any man should give me £10,000 to do and suffer again what I have done for that house I would not do it."

Cokesbury College had a brief and troubled existence. The elements fought against it. The people having recently passed through a long and destructive war had little to give, nor had they been trained to large benevolence. Perhaps, too, the college was founded in advance of sufficient demand; it never enrolled more than seventy students at one time. But in that pioneer period it offered to Methodist young people what then was regarded as a college education, uniting "the two greater ornaments of human beings, deep learning and genuine piety." It trained a few men for the ministry. It lifted high an ideal for future generations. The Cokesbury bell has gone to Goucher College. The Cokesbury spirit has gone everywhere.

Wesleyan University. Thirty-six years passed before Methodism had a permanent college. Wesleyan University was founded in 1831. It acquired the buildings and grounds vacated by "The American Literary, Scientific, and Military Academy." The property was valued at $30,000, and an endowment of $40,000 was raised. With this modest amount, a work of the greatest significance to the church was begun. It is worth noting that the endowment exceeded the value of the plant.

Westward Ho! From that day, Methodism continued to found institutions of higher learning as the pioneers moved westward. The great work of DePauw University (known at first as Indiana Asbury University) began in 1837 and of Ohio Wesleyan in 1842, while civilization west of the Alleghanies was young. Iowa, now the home of a strong and progressive Methodism, had a Methodist college four years before it became a State, and thirteen years before it had a State University. Baker University, to which Abraham Lincoln subscribed $100, was three years old when Kansas was admitted to the Union. The University of Denver, founded by John Evans, who previously had been the moving spirit in the establishment of Northwestern University, was an outpost of Christian civilization in the mountain region twelve years before Colorado became a State. Willamette University, founded in 1844, fifteen years in advance of the admission of Oregon, was the first institution of higher learning west of the Rocky Mountains. The College of the Pacific, formerly known as the University of the Pacific, founded in 1851, two years after the discovery of gold, and eighteen years before the establishment of the State university, had the first college of liberal arts and first medical school in California. A small company of men—two missionaries and six laymen—met in San José, January 6, 1851, and voted to establish a college under the name of California Wesleyan College. They were poor men; the times were troubled; orderly government was slow to come; prices were fantastically high. But in September, 1851, the College opened in the old "What Cheer House." From that day its doors have not been closed, though changes in name and organization have taken place, and during this year it is moving from San José to Stockton.

A Living Bond. These young and isolated colleges had few bonds of union with each other, and no center for the exchange of ideas and the unifying of effort. Something was needed, but no one knew precisely what. Then came a series of suggestive events. In 1860 a committee prepared a plan for an educational Board; in 1865 the General Centenary Committee proposed the raising of a connectional educational fund and of a "Sunday School Children's Fund"; in 1868 the same Committee recommended that a collection be taken annually on a given day for the Children's Fund. The necessity of administering these funds and of promoting education throughout the church led the General Conference to constitute a Board of Education which was chartered in 1869 by the State of New York.

A distinguished layman of New York, Mr. Charles C. North, who had been very active in organizing the Board, was chosen as Corresponding Secretary. The office was regarded as requiring only part time service of a somewhat occasional and incidental character. The records show that Mr. North did much important work, especially in tactful negotiations with the early Annual Conference educational societies.

The General Conference met in Brooklyn in 1872. Then the city was small. No bridge spanned the East River. Means of rapid transit were not in existence. The delegates traveled by ferries and cabs to the old Academy of Music where the sessions of the General Conference were held.

The Conference of 1872 was notable on account of several enactments. Probably the most important and constructive related to education. The Committee on Education presented the celebrated Report No. 6 which recommended the election of a Corresponding Secretary to give his full time to our educational interests. In a spirited debate the recommendation was denounced as "the craziest scheme yet offered." But it had valiant supporters, among them William Fairfield Warren, and was adopted almost unanimously. Dr. E. O. Haven was elected to the position, and to the perplexing task of bringing order out of chaos, and unity out of separation not unmixed with hostility. Thus began in the quiet little city of Brooklyn a new era for the church.

REALITIES OLD AND NEW

Much from Little. Education has grown large in the Methodist Episcopal Church. From one struggling school that never had more than 70 students, it has expanded into a great system with 32 secondary schools, 45 colleges and universities, and 41 professional schools—most of them connected with the universities. These schools have properties worth $40,000,000 and endowment to the amount of $47,000,000. Their annual budgets aggregate more than $12,000,000. They have 70,733 students, of whom 6,615 are in the secondary schools; 44,015 in the colleges and universities, and 20,103 in the professional schools. They have 3,608 teachers, highly educated and nobly inspired, who seek to train heart and hand for the work these students ought to do in the next generation.

The schools of the Board of Education for Negroes, the training schools of the General Deaconess Board, and the school systems maintained by the Missionary Boards and Societies, though not included in the summary, also belong to the great expansion of Methodist education. Nor do they complete the list. The schools of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and of the other branches of Methodism must be added.

Auxiliaries. The church early recognized that not all the educational work it ought to do can be accomplished within its own schools. It therefore authorized educational "auxiliaries." Various forms of work are now carried on by Wesley Foundations and similar organizations for the benefit of Methodist young people in tax-supported and private schools. The Conference Courses of Study for preachers who have not been trained in the theological schools also are of great historical and present consequence. A "Commission" selects the books and appoints an Educational Director to unify this form of ministerial training throughout the church. The work is being converted into an extension school, whose benefits will go each year to more than three thousand preachers; and from them to vast numbers in church and community.

An Active Partnership. The Board of Education is an active partner in the big work of education. It began with very small resources, $65,829.71, the returns from the "General Educational Fund" and the "Children's Offering for Education" taken in the Centenary celebration of 1866. Last year it had permanent funds amounting to $3,489,834, of which $1,889,383 were in outstanding student loans. In 1873 the total amount disbursed by the Board was $15,485; last year it was $1,561,463. At first, the Board had a Corresponding Secretary for only part time service and apparently no office secretary. In the first report of Dr. Haven, he argued that an office force would be necessary to enable the Board to do the work for which it was created. Action was slow to come and departmentalization was long delayed. But now the Board has an organized staff with definite assignment of major responsibilities as follows:

Abram W. Harris, Corresponding Secretary—Executive
John W. Hancher, Counsellor in Finance—College Finance Developments
John L. Seaton, Assistant Secretary—College and School Policies
Warren F. Sheldon, Assistant Secretary—Student and Church Relations
J. P. MacMillan, Assistant Secretary—General Administration
Dwight R. Furness, Director of Publicity—Publications, and News Letters.

The office also requires twenty-three women, a utility man and additional temporary helpers in rush times to carry on the work under the direction of the staff.

In 1873 the Administrative cost of the Board of Education was 39 per cent of the total disbursements; last year it was 6.6 per cent. Of course in the early stages of any business the administrative or overhead expenses necessarily are high. The records disclose the interesting item that the Corresponding Secretary's salary then was fixed at $5,000. In subsequent administrations it was reduced during a period of low prices, and then advanced as times improved. In fifty years the salary has increased to $6,000.

The Question of Profits. Does this big educational enterprise, including the schools and the Board with its auxiliaries, pay? Let it be judged by results. It produces nearly all the trained leaders of the church, and their most effective supporters in the ranks. The graduates of 1923 numbered 7,503. Who can compute the worth of their service during the next generation? Every year an increasing host, willing and fitted to serve, goes forth from our schools. Fully three-fourths of these splendid companies will be active in the church.

There is another fact of great importance. The educational dream of the fathers had practical results probably not foreseen by them. Intolerance and doctrinal dissension have been rare in Methodism. This is not wholly or even largely due to our preference for evangelism and action. It is due to our irresistible urge to education. We maintain preparatory schools, colleges, universities, professional schools, and training schools. We encourage and support great teachers who kindle a flame of intellectual and spiritual life in generations of students. Who can measure the effects in the fertile mind of youth of instruction by such men as Borden P. Bowne, Caleb T. Winchester, and Robert William Rogers? We send a very large proportion of our young people to institutions of higher learning. In some of the middle western states the Methodists, who number only 8 per cent of the total population, furnish 21 per cent of the students in the higher institutions of learning, both denominational and state. Our methods of aiding students to remain in school until they have finished their course are unsurpassed. Because of these measures education is widely diffused among our people and they are extraordinarily receptive of the facts established by scholarship as well as those validated by experience.

Education and Evangelism. The schools and educational auxiliaries of the Board interpret faith anew to each generation of students. As a natural consequence, the air of intellectual and spiritual freedom blows refreshingly through the church. The Methodists "think and let think." As long as education maintains its place in the thought and program of the church there will be numerous successors in spirit and method to John Wesley, a graduate of Oxford and a Fellow of the University. "He turned his culture into power until at length under his preaching the tears began to make white streaks down the sooty faces of the British colliers. He moved on until the world caught the warmth of his spirit, and the evangelism of his brain and heart started out to climb the last mountain and to cross the last sea until it had reached the last man and brought him back to the Father's house. He married zeal and knowledge in his own life. He made dead doctrines leap to their feet and praise God. He conducted a service around the mourners' bench and then went to his room to read a philosophic treatise in German, a novel in French, and the New Testament in Greek. He inspired his poor followers with such a passion for learning that they gave richly out of their poverty to found schools and colleges. He started learning and love down through the years and bade them walk together forevermore."

Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, Phi Beta Kappa Address.

AN INTERNATIONAL AFFAIR

Education by the Methodist Episcopal Church was at first local in support and control. It never was local in results. The pioneering spirit was upon the fathers. They took the learning and zeal for education acquired in the early eastern colleges and bore them westward, often in advance of the march of empire. In turn, the schools of the west became sources from which educational life flowed in fructifying streams. Harvard, the first college in the new world, was founded that the church might not lack an educated ministry. In the nature of things, the laity also quickly seized the opportunity for education. The colleges of Methodism likewise were founded with the primary purpose of providing an educated leadership for the church. But they soon became sources of leadership of varied types. From them were graduated ministers, teachers, lawyers, physicians, statesmen, writers, and other men of affairs. Education as conducted by the church inevitably had and continues to have momentous results in social and political life.

Peaceful Penetration. The educational institutions of the church also have profoundly affected all nations. "There is no speech nor language where their voice is not heard." First and most obvious is the fact that the great majority of the missionaries have been and are the product of denominational colleges. The religious impulse transmitted to the tax-supported institutions has brought additional recruits through the active work of church "auxiliary agencies" such as the Wesley Foundations. The proportion from this source doubtless will increase.

A recent tabulation of the educational record of the 693 college graduates in active service under the Board of Foreign Missions yields very interesting and suggestive results. Of the 693 missionaries 455 took their degrees in Methodist Colleges and Universities. Other denominational colleges trained 109, and of course Methodist schools made a like contribution to the mission forces of other denominations. From independent colleges came 67. State institutions of higher learning educated the remaining 62. Reduced to percentages the figures are as follows: Methodist colleges and universities 65.65 per cent; other denominational institutions 15.72 per cent; independent institutions 9.67 per cent; tax-supported institutions 8.95 per cent. Denominational institutions account for 81.37 per cent of the college graduates on the present working force of the Board of Foreign Missions.

Patterns and Products. It is a familiar saying that commerce follows the missionary. Trade relations, especially with belated or dependent peoples, are heavily indebted to the denominational schools that trained and inspired the missionaries. There is another and greater debt. The extension of education in mission fields has been due mainly to the denominational schools in the homeland. They furnished the patterns to which the foreign schools were shaped. They trained the teachers, gave them the vision of service, and commissioned them to "go and teach" the nations. By resistless forces of logic and life the mission schools speedily begin to promote benevolences, to stimulate reform, to humanize industry and, indirectly but surely, to set up political governments on the foundation of intelligence and freedom. The church may rightly rejoice that in India alone more than 50,000 people ask for Christian baptism in one year, that "Sinners now confessing,

The Gospel call obey,
And seek the Saviour's blessing,
A nation in a day."

John 1:12

But to conserve the results of "mass movements" and great revivals, they must be organized, informed, and directed by educated men who think and act in accord with the Christian ideals most effectively taught first in our schools at home, then in the missionary schools, and eventually in schools conducted by the Christianized natives. In this logical and orderly development of Christian education is the hope of India, China, and the "islands of the sea."

Concrete illustration appears in a recent book "By Camel and Car to The Peacock Throne." The author, Major E. Alexander Powell, certainly would be regarded as an unprejudiced observer. He says that the American University at Beirut has been "the most powerful factor in the upbuilding of the Syrian federation through inculcating the Syrians with high ideals of government and citizenship," and that its graduates "are to-day occupying positions of responsibility all the way from the edges of the Sahara to the borders of India." He speaks with appreciation of a school in Teheran developed from a mission school established fifty years ago, as "one of the most important factors in the awakening of Persia and the establishment of constitutional government." The Persians themselves describe the school as "an American factory for making men." In repeated and glowing tributes, Major Powell shows that out of the mission schools have come in natural sequence democracy, social ideals, and new civilizations pregnant with hope and power.

GROWING INTO ONE

Education within the Church has been referred to in the previous chapter as a system. It might better be described as an organism in which many different elements and stages of life are united. No one planned that it should be as it is. No one foresaw or directed its development into the form it now has taken. It grew as forces within and without determined.

THE SCHOOLS

Many of the schools were born of the vision and daring of individuals or of small groups. They were the big ideas of big men. Sometimes Mission Conferences or Annual Conferences felt the need of a school to give permanence to the work they were doing and to produce an indigenous leadership. In general, it may be said that the schools came into existence and have been supported because the church believed them to be essential to its own future, and to the work it would do for the world. After 140 years of experience, the church remains steadfast in that faith.

Varieties. Methodist educational institutions are varied in type. There are secondary schools exclusively for boys or girls, coeducational schools, and two semi-military academies. There are coeducational colleges and colleges exclusively for men or for women; colleges with a selectively limited program and restricted attendance; and colleges with an expansive program, a strong emphasis upon fine arts, and an open door to all who come. There are universities as yet somewhat local in character and service, and others genuinely cosmopolitan, large institutions in large centers of thought and action. There are schools for all of the established professions, and for some of the recent specializations.

Northern Schools. The colleges and universities of the north have had a steady and solid growth. With few exceptions they are wisely located. They are providentially close to the people. Once thought to be too numerous and therefore certain to be poorly attended, they now are crowded to the doors and many candidates are unable to gain admission. High school enrollments practically double every ten years. College enrollments increase almost as fast. There is no doubt that if our schools are to meet the demands upon them and do their share in American education their capacity will need to be doubled during the next ten years.

The rapid increase in the per capita cost of education has created additional and serious difficulties. In part they were relieved by the great Educational Jubilee. The Centenary also helped at a time when difficulties were multiplying for every educational institution. It guaranteed for five years a fixed income from the Public Educational Collection and it taught the church to think in big figures. There is no doubt that the timely help given by the Centenary is larger than any present measurement can reveal. But urgent demands are still to be met. Education now is developing very rapidly and with each year it becomes more costly. States and communities are multiplying the appropriations for public institutions of learning. There is a danger that our schools will not obtain money as rapidly and in as large amount as their conditions require. Thus while continuing to do good work, they will do proportionately less and less of it. A growing church will suffer a constant shrinkage in educational service and in all the benefits normally resulting from that service. The most serious loss will be in the proportion of leaders trained in Methodist schools for Methodist work.

These northern schools are alert and active. They mean to lose no opportunity to extend and perpetuate their service. Large financial developments within their respective fields have been completed during the last four years and others are now in process. The schools are seeking also a closer federation with one another, with the Board of Education, and with other educational agencies. In unity is strength. In the "connectionalizing" of Methodist education is the promise of a work growing with the needs and assured of permanence.

Frontier Schools. Much of the Rocky Mountain area may properly be regarded as a frontier. Though settlements were made and organized church work was begun there many years ago, progress has been slow. Large accumulations of wealth have been few. The Protestant churches have a very small membership. Methodism has about 2 per cent of the total population compared with about 8 per cent in the Middle West. The schools founded in heroism and faith as necessary to the future of the church have been maintained by incredible sacrifices. These sacrifices have been made, and are being made this year, by men and women in and near the schools. The general church has shared very little in the gallant fight there waged for the future of the church and of Christian civilization.

The life and vigorous growth of these schools can be assured by reasonable support from the church at large. Money raised in sections where the church is strong and prosperous must freely flow to the frontier. The Board of Education has made as large appropriations for these schools as the law governing the distribution of its funds would permit. But larger appropriations should be made and continued for many years. Here is an opportunity for connectional investments that will yield sure returns to the frontier and eventually to the whole church.

Strange as it may seem much of New England has now become racially a frontier. Foreigners have possessed the land. The Methodists who remain are neither numerous nor rich. To maintain their churches and to do a constructive work among the peoples of strange religions and no religion who surround them requires heroic living and giving. They cannot support adequately the old and famous secondary schools needed now more than ever before as recruiting and training centers for the church. Here, too, connectional aid must be given until these new generations of foreign blood have been taught and won, and have become in their turn the grateful patrons and supporters of school and church.

Southern Schools. The southern schools for white people, mainly mountaineers, are worthy of separate consideration as a special service by the church and a special responsibility of the church. Most of them now in existence, and others, were founded by zealous men of missionary spirit. They wished to give a strong and neglected people, who in sympathy and ideals belonged to the North, the benefits of education so long denied them. In time, the schools came under the care of the Freedmen's Aid and Southern Education Society. By the General Conference of 1908 they were assigned to the Board of Education.

The mistake had been made of founding too many schools. The heroic men who at first were responsible for them had difficulty in raising sufficient funds to maintain them. They could make little provision for the future. The Boards to which the schools were later assigned were in the same condition. The small amount available each year was divided among the many schools, and it was barely enough to keep them alive. Meanwhile, public education was rapidly developing and our schools that once had been the best schools in the mountains were becoming inferior in equipment and appearance.

A few years ago the Board of Education adopted a new policy. Wherever possible, the institutions that gave little promise of being more than local schools were turned over to the Public School authorities. Elsewhere, the Board gave ample notice that in the near future it would withdraw from elementary education and support only the college preparatory and special courses. Nine of the schools are likely to be maintained. Five of the best of them, where permanence is reasonably sure, were selected for enlarged appropriations sufficient to develop suitable plants and adequate teaching forces. Within another quadrennium, unless the work is halted by lack of funds, these five schools—Union College, Murphy Collegiate Institute, John H. Snead Seminary, The Athens School, and Washington Collegiate Institute—will be equal to any denominational schools in the South, and far superior to most of the public High Schools. Then the church can look to them with greater pride, and it will draw from them an increasing number of ardent gifted young people to serve in the ministry and in other places of responsibility.

Schools of Theology. The relation of the schools of theology to the church is peculiar. They serve the entire church but neither the church as a whole nor any conference accepts responsibility for their support. The older theological schools were actively opposed at first. The opposition has vanished but indifference remains. This may be largely due to the fact that the schools have rarely made appeals to the church and have been over-modest in stating their service to the church. But it seriously affects the present situation for the ten schools of theology.

Nearly all that the schools of theology possess has been given by a few individuals of rare vision and generosity. The church as a whole has not sacrificed for them. Until recently the schools have been able with private aid to meet fairly well the demands made upon them. Now they are overcrowded, and the burden of current support rests too heavily upon them. We have but one theological student in training for every five thousand members of the church. The ratio is much too small. In the order of their establishment, three of the largest schools are Boston University School of Theology, Garrett Biblical Institute and Drew Theological Seminary. They enroll about 1,000 students each year. They are modern schools, well organized, wisely administered, constructive in scholarship, and evangelistic in spirit. Their contribution to the church is priceless. But neither they nor the other schools of theology can take a larger number of students until they have more buildings, and endowment, or an increased and regular support from the general church. They are operated economically and the maximum return is secured on every dollar. In this respect no schools in the land excel them. But there is a point where economy in expenditure becomes waste of opportunity. Our schools now are at that point. Just at the time when the church most needs all the trained men it can get, the schools of theology are obliged to refuse admission to consecrated young people who are eager to be trained.

Within the last few months the schools of theology have adopted plans for uniting their forces and making common cause throughout the church. In cooperation with the Board of Education they will place the facts which in themselves are eloquent before the whole church. There is every reason to believe that when the church understands the facts, such support will be given that the schools of theology can throw wide their doors to all the eager young men and women who seek that higher training for service.

Graduate Schools of Religious Education. A recent development is the graduate school of religious education. Its primary work is the training of laymen, especially teachers of religion and leaders of community service.

The larger churches with complex organization, the Wesley Foundations, the religious day schools—about 900 are now in operation—and the mission fields, both home and foreign, demand increasing numbers of highly specialized workers. A general education will not suffice. Until our universities saw the need and courageously undertook to meet it there was no place where laymen could receive the training.

The Board of Foreign Missions and the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension aided these schools as much as their obligations to other work would allow. Private gifts and appropriations from the general funds of the universities were added. The total funds available were much too small, but a creditable work was begun. The venture was new and constantly hampered by insufficient support, but increasingly satisfactory results have been obtained.

In one of these schools the graduate students enrolled in a single semester represented five foreign countries, eighteen different states, and forty-five colleges. One of the foreign students, a Ph.D. from Leipsic, will spend a year in this school and then return to Germany to set up a program of religious education under the Board of Sunday Schools of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

It is necessary now to find the means for continuing and expanding these graduate schools of religious education. The demand for highly trained workers at home and abroad will steadily increase. The sons and daughters of Methodism will volunteer for service. If the church will provide for their training it will insure the success and perpetuity of its specialized work throughout the world.

In Chapter V of this report is given a complete classified list of the schools of the Methodist Episcopal Church with their administrative officers, faculties, students, and financial resources. For comparative purposes a statement of conditions four years ago also is presented.

Wesley Foundations. A comparatively recent development is the work in tax-supported and independent institutions of higher learning. It exists in several forms: Wesley Foundation corporations; affiliated schools; cooperative pastorates in which several denominations join; and reinforcements of denominational pastoral service through local churches.

The original intent was to provide the students with specialized and efficient pastoral care. This soon demonstrated at several places the need of more extensive class room facilities and social center buildings. Within a few years calls were made for courses in religious education worthy of curriculum credit. Several state institutions not only are ready to grant credit, but are developing departments of Religious Education, both by coordinating courses already being given and by adding new courses as need requires. Professors provided by different denominations are welcomed as additions to the teaching staffs, especially for courses the universities can not give. In some places affiliated schools of religion may grow out of these newly organized departments. Administrators of the state schools have an increasing appreciation of religious opportunities and responsibilities in education and the churches now have a favorable chance to make a vital contribution to the ideals and atmosphere of these public institutions of higher learning, without contravening the separation of church and state or compromising their own convictions.

It is noteworthy that the very decade during which the church has been giving increasing attention to Methodist students at non-Methodist institutions has been marked by the most rapid development of our own institutions both in funds and in students. During the last ten or twelve years the financial resources of our own colleges have been multiplied and enrollments have been rising at an unprecedented rate. It is evident that these two developments, Church Colleges and Wesley Foundations, are really not two but one. They are supplementary elements in the growing devotion of the church to the ideals of Christian education, character, and life for our young people.

It is natural that the Church Colleges, desperately in need of every dollar that Methodism gave to education, should at the beginning of the Wesley Foundation movement have been alarmed. New educational enterprises seemed to threaten a division of funds and a diversion of interest if not of loyalty. But the fears soon passed and the conviction grew that the church must follow and minister to its young people wherever they go. Methodist college presidents became advocates of the cause, whatever it might cost. A few with prophetic vision saw that the interest created by seriously undertaking a long-neglected task might be so utilized as greatly to increase the total gifts for education. About fourteen years ago the Board of Education that previously had confined its service to Methodist schools, began to encourage and help the new work by appropriations and counsel. It welcomed the action of the General Conference of 1916, which created a Joint Committee of the Board of Education and of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension to supervise and direct the many activities begun and planned for the religious training of students in non-Methodist schools.

The growth of the work has been rapid and sound. From two or three items of $500 a year the appropriations gradually increased in number as the work extended until now there are sixty-six points of work organized in thirty-seven states, and the total appropriation of the Board of Education and the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension is $105,000. Twelve years ago there were four or five full-time Methodist workers among these students. This year there are forty-one such workers. The response of the students themselves has been very gratifying. "Like their elders, students may become indifferent to the church but they are never hostile." A total of at least 10,000 Methodist students are voluntarily attending church service and about 6,000 of these are active in the Sunday School or Epworth League or both.

The first concern of this movement has been for the rapidly increasing numbers of students who as a rule are engaged in technical courses of study. The great majority are destined to be laymen, otherwise they would be pursuing different lines of preparation. For these young laymen a Wesley Foundation church becomes a laboratory for training and experience in church activities in which each can perform his full share, and learn church work by doing it as he learns football by playing it.

As a "by-product" of this work mainly for laymen a surprising number of recruits for the ministry at home and abroad have been enlisted. Eighteen men from this department entered the ministry in the fall of 1923 and a total of sixty last year sailed for service in foreign missionary fields.

The University of Nebraska this year sends eight young men and women into full time Christian service callings and the University of Wisconsin sends twelve. Fifty-two men from the state universities are reported as in theological seminaries. Of the class of thirteen received on trial by the Illinois Conference this year seven came from the University of Illinois at Urbana. The University of Michigan has a record of twenty-six in the ministry and fifty-five in missionary fields.

These gratifying facts indicate the responsiveness of our youth to the appeal of Christian service, and suggest that larger possibilities await the more careful cultivation of these fields. The great hope is that the teeming student communities which come from Christian homes and churches shall return in due time to life-long devotion to the church which during their student years has not been unmindful of them.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION

At the heart of this system of schools and auxiliary agencies is the Board of Education. It began with no prestige and little authority. The declaration of purpose was broad and the charter provided for expanding service. But the government and support of educational institutions were mainly local. The schools determined for themselves the scope of their work and the courses of study they would offer. They recognized neither obligation to each other nor responsibility to a central body. Education had not been "connectionalized." As late as 1892 the Corresponding Secretary of the Board said, with reference to the founding of new institutions, that "not only has the Board very little if any authority in regard to these interests of unparalleled importance, but there is no connectional authority lodged anywhere in our system to determine these grave questions. They are left entirely to merely local decision. And as a result, the history of too many educational enterprises inaugurated in the name of Methodism can be given in a very few plain words; a big educational scheme, a big building, a big debt, a big failure—failure at least so far as relates to the realization of early hopes in having a well-equipped college or university, with a commanding influence and a record of excellent work done that shall be a credit to the whole church. It is certainly not unreasonable for the church to require that any proposed new college or university for which connectional recognition and patronage are to be asked, should first have connectional approval, and that some connectional authority should be properly empowered to supervise this work." It is not unreasonable also to require the consent of some central authority to changes in educational institutions, as from preparatory schools to colleges, that greatly increase the liabilities of the church.

Activity and Growth. At first there was opposition to the Board. Its work was practically confined to administering the Student Loan Fund and planning for the enlargement of the Fund. But now, the Board is a highly organized body with legal authority which, however, it seldom needs to use. The opposition has vanished. The separateness of educational institutions has given place to unity. The Board is recognized as essential. The schools seek its advice and aid in academic, administrative, and financial affairs—two secretaries giving practically all of their time to this work. It has taken the lead in standardization through the organization of the University Senate in 1892, the first denominational standardizing body in the United States. It is increasingly active in many forms of investigation necessary to the progress of education.

The first distinctive service of the Board remains in some respects its most significant service: It handles the largest loan fund held by any denomination. No educational fund has been more wisely conceived or administered. In 1868 the Centenary Committee said to the General Conference, "It is not improbable that there are members of your noble body who will live to see one thousand recruits to the ministry through this fund." Twenty-two years later Corresponding Secretary C. H. Payne reported that more than twice that number had been helped to prepare for the ministry. "It may reasonably be doubted," he said, "whether any equal sum of money contributed to any department of church benevolence or work has borne so much fruit in manifold forms of good to the entire church." What would he say now when 3,081 students, of whom more than 1,000 are candidates for the ministry and for missionary service, are helped in a single year. The total number aided has increased to 31,383 and the invested fund from returned loans has grown to $835,328. As the Children's Day collections come from the Sunday Schools it goes immediately into young life; then it is collected and reinvested in perpetual cycles to train the world's "best hope and stay." It attains directly and indirectly an immortal productivity.

A recent tribute to church Boards of Education appears in a government bulletin written by Professor Jesse Brundage Sears, Leland Stanford, Junior, University. "These organizations have meant much to the growth of higher education in this country. . . . Undoubtedly thousands of young men and women have received secondary or collegiate training who would otherwise have received little or no schooling. The ministry has brought many into its service by this means. These societies have saved colleges which were virtually bankrupt. By small gifts they have stimulated much larger ones. They have exercised supervision over colleges under their patronage by refusing aid to those which show no promise. They have by these and other means attempted standardization, and it should be added that the Methodist Board began to exercise this influence very early. They have, through church pulpits and Sunday Schools, brought the problems of college education to the attention of a large percentage of our population. More recently coordination of the efforts of these many Boards through the work of the Council of Church Boards of Education, is resulting in a more intelligent placement of new foundations."

Bureau of Education, Bulletin, 1922, No. 26, p. 77, Philanthropy in the History of American Higher Education.

The Board of Education has a vital relation to all the schools and educational agencies. Success attends its administration of the Southern schools. It gives timely aid, advisory and financial, to frontier schools and to other schools in emergencies. Often in this way it has saved to the church useful institutions and opened to them the gates of a larger life. It helps in many ways the strong and firmly established schools. The forms and scope of its service steadily increase. It accepts and effectively obeys the mandate of the church to "promote ministerial and general education, seeking to diffuse the blessings of education and Christianity throughout the United States."

Methodist education now is a unit, an organic whole, the result of life rather than of law. The church believes that it has not three educational tasks assigned to three separate agencies, but one educational task to be accomplished by the schools, the Wesley Foundations, and the Board of Education. These three are one in desire and in the fixed purpose to minister to all Methodist young people in all educational institutions.

BRANCHING OUT

Division of labor is an effective means of multiplying achievement in big enterprises. The larger an organization, the more completely it must be departmentalized. With the growth of the Board of Education, activities that do not belong together have been separated, and responsibility has been fixed in departmental heads. The process is not complete, but it has gone as far as the resources of the Board will permit.

The method by which the Board does its work is not generally understood. To answer questions often asked and to facilitate our educational service a brief survey is here presented of the departments and their activities. It omits a great many things of minor importance and special services that cannot be classified. It discloses however the wide range and essential nature of the work.

EXECUTIVE

The organization of departments with definite assignment of duties relieves the Executive of many details. He is of course responsible for general direction of all the work, for policies relating the Board to the other denominational enterprises, and for representative engagements in the field and many personal conferences at the office by which useful contacts are maintained within and without the church.

The departments are coordinated by staff meetings in addition to well defined programs. Consultations of the Executive with the heads of departments also are necessary. In the course of a day they may number a score. By these methods mutual understanding is obtained and the work of the Board develops as a unit.

The Benevolent Boards of the Methodist Episcopal Church bear a complex relation to one another and education is essential to all their projects. It is the source of knowledge adequate to the age, of training by which native powers are adapted to specific tasks, and frequently of the inspiration and will to serve. The work of the Boards can advance only in proportion to the progress made in education. Inter-Board conferences therefore are necessary to secure full cooperation, the most profitable use of the money now available, and the best means of developing men for service at home and abroad. The time thus required of the Executive is considerable but it cannot be lessened without loss to the church.

The Council of Church Boards of Education is a product of the vision and foresight of Bishop Thomas Nicholson, a former Corresponding Secretary of the Board. At his suggestion an informal meeting of the secretaries of seven church Boards of Education was called in New York City, February 18, 1911. At a second meeting the Council formally organized and announced its purpose of seeking more intelligent cooperation among the churches in supporting colleges, and more effective religious work at the state university centers. The Council has won great prestige and is growing in usefulness. It has made invaluable studies of educational conditions in various states. It has effectively discouraged the unwise establishment of new schools and aided in the unifying of existing schools. It is the clearing house of Church Boards of Education, the medium by which they most readily cooperate in the work entrusted to them by their respective denominations. The Board is active in the work of the Council, contributes to its support, and gives to it the time and attention that its technical problems and important undertakings deserve. For this service the Executive is mainly responsible.

Among the numerous Methodist educational institutions, inaugurations of new presidents, dedication of buildings, and other formal celebrations are frequent. Denominational, regional and national educational associations also have occasional meetings which during a year may occupy several weeks. It is important in the development of Methodist education that the Board be represented at these gatherings. An extensive correspondence with many organizations and persons also is necessary. Through the Corresponding Secretary active touch is maintained with educational groups and institutions throughout the United States, and with related agencies for the development of citizenship and the Christian life.

COLLEGE FINANCE

The Board of Education maintains a "Department of Finance" to assist the schools in raising money for buildings and endowments. The multiplied demands upon the schools in recent years made a service of that kind very useful and in some places indispensable.

The Educational-Jubilee Movement was in progress for nearly two quadrenniums. Reports submitted at the close of the period indicated that the assets of Methodist schools for buildings, equipment, and endowment had been increased by $35,000,000. A part of this was given by the General Education Board, but far the larger part was contributed in the supporting territory of the schools. The Jubilee Movement saved many of the colleges from disaster in the period of high costs during and after the war.

Studies submitted to the General Conference of 1920 showed that the schools had urgent needs that demanded the continuance of campaigns for permanent funds. Some changes in the organization of the department were made in order to establish closer connection with the office of the Board. New methods also have had to be used in the field, to meet changed conditions. The work has gone on through difficult times with a large measure of success.

The head of the department reports for the quadrennium up to July, 1923, the following results:

Development	Asking	Subscription

COLLEGE AND SCHOOL POLICIES

In accord with the rapid development of education and the increasing attention given to organization and administration, the Board has established a department to deal with College and School Policies. It exercises an advisory relation to all the schools of Methodism.

The business management of educational institutions is more scientific than it used to be. The General Conference of 1920 ordered a budget system to be applied to all the schools. Contrary to a statement sometimes made, they do not recklessly incur expense; they try to live within their budget. When that is impossible, they call a conference, usually including the college officers, trustees, some of the professors, and a staff officer of the Board. Every measure by which better work can be done for the same money or the same work for less money is taken into account. Whatever additional funds the church is asked to give are proved requirements for the established work or necessary developments of the college. The service of the Board in these conferences and in others due to emergencies created by fires, drouths, hard times, or other calamities is very extensive. Within a year, the secretary in charge of the department was thus occupied for more than four weeks in a single state.

The biennial statistical reports and the annual budget reports from the schools are classified, interpreted and reported by the department of College and School Policies. The varied types of institutions, the different methods of accounting still in vogue, and the inevitable misunderstanding of questionnaires make the work very intricate and difficult. But the gains in four years are numerous and significant. With few exceptions, the facts now are known and set in their proper relations. Increasing confidence in the accuracy of reports and published statements reacts favorably upon the schools in both their financial support and their educational rating.

During the last four years the General Education Board (Rockefeller) has contributed to Methodist colleges and universities $6,434,999 on endowment funds and $968,000 on current expenses. These gifts have helped to bring to the colleges other funds three to four times as large. The recognition also has meant additional prestige which cannot be measured. The appointments of Presidents and Principals with the officers of the General Education Board generally are made through the department of College and School Policies. After preliminary investigations have been completed and formal documents have been filed, a staff officer of the Board goes in person to support the applications, answer questions, and add judgments reached from direct knowledge of the institutions. The same procedure is used in dealing with the Carnegie Corporation, the Carnegie Foundation for The Advancement of Teaching, and similar organizations.

This department supervises the extensive building program that has been going on among the Southern schools during the quadrennium; recommends their courses of study, aids in the selection of teachers, and advises in other matters of school management. By special arrangement with the Board of Education for Negroes it serves in a similar way the nineteen institutions of that Board, rating the teachers, and advising the presidents on organization, courses of study, libraries, laboratories, and other academic matters. It also takes an active part in the work of standardizing agencies, of regional and national associations, and of other bodies concerned with the organization and administration of schools. The head of the department represents the Council of Church Boards of Education on the Standardizing Committee of the American Council on Education, and thus to a large extent is the spokesman in that influential body of the Protestant institutions of higher learning.

STUDENT AND CHURCH RELATIONS

Methodist schools are conceived and dedicated in loyalty to the church. It is natural therefore that religious activities within them should be conducted mainly by the faculties and neighboring pastors. Nevertheless the Board of Education has aided in several ways. It has encouraged the establishment of departments of English Bible and Religious Education; it has issued attractive folders and booklets for use on the Day of Prayer and Easter, and has sought to unite the schools in appropriate observance of such days; it has helped to secure for these occasions and for evangelistic meetings the service of pastors especially gifted for work among students; and whenever possible it has given the personal counsel and cooperation of a member of its staff.

Increasing attention now is given to programs of religious activity extending through the school year. They allow ample scope for evangelistic seasons and a great deal more. This work is so much a part of the nature and atmosphere of the church college ideal that it hardly can be departmentalized so distinctly as is required at a state institution where the approach is from the church rather than from the administration of the institution.

For many years the rapidly increasing number of Methodist students attending state and independent colleges and universities has attracted the consideration of the Board as well as of local churches and Annual Conferences, all concerned being embarrassed and almost baffled by the lack of financial resources, tested methods of procedure, and skilled leadership. The appointment in 1916 of a Joint Committee of the Board of Education and the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension was a definite recognition of responsibility and partial provision for meeting it.

During the next quadrennium the work rapidly developed although it had little supervision. One Assistant Secretary of the Board of Education gave to it such time as he could spare from other duties. The Centenary increased the resources of the Board of Education and of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension, and enabled them to make larger appropriations for the religious work in tax-supported and independent institutions of higher learning. This led to the appointment of an Assistant Secretary of the Board of Education to give practically all his time to student and church relations. He aids in such ways as are possible the specialized religious work in Methodist schools. He serves also as Administrative Secretary of the Joint Committee, visits the Wesley Foundations and advises in the entire range of their activities, administers the appropriations made by the Board of Education and the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension to the Joint Committee; and represents Methodism on the University Committee of the Council of Church Boards of Education and in other interdenominational councils on religious work in the schools.

GENERAL ADMINISTRATION

The usual duties of office management, the payment of appropriations to schools, the distribution of the Public Educational Collection, the loaning of the Children's Day Fund, and the collection of loans are assigned to the department of general administration. The work is extremely varied and requires an increasing force.

The Public Educational Collection formerly was distributed at its sources, the Annual Conferences. The General Conference of 1920 ordered that the entire Collection be sent to the Board of Education and distributed according to need as revealed by budget reports, with, however, the proviso that no school should receive less during the Centenary period than it was entitled to receive under the legislation of 1916. It was a step toward greater efficiency and security for all the schools though continuing for the quadrennium practically the same ratio of distribution as previously existed. When the next step is taken the Board will be able to mass resources at opportune times and places, and use the money given by the church for the best interests of the whole church in accord with the recommendations of the Council of Boards of Benevolence. Though many delicate adjustments had to be made during these four years, the results have been satisfactory, both to the schools and to the Board.

The Student Loan Fund has become in itself a big business. An enormous amount of correspondence and detailed work is required to make annually more than 3,000 new loans with an approximate total of $270,000. That is particularly true in these later years when the applications for loans far exceed the available funds, and great care must be exercised to put the money to the best possible use. Since many of the borrowers are very young the Board feels an obligation also to imbue them with the idea that the loan is from a trust fund and is to be returned at the earliest possible date.

The collection of loans necessarily is slow and difficult. Some of the borrowers continue in school from eight to ten years after receiving the first loan and negotiate additional loans through all that period. Nearly all of them are slow in getting a financial start after leaving school and a few always remain poor. It is inevitable therefore that repayments should be delayed.

For this reason an enlarging Children's Day collection must be the main source of increase in the fund which is needed now as never before.

The collection department has grown within a few years from a force of two clerks, who gave part time to the work, to six, who give full time. The amount annually collected has doubled since 1916. Last year the department wrote 38,643 letters. It keeps a record on more than 15,000 notes. With each year the work increases, but the growing and far-reaching service to the church by collecting funds and loaning them over and over again to Methodist students abundantly justifies whatever expansion of force may be necessary. No work is more important to the youth of today and the church of the future.

PUBLICITY

Modern organizations of all kinds recognize the value of publicity. Public support depends upon knowledge and appreciation. From the beginning of its work the Board has issued folders, pamphlets and programs. In recent years a department of publicity has taken form and has grown with the enlarging work of the Board.

Probably the best known productions of the Publicity Department are the Children's Day Programs and the accompanying literature for the use of the Sunday Schools, both of them seeking to feature the go-to-college idea. The great value of Children's Day is not in the collection, though that is very important, but in the inspiration given to many boys and girls to prepare themselves by higher education for a life of service. Various kinds of programs have been tried in the last decade. Some were regarded by patrons as too "classic" and others as too "popular." The "happy medium" has not been easy to find. The program of 1923 was received with general enthusiasm, and was used by 5,407 Sunday Schools. This was a gain of 119 Sunday Schools over the previous year, and a gain of 3,705 Sunday Schools over the year 1919. The collections taken on Children's Day amounted in 1919 to $99,680.34, in 1922 to $160,038.23, and in 1923 to $177,235. There is a steady but not large increase in this most significant collection taken in the church.

The Christian Student, issued quarterly, is a compendium of information concerning education, particularly education under the auspices of the church. In the last quadrennium it has taken a more popular form, using picture covers, numerous illustrations, and graphic headings. The changes have been greeted with many letters and other expressions of commendation.

The News Letter issued weekly in mimeograph form carries to school men, ministers, a large number of laymen, church publications, and secular papers a brief digest of educational events. It is an inexpensive means of securing wide publicity. Occasional folders and reports on special subjects also are prepared and sent out by the department.

A recent venture is the College Service division. It undertakes to furnish parents with information as to the schools best suited to their sons and daughters. Wherever possible the service is given in cooperation with the nearest Methodist educational institutions of the type desired.

TOMORROW AND THE DAY AFTER

Thoughtful students of the present age tremble for the future. Humanity is said to be in a "perilous quandary." It stands where the ways part to Dark Ages or to a Renaissance. (See 1923 Report of President Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia University.) Knowledge, ingenuity, and material resources sufficient to make a better world are at hand but they are not used for that purpose. The external conditions of life have changed. The stone mug has been replaced by a golden goblet. But life tastes worse rather than better. Ugly passions flame hot between labor and capital. Political inefficiency and corruption pile increasing loads of taxation on a staggering society. National arrogance and greed joined with race animosity daily threaten the world with a new war, and complete ruin.

"Would but some winged Angel ere too late
Arrest the yet unfolded Roll of Fate,
And make the stern Recorder otherwise
Enregister, or quite obliterate!"

What must the world do to be saved? The resort to force has settled nothing. They who live by the sword continue to perish by the sword. Diplomacy, whether frocked or in shirt-sleeves, quite obviously has failed. Science lessens the peril of life at one point only to increase it at another. At best it finds no remedy for the lust that corrupts, the hatred that inflames, and the strife that destroys. "What we need first is a change of heart and a chastened mood which will permit an ever increasing number of people to see things as they are, in the light of what they have been and what they might be. We have to create an unprecedented attitude of mind to cope with unprecedented conditions, and to utilize unprecedented knowledge." What is this but a turning to the "new and living way which Jesus has consecrated for us," but which we have not had sufficient courage or wisdom to pursue?

How shall the multitudes be led into that way and kept within it? Loyal Methodists never will disparage evangelism or cease to be thankful for great preachers like Francis Asbury. But in these days crowds seldom throng revival meetings. Only a remnant can be saved by the old methods. The church must find a way to weave religion into the common life, beginning with childhood. Religious education must penetrate or parallel public education from the kindergarten through the college.

A great company of men and women gifted and trained to teach religion by a method and in a form suited to the age is necessary. Their service will be required in the pulpit, in the Sunday school, in the day school, and in every institution that touches young life. They will be the most effective missionaries to non-Christian lands and will prepare the natives in turn to teach their own people. By the "foolishness of preaching" lives will continue to "be born from above." The world will never outgrow that experience. But, by the wisdom of Christian teaching, mind and heart will be developed to their best and made most useful to society.

Whence will come these gifted Christians with the training and will to teach Christ and him crucified? Increasing numbers may be expected from the Wesley Foundations. No means of developing that source should be neglected.

But at present—and there is no prospect of an early change—the denominational schools of all ranks are the largest and surest sources. "Providentially it seems, institutions of Christian education, planted long ago in the day of small things, are well distributed throughout the country within easy reach of aspiring youth. From little mountain schools all the way up the list to the universities like Syracuse, Northwestern, Boston, and the University of Southern California the educational forces for which Methodism has made immense sacrifices of life and money are silently turning year by year into the common life of the nation nearly eight thousand young men and women with lamps in their hands." (Editorial, The Christian Advocate, June 28, 1923.) Many will go to the ministry to teach and preach or will become directors of religious education. Others will go to the mission fields and in various ways give their lives to the cause. Others will serve in the schools and prepare new generations to receive and teach the gospel. Others engaged in business and the professions will help to make the Lord's message effective in their communities. The hope of the world in these days is to multiply the number of people whose education in spirit, in ideal, and in fundamental philosophy is Christian.

Shall Methodism undertake its share or more than its share of the task? It has schools and other educational agencies for childhood and youth. It has a far-flung line of colleges with skilled teachers under whose instruction young men and women grow into scholarship, and at the same time feel the inspiration of divine ideals and the lift of divine power. It has great universities with graduate schools for the preparation of Christian teachers, and schools of religious education in which the specialized training now necessary for many forms of religious and philanthropic work may be obtained. To supply a professionally trained ministry it has theological schools, but too few and too meagerly supported. The number of graduates each year is less than two hundred for a church whose parish is the world. On the average nineteen years are required to bring a student from the first grade to graduation from a theological school. More young men and women in training and greatly increased funds for theological schools are necessary if the supply of educated ministers is to equal the demand. The church also has "auxiliary" educational agencies such as the Wesley Foundations to make religion effective among the students in state and independent schools. As the active and coordinating center of these various institutions and agencies it has the Board of Education.

Methodism has a system of education nobly fitted to do whatever needs to be done. It can reach all stages of life with the right method and message. By enlarging the support and widening the scope of Methodist schools, Wesley Foundations or other auxiliaries, and the Board of Education, the church will guarantee to herself the leadership she will need in the future and a ministry increasingly effective among all men.

"There never was an hour when the problem of Christian education was as acute as it is now; never an hour when our institutions had such meaning for the Master of the World as they have today; never an hour when going to college was so like going to Jerusalem to meet the Lord, when class rooms had such a relation to the Upper Room as this day; never an hour when the Christian Education that centers in the Methodist Episcopal Church called for such wisdom, such consecration, such devotion as at this hour. . . . May God help us, for the world's sake, not to miss Christ's expectation of us."

Bishop William F. McDowell, address to Board of Education, December, 1920.

FOLKS AND FIGURES

The trustees and officers of the Board, and the members and officers of the University Senate are listed in the following pages. For convenience in reference the names of administrative officers in our schools are given in connection with the statistical tables.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION

The Discipline directs that "the management . . . shall vest in a Board of Trustees consisting of thirty-six members, of whom one half shall be Laymen and at least three shall be Bishops, with at least one member resident in each General Conference District." Attention is directed to the lay and clerical representation in the classes of 1928 and 1932 and to District I, which has no representative in these classes.

The appointments of J. I. Conklin and William Boyd, class of 1932, were made ad interim by the Bishops. According to the law these appointments expire with the close of the quadrennium. Two men should be elected on nomination of the Bishops to serve the remaining eight years of the term.

MEMOIRS

Three members of the Board of Education have died during this quadrennium. Mr. Charles Scott, Jr., who had been a member of the Board for ten years, died August 21, 1922. Mr. Scott came from one of the great Methodist families of this country. His father, Charles Scott, was an intimate friend of the leaders of the Church and a generous supporter of its enterprises. Charles Scott, Jr., succeeded to his father's large business in financial responsibilities and very early came to a high place in business circles. To his good judgment and sound information is due in no small part the present fortunate condition of the investments of the Board of Education.

Mr. James W. Kinnear died September 8, 1922. He was one of the younger members of the Board in point of service, having been elected by the General Conference of 1916. From the first he took a lively interest in all the work of the Board. His keen intelligence, sound judgment and devotion promised a service of increasing worth. His modesty, courtesy, and kindly spirit endeared him to his associates on the Board.

Mr. James A. Develin was appointed by the Board of Bishops to fill the vacancy on the Board and Finance Committee caused by the death of Mr. Charles Scott. In accepting this appointment Mr. Develin expressed great interest in the work of the Board of Education. Pressing duties prevented his attending any of the meetings of the Finance Committee and before he had opportunity to become acquainted with the Board, his death occurred on January 23, 1923.

FEATURES FOR THE FOUR YEARS WORK

The brief summary here given omits many important matters too specialized or technical to be of general interest. It takes no account of funds distributed according to disciplinary requirements to the various schools. However, the list will partially reveal the variety and extent of the service of the Board of Education.

1. Purchase of a new campus and erection of three new buildings at Murphy Collegiate Institute, Sevierville, Tenn. Total value $169,000. Contribution from Board $78,000.

2. Assistance at John H. Snead Seminary, Boaz, Alabama, in erection of Administration Building. Value $125,000. Contribution from Board $45,000.

3. Appropriation of $32,000 toward campus and dormitory at Washington Collegiate Institute, N. C. The improvements are valued at $155,000.

4. Appropriation of $12,000 to the Athens School, Athens, Tenn., toward the cost of additional property, a practice school and a gymnasium.

5. Appropriation of $4,600 for improvement of the property of Baxter Seminary, Baxter, Tenn.

6. Appropriation of $15,000 toward the development campaign of Union College, Barbourville, Kentucky.

7. Current expense appropriations to the Southern Schools amounting to $169,590.

8. Appropriations to frontier schools, Intermountain Union College (Montana Wesleyan), $31,500, Gooding College, $34,000, other frontier schools, $40,850. Total, $106,350. Without these substantial sums the frontier schools could not have continued their work.

9. Appropriations amounting to $34,500 for schools in New England where changes in the population have created home missionary fields.

10. Emergency appropriations to other schools in various sections of the United States. Total $17,000.

11. Creation of an invested fund of $1,000,000 to meet in part the increased instructional and maintenance costs in the southern and frontier schools.

12. Assistance in the religious training of students in tax supported and independent institutions. The twenty points at which work had been undertaken four years ago have increased to sixty, of which fifty are receiving appropriations from the Board. The annual contribution of the Board of Education now is $65,000. The Board of Home Missions and Church Extension also contributes $45,000 annually to the current expense of this work and additional amounts in aid of building developments.

13. Leadership in campaigns that had added in cash and pledges $26,128,157 to the assets of our schools at the time when this report went to press.

14. Aid in securing from the General Education Board $6,134,999 on the endowments of our schools and $968,000 on current expense.

15. Increase in the contributions to the Children's Day Fund of $257,979 and in the returned loans of $91,714.

16. Increase in the loans made to students from $390,979 to $936,674.

17. Improvement of accounting, business methods, and academic organization in our schools.

18. Active service in educational associations, on commissions in 14 different states, and on boards both denominational and interdenominational.

19. Development of a keener sense of unity among Methodist educational interests. They recognize more fully their mutual obligations and try to render mutual service. Throughout the system "one increasing purpose runs."

LEARNING has come into the world not merely to clear men's eyes and give them mastery over nature and human circumstances, but also to keep them young, never staled, always new like the stars and the hills and the sea and the vagrant winds, which make nothing of times or occasions but live always in serene freedom from any touch of decay, the sources of their being some high law which we cannot disturb.

WOODROW WILSON.

STATISTICS OF SCHOOLS

The tables in the following pages have been prepared with care to secure completeness, accuracy, and clearness. Since the last General Conference the schools have made great progress in scientific budgeting and accounting. Among them still are differences in method which make comparison difficult, and in a few instances not fully dependable. But the essential facts in sufficient detail to answer any inquiries likely to be made are given in the following pages compiled from itemized reports in the office of the Board of Education.

It should be noted that the figures for universities usually include the colleges of liberal arts and whatever graduate or professional schools the universities have. Although most of these professional schools have neither distinct plant nor endowment of their own they are again listed with the independent professional schools. Whenever figures are repeated, clear indication is given and deduction is made so as to avoid inflated totals.

At the bottom of each page will be found the comparative figures for two quadrenniums. They show few losses, and many substantial gains—in some instances almost incredible gains. The value of plants and equipments has increased $10,251,490 (a minor part of this is due to new appraisals) and $9,049,724 has been added to endowments. Other assets, such as subscriptions, estate notes, etc., are larger by $13,209,102. Allowing for shrinkage the last item ought to yield nearly $11,000,000. A grand total of about $30,000,000 has been added to holdings of our schools. Against this must be set an increase of $1,337,274 in debts. At the worst the net gain for the quadrennium hardly can be less than $28,000,000.

Enrollments have increased in a ratio even more remarkable. Four years ago our schools registered 41,633 students. These reports show a total of 70,733, a gain of 29,100, or 69 per cent. To instruct these new hosts only 368 teachers, or a little more than 11 per cent, have been added to the 3,240 on the lists. four years ago our schools had about one teacher to 13 students—an approved ratio though near the danger line; now they have one teacher to 19 students. In any circumstances this change in ratio would be regrettable. It is very unfortunate in view of the enormous increase in the number of students in the professional schools where teaching requirements are most exacting.

This loss in the proportion of teachers and the increase in debts indicate that our schools have large needs for which the church must soon provide. They confirm also the report made to the last General Conference that an addition of $2,000,000 to the annual support of our schools was then urgent.

INTERMOUNTAIN UNION COLLEGE

Attention is called to the merging of Montana Wesleyan College with the College of Montana, which belonged to the Presbyterian Church, but had ceased to operate. After long negotiations the Montana Conference and the Presbyterian Synod together with the trustees of the two institutions and representatives of the two church Boards of Education came to an adjustment which ought to work effectively and permanently. The old boards of trustees turn over the properties and funds of the two institutions to a new board of trustees, four elected by the Montana Conference, four by the Presbyterian Synod, and five by the new corporation. To avoid legal entanglements concerning bequests or other gifts the old corporations continue their existence for ten years, but the new corporation holds the property and operates the college. The new institution is chartered under the name, "Intermountain Union College."

This change will not lessen the financial responsibility of Methodism to Christian education in Montana. It makes possible, however, the development of a standard college where no Protestant denomination had sufficient resources to meet the increased and increasing requirements of an accredited institution of higher learning.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS IN THE FOREIGN FIELD

Institutions in Roman type of those of the Board of Foreign Missions; in italic type, those of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. SUMMARY OF EDUCATIONAL STATISTICS

1923

This summary is based on statistics given on pages following. It is inaccurate inasmuch as the statistics for some schools were not received in time for tabulation. Figures for last year's report for such schools were used in making the summary.

The figures for elementary schools of the Board of Foreign Missions include the village or district day schools of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society when they are reported without differentiation. The figures for elementary schools of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society therefore include only such schools as are specifically reported on as such.

Classification of schools and pupils as elementary and secondary is necessarily arbitrary as the classification "middle schools" may consist of secondary as well as elementary pupils. It should be noted that it is extremely difficult to combine the statistics for school systems organized on different national educational systems. The total number of schools approximates 3,900; of teachers, 8,800; of pupils, 162,000.

STATISTICS OF METHODIST EPISCOPAL EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS ON THE FOREIGN FIELD

The statistics here given are not complete. The first section includes institutions of higher learning; the second, institutions of secondary or lower grade. Institutions of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society are in italics, except in the case of district elementary schools and a few other instances where schools are reported in groups. In the case of institutions starred the figures given are those for the previous year.

To the General Conference of 1924:

DEAR FATHERS AND BRETHREN:

Four years ago the Corresponding Secretary called our attention to the alarming losses in membership and attendance suffered by our Sunday schools, especially during the latter half of the quadrennium. It was known that most of the denominations in North America shared this unfortunate experience. These losses were generally attributed to the direct and indirect influence of the world war upon the productive activities within the life of the churches.

During the quadrennium now closing the Sunday schools of Methodism have recovered all the losses of the previous four years and show a surplus which in itself constitutes a commendable gain. This mark of prosperity is shared also by the Sunday schools of other denominations. At this time, when the church is frankly discussing the present system of connectional administration, raising the question as to the advisability of a reorganization of the boards of benevolence, it may be appropriate to set forth some facts indicating that this comparatively young board has normally entered many doors of opportunity, assumed large responsibility, and achieved results of extraordinary significance. During this quadrennium the total enrollment of pupils and teachers in our Sunday sessions of the church school has increased a half million, bringing the present enrollment to 4,929,000. The increase in the number of teachers is 18,900. This is not commensurate with the increase in the number of pupils. The very least we should expect would be one new teacher for every ten new pupils. The ratio shown by our statistics is only one new teacher for every twenty-five new pupils. The fact that the average attendance, though increasing, is only a little more than half the enrollment, suggests strongly that this disparity may be due largely to the inadequacy of the teaching force and that the dearth of qualified teachers continues to be one of our greatest unmet needs.

During the past four years 750,000 members of Methodist Sunday schools have united with the church. This is one hundred thousand more than were received from the Sunday schools during the preceding quadrennium. Comparing these numbers with the total gains in the membership of the church shows that our adult church is mainly the normal growth from the childhood and youth of our church schools.

The giving of the Sunday schools to the apportioned benevolences of the church and in response to numerous special appeals has been commented upon frequently. Four years ago Bishop Blake, then Corresponding Secretary of our board, stated in his report: "The total missionary offering from our Sunday schools for the twelve years covered by the organization and activities of the Board of Sunday Schools is $7,835,752. The missionary offering of the preceding twelve-year period from 1896 to 1907 is $5,296,777, an increase of $2,538,975 during the present twelve-year period over the preceding period."

The giving of the Sunday schools to the apportioned benevolences of the church for the past four years has been $7,258,847. This is more than one hundred per cent increase over the preceding four years, and nearly as much as the total for the preceding twelve years. Add to this Centenary giving, the generous responses to special appeals such as the half million Christmas offering of 1920 for the suffering children of Europe; another half million Children's Day offerings for the Student Loan Fund of the Board of Education; large sums each year for the Near East Relief; generous giving for relief and rebuilding in Japan, and to many other worthy causes, and you will credit to the stewardship of the Sunday schools for the past four years a sum not less than eight and a half millions of dollars. This fact reflects credit upon the systematic and effective cultivation carried on by our board through the Department of Missionary Education.

It is generally understood that for the most part the running expenses of the Sunday schools are met by the regular contributions taken from Sunday to Sunday in the departments and classes. As an evidence of the continued improvement in supplies and equipment in our Sunday schools, I will give you the figures on local Sunday-school support: During the quadrennium 1916-1919, inclusive, the Sunday schools paid for local support a total of $8,256,044. For the present quadrennium the total for the same items is $11,862,092, or an increase of $3,606,048.

Beginning with 1908 the church has committed to the Board of Sunday Schools an annual appropriation of funds to be used for cultivation and promotion in the field of religious education as it relates to the local church and community. The amount appropriated each year increased steadily from less than $50,000 in 1908, to $305,443 in 1919. By agreement entered into with the Centenary management the Board of Sunday Schools has received a guaranty each year during this quadrennium of $300,000. To this has been added each year for missionary education in the Sunday schools a sum approximating $36,000. Miscellaneous receipts have brought the total appropriation for each year of the quadrennium to about $350,000. We have sometimes been tempted to call this a no growth budget, but that would be misleading. It is surely a slow growth budget in view of the urgent opportunities at home and abroad where the placing of trained workers, the production of adequate literature, and the conduct of training schools and institutes would yield results more gratifying to the church than anything yet reported.

It is an eloquent testimony to the irrepressible vitality of the cause we represent that it goes forward in spite of the limitations upon the agencies appointed to direct it. If it is halted, where it has a right to expect help, it lays hold upon any resource that may be at hand. Every member of this board knows that there are many phases of the rapidly developing movement of religious education today which we ought to be leading with policies of expansion and stimulation. The present period in the world's history for advancing the Kingdom of God by teaching and training a generation of youth is like one opportunity in a thousand years. Where we have one worker to-day with vision and passion for this urgent call of God we ought to have a hundred. We believe the church is seeing these opportunities in clearer perspective than ever before, and when the possibilities of the teaching and training methods of our world service are fully appreciated the field of childhood and youth will be the first charge upon our stewardship of life and funds.

The total amount contributed for the Centenary and Apportioned Benevolences these four years has been $7,258,847, an increase of $4,119,135 over the preceding quadrennium.

The total amount raised by our Sunday schools during the quadrennium for their own support was $11,862,092, a gain of $3,606,048 over the preceding four years.

In the last four years 745,348 pupils from our schools have united with the church, a gain of 99,231 over the preceding quadrennium.

EDUCATIONAL GAINS

The following are some of the notable gains in the advancement of the Kingdom of God as influenced chiefly by such agencies as the Board of Sunday Schools.

1. The evangelistic passion of the church and the educational process have come to better terms in working out their common task. Educational evangelism is a productive reality today.

2. The scientific principles and tested methods in general education are finding application in the particular field of religion to the great advantage of Christian character and conduct. The public school people and the church school leaders are coming together in the movement for week-day schools of religious instruction, and vacation church schools. By this alliance the Christian revelation is having a fuller chance at the life it came to save than at any period of the Christian era.

3. Our denominational colleges and universities and the Wesley Foundations in connection with State-supported institutions are establishing departments of religious education where educational credits for studies in religion are given the same standing as any other credits. From these departments trained leaders for religious education are coming in increasing numbers.

4. The late Dr. Henry F. Cope in a pamphlet entitled, "Twenty Years' Progress in Religious Education" points out the enormous development in the literature of religious education in recent years. "Every book, with one exception, bearing 'Religious Education' in the title has been published during the last twenty years. There are six thousand volumes in the library of the Religious Education Association on moral and religious education, all published since 1903."

The record of our own church in the publication and distribution of textbooks, magazines, quarterlies, graded lessons and story papers, to meet the increasing demand for better religious education is undoubtedly the leading achievement in the field of religious publication. The reports of my colleague, the Editor of Sunday School publications and the reports of the Book Editor and the Publishing Agents indicate the magnitude of the Sunday-school business in the production and distribution of supplies. Thirty tons of printers' ink are used in a single year by The Methodist Book Concern.

5. Within the history of the life of this board there has emerged an entirely new type of church building. It may be called the educational type, not that it slightes the service of worship, or fails to provide for the gathering of large congregations, but it is no longer built for adults only. It takes account of the teaching and training of children and youth. A good beginning has been made in this reform, and much serious thought must yet be given to the kind of building and equipment best adapted to the manifold service the church must render the whole life of the community. Enough however has already been done to more than justify the Bureau of Architecture supported jointly by the Board of Home Missions and the Board of Sunday Schools.

6. One of the most hopeful signs of an awakened interest on the part of the church in its teaching task is the insistent demand for a correlated, not to say unified, program of religious education in the local church and community. With this may be placed the growing demand for a trained director of the educational program of the local church that the teaching may be more effective.

7. Finally, it should be said that the forward looking leaders who are responsible for the policies of the church in her service to the non-Christian nations of the world are convinced that the hope for success rests mainly upon the method of instruction and training during the period of childhood and youth. Undoubtedly our church should support schools and colleges for the general education of the youth of other lands, but a major emphasis must continue to be placed upon the education of the children and youth of the mission fields in the Christian revelation.

We have long understood that individual character is not conferred independently of one's own efforts, but is an achievement wrought out in continuous cooperation with the Divine Spirit. We are coming to see that a Christian world must likewise be achieved if we are to have one. It is not to come by divine fiat without regard to the spiritual capacities of mankind. The mission of the church whether in America or in India may be defined with a good degree of adequacy as the business of growing a Christian world. With such a conception it is not difficult to see the prime importance of nurture, instruction and training.

THE LOCAL CHURCH

In reporting our work for the past quadrennium I may say that we look to the local church for the spiritual values which shall justify our activities. Our ideal for the local church is that it shall seek to serve the total life of the human world. The primacy of persons and the unity of life are basic principles in this ideal. All things, organizations, institutions, literature and methods, are for the sake of the persons in any group under consideration. Each person is an indivisible unit and his total needs and possibilities must receive the attention of those who would teach and train him in the essentials of religion. The unity of the individual is no more basic than the solidarity of the entire human world. There is no such thing as individual isolation or group or class independency; we all belong together whether we like it or not; we are members one of another. You can never reach an independent unit until you include the last child in the human world. As we understand our responsibility "for the moral and religious instruction of our children and for the promotion of Bible knowledge among all our people," we cannot if we would confine the scope of our service to any area less than the round world. In approaching therefore the 37,000 Methodist Sunday schools we think of the life we are to help as horizontal, vertical and spherical. The range of life in any group presents stages of development, such as early, middle, later childhood, early, middle, later youth; early, middle, later adulthood. While we recognize much greater diversity in this life than these general divisions indicate, we also understand that the principle of unity obtains. Childhood and youth are not separated from each other. The individual does not lose his identity as he passes from one classification to another. This interdependence of the stages of developing life admonishes Christian workers to observe the closest cooperation. Workers with youth must depend largely upon the success of the workers with children, and we readily see how the workers with children may be helped or hindered by the attitude of the adults, who are the parents and citizens.

ELEMENTARY

Our board approaches the teaching problems of the local church through a group of special workers.

During the past quadrennium Mr. Roger Albright, Miss Mildred O. Moody and Miss Mina A. Clark have represented us in the elementary field. They have answered a volume of correspondence, prepared and mailed informing literature, visited local schools, advising with local workers with children. They have made notable contributions to the publications issuing from the editorial office. Miss Moody wrote the lessons for the junior group series for 1924. They have also given much time to the work of instruction in our standard training schools, institutes and summer schools. Nearly 2,000 workers with elementary pupils received instruction in these schools during the past year. The interdenominational conferences on the work with elementary pupils are greatly strengthened by the presence and counsel of our special workers and their associates from the editorial staff.

YOUNG PEOPLE

The special representatives of our staff who give themselves to the promotion of better work with the young people's groups are Mr. James V. Thompson, Mr. Warren T. Powell, Miss Marion Lela Norris, and Miss Madge Sanford, in cooperation with the editorial staff in this field. Mr. Powell, who has been with us for the entire quadrennium, rendering such conspicuous service in this field that repeated overtures have come to him from other agencies, has at last consented to accept the urgent appeal of Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church, Springfield, Mass., to become minister of education in association with the pastor, Dr. Fred Winslow Adams. This church is a union of two large churches of Springfield. A new, modern, well equipped educational building has been erected. The work Mr. Powell will do in that church is the type we have been advocating for years, and our sense of loss in having him go from us is relieved by the fact that he will be doing in that General Conference city at this time for the young people what we would like to have the leaders of the whole church observe at first hand.

We have referred to life as vertical. By that we mean that the physical, mental, social and spiritual needs of the unified individual must all be incorporated into the program that the local church carries out on behalf of the young people especially. If our objective is developing and enriching the spiritual aspects of life, we dare not be indifferent to demands for wholesome recreation, social expression, and intellectual honesty and industry, for they are but phases of a unitary life.

The number of well meaning agencies attempting to serve the field of youth to-day is almost as great as the number of evil agencies exploiting youth for revenue and selfish pleasure. The pastor of the local church feels keenly the need for a co-ordination of the organizations within his church dealing with the religious problems of his young people. As a step in that direction our board entered into an agreement with the National Boy Scouts and National Camp Fire Girls organizations to relate those activities to the Sunday schools of our denomination, so that there would be less confusion as to the aims and activities of these groups as a part of the local church organization.

In our own church we are assisting in every way possible to prevent unnecessary duplications of the gatherings called for the inspiration of our young people. We avail ourselves of the opportunity of Epworth League Institutes to give those wide awake young people the appeal of the Sunday school for their best service. We also provide in our distinctive Sunday-school gatherings for a representation of the specialized service which the Epworth League is conducting. The conferences for older boys so frequently held in connection with Annual Conferences are set up under the joint direction of the Board of Sunday Schools and the Epworth League. Fifty such conferences were held during the quadrennium with an attendance of 8,000 boys.

Through correspondence mainly, the Young People's Department has secured 2,000 volunteer leaders in various sections of the field to promote in their schools and neighboring schools the distinctive features of our program for young people. Our employed field men, and the young people's workers of the Sunday-school associations are promoting our plan for pupil leadership, training in worship, expression in social and recreational activities, and department and class organization. A quarterly pamphlet called The Outlook is sent out to the workers with young people. One hundred and nine thousand copies of The Outlook were sent out during the quadrennium. Five thousand, three hundred and forty-five new organized classes have been enrolled during the year.

ADULT

The well-known interest in the Adult Bible Class movement, and the more recent features attending it on behalf of family religion and parents' training classes continues with increasing value to the total movement for an informed and trained church. Drs. Bert E. Smith and T. Ross Hicks are our special leaders in this field. Dr. Hicks of the New Hampshire Conference, trained in the School of Religious Education of Boston University, successful pastor and district superintendent, was added to our staff during the summer of last year. He is giving himself mainly to the promotion of the Family Worship League, an enterprise committed to our board by the last General Conference. The demands for addresses to groups of men, and district and Annual Conferences, preachers' meetings and other gatherings, upon the work of the organization and education of adults are far in excess of the ability of these men to respond. Fifty-five thousand of our pamphlet entitled Family Religion have been sent out during the quadrennium in response to specific requests for them. The Home Visitor, one of the regular Sunday-school publications, gives special attention to this department of our work. In cooperation with our Foreign Department and at the urgent request of Bishop Thirkield ten thousand of these pamphlets have been published in Spanish for use mainly in Mexico. One hundred thousand other leaflets on adult work have been sent out on request of pastors and workers during the quadrennium. An illustrated lecture on Family Religion has been prepared, and in cooperation with the Committee on Conservation and Advance will be furnished the area secretaries for use throughout the church.

Our training conferences and summer schools do not reach the adult Bible class workers to the extent that they bring together the workers with the other departments of the church school. To supplement the work of these regular schools, Dr. Smith and Mr. Thompson held a series of conferences for adults and young people last spring in the following Annual Conferences: Columbia River, Puget Sound, Oregon, California, and Southern California. There were all together twenty-nine of these conferences, each conference continuing from 2:30 in the afternoon to 9:30 at night. Four thousand seven hundred and ninety-five delegates attended these conferences; 25 district superintendents, 454 pastors, 266 Sunday-school superintendents, 463 other officers, 1,359 teachers, and 2,228 pupils. These were all regularly enrolled delegates. It is estimated that at least as many more attended unenrolled. A similar series was conducted this spring in the territory of our southern and border Conferences.

Certificates of recognition have been granted to 3,093 new classes the past quadrennium, with a membership of 87,039. The total number of adult classes enrolled with our board is now 19,523 with an estimated enrollment of 730,938.

MISSIONARY EDUCATION

Cultivating the 27,000 Sunday schools of our church in America in respect to what we are now happily calling world service is the congenial task of Mr. Gilbert Loveland and his staff of office helpers. The nature of this task keeps him in close touch with the Educational Department of the Committee on Conservation and Advance, the Missionary Education Movement, the Mission Boards of our church and the office of the Editor of Sunday School Publications. He assists in editing the missionary magazine now called "World Neighbors."

Mr. Loveland has presented to each member of this board a detailed and graphic report of the past year's work with a résumé of the period covered by the Centenary enterprise. I will only refer briefly to a few of the significant items in that report. The volume of correspondence and circularization conducted during the quadrennium by this department includes the receipt of 21,047 letters; sending out 24,344 personal and personally adapted form letters; 42,702 multigraphed letters; 3,524,036 pieces of literature sent out on order, and 1,390,857 pieces mailed in circularizations. Mr. Loveland makes the following comment: "Your department of Missionary Education relies heavily on the direct mail method. It has no field staff, save the 20,000 superintendents of missionary education in the local church schools; and even these must be mobilized by mail. How great reliance we place upon circularizations may be seen from the fact that during the past four years we have circularized the pastors ten times, the Sunday school superintendents ten times, the missionary superintendents fourteen times, and other specially selected groups twelve times. The increasing circulation of the magazine 'World Neighbors' is making it possible to gradually decrease the number and scope of direct mail contacts."

The facts respecting the giving of the Sunday schools to the Centenary funds are such convincing evidence of the loyalty of the schools to the connectional program of the church, and to the value of systematic instruction in missions and stewardship, that I will incorporate some of them in this report:

For the three years prior to the Centenary the average giving to missions per school was $30.00 for 1916, $31.00 for 1917, and $32.00 for 1918. The average for 1919 was $52.00, for 1920 $85.00, for 1921 $78.00, for 1922 $88.00, and for 1923 $82.00. The total giving of the schools reporting each of the Centenary years and the number of schools not reporting, but many of them giving through the church total is heartening.

1919	$1,023,461	Schools not reporting	7,547
1920	$1,424,448	" " "	9,851
1921	$1,779,968	" " "	3,814
1922	$1,769,252	" " "	6,455
1923	$1,806,941	" " "	4,159

Total $7,804,070

It is very certain that by the end of the Centenary period, May, 1924, the Sunday schools of Methodism will have given a total of not less than $8,300,000 or 83 per cent of the $10,000,000 quota accepted.

WEEK-DAY SCHOOLS OF RELIGION

Recognition of the fact that Christian truth can only be made controlling in the life of a generation by being given a fair chance at the educational processes, has required an increase in the time heretofore available for definite instruction in religion. One of the most effective ways of extending the time is to enter into an arrangement with the public school authorities by which the children shall be released from the public school for the purpose of receiving through their churches high grade instruction from trained teachers in the essentials of Christian faith and practice. Our church has been a pioneer in this movement. Through the Abingdon Press we have furnished a system of textbooks more widely used by all denominations than any other. The staff of the Board of Sunday Schools has been in the forefront in promoting this movement, and it now looks as if the Sunday session of the church school would soon be coordinated with all the week-day sessions.

LEADERSHIP TRAINING

There are so many evidences that the task of religious education moves haltingly for lack of an adequate force of trained leaders that we have given earnest attention to the methods and materials best adapted to meet this need. Dr. Harry C. Wilson and Mr. Roger Albright are representing our board in its own endeavors in this field as well as in all cooperative efforts in the work of training leaders.

TEACHER TRAINING

Our method in teacher training, and in schools for leaders, is to promote classes in the local church schools for the study of the prescribed courses for teacher training, to conduct a system of instruction by correspondence for individuals desiring such help, to hold short term institutes for workers brought together from the churches of district and subdistrict areas, to conduct standard training schools of one week duration, three periods each evening, and summer schools continuing for ten days.

You will readily see that one of the most important duties in connection with such a varied and extensive system of training is to discover and to have available a sufficient number of instructors of recognized ability. Mr. Albright reports that during the past year 137 instructors meeting the required standard were listed and approved. One hundred and twenty-two of these are college graduates, and 69 of them have done graduate work in religious education. More than half of them were entering upon this particular type of service for the first time. Many of them have been outspoken in their appreciation of such an opportunity as these schools afford for worth while service. It is certainly good business to mobilize a training force for assignment to these training schools and centers, from which our leaders of local schools are to come.

During the past four years 5,642 teacher training classes organized in local churches enrolled with the board. These enrolled with a total of 68,479 students. In addition to these 33,557 were enrolled in college and community classes, and 2,147 enrolled for correspondence study, making a total of 121,000 students in other types of classes than our summer schools and standard training schools.

INSTITUTES

In addition to these training schools, district and subdistrict institutes were conducted by the Superintendent of the Institute Department and his assistants throughout the church.

One thousand, nine hundred and eighty-six similar institutes were put on by the field men of the Extension Department, who also cooperated in putting on a number of the standard schools.

The Institute Department does not exhaust its mission when it provides schools for the awakened few who are willing to take special courses of training, but it must endeavor to elevate the whole church in the ideals and objectives of a teaching program. The success of the trained teachers is due in no small degree to a sympathetic support from the main body of the church. We think it has been worth while therefore to have had a representative speaking for the Sunday-school opportunity to the larger gatherings of Epworth Leagues in more than two hundred institutes during the past four years.

I may mention in this connection that every member of the staff responds to as many invitations as time will permit to visit local churches for public addresses and conferences with Sunday-school workers. This form of service is perhaps one of the most important in which we engage during the year.

THE BUREAU OF ARCHITECTURE

The Bureau of Architecture has had a busy quadrennium. Three thousand five hundred churches have requested help; 1,800 sketches have been sent out; 1,900 office conferences have been held with building committees, and 400 visits to the field for the purpose of studying the particular needs of the individual churches have been made. During the quadrennium 1,100 sets of other architects' drawings have been reviewed for approval. Hundreds of churches situated remotely from the centers where good counsel could be secured from architects have been served by the bureau. Enough churches of the type we recommend are now in existence to enable us to refer inquirers to these churches for observation.

REACHING THE WORLD FIELD

We have mentioned the fact that the inexorable law of the solidarity of the human world makes it impossible for us to put anything less than world bounds to our work. The one billion seven hundred million people now living belong together in any Christian conception of the world. We may, for convenience only, divide our work into home and foreign service. In reality it is one.

EXTENSION

For more than a dozen years Dr. M. J. Trenery has been the continuous superintendent of the field force and organization in the home field. Through this department we have cooperated with Annual Conferences in organizing new Sunday schools, improving existing schools, and in more recent years, promoting week-day and vacation church schools, institutes and group conferences. In short the aim of this department is to place trained men in limited fields to promote the total work of our board in cooperation with the constituted authorities of the church. We have at present twenty-four field workers as against eighteen last year. Each of the principal geographical divisions of our country has one or more of these workers. Thirty-seven Annual Conferences are reached by the present force.

One of the policies we have pursued earnestly is to distribute responsibility to and to secure thereby more effective cooperation from the field. We have promoted the organization of the Annual Conference Board of Sunday Schools and have suggested to it a definite program of service. The response to our efforts in this type of promotion by the presiding bishop and the members of the Conference has been prompt and eager. Our records now show that there are thirty-one Annual Conference Boards of Sunday Schools actually taking initiative in promoting the Sunday-school work within the Conference bounds. One of the profitable services directed by these boards is to learn and to report the actual facts concerning the Sunday-school situation in the Conference. They further plan for institutes and training schools at suitable places and greatly assist our special workers in reaching the officers and teachers with our training program. One notable result of the activity of the Annual Conference Board is the request coming to our office from district superintendents asking us to furnish a man who shall accompany the district superintendent to each of his charges and present to a joint meeting of the Quarterly Conference and the Sunday School Board the possibilities of a well organized church school.

During the past year our field men have organized 426 new Sunday schools with an enrollment of 18,071. They have organized 36 new churches, and established 245 new preaching places. They have organized 1,942 teacher training classes with a total enrollment of 24,684. They have promoted and helped conduct 74 standard training schools. They have rendered invaluable aid in connection with the summer schools. They report 949 schools graded in organization and teaching material. They have promoted 120 week-day schools, and 522 vacation church schools.

FOREIGN

The work outside of the United States has been under the direction of Dr. Corliss P. Hargraves for the past four years.

We now support specialized workers or secretaries in Europe, where we have work in fifteen different nations; in India and Burma; in Malaysia, where we receive part-time service from a missionary who is well equipped religious educationally; in the Philippines, China, Korea and Japan. Likewise, under missionary supervision in Africa, the Madeira Islands, Porto Rico, Hawaii and the Netherlands Indies our board has made grants for literature during the quadrennium, which though invariably small, have nevertheless aided weak and struggling schools either to create or purchase literature without which in most instances such schools would not have been able to continue.

In every field where we are now carrying on work we have established during the quadrennium institutes, leadership training conferences, summer schools, camps or daily vacation Bible schools; some or all of these for each field; and through these agencies endeavored to bring the impact of modern religious education during the quadrennium of such fields.

It is not possible to go into detail in this brief report and to show the full wealth of the ministry and achievements in each field abroad during the quadrennium. But the following are pertinent items suggestive of much more:

In Korea more than 5,000 workers have been enrolled in teacher-training courses during the quadrennium and the gain in Sunday-school membership amounts to 12,495.

When the devastating earthquake struck Japan one of the quickest responses to her suffering was the more than $42,000 with which the Sunday schools here in America immediately responded to our board's emergency appeal. This money came to our office but was forwarded to the field through the treasury of the Board of Foreign Missions, in the interests of co-operation.

In the Philippines nearly every type of religious educational work done in the United States has been put into operation: leadership-training, daily vacation church schools, Boy Scouts, Camp Fire Girls, institutes, week-day religious education, the Family Worship League and the production of a more satisfactory curriculum. In addition our Mr. Ryan has taught religious educational courses in our Union Theological Seminary at Manila, where, year by year, two or three score of young ministers have taken his work, thus laying significant foundations for to-morrow.

In Europe our relief appeal in behalf of the suffering childhood there, and resulting in our being able to send them early in the quadrennium almost one-half million dollars contributed by our American Sunday schools, threw the door wide open to us on every hand; and even though our giving was done without any expectation of such result. Our Sunday-school work there has gone forward by leaps and bounds, beyond any ability on our part to keep up with it. We now have one American director and six secretaries native to their various countries at work:

with a total Sunday-school membership of 121,194, a net increase of 10,785 for the quadrennium.

One of the most effective pieces of work we have done during the quadrennium in foreign fields has been in South America. There we have concentrated upon training up a native leadership and Sunday-school personnel, and in the creation of Sunday-school lessons and literature materials previously almost completely lacking in that continent. A conspicuous achievement in this connection was the beginning of a paper for young people called "El Amigo de la Juventud"; nothing like it having previously existed in the different countries in which we work in South America. Orders have already come in for this paper from Porto Rico, Guatemala, Cuba, Spain; practically for the entire Spanish-speaking world. We have also introduced into our work such special days as Rally Day, Children's Day, and Decision Day; previously unknown there. So that in the last year of the quadrennium in the single country of Argentina there were 800 decisions for Christ in the Sunday schools: a new and vastly worthwhile introduction.

One of the most valuable types of work our board has been doing in the foreign fields is the training up of informed leaders, religious educationally, for to-morrow; especially through chairs of religious education in the theological seminaries. During the quadrennium we have maintained part-time or full-time men teaching in the following institutions:

Bareilly Theological Seminary, Bareilly, India.

Union Theological Seminary, Manila, Philippine Islands.

Union Theological Seminary, Santiago, Chile, South America.

Union Theological Seminary, Seoul, Korea.

Martin Missions Institute, Frankfort-on-the-Main, Germany.

Union Theological Seminary, Foochow, China.

India Methodist Theological Seminary, Jubbulpore, India.

University of Nanking, Nanking, China.

Again, it is probable that our board has done no more valuable nor more statesmanlike work than in bringing home for specialized study certain workers from the foreign field, and then sending them back to be technically trained and inspirational leaders in the work across the sea. During the last four or five years we have given such additional study here in the United States to the following leaders:

Rev. Clement D. Rockey, India.

Rev. A. L. Ryan, Philippine Islands.

Rev. Paulus Scharpff, Ph.D., Germany.

Rev. Friederich Wunderlich, Ph.D., Germany.

One of the most staggering difficulties which confronted us at the beginning of the quadrennium was the appalling lack of literature, often of the simplest nature even, with which to carry on Sunday-school work. In almost every country we have had to create the necessary literature. Our workers, in conjunction with the missionaries and native leaders, have translated, adapted or created outright the following pieces of lesson literature:

In Norway and Denmark: One book; one year of Primary Graded Series; a teachers' journal, lesson commentary and helps, a children's story paper, and a paper for young people. In Sweden: Lesson commentary and helps, a young people's story paper, and two years' series of Sunday-school lessons. In Germany: A teachers' journal, entire Primary and Junior Department series of Graded Lessons, and three books. In Italy: Five books, three series of Graded Lessons, and three further series in process of production. In France: Three years of lessons, a children's story paper, and a teachers' journal. In South America: Thirteen books, pageants, Bible story dramatizations, and other program-material; lesson commentary and helps; Sunday-school young people's paper in Spanish, programs for Decision Day, Children's Day and Christmas, Beginner's Graded Lessons.

The total gain in Sunday-school membership for the quadrennium in foreign fields is 135,631.

One of the significant achievements during this four year period has been the creation of a joint inter-board committee, representing the Board of Foreign Missions and the Board of Sunday Schools designed to eliminate all possible duplication or friction in carrying on the work of the two boards in foreign fields. This committee has been endorsed by both boards and is now in harmonious and fine operation, making complete unity and cooperation both at home and abroad easily possible.

CONCLUSION

A QUADRENNIUM OF COOPERATION

The Council of Boards made cooperation among the boards of benevolence much easier and more productive than could otherwise have been. There were provided so many enterprises in which all the boards are vitally interested. The representatives meeting together and coming to understand each other's tasks made for a larger spirit of cooperation.

The Board of Sunday Schools has welcomed every available occasion for joining with other agencies in promoting the world service of the church. In the matter of missionary education, systematic stewardship and life service the representatives of the board have given much time and effort in cooperation with the Department of Education of the Committee on Conservation and Advance.

By cooperation with the Board of Epworth League we have established relations with many League institutes, and have provided for instruction in League methods in our summer schools. Older boys' conferences are promoted jointly by the Board of Epworth League and the Board of Sunday Schools.

We have united with the Board of Foreign Missions in forming a joint committee on policy and work in the foreign field. This arrangement prevents any possible overlapping or misunderstanding in the promotion of Sunday-school work outside of the United States.

We have several contacts with the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension. These boards conduct the Bureau of Architecture jointly. They cooperate in summer schools for rural pastors, and they furnish jointly a member on the staff of the Life Service Commission.

Naturally the Board of Sunday Schools works in the closest relationship with the publishing interests of the church. The largest single feature in the output of the Book Concern is the Sunday-school publications. The Editor of Sunday-School Publications has been the chairman of the Curriculum Committee of the Board of Sunday Schools. He has represented to the Book Committee the needs of the Sunday-school field for literature and supplies, and the Book Committee has been generous and prompt in meeting these needs. The abundance and quality of the Sunday-school supplies have made our service to the field simpler and more satisfactory.

The International Sunday School Council of Religious Education, the new agency for interdenominational cooperation, has entered upon a period of larger usefulness. Our board has found through this agency a stimulating fellowship with other denominations. In the sessions of the Council and its committees we reach agreements as to educational and promotional standards. Through this agency we believe Protestantism is making a united attack upon the vast spiritual illiteracy which threatens the morals of the nation.

The magnitude and gravity of our responsibility as a board can hardly be overstated. Our chief concern is for the highest welfare of the on-coming generation. No preceding generation has had less external authority applied to it by either the home, the church or the state. The great body of childhood and youth to-day is as nearly "on its own" as it could well be. One phase of what has been called the "revolt of youth" may be truthfully called the "collapse of restraint." Parents have almost quit raising their children, teachers wear no badge of authority, and society in general refuses to train up children in the way they should go. This human situation to-day must be very like that on which Jesus looked, when he likened the multitude to sheep without a shepherd. The extreme alarmist does no doubt overestimate the importance of restraining rules, established customs and orderly conformity in determining Christian character, and when he sees the failure of these conservative factors he can see no alternative but anarchy. The extreme liberalist, on the other hand, exalts freedom overmuch. He sees life's real values in the fullness and variety of experience. Even moral distinctions are denied if they offer the slightest barrier to the completest satisfaction of life's many appetites. There is no place in this philosophy of realism and personal liberty for the discipline of restraint and the admonitions of the out-going generation. Life must be served. Any hesitation to follow one's natural instincts to the fullest is branded as cowardice or hypocrisy. This teaching is finding its way into the thinking and living of our day. It comes through every avenue of our unsheltered world, claiming to speak for such noble terms as truth, reality and freedom. It is hardly thinkable though that all the moral trackage of life laid by the generations of the past will be abandoned by any large number of any generation, for the impulsive adventures which ignore all danger signals. It is undoubtedly true, and happily so, that the reliance of the church upon external authority and specific rules of conduct is giving way to a faith in the inner integrity of the soul that knows God as a personal reality, and a faith in the perennial power of Christian ideals. In this critical transition of authority in religion it is our solemn duty as a board of religious education to arouse the teaching capacity and kindle to a flame the spiritual devotion of the church, in order that the on-coming generation may have an adequate personal experience of God and a life-controlling faith in the practicability of a world order such as Jesus taught and for which he gave his life.

Respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM S. BOVARD,

Corresponding Secretary.

REPORT OF THE EDITOR OF SUNDAY SCHOOL PUBLICATIONS

DEAR FATHERS AND BRETHREN:

In the preparation of literature and lesson courses for teachers and pupils in the Sunday school and for teacher training, the record of the past quadrennium closely parallels the encouraging report of the Corresponding Secretary regarding enrollments, accessions to the church from the Sunday school, and Sunday-school contributions to local support and to the stated and special benevolences of the church. The increase in the contributions of the Sunday schools to local support is accounted for in part by the better furnishing and equipping of the Sunday schools and by the use of more and better literature and supplies.

LESSON COURSES FOR THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

In the preparation of lesson courses for the Sunday school, the Board of Sunday Schools through its Committee on Curriculum cooperates with other Protestant Evangelical churches through the International Sunday School Lesson Committee. The truly interdenominational character of this Committee as at present constituted makes this cooperation effective and helpful without the sacrifice of denominational autonomy and independence of final action. The record of the last quadrennium—1920-1923 inclusive—is one of notable achievement, both in the variety and quality of lesson courses actually released and in the constructive plans for the future development of the teaching program for Protestant Evangelical Sunday schools.

The Methodist representatives on the International Lesson Committee during the quadrennium have been William S. Bovard, Henry H. Meyer, Frederick C. Eiselen and Mrs. J. W. Barnes.

The outlines of lesson courses prepared and released by the International Lesson Committee during the quadrennium include the following:

1. Improved Uniform Lessons for four years, 1923, 1924, 1925, 1926 (52 lessons each). Outlines for years following 1923 are without adaptations to Primary and Junior age groups.
2. Primary Group Lessons, first cycle of three years, for use during 1924, 1925, 1926 (52 lessons each).
3. Junior Group Lessons, first cycle of three years, for use during 1924, 1925, 1926 (52 lessons each).
4. Adult Electives:
 - Beacon Lights of Prophecy (13 lessons)
 - Studies in Deuteronomy (13 lessons)
 - Teachings of Jesus for Daily Life (52 lessons)
 - The Message of the Epistle to the Galatians (13 lessons)

Christian Ideals in Industry (13 lessons)
 Christian Stewardship (13 lessons)
 The Criminal and the Community (13 lessons)

5. Senior—Young People Electives:

Christianity and World Democracy (13 lessons)
 Fundamentals of Christian Experience (13 lessons)

6. American Indian Series, for use in Government Indian Schools and in Indian Sunday schools elsewhere:

Selected Bible Stories, for pupils six to nine years of age (52 lessons)

Life of Jesus, for pupils ten to thirteen years of age (52 lessons)

Travels of Paul, for pupils fourteen to eighteen years of age (52 lessons).

Such of these outlines as have been approved by the Curriculum Committee for use in Methodist Sunday schools are described in detail in the successive Year Books of the Board. All such outlines before being approved have been submitted to critical examination and revision by the Curriculum Committee in cooperation with the Sunday School Editorial Staff.

In addition to its participation in the work of the International Lesson Committee, the Committee on Curriculum has prepared in outline an extensive list of elective and teacher training courses for use in Methodist Sunday schools.

PRIMARY AND JUNIOR GROUP LESSONS

In pursuance of a general policy of educational advance the International Sunday School Lesson Committee has prepared and released for use beginning January 1, 1924, a three-year course of Primary Group Lessons and a three-year course of Junior Group Lessons, outlines for which have been considered and approved by the Board of Sunday Schools on recommendation of its Committee on Curriculum. In consultation with the Publishing Agents and representatives of the Book Committee it was decided to substitute these Primary and Junior Group Lessons for the usual adaptations of the Uniform Lessons for these age groups and to publish them in the regular periodicals designed for use with Primary and Junior children.

Sunday-school superintendents and elementary teachers in Methodist Sunday schools not yet using the Closely Graded Lessons in the elementary grades should note the action taken by the Board with reference to these new Group Lessons for Primary and Junior pupils. Because of the importance of this action for many Sunday schools at the present time we quote it in full:

"The Board of Sunday Schools notes with satisfaction the action taken by the International Sunday School Lesson Committee in discontinuing the Primary and Junior adaptations of the Improved Uniform Lessons, and in preparing and releasing separate Group Lessons for each of these age groups. These new group lessons as now published in the Primary Quarterly, the Boys and Girls Quarterly, the Shorter Junior Quarterly, and the Elementary Teacher constitute approved courses for Primary and Junior children in Methodist Sunday schools, and are intended for all schools not prepared or equipped to use the Closely Graded Lessons, which remain the recognized standard for Methodist Sunday schools. We desire to caution Methodist Sunday schools against the misleading advertising and promotion literature of certain individual and commercial publishers of Sunday-school periodicals who are attempting to perpetuate the use of absolutely uniform lessons in all grades of the Sunday school in direct opposition to our Methodist standards and to the stated policy of the International Sunday School Lesson Committee."

PRINCIPLES OF CURRICULUM CONSTRUCTION

Important preliminary steps have been taken by the International Sunday School Lesson Committee looking toward the creation of the proposed new curriculum of religious education in which the teaching programs for week-day and Sunday shall be thoroughly coordinated. In this important matter the committee is proceeding in a thoroughly scientific manner and with due regard for the fundamental educational and evangelistic purposes which every program of religious instruction conducted under the auspices of Protestant Evangelical Churches is expected to serve.

A tentative statement of principles of curriculum construction has been prepared by the Lesson Committee. As approved by the Committee on Curriculum of the Board of Sunday Schools, this statement defines the objective of religious education as follows:

"The objective of religious education is a complete Christian life, which includes personal acceptance of Christ as Saviour and his way of life and, under normal circumstances, membership in a Christian church; the Christian motive in the making of all life choices; and whole-hearted participation in and constructive contribution to the progressive realization of a social order controlled by Christian principles."

Following this statement of aim in religious education, attention is called to the central importance of the experience of the child in the teaching process.

"The teaching process takes its point of departure from the experience of the child. It should seek to direct and enrich that experience in its religious aspects with a view to the adequate control of conduct and the development of Christian personality.

"The experience of each child is of worth on its own account, and the best possible preparation for the future is to be had through the performance of functions normal to the present. Some of the most educative of these functions grow out of the fact that the child does not live an isolated life but actually participates in the interests and activities of adult life."

The statement then indicates ways in which this religious experience of the child may be enlarged and discusses the subject-matter of religious education with emphasis upon the fact that

"The various forms of religious literature are valuable for religious education because they record the experience which men have had of God and of other spiritual values.

"The Bible is the incomparable source of such material."

After pointing out the relationship between subject-matter and method in religious education, the statement concludes with a paragraph emphasizing the importance of a correlated program as follows:

"The program of Christian education should constitute a unified, consistent whole. This implies provision for all stages of growth; the inclusion of Sunday and week-day programs in a single plan, the combination of home training and church training into a single whole; continuity between this church-and-home training on the one hand and the Christian academy and college on the other; and, finally, correlation with the public school and with other community agencies for education."

On the basis of this statement of theory, the International Lesson Committee in cooperation with denominational Boards is engaged in conducting a series of supervised experiments in carefully selected centers in the use of teaching programs in which the instruction for Sunday and week-day classes is carefully coordinated.

COOPERATION THROUGH SYNDICATION

The past quadrennium has been significant among other things because of the large measure of syndication which has obtained in the field of literature production for the Sunday school. During the four years 1920-23 the Sunday-school editorial office and The Methodist Book Concern have cooperated with the editors and publishers of no less than eighteen different denominations, either in the production and simultaneous use of common materials in one or more of their regular Sunday-school periodicals, or in the production of teacher-training and other textbooks. Naturally both the amount of common material and the exact nature of the syndicate arrangement have varied in each case.

The outstanding example of syndication in earlier years was the production of the Graded Lesson Syndicate edition of the Closely Graded Lessons. This arrangement still continues, although the Graded Lesson Syndicate has undertaken no revisions or new publication within the last four years.

Other examples of syndication during the past four years include the publication of: 1. The Church School, a magazine of Christian education produced under the joint auspices of the Congregational, Disciples, Methodist Episcopal, Methodist Episcopal South and Reformed (in America) Churches; (2) The Third Year Specialization Textbooks in Teacher Training produced jointly by eleven denominations on the basis of outlines prepared by the International Sunday School Council.

We have also cooperated extensively with individual denominations in the syndicated production of one or more standard publications and types of material. Most important among these denominations have been the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the Congregational Board of Publication, the Evangelical Association and the Church of the United Brethren. There has been a very large demand for the simultaneous use of good general articles, lesson treatments, and fiction material appearing in the story papers. In response to this demand a steadily increasing amount of manuscript material purchased for our Methodist Sunday-school publications has been resold for simultaneous use by other denominations. There has also been a frequent exchange of materials without the formality of actual collection and payment for manuscripts thus exchanged.

Such a program of syndication is not without its difficulties. These are cumulative and increase in direct ratio to the amount of material that is syndicated. Cooperation involves mutual concessions and may easily be carried to the point of diminishing returns. Nevertheless, editorial cooperation in the production of religious-educational literature has distinct compensations that are likewise real and cumulative. There are obvious economies achieved through syndication. The savings involved in a single year amount to many thousands of dollars. Editorial cooperation, moreover, results in broadening horizons and in a growing sense of the unity of spirit and purpose that actually exists among evangelical Christians. It leads to an appreciation of the larger opportunities for Christian service which must inevitably result from the elimination of waste and duplication in the vital processes of education and evangelism. The experience in syndication gained during the quadrennium should point the way to still greater economies in literature production through practical and effective cooperation on the part of all of the Protestant Evangelical Churches in this country.

ADULT AND TEACHERS' PUBLICATIONS

The editorial preparation and supervision of our Sunday-school literature is conducted under four general departments, including (1) Adult and Teachers' Publications, (2) Young People's Publications, (3) Children's Publications, (4) Foreign Language and Missionary Publications.

The personnel of the Department of Adult and Teachers' Publications is as follows: Associate Editor, Wade Crawford

Barclay; Assistant Editors, Mary E. Moxcey, Lydon B. Phifer, and Cecil D. Smith.

Within this department have been included during the quadrennium the following publications: The Sunday School Journal, The Adult Bible Class Monthly, The Home Quarterly, The Home Visitor, Service and Lesson Leaf, The Superintendent's Helper, and, since its beginning one year ago, The Officer. Responsibility for the consideration of lesson problems, for the development of the curriculum, elective study courses and courses in training for leadership, apart from the immediate responsibility of the Editor, has also been borne by this department.

During the quadrennium The Sunday School Journal has continued to be, as it had been during more than a half century preceding, our chief lesson publication. Its lesson section for more than a generation has been the main reliance of that vast group of pastors and lay leaders who each Sunday teach the Uniform Lesson. While the field of service of the Journal has been restricted somewhat by the introduction of specialized periodicals necessitated by newer developments in the field of Sunday-school work, it still has a very large constituency unreached by other periodicals. To these it seeks to interpret the opportunity and responsibility of the church for the teaching of religion, broadening the vision and informing the minds of pastors, superintendents, and teachers, as was said in the first issue in 1860, "concerning whatever will help to improve the teacher and to give the Sunday school greater efficiency." Its list of writers of our own church during the quadrennium is in itself a roster of outstanding ministerial and lay leaders of Methodism. The list of the general contributors presents convincing evidence that the Journal has offered to its readers the ripest and best thought of evangelical Protestantism on theory, principles, and methods of religious education, as well as giving important help in the teaching of the lesson.

It is estimated that twenty-nine per cent of the enrollment in Methodist Episcopal Sunday schools consists of adults. This gives us an adult constituency of approximately 1,429,000. To meet the needs of this great host of adult members of the Sunday school for help on the International Uniform Lessons, as well as to serve as an organ of the adult-Bible-class movement, The Adult Bible Class Monthly was established sixteen years ago. Its most notable increase in circulation during this period has been within the past four years. In addition to the lessons of the Improved Uniform Series alternative courses are occasionally printed in The Adult Bible Class Monthly. These are usually continued through a period of three months only. For example, from January to March, 1923, there was presented a foreign-missionary course entitled "Working With Christ for India," written by Professor Oscar MacMillan Buck, of Drew Theological Seminary. Publication of this course occasioned widespread approval and praise as a significant contribution to the present program of World Service.

Throughout the quadrennium The Home Quarterly has rendered an increasing service to our very large constituency of people who are prevented from attending the services of church and school. Probably no periodical that we publish is received with more genuine appreciation than is felt by many of the underprivileged men and women who are home-bound either by family cares or by age and invalidism. The large company of faithful workers who constitute the corps of Home Department visitors have been likewise cordially appreciative of the special help offered to them in The Home Visitor.

At the beginning of the year 1923 it was wisely decided to provide in a small monthly periodical the specialized help for superintendents and other officers of the Sunday school which the already existing publications could furnish only in a very limited way. From its first issue The Officer has had an expanding and constantly more appreciative group of readers. An outstanding service of this publication is that of information on the current program of the Board of Sunday Schools, House books, and periodicals, publicity concerning the standard training schools, institutes, and summer schools, and news of importance concerning the work of local Sunday schools in all parts of the country. Possibly its most important single service is the provision of fresh materials and practical suggestions to the superintendents on the conduct of the service of worship for each Sunday. From six to eight pages in each issue of The Officer offer practical aid, supplying actual material for use in talks, stories, prayers, and responses.

The Service and Lesson Leaf, one of our minor publications, has found within the last quadrennium a new field of service in its outline of a service of worship for the general assembly. It is eminently desirable for each participant in a service of worship to be informed concerning the outline of the program, so that announcements, which interrupt the continuity of the service, may be obviated. That the value of this publication is recognized is shown by its widespread distribution.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S PUBLICATIONS

The publications included in this group include three weekly story papers, The Classmate, The Target and The Portal; three important lesson quarterlies, The Senior, The Illustrated and

The Intermediate. The Editorial staff consists of Associate Editor, E. Leigh Mudge; Assistant Editors: Wilma K. McFarland, Alfred D. Moore, Anne M. Buntain, Ida Angleman, Gladys E. Meyerand.

Within the last four years there have been marked advances in the character and service of our publications for young people. It has been a period of decided progress in the field of religious education, and of this progress our publications are a significant index. The purpose for which our periodicals are issued is the development of Christian character by means of Christian nurture and training. Not only the lesson quarterlies but the story papers are treated as definite elements in our curriculum of religious education. We are making progress, through the cultivation of writers with high religious ideals, in adapting our publications to the moral and religious needs of our young people. The development of the artistic appearance of our publications has proceeded throughout the quadrennium.

Within the last quadrennium there have been various improvements in the character of our three lesson quarterlies—The Senior, The Illustrated, and The Intermediate. The importance of educational publications cannot be measured, and the possible service of these periodicals with their wide circulations is constantly before us. The Senior Quarterly is said to have the largest circulation of any religious periodical. If this is true, we are justified in giving to its preparation the most careful attention. The Illustrated and Intermediate Quarterlies are for younger people, and perhaps the content of these periodicals is of even greater importance than that of The Senior, considering the mental plasticity and moral potentiality of their readers. Hence, we have given close attention to the selection of writers for the quarterlies, seeking to find men who are intellectually well-equipped, thorough in their scholarship, trained and interesting writers, and, above all, possessed with that religious enthusiasm and zeal which are needed in workers with young people.

The aim of our story papers is in general similar to that of all our curriculum material. These story papers are not designed for the mere amusement and pastime of our readers. No story or article is accepted for publication merely because it is interesting. To be sure, we insist upon its interesting nature and its literary quality; but it must fill a place in our general program of religious education in order to be judged worthy of publication in our story papers. These are designed to teach religious and moral truths and to develop individual and social attitudes principally through indirect suggestion, which is often more successful than the direct suggestion of hortatory address.

For The Classmate we have developed a staff of men and women who know our purposes and can adapt their work to them, who are enthusiastic believers in the principles of religious education, and who can be relied upon to represent accurately and effectively the special fields of writing for which we select them. Thus, we have writers who are acquainted with natural science, with problems of personal and public health, social work, foreign missions, and many other departments of interest to our readers. A careful examination of The Classmate will indicate that we have made progress in the quality of our literary material since the beginning of the quadrennium.

The most noticeable change made in our story-paper program within the quadrennium was the substitution for The Sunday School Advocate of two papers—The Target for boys and The Portal for girls. This change in our oldest publication was made only after careful deliberation and planning. The increased circulation and the many expressions of satisfaction from schools and pupils make it clear that the change has not been a mistake.

We purpose that all our publications for young people shall maintain a high standard of moral enthusiasm and religious devotion, that they may be artistically worthy in their literary content, in their illustrations, and in their mechanical form, and that they may have an increasing influence for good upon our young people. An editor is a schoolmaster, with the deep influence of the printed page at his command in directing the lives of vast numbers of students.

CHILDREN'S PUBLICATIONS

The Department of Children's Publications is responsible for literature that serves children and teachers in the elementary grades of the Sunday school, ages up to eleven inclusive. The publications involved are The Primary Quarterly, The Boys' and Girls' Quarterly, The Shorter Junior Quarterly, The Elementary Teacher, The Picture Story Paper, and the Closely Graded Lessons for beginners', primary, and junior grades. In addition The Church School has furnished practical periodical help for teachers in graded Sunday schools. So far as these publications are concerned, the quadrennium under review has been a period of preparation rather than one of change. Aside from the provision of new textbooks for teachers listed elsewhere, a substantial improvement in quality, and some increase in size, the publications have remained the same, both in number and name, throughout the quadrennium. Those in immediate editorial charge of these publications during the quadrennium have included Mrs. J. W. Barnes, Josephine L. Baldwin, Elisabeth Edland, and Marguerite Skidmore. For the elementary material in The Church School Grace I. Alston has been responsible.

The most encouraging feature to be recorded for the quadrennium has been the steady and rapid increase in the circulation of the graded lessons.

At the same time the circulation of the uniform-lesson publications for these ages has been practically at a standstill. The figures show an actual slight increase of a trifle over one per cent. At the present time more than two thirds of the pupils and teachers in the elementary grades of Methodist Episcopal Sunday schools were using graded lessons.

The Closely Graded Lessons for the elementary grades were completely revised during the preceding quadrennium—1916-19. For this reason no editorial changes were required in these lessons during the four years covered by this report. There is need, however, for an early further revision of some of the courses and for additional helps in periodical form for teachers using the graded lessons. Careful thought is being given to this need, which should be met as promptly as possible following the General Conference.

The International Improved Uniform Lessons during this period were provided by the International Lesson Committee, with special primary and junior adaptations in titles, golden texts, and Scripture passages, thus differentiating the uniform lessons for these grades from the general lesson for the whole school in several respects. In harmony with the policy of the International Lesson Committee adopted at the beginning of the quadrennium and mentioned elsewhere in this report, these primary and junior adaptations of the uniform lessons were discontinued with the close of 1923. At the same time the International Lesson Committee has provided special Primary and Junior Group Lessons, also described elsewhere, and has recommended the substitution of these for the Improved Uniform Lessons in the primary and junior grades of the Sunday school. The practice of the Methodist Episcopal Church during the new quadrennium will thus continue to be in harmony with the recommendation of the International Sunday School Lesson Committee.

The Picture Story Paper has maintained its established high standard and has been improved in form and appearance during the quadrennium. The colored covers appearing from time to time during the year have proved especially attractive. In contents the paper has never been better. There is reason to believe that the indirect teaching in story form presented in The Picture Story Paper has not failed of its purpose. Teachers and parents using The Picture Story Paper have borne ample testimony to this fact.

FOREIGN-LANGUAGE AND MISSIONARY PUBLICATIONS

Present staff: Associate Editor, Eric M. North; Assistant

Editor, Welthy Honsinger; Contributing Editor, Gilbert Loveland.

The work of the department of Foreign-Language and Missionary Publications has been marked by a considerable expansion during the quadrennium in each of the three phases of its work—the development of Sunday-school literature in foreign languages for use in the United States, the development of missionary education through the Sunday-school publications, and the assistance to individuals and committees who are carrying on religious-educational work in foreign lands.

In the first of these phases—the development of Sunday-school literature in foreign languages—there was issued early in the quadrennium a four-page bilingual, Italian-English story paper designed to carry to Italian parents the story of the lesson studied by the children in Sunday school and to be used as a tract. After a fair trial of twenty-one months this Racconti per I Fanciulli was discontinued because of an insufficiently widespread demand.

Bilingual quarterlies of forty-eight pages, entitled Bible Lessons for Adults in Home and School, have been issued in Czech, Italian, Magyar, Polish, Russian, and Spanish. These are undated and arranged in three series: "The Life of Christ" (four numbers), "Early Christian Church" (two numbers), and "Songs and Prayers in the Old Testament" (two numbers). The English basis for the lessons and the magazine matter is prepared by an editorial subcommittee. This department secured the material for the first series and has been responsible for the editing of the Czech edition, issued by The Methodist Book Concern. This development has been approved by the Committee of Six on Foreign Language Publications.

The chief publication of the department is the thirty-two-page monthly magazine World Neighbors. This was begun in October, 1921, as a sixteen-page periodical under the name of Missionary Education. Its new name and increased size date from October, 1923. World Neighbors furnishes to Sunday-school workers the materials both for missionary education in the regular instructional activities of the schools and for programs, services of worship, and projects for class and school activities, as well as information and stimulation of a missionary nature for the general use of the teacher. It is already clear that it is of great value not only to the Sunday school but to other agencies engaged in the training of children and youth in the missionary purpose and work of the church.

This department has also been of service to the story papers by furnishing articles of a missionary nature. It is responsible for the immediate preparation of special missionary courses approved by the Committee on Curriculum.

The service of the department to the foreign field is especially noteworthy. Early in the quadrennium, with the cooperation of the Board of Foreign Missions, bound sets of the Closely Graded Lessons, together with a selected reference list of religious-educational books, were placed in a number of mission-college libraries and in the hands of Methodists on the field responsible for curriculum and lesson-making work. Several of these have borne fruit in the form of translations into other languages of some of the graded-lesson units and some of the more helpful of the other books supplied by the department. Advance proofs of certain of our lesson periodicals and of The Lesson Handbook are supplied regularly to editors and lesson writers in various countries of Latin America, Europe, and Eastern and Southern Asia, including the Philippines, where they are used in working out the text of lessons in the vernacular of each field.

Because of the association of the department with the Board of Foreign Missions, which shares with The Methodist Book Concern the expenses of the department, Dr. Eric M. North, associate editor in charge, is in intimate contact with other mission boards and with the interdenominational missionary agencies. The department has assisted in forming a special Joint Advisory Committee on Materials and Methods of Religious Education on the Foreign Field, representing officially the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, the World's Sunday School Association, the International Sunday School Lesson Committee, the Educational Committee of the International Sunday School Council of Religious Education, and the Committee on Cooperation in Latin America.

CONCLUSION

The obvious question raised by this record of four years concerns the line of future development in the teaching literature of the church school. Without attempting to forecast what this development will be in detail, it is fair to assume that progress will continue along the lines already laid down, with a further extension of religious education into the week and a closer co-ordination of both Sunday and week-day curricula and programs of the church school. With a view to contributing our full share to the development of this larger coordinated curriculum the editorial staff, in cooperation with the Curriculum Committee of the Board of Sunday Schools and with similar groups in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is preparing materials for experimental use in such combined Sunday and week-day programs. The actual experimentation will be carried out under the supervision of the Board of Sunday Schools in centers of its own selection where conditions for such experimentation seem especially favorable.

This report would be incomplete without a word concerning the indebtedness of the editor to the various members of his staff, to the Book Editor, to the Publishing Agents and heads of departments of the Book Concern, and to the Corresponding Secretary and departmental superintendents of the Board of Sunday Schools for the part that each has contributed to the success of our Sunday-school editorial program during the four years of the quadrennium. The task of producing the teaching literature for the church school has become a cooperative enterprise of such magnitude that the part of any one individual is a constantly decreasing factor. With the increasing importance of our editorial program it is both a relief and a joy to feel that one is working in a partnership in which the strength of the individual is the strength of the group.

Respectfully submitted,

HENRY H. MEYER,
Editor, Sunday School Publications.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF THE EPWORTH LEAGUE

To the General Conference to be held in Springfield, Massachusetts, May, 1924

The presentation of this report marks the ninth General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church before which the organized work of our young people has been reviewed. It is not the passing of a mere compliment to say that in the submission of what is herewith set forth there will be found a clear differentiation in the account of the work of the Epworth League as at present constituted from that which was true with reference to all previous reports. It is of importance that this fact should be kept in mind in reviewing what follows.

For thirty-one years of its history the young people's organization existed as a society within the church purely voluntary in its character. There was no attempt by the church in any official way to provide for its finances or for its program. No standards were employed in the interest of uniformity of organization or activity. Epworth Leagues went their own way—some were grouped as Conference organizations, others as districts, others drifted merely as chapters. Even within the chapters standards were lacking in large part and each group erected its own, and when erected they survived for such periods as the constantly changing group which makes up our Epworth League membership decided for themselves.

But even so, the record of its service constitutes one of the treasures which the church will not willingly lose.

Four years ago, at the session of the General Conference in Des Moines, Iowa, it was found that in the setting up of the Centenary program which was then under way, our young people's work had been annexed to the Centenary program in a certain manner that gave it opportunity to express its interest without sharing to any considerable extent in the benefits of that movement. In the legislation enacted creating the Council of Boards of Benevolence the Methodist Episcopal Church accorded recognition to its young people's work that is without precedent in the history of Protestant Christianity. She gave their organization the standing of a regular board of the church with directions to the Council to provide suitably for its financial needs and the proper correlation of its program to the other connectional interests of the church.

The Council of Boards of Benevolence, obedient to the mandate of the church's supreme legislative body, included the Epworth League in its plans of organization and at Boston, Massachusetts, in passing upon its annual budget, referred to its Administrative Committee the authority to perfect the arrangements for its support. In January, 1921, the Administrative Committee, by arrangement with the constituent Boards carried out the instruction of the General Conference and for three years and four months the organization has been working under that plan. It is safe to say that neither the organization itself nor the church as a whole has caught the full significance of what was done four years ago. The record of its activities indicates a wholesome appreciation on both the part of the church and her young people of this new relationship, but we need to remind ourselves just amid what conditions this radical change occurred.

It was the beginning of the reactions following the war, when the whole church experienced a slump which imperiled every item of her program. It occurred at a time when the denomination was under her biggest burden; when she was struggling with the biggest program ever launched by a Christian body; and a time when amidst depressing conditions industrially, socially and financially there were yet entertained the largest expectations ever cherished by a Christian organization.

The handicap of expanded conditions within the church, struggling against reactionary influences without, was tragically real. Some faint idea of what the Methodist Episcopal Church was struggling for and achieved may be gathered from such results as are capable of being expressed in her statistical record. During the period under review beside $51,000,000 raised for educational advance, $16,000,000 for hospitals and homes, $7,500,000 for increased ministerial support and $74,000,000 for church property, she laid upon the altars for her apportioned benevolences during the same period $57,000,000.

Seen from another angle, four years preceding 1918 there was pride in her record of paid disciplinary benevolences amounting to $21,792,674, whereas during the four years following for the same objects she provided $85,428,355.

For an organization which had been voluntary in its character to come suddenly into relationship with definite objectives and fixed program in a world-wide cooperative movement of this character furnished a period of testing the outcome of which might indeed be watched with interest.

The present Board of the Epworth League addressed itself with courage to the situation and at once set about to shape its four year program in a manner that would realize in the largest possible way the hopes of the church as expressed by the action of its chief legislative body.

After frequent and prolonged deliberation it seemed clear that the responsibility immediately before the Epworth League was threefold in its character. First that it should undertake seriously the articulation of its program; second, prepare for a proper expansion of its field; and third, guide both of these activities in such a way as to demonstrate the place of young people's work for young people in the whole program of the whole church for the whole world.

I. THE ARTICULATION OF ITS PROGRAM

The task of reducing to order and promoting system and method in the conduct of League affairs was rendered less difficult than it might have been by a careful appraisal of experiments conducted by young people themselves over our vast field. The need of bringing the entire organization to a uniform plan of procedure was understood by those who had given themselves diligently to service in behalf of the young people. But that which the young people themselves have wrought out here and there, bearing in some instances upon one point and in other instances upon another, pointed the way unmistakably, either by its demonstration or by what it suggested, to the desired goal. In some places the emphasis was upon the value of organization: making it connectional, elastic, and with provision for sufficient change in personnel to guard it against becoming static. In other places equal emphasis was found to be placed upon League material: the free literature explaining young people's work or offering suggestions for conducting it; or text books for study classes and other groups dealing with those interests that are church-wide or world-wide in their bearing. Still again it was found that care had been given to measures providing adequate financial support, so that in addition to carrying benevolent obligations for the church—quite a common practice among the Chapters—they provided for the support of their work, avoiding the necessity of debt on the one hand and the neglect of an assumed responsibility on the other.

Here was an opportunity in line with the policy of the organization to capitalize the initiative and resourcefulness of a group for the benefit of the whole. The Board of the Epworth League seized upon these demonstrations conducted in various centers and proceeded to apply them to different parts of the field. The result was an eager acceptance of the plan offered for solving the difficulties which had long been perplexing and frequently baffled attempts at solution. The result of this has been visualized in what is popularly known as the League Chart, on which there is given the "Program, Subjects, and Ideals" of the organization.

By standardized organization the Epworth League has in mind the "connectional" feature of our Methodism adapted to the largest service of our young people, with the mechanics of organization reduced to a minimum.

CHAPTER

A standard chapter, for example, will aim at the enlistment of all the young people, from whom they will select a president and a cabinet of four vice-presidents, secretary, treasurer, and Junior League superintendent, beside the pastor.

Each department, with a vice-president in charge, should have a committee of three or more for counsel and assistance, and the whole cabinet will seek to relate every young person to some form of interest in the general program.

Regular meetings of the cabinet afford opportunity for scrutinizing the results of each department's attempt to accomplish its task, and open the way for adjustments which may be necessary from time to time.

DISTRICT

The chapters have their relationship or connection with the District. A standard district is one where all the chapters are registered and participate in the district organization, where the cabinet is organized on the same basis as the local chapter and officers are elected annually. Thus the district organization is related to every chapter and to the program of each department.

A Conference League is constituted by the bringing together of the District Cabinets, and out of them selecting a Conference Cabinet to function in those matters which happen to be of Conference-wide interest, such as programs, Conference Anniversaries, Older Boys' Conferences, promotion of Institutes, and cooperation in securing a uniform League year with consecutive dates, as nearly as may be arranged, for the Annual Conventions.

AREA

With the growth of Area consciousness and the elaboration of Area "programs," the League finds itself faced with the necessity of making provision for the consideration of Area interests. The cabinets of all the Conference League organizations within an Area are brought together and they constitute the Area organization. From their members is chosen an Area Cabinet.

The scheme outlined above, which has been made official by the Board of the Epworth League, is simple in form and representative in character. It develops through the initiative of the young people themselves and provides control by those who are under immediate responsibility instead of direction by self-perpetuating committees of ex-Leaguers in point of service or by Annual Conferences or other bodies.

"Standardized" support is better known by the popular designation "The Twenty-four-Hour-Day Plan." The old form of "annual dues" has become obsolete by reason of its utter inadequacy to care for such a program as the Epworth League finds on its hands.

Experiments covering more than a quadrennium of time have proved that there is an Epworth League trinity of interests which are well-nigh, if not actually inseparable.

Organization, Program, and Support constitute this triad of interests in which the welfare of all is dependent upon the effectiveness of each. Hence standardization, as the term is employed here, should be recognized as a pervasive spirit rather than a mechanical contrivance. Its progress may be found more fully expressed in matters of program where the young people themselves give their decision than in the mechanics of organization where, as sometimes happens, adult survivals in League activities delay the adoption of standard plans even when they are known to be better.

Reference to the chart will make clear that the program of each of the four departments naturally divides its subjects into two groups, and enthrones an ideal expressed in the small circle enclosing it. Thus, a First Department divides its emphasis between Bible Study and Evangelism. These have their natural result in the building and strengthening of Christian character. This visualization of a standard program serves as a guide for the smallest group in the most remote chapter of the church as truly as for a challenging appeal to the preoccupied crowd of young folks in a busy metropolis.

Whether the young people themselves as a whole were ready for such system and order in the conduct of their affairs may be inferred from such results as are capable of being expressed in statistical form.

Once each year we invite Epworthians to register their purpose to observe the Morning Watch—if they have not already enrolled as comrades. During the present quadrennium these annual enrollments have risen from 1,273 in 1920 to 6,750 in 1923—an increase of over five hundred per cent.

Nor is this to be regarded in any sense as exceptional. Their interest in Bible Study is reflected in the purchase of special volumes prepared for their group. Selecting at random four of these texts, a total sale of 10,000 copies is recorded. In Evangelism, which expresses their interest in winning their chums, a total of 7,246 individual purchases of textbooks to instruct them on how to bring their comrades to Christ, is a recorded fact. In the interest of clean fun they have bought 9,000 volumes and in the promotion of Mission Study, mentioning only five volumes without including their later purchases of the World Service book, a total of 33,279 volumes is recorded.

Expressed in business terms the interest of young people in spiritual culture during the quadrennium has resulted in purchases of League textbooks to the amount of $147,023.

It would be misleading to conclude that this covered fully their outlay for literature. About seven years ago the Epworth League Quarterly became an official publication of the Central Office, superseding the "Devotional Topic Notes," which were previously issued semiannually. From a circulation of 13,000 late in the year of 1917 it has grown steadily until at the present time a regular edition of 35,000 copies is issued quarterly. Without publicity except of a limited kind and solely upon its merits as a useful periodical for leaders of the devotional meetings it has come into a place of large influence and service. At no time during its history has it served more usefully or acceptably than at the present time. The steady rise of its circulation and the appreciation of its value expressed in words of commendation from all over the church indicate its period of growth has not yet reached its zenith.

There is also the Epworth Herald, which at the end of a full generation of service enjoys the popular favor of the young people unimpaired. The present circulation shows that its growth during the past four years has more than doubled the total combined growth in circulation of all the other official papers of the church.

In no department of the organization has the maintenance of standards been in more convincing evidence than in the department of Mission Study and Stewardship. In 1918, when this responsibility was transferred to the Epworth League from our Mission Boards, certain ideals were adopted which have been strictly adhered to. One was that of investing the term Mission Study with a content which would express a definite meaning, as truly as is the case when one thinks of "Consecration," "Win-My-Chum" or "Morning Watch." In order to accomplish this it was determined that the department should be educational in its aims, implying personal contact. In season, out of season this objective has been pursued with the gratifying result that young people have responded to this challenge to the extent of 978 new classes each year above the enrollment of the preceding year. From 858 classes, the highest record obtainable before the transfer was made to the Epworth League, the total for 1922-23 reached 5,751 registered classes. For the year now under way with 4,000 classes already registered, indications based upon figures at a similar period in preceding years point to a total registration of more than seven thousand classes. And this in spite of a handicap due to an inadequate supply of textbooks, resulting in the loss of several hundred class registrations.

Our Institute work has furnished evidence of the same character. Under the direction of the Board three annual Council meetings have been held with the deans and managers of the Institutes during the quadrennium. A standard course covering four years with credit for standard periods directed by approved teachers and in charge of a dean has been worked out. Summer Institutes which in 1919 numbered 57 reached a total of 127 for 1923.

During this same period the total number of life work candidates enrolled and accepted by the Life Service Commission was 12,758. It is interesting to note that of this number those gathered from the Epworth League Institutes totalled 6,389, or putting it differently, the Epworth League presented to our church during four years more recruits for her world-wide work than all other agencies put together.

There are already registered at the Central Office for the season of 1924, 150 of these summer gatherings. Between forty and fifty thousands of our choicest young people will be in attendance upon the classes in these gatherings and out of their number several hundreds of carefully selected candidates for life work will be registered, after deliberation and prayer, in conference with carefully selected advisers appointed to guide them in these critical matters.

A surprising, almost unexpected, result of these summer gatherings is what we are now witnessing in the winter season. In Area after Area Mid-Winter Institutes, carrying a limited schedule of studies under standard and approved auspices, are quite outnumbering the summer gatherings. These render a needed ministry to hundreds of young people who are unable to treat themselves to the delights of a week with their comrades at some favorite spot in a summer session.

The life-work secretaries of these Institutes and the mission study teachers for the same gatherings are, by arrangement, grouped for intensive training at selected points across the country before the Institute season opens in order to qualify them for the important duties they are expected to render. The continuance of these group conferences has been requested by the Mission Boards and by the Life Service Commission, indicating clearly the important service they render.

The Epworth League has not limited itself to those whom the church has already enrolled in its membership but has applied with diligence the same process of standardization to its work with the Junior portion of the family circle, that is expected to make up the Epworth League of to-morrow.

One of our editors is quoted as having said that the total loss from the probationers' list of the church in less than ten years has exceeded 1,125,000 names. Whether the accuracy of this statement is susceptible of actual demonstration or not, the fact remains that the church's greatest loss and the pastor's heart-break is at this point. The staggering loss helps to explain the restlessness of many a pastor and premature aging of men broken under a weight of responsibility for whom adequate help has not been provided.

The General Conference has set apart the Junior League as the agency for providing this assistance. In cooperation with leaders in religious education the Junior League program has been standardized into a course of four years covering the history, organization, teaching, and program of our own church for the intelligent training of her preparatory members. No branch of young people's work has a finer record to exhibit for the past four years than this department of our service. In teachers' textbooks for Junior League classes alone there has been a sale of 8,000 volumes.

It is becoming more and more recognized as a resource for pastors which they may utilize to advantage in preparing a trained laity to administer the affairs of Methodism in years to come.

The expansion of activities as suggested in the statistics just given carry with them the manifest but unexpressed needs of adequate financial support. The Twenty-four-Hour-Day plan is now accepted as the "standard" form of support. During these four years the young people have exhibited a growing appreciation of its value. Four years ago their total contribution through the Twenty-four-Hour-Day plan for that year amounted to $10,795. At present there are enrolled at the Central Office 105,000 Twenty-four-Hour-Day Leaguers and the payments for 1923 on this plan total $30,830.

Now that the organization is to have its place in the apportionments to the local churches our support by this plan should witness a sudden and surprising expansion without lessening in any manner the loyal support the young people have always given to the other local and connectional interests.

Thus it will be seen that the threefold interests of Organization, Program and Support, mentioned at the beginning of this section, have moved forward together. The self-direction of youth expressed through comradeship and applied to the affairs of the Kingdom has made possible results for the Kingdom highly creditable to their consecration and faith.

II. THE EXPANSION OF THE FIELD

The work of standardization just described was found as it proceeded to have awakened another interest running parallel with it. The articulation of the program opened the way inevitably for the expansion of the Epworth League's field. The legislation which created the organization as one "for the purpose of promoting intelligent and vital piety among the young people of our churches and congregations and in training them in works of mercy and help" suddenly took upon itself a larger meaning.

Increasing recognition has been given to it as the one organization for all the young people of the church. It never was designed to be a small group in rivalry to other groups in the congregation, but was projected to make possible the fraternizing together in one body of all, irrespective of those attachments or interests relating different ones to different groups stressing some particular or special interest. It was believed that youth, as such, had interests in common which justified such an arrangement and the years have increasingly demonstrated the wisdom of that procedure.

Indeed, the spirit of the organization, when properly understood, might well be expressed in the slogan that the Epworth League "Helps All and Hinders None."

The legislation which has just been quoted helped to clear the way for this expansion, but forces at work within the Epworth League itself gave added momentum to that principle. Mission Study conducted on the scale already indicated inevitably deepened the sense of world-relationship. The enlistment of several hundred choice young people each year in our summer Institutes for Life-work and the thrill of witnessing their preparation and departure for some great field in the home land or over seas, made still more vivid the reality of this relationship; and the enrollment of tithers in the promotion of Stewardship, where the sacredness of all human relationships is expressed, could not but deepen and enrich this consciousness. It might well be claimed that the outstanding achievement in the past four years of young people's work for young people has been the recognition and development of their responsibility for their comrades around the world.

The General Conference of 1920 had scarcely adjourned before steps were taken, in response to insistent pleadings of leaders, in their field for a regularly appointed and well-qualified secretary to promote the interests of the church among the young people of our Colored Conferences. The unsatisfactory arrangement which had obtained previously was superseded by this plan and a full time secretary with his office at Epworth League headquarters in Chicago was appointed.

During these four years the task has been diligently pursued. The migrations of our Colored brethren from the South to the North has been followed until this has become now a nation-wide interest which has its place with the other important subjects on the program of the Epworth League.

This step in the interest of interracial good will was followed shortly thereafter by another in the interest of international good will. Post-war conditions affecting the relationship of the peoples involved in the struggle was a subject of profound concern throughout the church. On August 1, 1922, after careful attention to all details involving support of the work by the young people of our German-speaking Conferences, with their 20,000 League members, a full-time secretary was appointed. Almost two years have passed and it may be doubted if the Epworth League organization ever in its history acted more wisely or took a step that was more productive in good results to the young people of the German-speaking Conferences of the church.

The out-reach of interest expressed in these appointments witnessed another manifestation during the quadrennium which is destined to have far-reaching significance for the future of the organization. The expansion into adequate provision for membership groups was followed by a development paralleling the church's organized system—Chapter, District, Conference, and Area.

Buffalo, Detroit, New York, Pittsburgh, San Francisco, and

Wichita Areas have promoted successfully this endeavor. The cooperation of Bishops, District Superintendents and Area officers working conjointly with the young people to bring this about was in evidence without exception.

The Wichita Area has promoted its program and budget so successfully that it has its own paid secretary giving full time to the young people of the seven Conferences included within the Area and assists besides in carrying the budget for one of our foreign fields.

In San Francisco Area through the initiative of the church authorities Conference secretaries have been provided for out of local funds for both California and Southern California Conferences. The Detroit Area has continued its support of our work in China; Pittsburgh maintains an office at its own expense, having a Conference secretary, and assists in carrying the budget for Mexico; New York in cooperation with League headquarters three years ago opened a branch office in the Book Concern Building at 150 Fifth Avenue, which, besides serving the various interests of that Area renders a useful ministry to the whole New England territory.

Early in the quadrennium through the generosity of a chapter in Pittsburgh the Central Office was able to send its first representative outside the boundaries of the United States on a visit to Epworth Leaguers in Mexico. In the winter of 1920 an Institute was set up in Mexico City and shortly thereafter provision made for the appointment of Sixto Avila as the full time secretary for our Mexican work.

The following year, yielding to the earnest representations of the President of the Board, the editor of the Epworth Herald and representatives of the German Conferences in the United States and Europe, the General Secretary was assigned to visit the work, first in Hawaii and immediately following, our fields in Europe. The greater part of the first six months of 1922 was devoted to this service. The courtesies of Bishop Leonard and Bishop Mead and our representatives in Hawaii, together with those of Bishop Blake, Bishop Nuelsen and Bishop Bast in Europe, made possible contacts with our church people on those fields in the interest of young people which have yielded already many important results.

Requests from our church leaders for the appointment of five full-time secretaries for the Conferences of Europe is but one of the indications of opportunity which is church-wide in its extent and most inviting in its attractiveness. Due to the critical situation involving the young people of Central Europe, the brethren of our German Conferences—in the United States and Germany—pressed for an immediate appointment of a young minister of their own selection, to be the first Epworth League secretary in Europe. During the summer of 1923

Reverend Hugo Georgi spent the summer months in the United States visiting our Summer Institutes, attending annual conferences, rallies and conventions and allowing himself ample time to familiarize himself with the details of League administration at the Central Office. He is now engaged in full time service for the North Germany and South Germany Conferences giving generous margins of his time to young people's work in the other conferences over there. Already the indications are unmistakable that a wise choice has been made and that the whole church will share the benefits of his useful ministry.

Where it was not possible to arrange for full time service in some of the fields where importunity would not be denied, arrangements were made for part time service. Edgar H. Rue in Singapore and Floyd Shacklock in Korea and Japan, have made the Epworth League their debtors by the unselfish service they have rendered as unsalaried secretaries. After a year of part time service Reverend Scott P. Hauser in South America was assigned by Bishop Oldham to full time service and he has been making full proof of his ministry. And it deserves to be mentioned that this ministry has not been confined to the youth of our own denomination. Institutes and other forms of interest have included in their reach large numbers of those besides Methodists.

In India our former League secretary, Dr. J. R. Chitambar, found himself in demand at so many strategic points on the church's field that the Epworth League was obliged to yield him for the principalship of the college at Lucknow in 1921. The Advisory Board of India (which is the official organization on the field) selected and recommended for appointment Dr. E. L. King of Jubbulpore, Central Provinces. Doctor King entered with enthusiasm upon his work and in the production of literature adapted to the young life of India and in cooperation with the teaching ministry of the Sunday Schools has under way the building of a program calculated to serve the whole program of the church in that land.

The same is true of the service of Miss Geraldine Townsend, the League secretary for China. In coordination of our program with that of our other educational, evangelical and philanthropic agencies she has built carefully and well until we have now the beginnings of standard Epworth Leagues in China under the direction of a capable and experienced young leader. Miss Townsend is now in the United States on her first furlough, satisfactory arrangements having been made to care for her work during the period of her absence.

It would be expected that this expansion of the field would inevitably produce at least two results. For one thing, it called for the adaptation of material in free literature and textbooks. Early in the quadrennium the Board of the Epworth League appointed a Committee on Adaptation of Program consisting of Dan B. Brummitt, J. L. Panzlau, C. F. Price, W. W. Martin, and the General Secretary. It has been in correspondence with representatives of all the groups concerned in the home and foreign field where adaptations and translation of material, whether free literature or of textbooks, might be worked out in a way calculated to serve the largest purpose with the least expense.

It was also to be expected that this widening of interest would have its reaction upon the activities of the Epworth League headquarters. The increasing demands for help have been seen in the enlarged output of the stock room and in the increased force required in the office. But with this enlargement there has been the constant anxiety to save the young people's work from becoming a mechanical or impersonal affair. The steady aim has been maintained on every field and in every department to magnify the values of contact and counsel. Every chapter is persistently reminded to keep in mind the value of individual young life as expressed in the Win-My-Chum campaigns and programs, the Morning Watch enlistment and the Life Service consecrations. No Epworth League Institute has fully discharged its responsibility until every youth in attendance has had the opportunity for personal interview and counsel, calculated to impress him with the importance of decision respecting his life investment and the resource his Christian faith offers him in making that decision the beginning of a happy service for his Lord.

The following chart illustrates the ideal of a democracy of service, maintained by the organization in its effort to link up every individual with definite responsibilities.

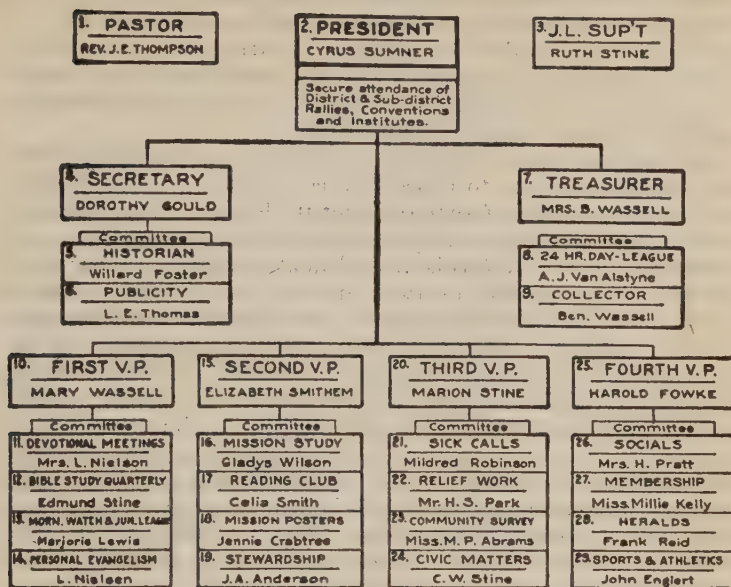

III. DEMONSTRATION OF ITS PLACE IN THE CHURCH'S PROGRAM

In concluding this report of the activities of the Epworth League, it deserves to be mentioned that one of the signal by-products of its service has been the clear revealing of its place in the program of the church's work.

Thirty years ago, Methodism refused to yield her young people to the control of groups outside her membership. She believed then and steadily insisted upon the principle that the training of leaders for the church of to-morrow should be in charge of those friendly to the spirit and familiar with the aims of the church of their choice. A generation has passed since that controversy was settled friendly to the contention of our leaders.

Meanwhile significant tendencies have manifested themselves in other quarters. Some of the well-known agencies of the church have noticeably changed their program and proportionately modified their aims. The educational agencies conducted by the church have felt themselves without choice in the matter of stressing the general aims of culture, leaving to the churches themselves the responsibility for acquainting them with their church's special task, and the qualifications necessary for accomplishing it. Sunday School agencies have passed from denominational to community aims in religious education. Our own Sunday School interests have striven and succeeded in elevating the standards of religious education until their product is now syndicated to thirteen different denominations. Schools of religious education, no less than community programs and week-day programs of religious education have made the community of churches and the community of people the objective of their endeavor until attention has been called recently to the "de-denominationalizing tendencies of religious education." It may be doubted if this is a thing to mourn over. The church ought to serve the community, and her general teaching should be addressed to the entire community, and her ingathering should be from the entire community.

On the other hand, the question needs to be asked: From what quarters are we to expect the conservation of those ideals and the furtherance of that training in denominational history, teaching, organization, and program calculated to qualify every church for service by furnishing adequate training for her leadership? Consideration of two interests will indicate what is meant by the place of the Epworth League work in the program of the Methodist Church. First, the requirement of denominational self-respect may be mentioned. In considering this, it will be found that the denominational young people's Society has come to the Kingdom for such a time as this. It has been our boast as a church that our emphasis upon personal experience, the privilege of the witness of the spirit, the fine spiritual democracy to which Methodism has given birth, are ideals which should be conserved. In a twofold way, the Epworth League may rightly claim that what is called a proper denominational emphasis constitutes its specialty. In the Junior division of the work, by assignment of the General Conference, the training of preparatory members is committed to the care of the Junior League. In like manner, in the Senior Epworth League the Methodist group gathered out of the evangelizing processes of the churches becomes the candidates for training within the church, for the church, and by the church. The statesmanship and strategy apparent in this provision must have become obvious ere this. The whole group of young life—brought together within the church of their choice and engaged in finding themselves, proving themselves, and relating themselves properly to others, which has been declared to be the essentials of an education—is found in readiness for the routine service of their church and for crises and emergencies as they arise from time to time. During the past four years, this has been illustrated on a large scale in the cooperation of the young people in the program of the Council of Boards of Benevolence. In the "I Will Maintain" campaign of 1922, and again in the Centenary climax campaign of 1923, from local chapters to area organizations, the young people had before them the claimant call of Methodism for valorous deeds of self-denial and sacrifice, in order to hold the advance positions taken through the preceding years of the Centenary. In the preparation of the church for the World Service program, the Epworth League, repeating what happened in the beginning of the Centenary campaign, was about the first to recognize its significance and to welcome its approach. It will be remembered with gratitude that in one hundred and twenty-seven summer institutes of 1923, thousands of her picked young people welcomed the World Service Volume with shouting and cheers, and have followed that with classes of instruction in its contents all over the church.

In the disaster which overtook our work in Japan, another opportunity was furnished for cooperative endeavor on a large scale which was improved to the utmost.

In cooperation with our Mission Boards in promotion of Mission Study; in the production and circulation of useful leaflets, and in the preparation of textbooks, there has gone forward a steady growth of cooperation of the most useful kind.

At our summer institutes, promoting the interest of Sunday schools, schools of religious education, training schools, seminaries and colleges, and the enlistment of young life for higher training, there has been, running through it all, the consciousness of a great church and the challenging opportunity her fields of service offer to the young.

Through the diversified ministry of our various boards, our entire world field may have its interests expressed in the terms of evangelism, missions, education, and philanthropy. The problem has been to get the knowledge of those fields prepared in attractive form and presented with such compelling power as will bring home to the consciousness of the church of to-morrow a sense of obligation for the maintenance and extension of those fields.

On the south side of the Art Institute on Michigan Avenue in the city of Chicago, Lorado Taft's famous group known as "The Spirit of the Great Lakes" draws to itself the admiration of throngs who pass along that thoroughfare. He depicts in bronze those five great bodies of water as human figures. Lake Superior, standing erect, is represented as continually supplying her sister lakes, Michigan, Huron, Erie, and Ontario, from which the waters sweep out and on to the sea. It is not difficult for one who understands the genius and service of the Epworth League in its relation to the program of the church to find in this grouping something symbolic of the way in which it gathers up and distributes to the four great interests of the church the wealth of young life passing constantly through its chapters. Without denominational bigotry, but with a pride in the history and achievements of the church of their choice, this army of young life prepares to serve acceptably with all other forces of the Kingdom of God, the more efficiently by reason of their loyalty, intelligence, and consecration as young Methodists.

The second consideration which suggests the place of the young people's organization in the program of the church is seen in what, for want of a better term, may be called the spirit of the age. Numerous manifestations involving young life have been noted by observers for some years. How young life has responded to the Christian appeal in the organizations of young people—denominational and interdenominational—has merited and received the commendation of all the churches. No form of organized Christianity to-day hopes to get forward without adequate provision for its young people.

But the churches are not alone in this re-discovery of youth. In education, the insistence on increased measures of student control; the adaptation of the curriculum to the individual rather than the unyielding cast-iron processes that were once in vogue; the so-called revolt of youth now disturbing large areas of society; these and other indications which might be mentioned point unerringly to the wisdom of our great church in according her young people the large place assigned to them by the legislation of her General Conference.

Their appreciation has been eloquent in its response. Happy, enthusiastic, and devoted, they have welcomed the confidence which believes them capable of heroic service. In this day, with the spirit of war abroad in the world, governments balked and embarrassed by woeful lack of leadership;—one single group of young life, numbering eight hundred thousand, and found in thirty-two countries outside the United States, are cultivating the interests of international and inter-racial good will.

Notwithstanding losses from the enrollment by reason of those who have moved forward into the adult activities of the church, an increase of fifty thousand is registered for the quadrennium. Properly guarded and guided, they may easily become, for the whole church and Kingdom, a spiritual radio by which, leaping over all distances and surmounting all obstacles, the Master may speak with the intimacy of personal conversation in all lands, and the intonations of His voice become the inspiring assurance of His presence, His blessing, and His guidance everywhere.

REPORT OF THE AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY

To the Bishops and Members of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

DEAR FATHERS AND BRETHREN: The world during the last four years has felt the great ground-swell of the terrific storm which we have called "The World War." Conditions everywhere have been unsettled, not in Europe alone but in every nation on earth. This in some respects has been a more dangerous period in which to carry on Christian work than the years of intense excitement and concentration that immediately preceded it. Few have known how to calculate the values whether of things material or spiritual. Costs have mounted. Where it was anticipated that there would be a return to normal conditions little has occurred to satisfy such anticipations. This has created an increase in the cost of the Society's work but a decrease in its output.

WAR DISTRIBUTION

Four years ago we reported concerning the war distribution of the Society. Of course this practically ceased at the Armistice, still the aftermath needs to be referred to in order that the whole story may be presented. The Society continued the early part of this quadrennium to send Testaments and other Scriptures to debarkation camps and particularly to the hospitals in which the disabled soldiers were cared for. Special editions in larger type and on light weight paper were prepared for use in the hospitals. The regular forces of the United States were well cared for and a total of 379,088 of special Army and Navy Scriptures were sent out, bringing the total of the Society's supplies for the American forces during the war to the final total of 4,920,543 volumes. The special New Testaments needed for the American troops which had been in process of preparation were completed in Bohemian, French, Greek, Italian, Polish, Roumanian, Russian, Spanish and Yiddish. Before the end of the first year of the quadrennium reports were received from correspondents indicating that in addition to the volumes supplied for the Army and Navy of the United States, 1,887,758 volumes were sent out by the Society to the belligerent forces of all the nations, making a complete record of 6,808,301 volumes distributed by the American Bible Society during the war among the forces engaged in it, nearly seven million volumes. The Society is grateful that it had this privilege of ministering to these warring forces that which brought to tens and hundreds of thousands words of encouragement and consolation in their great need. When this service began the Society was without funds with which to undertake it. It went forward in faith believing in the old Latin title, "Date and Dabitur." It expended $264,578.25 and received in gifts from the American people $247,121.51, leaving only the modest deficit of $17,456.68 on this account, which has been absorbed in the general expenses of the Society. This takes no account of the expenses incurred in making the special war editions of Bibles and Testaments to which reference was made in the Report four years ago, but only has to do with the production of the special Army and Navy Testaments and other Scriptures.

TRANSLATIONS AND REVISIONS

The ordinary work of the Society which, however, is never "ordinary" has covered during the quadrennium, in translations and revisions, the preparation of the Four Gospels in Mukri-Kurdish for use on the frontier of Turkey and Persia, translated by a Mr. Fossum, who afterwards gave his life in unselfish and over-taxing service for the Near East Relief. The Four Gospels, Acts of Apostles, and the First Epistle of John were brought out in Luragoli in East Africa and the Gospel of Saint Mark in K'Pellé for the work in West Africa; and later the Gospel of Saint John in Olunyore for the work in East Africa. The Gospel of Saint John has also been prepared for the Mussu people in Siam.

Three or four events of outstanding consequence in the preparation of new translations and revisions have occurred during the quadrennium. A New Testament has been completed in the Bolivian Quechua, published in a diglot form with the Spanish. The translation into the Quechua is by the Rev. George Allan of the Bolivian Indian Mission. The union work with the British and Foreign Bible Society carried forward for a decade in the preparation of a new revised Spanish New Testament has also been completed. This work was originally undertaken at the request of one of the Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church in South America. Two eminent Methodist scholars have been on the Committee representing the American Bible Society, Rev. Dr. Charles W. Drees, and the Rev. Dr. Victoriano D. Baez. This it is hoped will meet a great need among the ninety millions of people that speak the Spanish language. It has already been accorded a hearty reception in Spanish speaking countries.

In China two great union versions, one, the Union Mandarin and the other the Union Wenli, on which Committees of missionaries have been working for more than a generation, were completed in both the Shangti and the Shen editions. This is an event of the first importance to missionary work in that land. The turning of the Chinese people toward the universal use of Mandarin makes the first of these versions available for millions of people. The Wenli is a classical language and is of great value for the intellectual classes. Reference should also be made to the new Phonetic Script which has come into use in China especially for the illiterate and those that are learning the language. Very large portions of the Scriptures were published in this Script during this quadrennium.

ISSUES

The issues of the Society during the four years have been as follows:

1920	3,752,309
1921	3,825,401
1922	4,861,181
1923	4,563,067
	17,001,958
Total of previous quadrennium.....	24,225,416
“ “ “ “ this “ “ “ “	17,001,958
Decrease of	7,223,458

This shows a decrease of 7,223,458 over the total of 24,225,416 volumes reported as the circulation for the last quadrennium, to which reference has already been made.

FINANCES

The income of the Society has shown an advance. The gifts of the Methodist Episcopal Church during the last quadrennium have been as follows:

1920	$150,000
1921	150,000
1922	150,000
1923	150,000
Total of	$600,000

This has made possible the continued work of the Society on its high levels and has encouraged many other denominations to take up a similar relationship to the Society and its work, though Methodism retains its leadership as it should when all things are taken into consideration in this support of the Society's work.

The Budget of the Society has grown from year to year. The appropriations are as follows during the quadrennium:

1920	$988,485
1921	1,222,367
1922	1,119,967
1923	1,160,777
	$4,491,596

This total of $4,491,596 is an increase over the appropriations of the preceding quadrennium of $1,182,156.

NOTABLE FACTS AND INCIDENTS

In the Reports of the past four years record is made of the removal of the headquarters of the Society's work from Yokohama to Tokyo. Though not in the year of record reference should be made to the utter destruction of the Society's stock plates, etc., in the earthquake.

By a comity arrangement with the British and Foreign Bible Society, the work of the American Bible Society in Korea was turned over to the British and Foreign Bible Society and their work in the Philippines transferred to the American Bible Society. This transfer caused the resignation of the Rev. S. A. Beck, who had been a missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Korea and had been transferred to the service of the American Bible Society, where he had shown unusual judgment and zeal and great devotion to the interests of the Society's work. It was with sincere reluctance that the Society accepted Mr. Beck's resignation. In the Philippines in taking over the work of the British and Foreign Bible Society, the American Bible Society purchased the Bible House, built by that Society, which gives it a home for its Secretary and a central position for its activities.

On November 28, 1920, Universal Bible Sunday was celebrated as "Mayflower Sunday." It is estimated that 10,000 churches, colleges, schools, etc., cooperated with the Society in the celebration of this occasion. A dramatic service entitled "The Pilgrim and the Book" was written especially for the Society by Mr. Percy MacKaye and met with a very generous welcome and will continue to be of service for many years, as its theme is not temporary but abiding. Two other little pamphlets were also prepared by Dr. Charles Stelzle entitled "A Little Journey to Plymouth" and "In the Name of God, Amen," and had a very extensive circulation.

The Upper Andes Agency has been set off from the La Plata Agency. It includes the southern part of Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, and Bolivia, thus giving the Society six Latin American Agencies.

In the Near East the old Levant Agency was divided into two Agencies, one with headquarters in Constantinople and the other with headquarters at Cairo.

In 1921 "The Only Way Out of the Dark" was issued as the theme for Universal Bible Sunday and no piece of literature for promotive purposes put forth by the Society has ever received such universal commendation.

A special edition of the Gospel of Saint Luke was prepared bound in Peruvian colors for the celebration of the Centennial of Independence in Peru, and later special editions were gotten out for the Centennial of Independence in Brazil, which received a very cordial welcome.

Reference should be made to the extraordinary difficulties in Asia Minor, which have temporarily at any rate extinguished the work of the Society in that region. Europe, however, has shown increasing needs for help in the circulation of the Scriptures, the many local Bible Societies in Germany and those in other countries suffering greatly as the result of the war.

The Christian Conference in China, one of the great gatherings in the history of Missions, expressed itself most forcefully on the need of the Bible in China.

At headquarters in New York the most significant fact of the four years has been the closing of the manufacturing of the Society in the Bible House. On the first of February, 1922, the presses of the Society ceased the service which they have rendered for many decades and plans were made for the securing of the editions needed by the Society in other printing and publishing establishments. The Society continues of course to use its own plates so that accuracy of Version and general appearance, for which the Society has been notable, will be assured. It is hoped that by this change larger production can be assured than was possible on the Society's presses and more prompt service rendered.

NEW PRESIDENT

On the 3d of April, 1919, as recorded in the Report for 1920, Mr. Churchill H. Cutting, who had been a Manager of the Society from 1882 and a Vice-President from 1916, was elected President of the Society. Mr. James Wood, who had served with distinction as President from 1904, retired, and he was made President Emeritus on the authority of the Annual Meeting and the election of the Board of Managers.

PERSONNEL

Mr. William Foulke, for many years the Treasurer of the Society, died July 1, 1920. Rev. Gilbert Darlington, who had been previously elected Assistant Treasurer, was made a Treasurer in October of the same year.

In August, 1920, the Rev. Henry Loomis, for thirty years Agency Secretary for the Society in Japan, died. He had rendered exceptional service. In 1921 the Society was bereaved in the death of the Rev. John R. Hykes, D.D., for more than a quarter of a century in charge of the Society's work throughout the whole of the Republic of China, and who was nearly fifty years a missionary in that land, and one of the best known missionaries in China, in touch with the highest and in sympathy and intimate contact with the lowliest. Dr. Hykes was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In the same year Dr. Herbert M. Schwartz retired from the Japan Agency, died after many years of faithful service to Methodist missions and the Society.

The Board of Managers was bereaved in the death of Mr. William H. Harris and Mr. Edgar McDonald, both members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, one from the Borough of Manhattan and the other from the Borough of Brooklyn in New York City; and in the death of the Rev. Dr. Henry A. Buttz, President of Drew Theological Seminary, for many years a member of the Committee on Versions.

Among the newly elected members of the Board of Managers during this period who are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church are Mr. Arthur L. Brown and Miss Ellen McLean, both of New York City; and among the Vice-Presidents are the following: Mr. Frank Horne of New York, Governor Henry J. Allen of Kansas, President Edmund Janes James of Illinois, Mr. Hanford Crawford of Saint Louis, Mr. William Halls, Jr., of New Jersey, and Mr. William H. Harris of New York, and Mr. George Warren Brown of Saint Louis; the latter two died shortly after their election.

The Rev. Ezra Squier Tipple, D.D., President of Drew Theological Seminary, was elected a member of the Committee on Versions.

Among the Foreign Secretaries of the Society the Rev. Francis G. Penzotti, one of the most remarkable men in the history of Missions in South America, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, retired, and his son, Paul, also a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was elected in his stead.

In China the Rev. G. Carleton Lacy, born of Methodist Episcopal missionary parents in China, was chosen to take the place made vacant by the death of the Rev. Dr. John R. Hykes and to have charge of the Society's work in that great land.

Rev. J. L. McLaughlin, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, for many years the Secretary of the Society in the Philippines, returned to the United States and was appointed as an Assistant Secretary of the American Bible Society. He also has charge of the Eastern Agency of the Society.

Among the Secretaries of the Society now in the homeland in addition to the Rev. William I. Haven, one of the General Secretaries, the Rev. Dr. Wragg, in charge of the Agency among the Colored People of the United States, the Rev. J. L. McLaughlin, already referred to, in charge of the Eastern Agency, Rev. A. Wesley Mell, in charge of the Pacific Agency, Rev. Dr. S. H. Kirkbride, in charge of the Northwestern Agency, Rev. Dr. Arthur F. Ragatz in charge of the Western Agency, Rev. Dr. Frank P. Parkin in charge of the Atlantic Agency, are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

It is a pleasure to present this report to the General Conference and to express the hope of the Board of Managers of the American Bible Society that the General Conference will continue its generous policy to this missionary enterprise, which is so vitally associated with the whole progress of the Church at home and abroad.

WILLIAM I. HAVEN,
General Secretary.

BOARD OF TEMPERANCE, PROHIBITION AND PUBLIC MORALS

BY CLARENCE TRUE WILSON, D.D.

General Secretary of the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals of the Methodist Episcopal Church—Washington, D. C.

National prohibition is an accomplished fact, and to the everlasting credit of our Church it may be said that Methodism was at the forefront of every fight made to free America from the organized liquor traffic.

The accomplishments of the temperance reform movement during the years that have passed, read as a romance. Within the past quadrennium many events have transpired, but the most significant achievement is the erection of a magnificent center for Methodism and Protestantism in Washington, D. C. Just across the park from the Capitol, at the intersection of First Street and Maryland Avenue, N. E., stands Methodism's monument to a triumphant cause, "The Methodist Building." This is the national, as well as world headquarters of the temperance agency of our great Church, the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals, of which Bishop William Frazer McDowell is President.

If the history of this Board is ever properly written it will contain poverty and providence supplying its needs, opposition and overwhelming victories over it, sacrifice and heroism that over-balanced it, dreams coming true in successful campaigns, epoch-making turns in events, and one of them concentered in the new headquarters building.

A heroic band of Methodist preachers and laymen of whom the world was not worthy, never let the temperance question die in a General Conference, an Annual Conference, or any spot of ground where they were assigned for service.

A. J. Kynett, in whose brain was conceived the Church Extension Society, the whole outline of the plans for the Anti-Saloon League and whose motion in the General Conference of 1888 made the Temperance and Prohibition Committee a permanent Committee on that work. A. B. Leonard and Charles H. Paine, who seldom made a Conference Anniversary address without giving one powerful section of it to the prohibition of the liquor traffic; Dr. J. G. Evans, of Illinois, who became Chairman of this permanent committee, and beside his life work as a Methodist College President, gave days and nights of self-sacrificing devotion without any thanks and very little help to make the committee's work a success.

A later General Conference organized the permanent Committee into The Temperance Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, with headquarters in Chicago, and the newly-elected Bishop, William Fraser McDowell, became its first President.

OKLAHOMA BREAKS THE HOODOO

There was no money, no men, not even an office desk, but fifteen noble men had been appointed; they organized their society, appealed to the Church for funds, and at a time when there had not been a new prohibition State added for eighteen years, though two or three had been lost, they appealed to the Church to come to the help of Oklahoma, and it is a common knowledge among those who understand the inside, that Oklahoma was about to abandon its campaign from a lack of funds or helpers. Dr. Dinwiddie, the only outside worker, was down there left stranded for funds when a few thousand dollars, raised by our society and put in the hands of these people, with the three or four speakers whom we also sent, turned the tide and won Oklahoma to the dry column by an overwhelming vote. This started our series of state-wide victories.

Some of the best literature ever published for the cause was printed by this body and circulated throughout the Church and country, especially mailed to key men.

The General Conference of 1908 sanctioned the work that was done, voted a $25,000 apportionment to the new Board and appointed Bishop Robert McIntyre to become the President of the organization. Dr. W. A. Smith was its Secretary and Alonzo E. Wilson its Treasurer.

It moved on with routine work for two years when Dr. Stephen J. Herben, one of the members, said that unless this society got busy and made a record instead of meeting and spending the little money that was sent in from the churches on traveling expenses, he would resign and tell the Church in his paper why he did it.

This jarred something loose, and the Bishop in the chair said, "What would you have us do?"

He replied, "This Board cannot make a record unless it has men and money, and it can never get the money unless it has the men. I would have it elect one or two Field Secretaries and turn them loose to see whether there is a place for our Board. If there is not, we should abolish it; and if there is, we should do our work more efficiently." They unanimously decided to take this advice.

SECRETARIES ARE ELECTED

In the winter of 1900, a meeting was called for May, and after canvassing the whole United States for men who were conspicuously identified with the cause, they elected Clarence True Wilson, pastor of the Centenary Methodist Episcopal Church, in Portland, Oregon, who had formerly been a State President of the Anti-Saloon League in connection with his regular ministerial work, to be Field Secretary; and Dr. Alfred Smith, of Dover, Delaware, long temperance evangelist of the Wilmington Conference, to be the Assistant Field Secretary.

When they came to Chicago they found that they were there on their own expenses, that there was not a cent in the treasury nor a dollar of incoming funds, nor a guarantee of salary or any money for expenses; but there was the best combination back of them that the moral universe had to furnish. They had the United States for a field, the Methodist Episcopal Church for their coadjutor, and God over all to trust.

There was not an office or a desk and the struggle began. Dr. Smith had his own home and resided in Delaware, ranging over the country at the call of need. Dr. Wilson gave up his church, his parsonage home and an adequate salary with perquisites and left home to go to Chicago to live on his own expense. He rented a desk in the Deaconess Office and for a year and a half Mrs. Wilson was Office Secretary, conducting correspondence, shipping literature, printing and editing leaflets, packing envelopes with literature which her husband would sell in his street meetings, conventions and conferences. He bought books and pamphlets by the tens of thousands and would sell enough in one place to get him to his next field of labor.

STREET CAMPAIGNING FOR PROHIBITION

They surrendered life insurance policies, sold horse, buggy, everything they could lay hands on to get money to keep the work going. He inaugurated the street meeting campaign which resulted in seven years in an average of almost one thousand addresses a year. It was not unusual to speak eight, ten and twelve times in a day from the deck of autos.

Of the thirty-five States that have had campaigns for prohibition, he has campaigned in thirty-one of them. His books show 720 addresses in a five months' campaign in 1916. They ranged all through Oregon, the full length of California, back to Idaho, Montana, Washington and Nebraska. He used to travel seventy to seventy-five thousands miles a year.

When this work was inaugurated, there was scarcely an out-of-door campaign planned in the United States. A year after this work was started, no State campaign would have been undertaken without providing to meet the out-of-door crowd as the biggest feature of the method of putting the State across the dry goal mark. Our Board had at one time for two months fifty-five men speaking day and night on the streets of seven States that had fights on. The incidents, coincidents, dramatic situations and romantic experiences of those seven years of almost incessant street campaigning, covering every State west of the Mississippi River and nine States east of it, would make a volume unsurpassed in human interest.

TRACT MANIPULATION

Another feature of the work has been the introduction of new methods of tract circulation. While anybody trusted with the handling of other people's money can publish millions of leaflets, pile them on the shelves of their own institution, or express them in such vast quantities as to swamp the churches and other organizations to which they are sent, our Board had little money and had to make that little go a great way. We published the best things we had or could lay our hands on in the form of four or six page leaflets and had our campaigners loaded with them and then showed them how to take leaflets and make them do very real work.

For instance, the General Secretary of this Board stopped at noon on a corner of Chicago with an armful of circulars containing one of Mr. Bryan's temperance speeches headed "W. J. Bryan Denounces the Liquor Traffic." We had just purchased five thousand of these and were rushing to the office with the unwrapped package in our arms. A gentleman stepped up and said "Excuse me, but you have something there by an old favorite of mine. May I have one?" "Certainly," we said with a flourish and handed him one. That thronged street, seeing we had something to give away continued to "take one," until we were compelled to go back and buy another package. This incident was told to every group of workers in the other States and was repeated a thousand times in the campaigns that followed in the next five years.

We stepped off of railroad trains as they stopped at every station, followed the passengers out and as the new passengers came in would hand them a leaflet each to read on the train, and every person standing at the station would come forward to get a piece of free literature. When traveling through Western States in stage coaches or autos, every time the stage would stop we would drop a package of our literature into the several mail boxes at the country cross road corners.

PUTTING THE CHILDREN TO WORK

But the most sensational method of all, judging by its results and the interest aroused, was in our scheme of going into the Sunday Schools, presenting every scholar with a leaflet, offering as a prize our book "Dry or Die, the Anglo-Saxon Dilemma," to the one who would bring us the longest list of names and addresses of people who had read their tract. We have had in towns and in considerable cities a list of names that actually exceeded the number of the population of the city, accounted for by the fact that so many read the tract over more than once and that every visitor that came through, stopped at noon, paused at a corner, would be asked to read it also. In a southern city that had but 30,000 inhabitants we had the signatures and addresses of 39,000 who had thus read our leaflet through and signed up for some child worker. These peculiar methods of our work re-animated the whole leaflet department of the temperance reform and continue to create and direct a demand for leaflets on this and other subjects.

NEWSPAPER WORK

It is likely to be forgotten that there was a time in this country when all the newspapers except the strictly religious press and one or two conspicuous daily papers which had broken away from the brewers' strangle hold, published pages of liquor advertisements representing whiskey as a safe and necessary beverage for the old, the sick and infirm; beer as a necessity for nursing mothers and good for children; wines as the drink of all brainy people—the higher the brain capacity, the greater the need of this beverage regularly.

Our Board threw itself into that situation, printed absolute pledges and began the agitation by letters, personal interviews and with a persistence that never tired, this campaign of education, through the CLIPSHEET, THE VOICE, circular letter, petition and appeal went out to the editors, the managing editors and the directors of every daily paper and to every influential monthly magazine and to thousands of weekly papers. We remember when we had our first dozen signed up never to take another dollar of liquor revenue or to give an inch to the exploitation of the beverage poison traffic. It went on until there were seven hundred. At another report it was thirty-four hundred. At an Annual Meeting report it was four thousand nine hundred. When we got through our Bill in Congress to shut the liquor advertising papers out of the mails of the United States, Congressman Randall, of this Board, presented to the Postal Appropriations Committee the signatures of a little over nine thousand newspapers that actually united with the Board of Temperance in a petition to Congress to make the thing a crime. The bill passed and it is only those with good memories now that remember the old days of partnership between the Brewers' Association and the newspaper world.

THE BONE DRY LEADERSHIP

Before 1916 we had gained a dozen prohibition States but those of us who worked hardest and sacrificed and risked everything in putting those States over the victory line had at a distance to witness the spectacle of men who got their living out of the prohibition agitation and who sat tight during the campaign in most instances having opposed having a campaign now that their State had voted dry, we would see these men, formulating the law which they presumed to dictate to the legislature in the name of the temperance people, a law that purposely leaked like a sieve and would provide a gallon a week or a quart a day or some other concession to the wets that would keep up their abnormal thirst and utterly discourage the drys who had borne the brunt of the campaign and lend color to the charge that "prohibition would not prohibit," when it was well known that the kind that was advocated by these fake reformers was not intended to prohibit. It would be easy to give the places, dates and names of these officers or organizations that should have known better, who first used their position to fight the people's demand for a campaign, then only interfered long enough to make compromising suggestions when the campaign came and then proposed in the name of the people these leaky bills. But the story would not look well with a halo around it.

On the 4th day of May, 1916, we came out in our CLIPSHEET with the statement that from this time forth any organization getting support from our Church that betrayed the State and the people who had passed prohibition in the State by a proposition to give a fake prohibition law when the people had voted for a dry one, would be denounced by us and such facts stated about them as would close every Methodist pulpit to them; that what the people demanded was a "bone-dry law" that took the State out of the clutches of the liquor traffic and entirely broke the liquor habit among its people; and nothing short of that would ever be justified by our Board again; that the people had never voted for anything less than that and what the people voted for the legislature would have to give or we would know the reason why.

B-O-O-O-O-N-E D-R-R-Y

That word "bone-dry" was caught up by the Associated Press the next day from our CLIPSHEET, it was copied and commented on by the entire religious press, the dailies were interviewing prominent workers everywhere, and we had coined a new word that caught the imagination of the American people and in one month from the time it was published in the CLIPSHEET, it was the popular phrase of America. Everybody talked it, no one could exactly define it. I was campaigning in California and was asked on the streets of San Francisco, "What is the meaning of this business that the Methodists are putting over on the country—'bone-dry' legislation?" I answered as best I could and wired Mr. Pickett that night for an official definition and got back the reply: "It means stopping the manufacture, sale, importation, exportation, transportation, carrying on the person, drinking or giving away beverage alcoholic liquor."

Then I knew. It was the term to conjure with in every subsequent campaign.

A little group of us wrote a new Amendment to the Oregon Constitution in July when the term was about six months old. We took our auto and went on the streets of Portland, Oregon City, St. Johns and the towns between and in forty-eight hours had enough names on our petition to put the first "bone-dry" law ever formulated in this world on the official ballot where by eight thousand majority it was voted into the Constitution of our State.

Arizona wired us: "What can the Board of Temperance do to help us in our campaign?" We wired back: "Haven't a man or a dollar or a minute to help any State that wants a prohibition that leaks like a sieve, but if you will formulate a prohibition amendment bone-dry like the Oregon amendment herewith quoted, we will send you our auto with four speakers to campaign your State at our expense will give you three million pages of literature and will share with you in the money raising for your entire campaign. What do you say?"

They wired back: "Terms accepted. Send us additional information." And Arizona also formulated her prohibition amendment after the Oregon model and on the 7th day of November, 1916, two States had broken the record by adopting bone-dry prohibition into their organic law.

I have letters that came to me all through those weeks warning of the dreadful reaction I might expect. Men and especially women who stood at the very head of their several organizations but had grown timid with the years talked of the reaction that would set the whole reform back. That was the 7th of November. In two months there were twenty-five States assembled in legislative sessions, during January, and before the 30th day thereof eighteen of them had passed bone-dry laws, before the term was nine months old. The predicted reaction was the greatest forward step in the temperance reform, for within two months of that day the Congress of the United States by a vote of four to one had enacted the bone-dry regime as the policy of the nation toward the liquor traffic, when it should finally go dry, and even then toward the States that were dry.

ELIHU ROOT

An episode of more than ordinary historic interest occurred about 1913, during Mr. Taft's term of office. When everybody saw there was going to be some change either in the Republican nomination or at the election, there suddenly sprang up a most thoroughly organized propaganda that took in a large majority of the Republican newspapers from the Atlantic to the Pacific for the nomination for the Presidency of Elihu Root, that brilliant but conscienceless lawyer, who began his legal fame as the defender of "Boss" Tweed and ends his active life as the champion of the liquor interests for the United States and who has done nothing between those acts which is inconsistent with his beginning and his end.

Our Board is not in party politics nor in personal politics, but when it looked like an overwhelming demand for Root's nomination to follow Taft, we came out in a broad-side with thirty reasons why Root could never be President of the United States or fill any other elective office. Some of our conservative church brethren held their breath at the temerity of our Board in attacking that idol, but our facts overwhelmed the entire organization, the boom collapsed and we do not know that there has been a newspaper or a man who has named Root for the Presidency or any other elective office of his State or the nation from that day to this. It was one of those things that somebody had to do and our Board did it and made a complete job of it.

Some men can only have a career before the people by the grace of some other person's silence. If our friends, the enemy, ever put up for the suffrage of Americans or for the headship of the greatest Christian nation on earth a type of that kind, we will pi their type.

DRY ZONE AND ARMY CAMPS

When our country was drawn into the maelstrom of the World War, we were a peace-loving people unaccustomed to thinking in war terms. We think in terms of agriculture, commercial life and politics, but not of war. Our preparation involved the taking of the best and cleanest boys from the homes, the farms, the schools and colleges, separating them from home restraints, herding them in promiscuously with strangers. Everybody knew that to train these boys amid saloons, gambling hells and brothels was to wreck more lives than the poison gas and cannon fire of the enemy would do. Our Board drew up a list of things that ought to be done to make these camps a safe environment for our soldiers. We suggested a dry zone around every camp, a clean-up in the cities that were in proximity to the camps, all gambling joints and other nameless resorts were to be removed. The canteen had long been absent from the American Army and we trained for the World War the first army under absolute prohibition that the world had ever seen in the Anglo-Saxon race.

We did not expect nor did we receive much help from the then President, but Providence had put that great, clean mininded, Christian statesman, Josephus Daniels, at the head of the Navy Department, and Senator George H. Chamberlain was heading the Senate Committee that wrote the bill under which the Army was mobilized and the war was to be conducted and we had an entire American Army without the serving of booze, with the banishment of the saloons beyond the one-mile limit even in cities, and the cleanest environment was furnished under which men had ever lived in a military group. The record made by our boys in quick training, coordinating hand and foot with brain and nerve, which Major-General Leonard Wood attributed to the dry environment of the camps, was the justification of this Board's moving out in advance of all other reformers and making this series of demands in the name of the people we represent.

TIA JUANA

As the war came to its close we were reminded of the disreputable, dirty and almost unbelievable conditions that continued to prevail along the Mexican border. Just across the line from San Diego, California, was Tia Juana, a center of lewdness, drunkenness, gambling, vicious resorts where all sorts of abnormal vices were advertised and conducted for profit and where hundreds of thousands of Americans could go and after crossing the line, dismiss all restraints of decency.

The City of San Diego, a half-way house to it, was coining money and as the money nerve is very sensitive with some people, their silence about the outrages they saw committed was ominous. No organization dared strike that condition of rottenness. It was supposed that one would drown amid the poison if one should strike into it.

Our Board sent Mr. Pickett down there to photograph it, describe it, confront the authorities with the facts; Christian ministers in San Diego named Dr. John Wood; then Dr. Lincoln A. Ferris of the First Church, boldly lent their aid and gave our demands pulpit insistence; and finally our State Department and the State Department of Mexico cleaned up that situation. The President of Mexico wrote to our Board that he would personally see that that cess-pool was never permitted to send out its poison to the American border again and that the evils complained of should be forever stopped.

AN AVALANCHE OF FILTH

We come now to a situation that human language cannot describe. The conditions are too vile to tell; a description of the thing as it is would load the human mind with an avalanche of filth. While patriots and Christian citizens, reformers and philanthropists have been busy with the aftermath of the war, the moving picture film production has fallen into the hands of those degenerates, all of one race but of no religion, who have corrupted everything their filthy hands have touched for 2,000 years. It seems that since they prayed "His blood be upon us and upon our children," every ship they could board is ultimately destined to sink. No nation that has let them control its finances but has had to vomit them up, sometimes with bitter persecutions, to get the poison out of their system. Spain, Russia, England, Germany, all have a story to tell of how the nation that has no nation reached its hands through a money control to their citadels of conscience and every standard went down.

The German Jews got a controlling interest in our liquor traffic about sixteen years ago. They introduced the brewery-owned saloon, the vilest thing that ever saw the sun, with its brothel upstairs, its gambling hell down, operated by an irresponsible, red-nosed bi-ped, often a man who had lived off the earnings of some fallen woman, and in hundreds of thousands of instances an ex-convict, and who ran it with no obligation to God or man, without respect to any law. The liquor traffic sank like a water-logged ship under the load of filth and vileness that these degenerates loaded upon it.

THE THEATER SITUATION

When it went down, they reached for the control of the moving picture film production and got it. The institution changed color over night. Instead of being an educational, moral, inspiring entertainment for the home folks and young people of the nation, at their worst they exploited the Arbuckles, and at their best a type of stars that changed husbands and wives over night and whose divorce court proceedings were their chief advertisement and road to fame.

When it became so bad that they were headed for a United States censorship, they got Mr. Will H. Hays, whose general influence has been a vast good in preventing the degeneracy going any farther and possibly cleaning up the institution.

Next they grabbed the theater. The story of their intrigue to keep such plays as "The Fool" off the stage, to boycott those who favored it, and to flaunt their vileness on every New York stage until indecency is glorified and absolute nudeness has taken the place of only partially clad displays of the earlier stage.

But Mr. Pickett went to New York and wrote up the theater situation in such a way as to get front page space in the newspapers of the United States, the acting Mayor of New York has taken the matter up, our Board has been consulted as to the best methods of remedying the situation.

Within forty-eight hours after the publication of our document, costumes had been put back on the women of the stage and a license law is contemplated for all places of amusement and the Grand Jury is handling the cases of the theaters that have given the most offense. Other denominations have come to our assistance, Catholic and Protestant, and the most sudden, startling and revolutionary change that we have yet witnessed has been wrought in the theaters in New York and is extending now to the other cities.

While this has been going on there were in California three publishing houses that have been sending through the mails to college students and high school boys packages for Three Dollars containing dozens of photographs of perfectly nude women put up in portfolios so that they can be easily concealed and they have been doing a land office business. We were late in discovering these things but at once sought some of these containers of disreputable pictures through the mails and were going to make some cases in court that would make our friends, the enemy, look, listen and stop; but we promptly received our packages by express instead.

We are now in the process of making war on that whole disreputable institution that heads up in San Francisco and Oakland.

INTERNATIONAL MATTERS

At our last Annual Meeting, the first public insistence that there should be a clean-up of matters related to prohibition of the liquor traffic in the embassies in Washington and among our consuls abroad, a reform bringing the American shipping interests into harmony with the 18th Amendment and applying the Volstead Act to the ships, wharves, docks, harbors and the waters within the three-mile limits of all American lands, and third, the right of America to enforce its law on all waters so far as our shipping is concerned. In this we proclaimed the doctrine that if a foreign ship of a friendly nation made a landing by the deck of any American ship owned or run in the interests of bootleggers for the purpose of exchanging a commodity which had been outlawed by the United States, it was playing the party of an international nuisance on the high seas by conniving with American criminals and aiding them in the violation of law. It was therefore an international nuisance, that its presence anywhere about our American borders for the purpose of seeking such criminal alliance was unjustifiable hovering and that the rum-running business on the high seas should therefore be suppressed.

We secured an invitation by the Washington Preachers' Meeting to Professor Ellery C. Stowell, of the Chair of International Law in the American University. An address was given on national and international implications of the 18th Amendment.

It was taken down by our stenographer and all our speakers supplied with copies of it. At every Spring Conference this information was given in public addresses and distributed documents, petitions poured into our State Department. We found our great Secretary of State thoroughly friendly to the demands we were making and to make a long story short, the program we outlined and the legal precedents we furnished were put into the hands of the State Department, Dr. Stowell was invited to spend days assisting in the adjustment of legal matters connected therewith and the policy we announced a year ago at this meeting is to-day the policy of the State Department of the United States. Witness England's final consent to extend the limit to twelve miles and making a treaty giving us the right to search and seize her ships that violate our law. Witness Canada's proposal that a joint commission be appointed to draw up regulations that shall govern the rum-running across the border and many other matters of the kind now pending in correspondence with other nations.

A SUMMARY OF DETAILS

But lest this report should only approximate immortality by being itself everlasting, I must recall without elaboration the story of our help in State and local campaigns, four hundred and ninety-one such local fights participated in a single year (1914); the pledge signing campaign that gave us over a million signatures in the first four years; the joint debates that we have conducted with such men as Mayor Rose, Sidney Storey, Colonel Hofer and D. Clarence Gibbony, who needed to be smoked out from the ranks of the temperance folks where he was the highest-paid liquor lecturer in the United States, but kept in touch with the temperance forces so as to speak for them when it was necessary to place a saloon in Philadelphia, by saying, "We," meaning the temperance people, "can raise no objection to this place." For this he collected the largest fees of any person of his city.

We should have to speak of the work among Negroes, which our Board has pioneered and maintained a great leader of the race to promote the cause of temperance, prohibition and public morals among his people; the successful turning of events against Mr. Tumulty's activities in the White House; our complete exposure of Woodrow Wilson's absolute betrayal of the Church forces and the temperance people who trusted him and elected him; our yearly survey of the liquor bills of the United States; our Annual Survey of the prohibition advance; the tremendously effective results of "On and Off the Water Wagon" in which North and South Dakota were so contrasted and every newspaper and prominent person in South Dakota confronted with the facts that the campaign for prohibition was inaugurated through the impulse given by that document; our exposure of beer in toys and liquor in candies that resulted in the outlawing of such subterfuges, for the protection of the children; the fight for war prohibition which was made by our Board through the efforts of certain prominent leaders connected with our Executive Committee, which resulted in putting over that reform with the then President and much of the war machine allied against us; the stand we took when Mr. Wilson wrote from France urging its immediate repeal, which stand gave courage to the defenders of the bill and kept it intact until the 18th Amendment was in force.

We assisted Senator Sterling in his anti-gambling race-track bill, appearing before the Committee with a mass of facts that our Board alone had to present, a result of the efficiency of our Research Department; and the investigation of French Lick, Indiana, through the request of Bishop Frederick D. Leete.

The policy of our Board is to do all these things in the open, but without flaunting our name and address. This was illustrated to a Methodist preacher at one of the Conferences, who was expatiating on the greatest document that had ever been presented on the subject of prohibition, issued by the Manufacturer's Record and containing a symposium from all the leading business men in the United States on the pro's and con's of prohibition. Finally turning to me, he said, "I wondered when I read that why our Board or the Anti-Saloon League or all of the organized forces put together could not have thought of such a document as that instead of leaving it for a secular magazine to work out." I was at once enabled to take the wind out of his sails by remarking, "That document was planned in our office by our Research Secretary, Mr. Pickett, at the suggestion of the President-Emeritus of Harvard University, the correspondence was conducted at our expense and every page you read was printed and paid for by our Board in cooperation with the Manufacturer's Record."

The question then was, "Why did you not put your name on it or in it?" And we replied, "The policy of our Board from the beginning has been to let anybody take the credit who wanted it, our full reward being the consciousness that we had done our work."

For instance, the summer through, five or six men of our office have gone out in cooperation with the Epworth League institutes, taken the classes in Citizenship and presented our cause to the young people assembled. There are more than one hundred and thirty institutes and we cooperate with the Epworth League, make no charges and accept no fees for services, only desiring a chance to get before the representative young people of Methodism the whole program of our reform work.

BOOKS AND PUBLICATIONS

The books our Board has written have been notably successful ventures. "Dry or Die, The Anglo-Saxon Dilemma," served its purpose ten years ago; the "Greatest Common Destroyer" by Deets Pickett and Harry G. McCain, was widely circulated and became a textbook on the reform in the Epworth League and several other institutions; the "Pocket Cyclopedia" was mailed to every Methodist preacher with the compliments of our Board and is still called for by laymen and workers from everywhere. When the question of War prohibition was trembling in the balance, Mr. Pickett wrote "The Wooden Horse" which was mailed to the influential citizens of the country and did its full part in making this a dry nation for the war period. "The Cyclopedia of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals" is an informing volume still in demand and widely used by pastors and teachers in the preparation of discourses on prohibition, and "The Allied Reforms" a supplemental volume is circulating widely still.

Recently we were confronted in a people's store in New York with great piles of books published by popular houses against prohibition. We felt it was time someone should offset these volumes with a strong book firmly defending prohibition but with absolute reliability as to its facts and conservatism as to its conclusions and contentions. Mr. Pickett and the writer collaborated on this volume. We published it not in our Book Concern where it would have a constituency that we already had various means of reaching, but gave it to Funk & Wagnalls, who reach in a wide way the great public, who have magnificent advertising plans and have a clientele consisting of the very people we wanted most to reach. "The Case For Prohibition" is being pushed to the front and is likely to have a good circulation.

RESEARCH WORK

Through our Research Department, headed by Mr. Deets Pickett, a vast amount of publicity and educational work has been carried on.

Ten years ago, when this Department was just starting, there was no such thing as a CLIPSHEET, so far as we know. There was many "a voice" but no "THE VOICE."

In planning our editorial work several things were decided upon: that there should never be any "cheap" publicity in the name of our Board; that all propaganda should be based upon thorough and sincere investigation; that our program should be decade by decade, and not day by day.

To-day, the CLIPSHEET is widely known, and perhaps respected, even where it is not by any means loved. The Boston Transcript has spoken of it as a "formidable publication" and proclaims it to be the second "most powerful agency for prohibition in this country." It goes to all daily papers and thousands of others in this country; to all Congressmen, Senators and Cabinet members; to the Governors of all the States; to a large list of correspondents and editorial writers; to magazines; and to many individuals engaged in temperance work. Abroad it is sent to about two thousand papers in Great Britain, and to many people of prominence, making an unrelenting, vigorous appeal to the conscience of Great Britain in opposition to the smuggling curse. We feel that we would not be far wrong in saying that the treaty which Great Britain has just offered to the United States intended to suppress this infamy, is the result of the indignant protest to their government of Christian people and others of fair and friendly mind in Great Britain. We saw the editorial expression in Great Britain change gradually from belligerent contempt for the position of the United States to self-reproach. The incident has thoroughly convinced us that vigorous effort to reach the population of both countries by a fair and self-respecting statement of a good case is all that is necessary to keep relations between the English-speaking countries, at least, upon a basis of sympathetic and just consideration.

THE VOICE finds its way into every Methodist parsonage throughout the world, insofar as we are able to obtain correct addresses. It carries to the ministers of our Church the message of what this Board is doing in carrying on its part of all reform movements.

OUR RELATIONS WITH OFFICIAL WASHINGTON

The duties of the Research Department have brought it in constant contact with all of the Departments, with Congress and with the White House. We are happy to say that our welcome at every point of contact has been cordial. While, of course, we are interested in legislation, we try to avoid presenting any requests to Congressmen or to heads of Departments, seeking rather to come offering assistance than asking favors.

OUR FOREIGN WORK

The foreign work of the Board which has been under the charge of the Research Department, fully duplicates in extent the home work. Mr. Barnhart's excellent work in South America is fully familiar to you. During the past year his energetic efforts at the Pan-American Conference secured the passage of a striking prohibition resolution. Arrangements were proposed for an educational campaign in the schools and before the public in 20 nations. The Committee on Hygiene of that Conference recommended that the countries composing the union "put forth every effort to the gradual diminution of the consumption of alcoholic beverages until the problem of alcoholism is definitely solved."

Recently when it was reported that one of the South American countries was about to legalize a national lottery, Barnhart heard about it, jumped into a taxi and individually interviewed a large number of Senators. The bill was killed in committee.

In Switzerland, in France, in Italy, in Mexico, in India, Germany, Hungary and Japan, as well as other countries, the Board's representatives edited publications, produced an enormous amount of literature, organized demonstrations and representations to parliaments and witnessed distinct legislative advances.

In Italy, the efforts of Mr. Cacciapuoti and others resulted in a decree by the Premier halving the number of saloons. In France the propaganda of the Board penetrated into the schools and barracks, slums and industrial circles. In Germany a vast petition for local option was presented to the Reichstag largely through the efforts of our Methodist people. The anniversary of the Board of Temperance at the South German Methodist Conference in Heilbronn drew thousands, who packed into the hall and more than a thousand stood outside in a pouring rain listening to speakers, while two overflow meetings were held in churches. In almost all of these countries the Board's representatives are in close and friendly contact with government officials.

Either individually or in cooperation with others the Board has produced an enormous quantity of literature, some of it of the most striking character.

From Lausanne, Switzerland, the International Temperance Bureau with which the Board is cooperating effectively, is conducting an international work throughout Europe which is of the greatest significance.

Mr. Mark R. Shaw, whom the Board sent to Japan to initiate its work there, had considerable efforts, especially in the schools, well under way when the great earthquake occurred. Fortunately Mr. Shaw and his family were not in Tokyo. We feel that he is laying his foundations broad and deep and that another year of effort in Japan will bring to head a most formidable prohibition movement in that country.

The year in India was one of outstanding success. Under the direction of Rev. J. Waskom Pickett, District Superintendent at Arrah, conferences and mass meetings productive of splendid results were held in various parts of the country. A CLIPSHEET has been constantly published. Both the native and European elements of the population have been awakened. A head reporter of the Associated Press, himself recently approached Mr. Pickett offering to give publicity to any material on condition that it be exclusive. Mr. Pickett's regular missionary furlough is due and we expect his appearance in this country in about two months, but his assistants in India will carry on the work until his return.

MORE DETAILS

Other work done by the Research Department is equally important. It is responsible for editing a page in the Washington Christian Advocate; has charge of the treasury of the National Temperance Council; has conducted about Washington inquiring visitors from many foreign countries and assisted them in obtaining facts concerning prohibition in the United States. A system of advance publicity for speakers has been developed. Sunday School temperance societies have been organized. Stereopticon lectures have been prepared and circulated. A department of photography and illustration work has been established. A comprehensive file of police statistical records has been inaugurated. Our file of Congressional information is, perhaps, the most complete in the country. We can tell you as to nearly any member of Congress, whether he is wet or dry, what his church affiliation is, and in some few cases about his personal prejudices and fraternal affiliations.

Our general information files, while inadequate, are no doubt as well equipped with historical information as any reform files. They are depended upon to some extent by Representatives, Senators, newspaper men, magazine writers, pastors, and the general public including debaters, schools, public libraries, etc.

The literature circulated by this Department in one year would make one solid newspaper column two thousand miles long.

We printed approximately one million pages of leaflet material during 1923, and this is about our normal output.

Various special publications have been put out, showing the workings of prohibition in different parts of the country. These have been widely circulated at home and abroad.

From time to time we have conducted special investigations in different sections of the country, bringing to the attention of the public and officials bad conditions that exist; and we have seen their correction.

Our mailing lists have been pronounced the most accurate of any Board of the Church.

THE NEW BUILDING

It has been a wonderful transition from the days when we came to Chicago and rented one desk with one chair in the Deaconess Office of the Book Concern on Washington Street, and Mrs. Wilson from that desk shipped literature in vast packages by day and by night, made dates for my speaking appointments, went without a cent of salary, were chargeable with the rents, the printing bills, the express bills and the traveling expenses, until finally I have seen her entertaining callers by giving them the one chair and sitting on the piles of printed matter while I stood up first on one foot and then on the other until in an hour of desperation once I went out and bought another chair on credit.

From Chicago we went to Topeka and rented our one-room office and after some months secured the adjoining one, then moved to the rear of the building where we could have three rooms in a row and then two years later, being crowded by our work, we took the other side so as to have the whole side of the building with about five rooms, then coming to Washington, we had the temporary headquarters which we rented from the International Reform Bureau and occupied for four years, then purchased the house at 110 Maryland Avenue which has been the home of our growing work during the past three and a half years, and now our Board owns this magnificent building and the adjoining property and three-fourths of all has been paid for. This is an evolution that even Mr. Bryan would not object to.

It has been made possible by the liberality of many thousands of people, in spite of the fact that we have had more disappointments than most enterprises have had to meet and overcome. The Centenary voted us $500,000 at one time, not a cent of which materialized; the Inter-church World Movement offered us a million, all we had to do was sign an innocent little paper. It was tantalizing to offer us such sure money on such easy terms, but we foresaw the costs and declined. About everything we counted on assuring it failed, but the enterprise did not fail, for God was with us, and he wanted Protestantism to have a headquarters in the world's greatest Capital City, and Methodism to plant her banners here where she could represent herself and His cause in the influential circles that center here.

THE FRIENDS WHO HELPED

If we were to undertake to assess the thanks of the Church and assign the credits that are due, time would fail us—we should have to tell of the steady vision and encouraging helpfulness of the President of this Board, our Resident Bishop McDowell, of the large planning and generous gifts that started the enterprise by J. C. McDowell, of the gifts of such men as Dr. Charles E. Welsh and Mr. L. E. Starrett, who came to our help with encouragement and contributions, of our Treasurer's efforts to secure the site of this building which came to us for a tithe of its present worth, of the Building Committee whose faith has never wavered although money was not in sight, of the Women's Committee on furnishing and equipping the building, who have had almost as difficult a task, of our office force who have self-sacrificingly and devotedly served in every capacity efficiently, every one of whom has skimped himself to make contributions to the building; and Miss Bates, our Office Secretary, who has had the detail work of all collections and book-keeping and contributed in cash the first $500 that went into the lot and again the first $500 that went into the building; and with all this help it is not discounting the fidelity or ability of any to say that there is another who has brought up my courage again and again when I could see no possibility of going ahead, who has taken about all the detail work of planning, of renting the apartments, of securing the conveniences, of looking after furnishings, and from the day she drafted the first plans in outline very much as the building stands to-day, Mrs. Wilson has let nothing be neglected or slow up, and certainly deserves as much as nine-tenths of the credit that a generous Church is inclined to give to her husband for the successful culmination of this enterprise.

"The Methodist Building" is to-day not only the headquarters of our world-wide work, but here also may be found the offices of the Resident Bishop; the District Superintendent; the Area Secretary; the Director of Religious Education for Baltimore Conference; the Washington District Epworth League; the Washington Christian Advocate; the National Methodist Press; and the Methodist Union of Washington.

There is a beautiful Conference Room where the annual sessions and committee meetings of our Board are held; where the Preachers' Meeting is held weekly; and where many other groups gather. Located on the first floor in a large room is the Capital Book Store, which carries a good line of Methodist, Protestant and temperance literature. A delightful Dining Room affords service to many. Rest rooms and check rooms may be found here, as well as an information desk; everything is done to assist Methodist travelers and their friends who come to the city. Our location is also the starting point of a sight-seeing line.

This is truly a national center of Methodism.

THE FUTURE

It may be asked, "Now that we have a complete organization, the backing of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and apportionment of $250,000 granted by the Board of Benevolences, and we have prohibition and have won an uncountable series of victories, is there anything more for this Board to do?"

We see a definite, specific, necessary and sure-to-win program extending over the next ten years that will match in importance and emulate the triumphs of the outstanding and epoch-making victories of the past decade. Christianity is to be interpreted more and more in terms of social service for moral welfare. Christian experience is a personal equipment for moral life. Christian doctrine is but a means to this end. The Christian Church exists for the good of those outside of it. It is not an end in itself. We are saved to serve and as we march through the next decade we will see the 18th Amendment enshrined in the affections of a people who have imbedded it in their Constitution now. We will see the Volstead Act kept intact and enforced and amended only to make it stronger where experience shows the need. We will see the wet and dry map of Europe, Asia, Africa and the Islands as speckled as a Plymouth-Rock hen. We shall see our own country swing back from its lewdness and looseness, its filthy literature and its dirty stage life, its corrupted movie incentives to vice and crime, to a nation that has a public sentiment enforcing its laws. The prize-fight will be outlawed, the stage cleaned up, the moving picture films regulated, gambling under the ban of law and public sentiment, the mails and the express will be closed to the indecent and the impure, a sanctity of child life which will ultimately give us the 20th Amendment to the Constitution, forbidding the filching of play-time from the little ones in interests of corporate greed through child labor. A wave of Americanism which has receded will come back enthroning the Bible in the Public Schools and the American Sabbath on its American foundations again as it was before the German-American Alliance and the Brewers' Association trampled this institution of our fathers into the mire, and the Puritan principles about the cleanness of home life, the freedom of the ballot box, the little red school house teaching morality and respect for religion as well as the principles of education, will be pedestaled in triumph.

"For according to His promise we look for new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness," and it is the mission of this Board to help usher in that glorious day.

REPORT OF THE GENERAL DEACONESS BOARD

To the General Conference, of 1924:

DEAR FATHERS AND BRETHREN: This is the second quadrennial report of the General Deaconess Board, as a Benevolent Board.

In considering the development of the Deaconess Work during the last four years let us notice the remarkable property development. The increase in property and endowment in this quadrennium has been greater than in any other quadrennium in Deaconess history. It is $6,890,909 and the average annual increase is $1,722,727. This financial achievement is outstanding. Here is a compilation that is illuminating:

	Property and Endowment	Average Annual Increase
1888-1896	$558,900	$69,862
1896-1900	888,014	82,278
1900-1904	2,507,500	404,871
1904-1908	3,492,378	246,219
1908-1912	4,682,343	297,491
1912-1916	6,421,431	434,772
1916-1920	9,320,707	724,819
1920-1924	16,211,616	1,722,727

These figures are of the work in the United States. There is a growing fellowship with the work in Europe but the tabulation of that work cannot be easily made at this time.

The General Deaconess Board does not give itself primarily to the promotion of property interests but it does rejoice in this fine addition to the material equipment of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The major time of the Board is given to disseminating information concerning the Deaconess Movement, arousing the interest of superior young women, organizing the work to meet present conditions, developing the deaconess spirit in the Church, securing an adequate endowment fund and retiring and pensioning deaconesses.

This quadrennium closes with more deaconesses and probationers reported than did any other quadrennium in which Deaconess Work has been an organized part of the Church. The tabulation of deaconesses is interesting. The first consecration of a deaconess was in 1889, and here is given the record of deaconesses and probationers.

	Deaconesses and Probationers	Average Annual Increase or Decrease
1888-1892	212	53
1892-1896	383	42
1896-1900	775	98
1900-1904	906	33
1904-1908	1,023	29
1908-1912	1,012	3
1912-1916	1,017	1
1916-1920	997	5
1920-1924	1,048	13

Many deaconesses live in Deaconess Homes and such homes will remain a feature of this work. The fellowship of the home has its influence and helpfulness but with the strenuous demands of the modern church there is an increasing desire for deaconesses to live on their fields of service. There is a constantly growing number of deaconesses, who receive their appointments by the Bishop directly to Churches, Institutions and Boards. It speaks well for the adaptability of deaconesses and the foresight of legislators in providing that a deaconess "can be employed in any form of Christian work."

The Conference Deaconess Board is the outstanding feature of the Deaconess order and nearly every Annual Conference has now such a Board. Every deaconess is a member of this Board and has full rights and privileges in the transaction of all the business. This Board has general oversight of the Deaconess work in the Conference and it is the only body that has authority to license deaconesses, continue them in service, and recommend their retirement.

In order to encourage advanced preparation for Deaconess Work of exceptional young women a few scholarships have been awarded. At present there are six young women receiving scholarships and they are at the following schools: Hamline University, St. Paul, Minnesota; Denver University, Denver, Colorado; Simpson College, Indianola, Iowa; Boston University, Boston, Massachusetts.

The Endowment-Investment Fund is constantly growing. At the beginning of the quadrennium there was on investment and in cash $13,315.35; at the close of 1923 there is on investment and in cash $81,771.51, representing securities at face value and cash $83,912.78.

During the quadrennium there has been paid on pension, $77,519. The year closed with seventy-two Retired Deaconesses on pension, to whom was paid in 1923, $26,447.

The Deaconess Pension Fund of Chicago distributes its income through the General Deaconess Board. Of the total amount paid in pension there was received from the Trustees of the Deaconess Pension Fund, $20,365.98. This brotherly co-operation helps materially in pension payments.

Two members of the Board have passed away during the quadrennium—Rev. Christian Golder, D.D., and Mr. Edward E. Shipley. They both gave large service to the local work in Cincinnati and to that of the general Church.

For twelve years I have been blest by intimate association with Bishop William Burt. He has been a wise counselor and a wonderful brother. The Deaconess Movement will ever cherish his name.

The members of the Board, the Executive Committee, and the Staff have enthusiastically co-operated in every way possible.

For divine guidance and protection I return devout thanksgiving to my Heavenly Father.

Respectfully submitted,

DANIEL W. HOWELL.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF CONFERENCE CLAIMANTS

BY JOSEPH B. HINGELEY, CORRESPONDING SECRETARY

To the General Conference Methodist Episcopal Church.

DEAR BROTHERS:

I herewith present my fourth quadrennial report.

The task has been difficult and taxing because the responsibilities and duties of the Board have been greatly increased without a corresponding increase in the budget. Hence, the consciousness of much work well accomplished has the disturbing background of many things which have not been done and of problems which should be solved at an early date. While there should be some modifications in the Disciplinary plan, in order to relieve it of abuses, on the whole our service annuity system is by far the best non-contributory plan that is in operation, and is succeeding to a degree which is a marvel to other denominations.

We need to keep in mind the fact that though since 1908 our resources have increased fourfold, yet the net liabilities are larger than ever, due to the fact (1) that there are five thousand more claimants; (2) that the annuity rate has doubled; (3) that early retirement has resulted in great losses in the effective ranks, so that, even if no active ministers should die, the additions would not make up for the losses.

If instead of the present inadequate and round-about method of providing for the Board's activities the General Conference would assign an agreed percentage of the pastors' salaries to the general work the situation would be greatly improved. This money would go to the Board to be administered in the interest of the claimants in all Conferences, and be applied as follows:

For immediate use:

Equalization Fund	$150,000
Necessitous cases	135,000
Aged and Disabled Supply Pastors....	25,000
Sustentation	25,000

Total $335,000

Investigation preliminary to the setting up of a reserve for accruing liabilities in the "Retirement Fund"	50,000
Campaign work in and for Annual Conferences	40,000

Total for distribution and special work..... $425,000

The support and maintenance of the Work of the Board	60,000
--	--------

Grand Total $485,000

An apportionment of two per cent of the Pastors' salaries, either as a part of the present apportionment or in addition thereto, would produce the requisite income, the money to be divided in the following ratio:

	Per cent
Equalization Fund	25
Necessitous Cases	25
Aged and Disabled Supply Pastors.....	10
Sustentation	5
Investigation, Reserve, etc.....	10
Work for Annual Conferences.....	10
Support and Maintenance of the work of the Board	15

Is it not time for the church to play fair with this vital enterprise? For distant and remote causes the visioning of a hundred million dollars seems easy; but for the cause of the ministers, widows and orphans—a cause that is at our door and in the immediate Methodist family—it seems difficult to secure an adequate support.

We are now approaching the greatest and most critical task that was ever before a denomination, that of conserving the results of twelve successful years, and providing for the future of our system by adding contributory features and creating an adequate reserve to cover the future retirement years of the men who are working to-day and will be working to-morrow. Substantially all other denominations have been forced to do this to forestall disaster. The Methodist Episcopal Church is too big to provide retiring pensions for its ministers and widows after the fashions of old-style hand-to-mouth assessment, fraternal insurance organizations, and worthwhile plans can be worked out only after a thorough actuarial examination of the vital and financial elements represented by the entire group of ministers, a task that cannot be accomplished in a short time or without considerable expense, and a sufficient revenue must be provided for this purpose.

PERSONNEL

Bishop Charles Bayard Mitchell, President of the Board, has most loyally represented the interests of his brethren, the retired ministers. Fine work has been done by the members of the staff, the Rev. Charles R. Oaten, Business Representative; the Rev. Thomas A. Stafford, Recording Secretary and Assistant Treasurer; and Mrs. Helen E. Moore, Office Manager. The Board is fortunate in the character and efficiency of its employees: Miss Myrtle Strider, in charge of survey and tabulations; Miss Ruth Crane, private secretary; Miss Grace Smithson, in charge of Mr. Oaten's office; Miss Josephine Holmes, accountant; Miss Edith Stull, multigraph and mailing. With the increase of the Board's activities there will be at hand a fine group of workers trained for larger responsibilities.

Mr. Robert W. Campbell, Treasurer and Attorney, has devoted himself with zeal and enthusiasm to the work. Through his wise counsel the "Ministers' Provident-Annuity Fund" has been perfected.

CHANGES IN MEMBERSHIP

During the quadrennium Dr. Perry Millar, Mr. George Warren Brown and Mr. John O. Pew died, men of sterling character, great ability and unusual success, and thoroughly devoted to the interests of the retired minister. Dr. Joseph W. Van Cleve, long associated in the work as vice-president and member of the staff, was compelled to resign, on account of failing health. In setting up the survey of the local preacher supply pastors he erected a lasting monument.

On nomination of the Bishops, successors were found for these members: Mr. George H. Brown, Lakewood, Ohio; Dr. Robert B. Stansell, Milwaukee, Wis.; Dr. Edgar R. Heckman, Harrisburg, Penn.; Mr. Edgar H. Wilson, Moline, Ill.

The present membership of the Board is as follows:

Bishop Charles Bayard Mitchell, President,
157 N. Lexington Parkway, Saint Paul, Minn.

Ministers

Charles W. Baldwin, Baltimore, Md.

BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION

The Board of Conference Claimants occupies a somewhat unique position in the church because all its funds are Trust Funds and must therefore be invested and administered with the utmost care and under the most rigid supervision in order that we may comply with laws governing Trust organizations in the State of Illinois. It has always been the policy of this Board to conduct its business and financial affairs according to the most approved methods. Its investments are made under the advice of experts; absolute safety of the funds being the chief consideration rather than high rate of return. All expenditures are made under a carefully operated budget which resulted in a reserve balance of $6,912.75 for the quadrennium after all expenses of administration had been met.

From the reports of our Business Representative I find that the last quadrennium has been marked by a continuance of the same careful business methods, so that the Board has the highest rating possible with Bradstreet and its list of investments is considered first class in every respect.

Life Annuity Bonds, which constitute one of the principal sources of addition to our funds, are carefully and scientifically valued each year and are not considered as an asset to the Permanent Fund, but rather as a liability, until the beneficiaries have died and the principal remaining in such bonds has been brought back by its own earnings to par value. In this way the sum total of any and all gifts to our Fund, on the Life Annuity basis, ultimately accrues to the Fund.

The holdings of the Board total $1,622,207.57, as follows:

Corporation Bonds	$967,500.00
Government Bonds	2,550.00
Real Estate First Mortgages.....	501,137.43
Contracts, Stocks, Notes, etc.....	42,019.14
Value of Real Estate owned.....	109,001.00

This represents an increase of over $400,000 during the quadrennium. Against this there are Life Annuity contracts outstanding in the total of $407,322 still active and, in addition, about $60,000 in Life Annuity Bonds have matured.

An increasing number of people interested in the Cause of the Conference Claimants are making bequests and direct gifts in money or property. The funds of the Board have benefited to the extent of $156,000 from these sources during the quadrennium.

LITERATURE

A service of incalculable value has been rendered the Cause through the character and extent of the literature published and distributed by the Board. In addition to the larger publications, such as the book, "The Retired Minister," in two editions; the magazine, "The Veteran Preacher," and "The Steward's Manual," just off the press, millions of copies of tracts have been issued and scattered throughout the Church, some of which have attracted nation-wide attention, such as Bishop Quayle's "The Task Golden," and "What a Preacher Is;" Bishop Mitchell's "The Preacher's Prospect," and Mr. Marvin Campbell's "Indispensable Man," and "Our Dishonored Debt." These and others have done much to keep the need and justice of our Cause in the thinking of the Church.

But, we are facing new problems, as well as a new consciousness on the part of the Church, and, to meet these, a new type of literature must be provided. It is no longer necessary to emphasize the imperative need and compelling justice of this Cause, but the new problems and responsibilities in relation to it are already appearing large upon the horizon and a new literature, attractive and compelling, clearly stating the new problems and responsibilities, must be immediately produced. To do this, the Board must have adequate provision for literature made in its administrative budget, for, "where no vision" or information is, "the people perish."

IMPORTANT FACTS

The tables printed elsewhere show what is being done by the Conferences in the United States.

Number of Conference Claimants, 1923

Retired ministers	3,438
Widows	3,939
Dependent orphans	889

Total	8,266
Increase over 1922	137
During the Quadrennium	422

Annuity Claims—1923

Disciplinary Claims	$3,965,873
Annuities Paid	2,586,212

Deficit$1,379,661

NECESSITOUS CASES

In addition to $2,586,212 paid as annuities, $197,088 was paid to necessitous cases, on the basis of need; making the total amount paid $2,783,300. Necessitous "allowances" are made by the Conference Stewards to those whose annuities are not sufficient to provide a comfortable support. One fourth of the amount was provided by the Board of Conference Claimants. Ultimately all necessitous allowances will be paid by the Connectional Permanent Fund, for which the General Conference has asked ten million dollars. It is not easy to subject the necessitous claims to actuarial statement, because "necessity knows no law." The combined statement of the annuity and the necessitous claims is as follows:

Annuity and Necessitous Claims—1923

Total annuity and necessitous claims.....	$4,162,961
Total paid on them.....	2,783,300

Deficit December 31, 1923.....$1,379,661

This deficit, equal to 5 per cent interest on an endowment of $27,593,220, sobers our thinking, while we rejoice that two million dollars more was paid in 1923 than in 1908, when the Board came into being. The problem is to close this widening gap, by earnest work and the establishment of a reserve.

ANNUITY RATES AND ANNUITY YEARS

The average salary is now quite stable—$1,402 in 1922, and $1,396 in 1923—but the average annuity rate paid increased thirty-three cents—from $12.45 in 1922 to $12.78 in 1923; the percentage of the Disciplinary rate paid being 60 per cent.

TAKING STOCK

The progress made by the Church in providing for Conference Claimants has been steady since 1908. The total endowment, largely held by Annual Conferences, Preachers' Aid Societies, etc., has increased from a little more than a million dollars to almost seventeen million dollars. The pastoral charges respond splendidly to the annual apportionments. $1,930,943 came directly from them in 1923, about two-thirds of the entire distributable income—and it is imperative that the work shall be done in a way the laymen will approve.

The amounts paid to Conference Claimants by quadrenniums, since the opening of the century, were as follows:

First quadrennium	1900-1903$1,183,000
Second	"	1904-1907 1,473,000
Third	"	1908-1911 3,171,000
Fourth	"	1912-1915 4,431,000
Fifth	"	1916-1919 5,497,000
Sixth	"	1920-1923 9,849,000
Total 1900-1923$25,604,000

The payments made during the present quadrennium almost equal those of the first four quadrenniums. The strong hold that the cause of the retired preachers has in the thought of a liberal minded Methodist layman is indicated by this steady increase. Of almost twenty-six million dollars paid during the twenty-four years, 4 per cent was paid during the first quadrennium, and five per cent during the second; 12 per cent during the third; 17 per cent during the fourth; 22 per cent during the fifth; and almost 40 per cent during the sixth or present quadrennium.

AMOUNTS RECEIVED BY CLAIMANTS—1917 AND 1922

70 " " " "		314	314
80 " " " "		33	33
100 " " " "		72	72

This table indicates how the individual ministers are being benefited. In 1917 no minister received as much as $600 per year. In 1923 there were 892 ministers and 143 widows—1,035 in all—who received $600 or more, a fact of "human interest."

DIVERSITIES OF ADMINISTRATION

One of the motives which led to the organization of the Board of Conference Claimants was that it should give special help to the poorer and weaker Conferences. For not only is their annuity rate low, but only 40 per cent of the legal rate is paid in Conferences having a rate of less than $10, while in Conferences whose rate exceeds $20, 73 per cent is paid. Not only is the rate half as much, a deplorable fact, but the percentage paid is only half as great. The cure for this situation is to increase the resources of the Board by assigning a part of the annual receipts from the pastoral charges to the poorer Conferences.

AVERAGE PER CAPITA ASKED FOR CONFERENCE CLAIMANTS IN THE SEVERAL EPISCOPAL AREAS

The average amount asked for Conference Claimants in the different Episcopal areas is as follows:

Area	Cents per member
San Francisco	88.3
Omaha	80.0
Boston	71.0
Buffalo	67.8
Portland	63.3
Saint Paul	59.8
New York	58.6
Denver	54.0
Chicago	51.9
Detroit	50.3
Washington	50.0
Wichita	48.6
Pittsburgh	42.0
Philadelphia	37.7
Indianapolis	37.0
Saint Louis	36.1
Cincinnati	31.4
Atlanta	15.4
Chattanooga	8.2
New Orleans	5.1

It would be very difficult to explain why there is such a variation among the areas. The San Francisco Area appor-tions at the rate of 88 cents per member and the Cincinnati Area, 31 cents per member. There is, however, no difficulty in understanding why certain areas are at the top of the list; for these Bishops did not submit to the vote of the Conference a motion which contravened the law.

GRAPHIC REPRESENTATION OF THE BOARD'S ACTIVITIES

The activities of the Board of Conference Claimants cannot be fairly represented by graphs because the results of its work are not shown in its own accounting system, but in those of the several Conferences which are helped in accomplishing their tasks. Most of its work and the major part of its expenditures have been in the interest of Annual Conferences; the benefits going to them and not to the Board. The first campaign for increase of Conference funds was conducted by the Board and the expenses were largely met by it. The immediate returns, seven million dollars, were not placed on the books of the Board.

The annual appropriations of the Board to the Conferences come from permanent investments which represent the work of many years, not of one year; and the $9,000 distributed to aged and disabled local preacher supply pastors came to the Board without expense. Two-thirds of every dollar received by the Board is for the benefit of the cause at large and not for internal administration. The major part of the work is promotional and most of the money paid for salaries, expenses, etc., is related to world-wide activities and not to administration. It is well to keep in mind the Board's manifold activities for which the money is used:

- (1) Expense of campaigns in Annual Conferences.
- (2) Salaries and expenses of Conference representatives in the poorer and weaker Conferences.
- (3) Preparation and distribution of literature.
- (4) Publication of the "Veteran Preacher," reports, etc.
- (5) Advertising in the Advocates.
- (6) Salaries of competent men to do extensive work.
- (7) Travel and visitation of Conferences.
- (8) Accounting and checking up the ministerial services of more than eight thousand Conference Claimants; and ultimately of all the ministers.
- (9) Preparation, printing and furnishing blank forms for the Conference Stewards, and checking up their reports.
- (10) Gathering statistical and other information and printing same for the benefit of the Church.
- (11) Continual investigation of the actuarial elements that enter into annuity and pension problems.
- (12) Forecasting the future and providing for future contingencies.

AGED AND DISABLED SUPPLY PASTORS

The question of making provision for the old age and disability of faithful supply pastors has been given considerable attention by several General Conferences.

The proposition that recognition should be given these men was a natural reaction to the enlarged pension plans of Methodism. Their invaluable services, rendered often on meager support and under difficult conditions, created a widespread conviction that they ought not to be neglected in their old age. Memorials and appeals on their behalf were presented to every General Conference since the organization of the Board of Conference Claimants, asking that supply pastors be recognized as Conference Claimants, and in 1912 the action took that form. But, when the question of legality was raised, the General Conference ruled that the Annual Conference could not use Conference Claimants' funds for this purpose.

However, the General Conference of 1920 authorized the Annual Conferences to take any necessary measures for the creation of permanent funds or to raise money for annual distribution for this cause. During the discussion of the question it became evident that this was a matter to be carried forward by the Church at large rather than by the Annual Conferences and a later resolution committed the whole question to the Board of Conference Claimants for study and survey, reporting their findings to the Council of Boards of Benevolence.

A thoroughgoing investigation was begun immediately under Dr. Joseph W. Van Cleve, of the Board Staff. First a study was made of the General Minutes in order to ascertain the number of supply pastors in the United States and the salaries paid to them. Then requests for information were sent to twenty-six hundred and sixty-five of them. A further inquiry was made, in cooperation with the district superintendents, Conference stewards and others and the names and record of the services of faithful and devoted aged and disabled supply pastors were obtained.

From the returns received we segregated the names of those who had served ten or more years, who were approximately sixty-five years of age and who during the next five years might become aged or disabled, and require relief.

Out of these investigations grew the conviction that (1) the problem was not as large as had been generally supposed, (2) the matter should be handled in a connectional way instead of by the several Annual Conferences, (3) an amount of money sufficient to furnish relief should be included in the general budget for the Board of Conference Claimants, and eventually provided by an endowment, (4) that the Church would respond generously to any reasonable plan of providing for them.

The results of this survey were presented to the Council of Boards of Benevolence and an appropriation of at least $20,000 was asked to be placed in the budget for this purpose. Ten thousand dollars was granted for the year 1922 for distribution in 1923. A special committee was appointed, consisting of Revs. R. E. Meader, a member of the Board; Charles A. Gage and J. S. White, presidents of the Boards of Stewards of the Rock River and Central Illinois Conferences, to canvass the applications and recommend the first distribution, which was made February 1, 1923.

The beneficiaries were divided into three classes, payments to be made on February 1st and August 1st: Class A to receive $200 each; Class B, $120 each; Class C, $80 each. Allowances were made to sixty-nine supply pastors and five widows—two in Class A, forty-six in Class B, and twenty-six in Class C, the beneficiaries being in thirty-seven different Conferences. The total of the first distribution was $9,000, including $1,000 for emergency.

The committee requested the Council of Boards of Benevolence to include in their appropriations $20,000 for distribution in 1924, but only $10,000 was granted. The second distribution was made February 1, 1924, on a basis similar to the former one. New applications are being received, and the number entitled to relief now exceeds a hundred. The distribution of this wholly inadequate amount is a step in the right direction.

"MINISTERS' PROVIDENT ANNUITY FUND"

The November "Official Railroad Guide" makes the following statement:

"A new means by which the 250,000 officers and employees of the Pennsylvania System may save money, increase their pensions, and obtain emergency loans, has been established through the 'Pennsylvania Railroad Provident and Loan Association,' which is a cooperative activity of the officers and employees. Participation is entirely voluntary and its operations are for the benefit only of those officers and employees who may become members."

The duties of the Board of Conference Claimants relate to ministers only and for several years plans have been developing, by means of which, in addition to and independent of the annuities provided by the church for Conference Claimants, ministers may secure the benefit of their own personal economy and savings, by applying such savings accumulations to the purchase of life annuities at rates which would return to them substantially the entire amount paid, with interest. This is just what is done by the "Pennsylvania Railroad Provident and Loan Association."

The annuity rates of benevolent agencies ordinarily provide that a considerable residuum, three-fourths or more, will revert to the organization, for the benefit of the cause it represents. But purely beneficiary organizations, like the Carnegie Foundation, do not figure to leave any residue, but rather on returning to the annuitants, during a normal life, the equivalent of their accumulations. Such organizations do not exist for profit, but for the benefit of the beneficiaries. During the past two years responsible actuaries have been engaged in applying the principle of service to Methodist ministers—not profit to the Board, calculating annuity rates so as to leave only a small residue for expenses.

It will thus be made possible for Methodist ministers, through their own savings and economy, to add to their annuities in a self-contributory way, so that they may spend their closing years in a degree of comfort. The plan of the "Ministers' Provident-Annuity Fund" is flexible enough to meet all the exigencies and emergencies of the ministerial life, to provide for early disability, and also, as in the Pennsylvania Railroad plan, to make it possible for ministers to "save money, increase their pensions, obtain emergency loans," etc.

The three items involved are (1) interest accumulations, (2) loans and cash withdrawals, (3) higher annuity rates. Together they will bring splendid results to those who exercise forethought and economy. For example: If a preacher should lay aside $100 each year from the time he was twenty-five years old until he is sixty-five years old, his accumulations, at four per cent interest, compounded semi-annually, would be $9,882. When he was twenty-five years old his annuity rate would have been only five per cent, but when he is sixty-five years old, his annuity rate will be ten and two-tenths per cent; and a life annuity on $9,882 at 10.2 per cent would amount to $1,008—almost $3 a day—during the remainder of his life. Should he prefer a joint and last survivor annuity for the benefit of both himself and his wife as long as either of them should live, and their ages were approximately the same, the annuity would be $781—$65 a month during life.

A Methodist preacher may enter into the Ministers' Provident-Annuity Fund at any age, but the accumulations of an older man will be small because of the shortness of the accumulating period. But a Methodist minister may invest his savings and receive the benefit of the higher annuity rate. The benefits of the plan would be greatly increased if a larger amount than $100 a year were placed in the Fund, especially during the early period of the ministry. Wherever the "Ministers' Provident-Annuity Fund" has been presented ministers have said, "I wish that such an opportunity had been open to me when I was younger."

The plan is made flexible, money being received at any time, in any amount, subject to four per cent interest, compounded semi-annually.

The annuity contract is not issued when the minister enters the Fund and begins to save, but at the time when he chooses to exercise his option; or should he die, whenever his widow desires to do so.

Should the minister become disabled he may exercise his option and receive an annuity at the rate payable at his age on his total accumulations in the fund; or he may allow the money to accumulate until later; or he may withdraw his savings and accumulations in whole or part.

Should the minister need money to meet a temporary emergency, he may borrow on his certificate up to 80 per cent of his accumulations, without jeopardizing valuable contingent benefits from endowment income and earnings.

Should he leave the ministry entirely, he may receive an annuity at the ordinary Board rates, which are liberal, or may withdraw his accumulations; but he would not be eligible to the contingent benefits.

The "Ministers' Provident-Annuity Fund" makes it possible for a Methodist minister, through forethought and economy, to secure additional and unchallengeable protection for the old age of himself and his loved ones. The earlier he begins to save the greater will be his accumulations, annuities and benefits.

The Ministers' Provident-Annuity Fund was approved and adopted by the Board of Conference Claimants at its last annual meeting.

ACCRUED AND ACCRUING LIABILITIES

By "accrued" liabilities are meant liabilities for services that have already been rendered and for which the minister is now receiving or will receive an annuity. By "accruing" or prospective liabilities we mean liabilities which will be operative later when the minister is retired. Generally speaking, accruing liabilities are for services rendered after a definitely fixed date. Most ministers now in active service have accrued liabilities which will be operative when they retire and will also have accruing liabilities for services after the determinal date. New entrants would have only accruing or prospective liabilities.

To provide only for the accrued liabilities and to ignore the accruing liabilities for services to be rendered will be fatal to our system. There are more than 3,400 retired ministers and 5,000 other claimants, who represent four million dollars of accrued liabilities; and there are 14,000 active ministers who are adding 140 centuries of accruing liabilities annually. About 50 centuries of liabilities disappear annually, leaving a net annual increase of 90 centuries. Thus far the Methodist Episcopal Church has been considering only the accrued liabilities and ignoring the accruing or prospective liabilities. Methodism shows a deficit of a million dollars in its old liabilities and adds each year half a million dollars of new liabilities for which no provision is made.

What would a business organization do that found itself in such a situation? Its debt would be funded and a sinking fund established into which certain moneys would be paid each year, until the debts disappeared. A legal reserve is a "back log," a sinking fund; and it should be provided, in part at least, by contributions from the beneficiaries, the preachers.

Many retirement funds have failed because they were on a "hand to mouth" basis; each year's income being exhausted each year; so that after eight or ten years, the accumulated liabilities could not be met. The funds which have survived faced the situation and provided for contributory payments by the beneficiaries, which will accumulate by compound interest until the day when accruing liabilities become accrued. To this money the organization adds funds so that when in 1954 the liabilities created by services rendered by your pastor become operative by his retirement there will be income sufficient to meet his liability. In such a way should the future liabilities of Methodism be anticipated. Our present resources provide for only three-fourths of the present liabilities and for none of the accruing or prospective liabilities, and we owe it to the ministers who are now from 30 to 50 years of age to project plans for their retirement so that they may receive a sure and definite benefit which will be paid beyond the possibility of a doubt, and for which they themselves have contributed in part.

LOOKING TO THE FUTURE ANTICIPATING AN EMERGENCY

The time has arrived for a thorough, exact and careful investigation of all the elements that enter into the service annuity system of the Methodist Episcopal Church, so that its essential principles may be preserved and a rational solution found for present difficulties and impending dangers.

Methodist people are so accustomed to large figures that the size of their enterprises may at times obscure their understanding of what is involved in them. In 1923 the annual disciplinary obligations of the Church for service annuities were four million dollars—equal to 5 per cent interest on an endowment of eighty million dollars—an amount larger than the total five years' Centenary receipts. This startling statement should lead us to reckon our resources, anticipate our future liabilities, and seek the constructive advice of skilled actuaries, so that, freed from imperfections and abuses, our fine system may be strengthened and stabilized by a legal reserve, set up in part by payments made by the beneficiaries.

Certain abuses and imperfections must be corrected. Annuities are being paid for services which were not rendered to the Methodist Episcopal Church, its institutions or organizations—as unreasonable a practice as it would be for the New York Life Insurance Company to be asked to assume the liabilities of the Equitable Life because the beneficiaries were good and useful men; or as if the Episcopal should be asked to assume the pension liabilities of the Presbyterian Church. Ministers whose services were not given to the Methodist Episcopal Church, but remained in the "effective relation" now receive annuities which they did not earn, and which are paid by our Church to the detriment of the cause. Appointments to detached service outside of the Methodist Episcopal Church should not be recognized as creating annuity liabilities, and the legislation as to special appointments should state clearly that such years shall not be counted as annuity years. No other denomination or pension plan submits to such an imposition.

There are also inequities which should be corrected. Some Conferences pay $300, or less for the same years of service for which other Conferences pay $1,200 or more.

The relation of transfers to the annuity plan should be carefully considered. The transfer system is necessary in a connectional Church, but it is not reasonable that by the stroke of an episcopal pen a Bishop can add hundreds of dollars to the annuity obligations of an Annual Conference, without recourse. In some cases the transfers made in a single session have represented 5 per cent income on $30,000. The last General Conference established the Equalization Fund, to equalize the burdens among the Conferences; but as yet there are no means for that purpose. The careful survey made by the Board shows that for the ministers alone $80,000 will be required annually, and that for the entire group, ministers, widows and orphans, $150,000. But only $25,000 was placed by the Council in the present financial program for this purpose.

The correction of these matters of administration will afford some relief, as will also the change of the ratio for determining the annuity rate to one per cent of the average salary, and the exercise of care in the distribution of the present funds; but after all has been said and done there is only one adequate method of securing permanency in our retirement system and preventing it from being overwhelmed by an avalanche of liabilities, viz., the method which has been introduced, reluctantly at first, into the pension plans of schools, churches, etc., that of setting up a reserve plan on a contributory basis, by which the beneficiaries themselves provide in part for the liabilities they create, and share in the Retirement Fund.

When twenty-two million dollars were given to the "Carnegie Foundation for the Improvement of Teaching," it seemed to the administrators that, with so large an endowment, almost any promise could be fulfilled; but after the plan had been in operation for several years it was found to be financially inadequate to fulfill its promises and that, if modifications were not made the beneficiaries would be left without support in old age. Then, on advice of wise and skillful actuaries, a thorough investigation was made and the system was changed from a non-contributory plan, which had been in the mind of the great benefactor, into a reserve system, on a contributory basis, in which the teachers themselves and the colleges they served shared with the Foundation in the responsibility of providing for the pension liabilities through the establishment of a reserve, and the Foundation resting on a sound actuarial basis will be able in the future, to meet both the accrued and the accruing liabilities.

Similar situations developed in other non-contributory plans which did not have a legal reserve. The Congregational Church operated a liberal plan for several years, but breakers being discovered ahead, the "Modified Plan" was set up by actuaries, with contributory and reserve features, which is completely solvent, and able to meet present and future demands. The preacher's premium, equal to 6 per cent of his salary, is paid in part by "The Pilgrim Fund," which will gradually increase its payments until his payments will be a minor fraction of the cost. After similar changes had been made in the early plans of the Northern Convention of the Baptist Church, and a system of contributory payments with a legal reserve had been adopted, Mr. Rockefeller, with the approval of his actuaries and legal advisers, gave several million dollars to the fund. The early plans of the Disciples Church went through the same process; also those of the Presbyterian Church. The new pension plan of the United Brethren Church, which had the advantage of the experiences of other churches, now operates with contributory and reserve features.

But by far the largest and most outstanding development of a contributory system based on a reserve is that of the Episcopal Church, which began by carefully separating on the date of March 1, 1917, the "accrued liabilities" for services already rendered, to be provided for by the "Church Pension Fund" of $5,000,000 and other resources, from the "accruing liabilities," for services to be rendered in the future and to be provided for by annual payment of 7½ per cent of his salary to be paid by or for each clergyman, which was the amount actuarially ascertained by a careful and exhaustive survey as being sufficient to furnish the adequate reserve. So thoroughly was the work done that the plan met hearty approval and 90 per cent of the parishes now pay for their rector the amount which assures for him a liberal pension in old age, equal to half of his average salary during the last ten years of his active ministry. Furthermore, the "Church Pension Fund," for which $5,000,000 was asked, now exceeds $10,000,000. The work of Bishop Lawrence, Mr. Monell Sayre and their coadjutors is beyond praise. "They builded better than they knew," but their greatest distinction lies in the fact that as wise master builders, they laid the foundation after a thorough-going investigation, calling to their help expert advisers, among whom were the actuaries of the great insurance companies, with whom they sat down and counted the cost, and basing the payments on actuarial calculations, provided an adequate reserve to meet all future accruing or prospective liabilities. Then, in order to start "with a clear sheet," they established "The Church Pension Fund," to take care of the accrued liabilities for services already rendered.

The Anglican Church in England and in Canada adopted their plan in toto.

Methodism is well situated to profit by this fine achievement.

(1) We have resources by which we can provide on the present basis for the "accrued liabilities" of those who are now retired, widowed or orphaned.

(2) By linking the Board of Conference Claimants to ministerial support, where it properly belongs, by a small apportionment of not more than two per cent, the necessitous cases of the entire Church can be provided for, thus relieving the Annual Conferences of that responsibility; the demands of the Equalization Fund can be met; the expenses of the actuarial investigation can be paid; the support of aged and disabled local supply pastors can be secured; the Sustentation Fund can be created; the support and maintenance of the work of the Board's activities can be provided for; and the entire question of ministerial retirement funds can be settled for all time.

In non-contributory pension plans, the liabilities begin to increase greatly after ten or twelve years, on account of the increasing age and number of beneficiaries, which causes a rapid increase of liabilities. This is true of the annuity plan of the Methodist Episcopal Church. For ten years the liabilities and resources increased at quite an even pace; but since 1920, the distance between the curves which represent the annual liabilities and the resources have been separating, and, in spite of an unparalleled increase of income, instead of the lines running approximately parallel like rails on a railroad track, they are now spreading—a condition as dangerous in the operation of a retirement system as in the operating of a railroad.

What of the future? The uniform experience of pension organizations leads to the conclusion, that in order to conserve our plans contributory features creating a reserve must be added. We are now where the Carnegie and other pension funds found themselves a few years ago—namely, facing a rapid increase of liabilities. By studying their experiences it ought to be possible for us to find the way out, after a careful, painstaking, scientific, actuarial investigation, exact and exacting, to which the wisdom of the wisest actuaries must be applied. This is absolutely necessary, but it will cost money. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars was provided for such a preliminary, actuarial investigation, before the survey for the "Church Pension Fund" was made, and our budget must be large enough to enable us to secure the facts, and to employ trained actuaries to analyze them and point out the way.

While planning for the future let us not discount the present Methodist annuity plan for the support of retired ministers, which has justified itself by the results. Nevertheless, the rapid, fourfold increase of retirement liabilities—$1,000,000 in 1908; $4,000,000 in 1923—is disquieting; and the end is not in sight and the increase is accelerating. The increase of liabilities is due to several causes:

(a) Increased number of claimants—5,623 in 1910, and 8,266 in 1923; a net increase of 2,643 in thirteen years—four per week.

(b) Higher annuity rates. Due to increased salaries, on which they are based. Annuity rates have doubled since 1910.

(c) Increased number of annuity years. In 1908 the money was distributed according to the needs, and annuities were unknown. Today the total annuity years are 1,650 centuries.

(d) Thousands of annuity years are allowed which do not represent service to the Methodist Episcopal Church. The law must be stated in terms of service to Methodism, not in terms of the "effective relation," and only years of service to Methodism should be counted.

(e) Our system is non-contributory. The minister himself does not pay anything for his old age annuity, while the systems of other churches require that from 6 per cent to $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent of his salary be paid each year by or for him. Only those plans survive which, seeing their danger in time, adopted contributory reserve features, and escaped financial liquidation.

The money to produce a given income in the form of a permanent endowment is from twenty to twenty-five times more than that income. An endowment which would meet the annual annuity liability of Methodism would be $80,000,000, and the income would be expended every year, leaving no reserve to accumulate at compound interest for future liabilities. The Methodist plan maintains itself largely by the large annual contributions received from the pastoral charges—in 1923, $1,797,000—and by connectional dividends. The apportionment to the churches is much larger than in any other denomination, and the generous response of the laymen is a fine expression of their loyalty to their ministers—a loyalty which should be conserved by careful administration and the establishment of a legal reserve, furnished in part by the preachers. Occasionally the preacher pays a small amount, inappreciable in an actuarial way, for campaign expenses. A preacher with a salary of $2,000 is requested to pay twenty dollars a year; quite in contrast with the rector of an Episcopal Church who receives the same salary and who is required to pay, or his church to pay for him, $150 per year during his entire ministry, in order to accumulate a reserve to meet future liabilities. If the payment annually of $75 per thousand is necessary to secure an unchallengeable pension for an Episcopal rector, how long can the Methodist non-contributory, non-reserve system survive unless the preachers help to set up a reserve for the future? It is time that the investigation should be made and all the liabilities be provided for in a thoroughly scientific, actuarial way. The present income may continue for some time to provide in large part for the accrued liabilities of those who are now claimants, but the interests of the ministers who are in the active work and of those who will enter our ministry later must also be safe-guarded. A date must be fixed on which the separation between the accrued and the accruing liabilities shall go into effect, say

January 1, 1926. The contributory features would not apply to the present claimants, who are either retired, widowed or orphaned; and their claims would be paid out of the present income; but those who would become claimants subsequent to January 1, 1926, would represent both (1) "accrued liabilities," for services rendered prior to that date, and (2) "accruing liabilities" for services rendered subsequent thereto. On retirement their accrued liabilities would be paid from the present sources of income, and their accruing or prospective liabilities would be paid from the legal reserve, constituting the "Retirement Fund," made up as follows:

(1) An amount equal to 3 per cent, or more or less, of the pastor's salary, to be paid annually by each pastoral charge; or for ministers who are not pastors, by the organization or institution which pays their salary.

(2) An amount equal to three per cent, more or less, of his cash salary to be paid annually by each minister, as his share of the "Retirement Fund," without which payment he cannot become a beneficiary.

(3) Endowments for "The Retirement Fund," to be raised at large by the Church.

The "Retirement Fund" would be invested as a reserve at compound interest, which would greatly increase before the time heavy drafts would be made on it. Later some of the money which at first was applied to the accrued liabilities would be released by the death of claimants and transferred to "The Retirement Fund," to pay for the accruing or prospective liabilities.

It is expected that in the Methodist Episcopal Church as in the Episcopal Church, the pastoral charges would, after a while, provide for the pastors' payments to the "Retirement Fund."

For men in detached service the organization or institution which makes use of a Methodist minister will protect his retirement by paying to the "Retirement Fund" a like amount. The ministers as to their liabilities would be in three groups:

(1) Ministers who are now retired. They represent accrued liabilities only, for services already rendered, which will be provided for by the present resources and according to the present plan as modified by the General Conference.

(2) Ministers now in active service. These now have certain defined accrued liabilities for services already rendered, which however, will not be operative until they retire, when they will be met from the present resources. They will also be adding annually one year to their accruing or prospective liabilities, which will be met by the legal reserve of "The Retirement Fund" in which they participate and to which they contribute.

(3) New Entrants who will have no accrued liabilities, but will annually add one year of accruing or prospective liabilities, which will be met by the "Retirement Fund."

Most non-contributory pension schemes which did not adopt the contributory and reserve principles have broken down. Our liabilities are unparalleled in the history of pension legislation. Fortunately we now have resources sufficient to provide in large part for the liabilities already accrued, and are in a position to adopt a Contributory Retirement Fund to provide for future or accruing liabilities.

The only way in which this can be accomplished will be for the General Conference to order that it be done and that the Board of Conference Claimants shall make an adequate and painstaking investigation with the help of the best trained actuaries that can be secured. To do this the Board will need to be adequately financed, its support coming directly from the pastoral charges in whose interests and in the interest of whose pastors it operates. In brief the plan would involve the following:

1. Provide for the present accrued liabilities by means of the present resources. This will not materially disturb the present plan.

2. Set up the "Retirement Fund" with a reserve for future contingencies by means of small annual payments by the ministers and the churches until a sufficient endowment shall be in the Retirement Fund to meet the entire expense.

3. Provide for necessitous cases, for the Equalization, Sustentation and Local Preachers' Funds, for the setting up of the Retirement Fund and the various activities of the Board by an apportionment not exceeding 2 per cent of the pastor's salary.

LEGISLATION

Important legislation will be presented to the General Conference, such as:

- (1) Amending the charter of the Board so as to state the additional responsibilities assigned to it.

- (2) Authorize the Board to receive in trust, for temporary or permanent purposes, the endowment funds of Annual Conferences.

- (3) Authorize the Board to accept the administration of trust funds for the benefit of lay workers, deaconesses, medical missionaries, teachers, etc., who may not be members of an Annual Conference; as recommended by the Committee of Twenty-five.

- (4) Change the method of support of the Board of Conference Claimants so that it may come directly from the pastoral charges and be related to ministerial support; a method which will align this cause with ministerial support, help to allay the growing irritation of the pastors that the interests related to themselves and their families have been crowded out, simplify the benevolent program, and provide an adequate budget for the Board, which started out without a cent, and was not included in the Centenary. The time has gone by to keep silent and we believe that the delegates of the General Conference, ministers as well as laymen, will see that the Board is adequately financed so that it may do its work, make the necessary survey, and create a reserve so that each year's payment will provide for the payment of one year's liability when it accrues. Our laymen are certainly not less clear visioned, and have as great business capacity as the laymen of the Episcopal Church, who before their investigation began placed $150,000 in the hands of the Commission to conduct an actuarial investigation. Though it was not all expended it was the best spent money in the history of this cause. We ask the delegates to provide an amount which will enable the Board to carry on as in the past, to conduct the necessary actuarial investigation, to provide for the claimants in the poor and weak Conferences and to equalize the burdens throughout the Church.

BOOK CONCERN DIVIDEND

The question of the proper basis for the distribution of the Book Concern Dividend has been carefully considered and it is the general opinion of the Conference stewards that the distribution should be based on the "total annuity years" instead of on the "total annuity claims"; because the poorer Conferences now share but slightly in the dividend and a year of faithful service in one Conference often counts for three times as much as a year's service in another Conference.

Another very important matter relates to the persistent propaganda of the representatives of the publishing interests to eliminate the profit from the administration of the Book Concern affairs. Certain interests desire these funds for their work. A letter just received states that a representative of the Book Concern told the writer that the reason why the prices of Methodist books were higher than those of other publishing houses was that so much money was given to the old preachers, and that the time had come when this money should be used in the business. All publishing houses are run for profit. They are not eleemosynary institutions. The only difference is that while the profits of Harper or Appleton go to the stockholders, the profits of our Book Concern go to the "ministers, their wives, widows and children." If the periodicals of the Church were self-supporting $100,000 a year could be added to the dividend for the retired ministers. The challenge which put the interests of the old preachers, widows and orphans against the interests of other causes is unwise. Fortunately delegates to the General Conference are not blind in mind, or eyes or heart.

YEARS ON TRIAL

The provision of counting two years on probation (§ 341, § 2), unwisely introduced into legislation in 1916, operates against the ministers who have served more than nine years, and to a very distinct advantage of those who have served less than nine years; and the longer the service the greater the loss. The probationary years being added to the divisor greatly reduce the quotient which is the annuity rate.

The total probationary years of the Church exceed 12,000 which at the average rate, $20, represents an annual payment of $240,000; or 5 per cent interest on an endowment of $4,800,000. The inclusion of the probationary years confuses the actuarial work, is subject to constant error and should be stricken out; or the words changed so as to read, "not including years on trial."

APPOINTMENTS TO DETACHED SERVICE

Services except to Methodism should not entitle the preacher to a pension or annuity. No other pension organization would dream of such a thing. In the Episcopal Church no clergyman can enter into such work unless the institution pays seven and one half per cent of his salary to the Church Pension Fund.

Last year 1,728 ministers received appointments to detached service, representing an addition of $700,000 to the annual claims. § 208 should include a new section to read as follows:

"§ 7. In all cases where ministers are appointed to services in institutions or organizations not under the control of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the years given to such service shall not be included in the annuity claims of such preacher or his widow or children."

There should also be legislation against the payment of double pensions, and the recognition of supplies as claimants. It would be difficult to find a pension organization that would permit an employee to be a pensioner.

THE INTER-DENOMINATIONAL SECRETARIES

I desire to certify to the great help received through the annual meetings of the inter-denominational secretaries, a group of men who, representing different churches, have to deal with various forms of pension and relief. The meeting held recently at Atlantic City was one of the best and most informing we have ever held.

“GENERAL PENSION AND RELIEF FUND”

The Committee of Twenty-five in its recommendations to the Council of Boards made important suggestions concerning the work of the Board of Conference Claimants. It proposed:

(1) To include the pension and relief not only of ministers but also of missionaries, deaconesses, educational and other church workers, under a name which would include them all.

(2) To support of the Board of Conference Claimants, by an apportionment made directly to the pastoral charges, to be reported in Statistics Number II.

(3) To commit all general pension and relief funds to the Board, as rapidly as legal determinations would permit.

Before this part of the report was reached the whole matter of the reorganization of the Board was referred to the General Conference with a recommendation that a commission be appointed to work out a plan.

The final action was as follows:

“That the Board of Conference Claimants be continued as a pension and relief fund under such other name as may be selected. The money necessary for its work to be secured directly from the pastoral charges as part of the ministerial support in such manner as the General Conference may determine.”

We are in full sympathy with the resolution, believing that the provision for the old age of ministers which is related to ministerial support, should come directly from the pastoral charges just as does the support of pastors, district superintendents and Bishops; and, that like the Episcopal Fund, pension funds should not be subject to the control of the benevolent boards. The problems involved in retirement annuity plans are not related to the benevolences, and, from their very nature, must be solved by a small group of experienced men acting under the advice of actuaries, because the work is technical, actuarial and scientific.

The Board of Conference Claimants from the beginning has never been adequately financed. It started out without a cent being provided for it, but the laymen rallied and saw us through the first quadrennium. The Board was not included in the Centenary program and submitted in silence to that injustice for the good of the great causes in which its officers sincerely believed. Now is the time for the General Conference with statesman-like vision adequately to finance this Board, the success of which means more to the church than any other enterprise, especially if there should be included in its program age and disability provisions for all the workers of the church.

JOSEPH B. HINGELEY,

Corresponding Secretary.

N.B. The Disciplinary rates in column 2 are those reported by the Board of Conference Claimants to the Book Committee. In column 3, the rates used in the computations of some annual conferences. These differences arise from the fact that the rates used in the computations of some annual conferences are based on the rates reported by the Board of Conference Claimants to the Book Committee, while the rates used in the computations of some annual conferences are based on the rates reported by the Board of Conference Claimants to the Book Committee.

In presenting this, the first Quadrennial Report of the Board of Hospitals and Homes of the Methodist Episcopal Church, we would call attention to its creation.

The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church of 1920, at Des Moines, Iowa, passed the following legislation:*

Article III. Government. The management shall vest in a Board which shall consist of eighteen members, including three Bishops appointed by the Board of Bishops, one of whom shall be President of the Board. The additional members shall be nominated by the Board of Bishops and elected by the General Conference. The term of office shall be one quadrennium.

The first meeting of the Board of Hospitals and Homes of the Methodist Episcopal Church was held at 740 Rush Street, Chicago, Illinois, November 12, 1920, at 10:30 A. M., Bishop W. O. Shepard, presiding. By-laws were adopted and the following officers elected as officers of the incorporated body, the same having been elected by the Board of Managers as an unincorporated body previously: President, Bishop W. O. Shepard; Vice-President, Bishop E. L. Waldorf; Recording Secretary, L. O. Jones; Treasurer, James T. Bradley; Corresponding Secretary, N. E. Davis.

The following were elected as an Executive Committee: James T. Bradley, C. A. Collin, N. E. Davis, J. A. Diekmann, L. O. Jones, W. H. Jordan, S. W. Robinson, Bishop W. O. Shepard, Mrs. D. B. Street, Bishop E. L. Waldorf, and C. S. Woods. Rev. N. E. Davis was elected Corresponding Secretary. Headquarters were established in Room 301, 740 Rush Street, Chicago, Illinois.

Departments, which are committees of the Board for the more intensive study of the various phases of the work of the Board, were created as follows:

I. DEPARTMENT OF SURVEY AND STANDARDIZATION

The work of this Department has been to survey the hospitals and homes of the Methodist Episcopal Church and find out the exact conditions existing relative to organization, relationship to the church, standards of operation, business efficiency, finances, administration, staff organization, personnel, board of trustees, location of new institutions and all items connected therewith. This Department has done one of the most important pieces of work performed by any Department of the Board of Hospitals and Homes through the quadrennium. The need for this Department has been apparent for many years in view of the fact that the church has never attempted to correlate the work of the individual hospitals and homes or to place them on a standardized basis.

The Department adopted standard rules and regulations and has persistently sought to put them into effect. Many institutions had been established without any particular relationship to any organization and had no standards or program of any value. The results accomplished in changing existing conditions have been most gratifying. The full report will be seen later under the several other Departments.

The standards adopted by this Department for the conduct of hospitals are the Minimum Standards adopted by the American College of Surgeons, in relation to the items of diagnosis, laboratory equipment, and treatment of surgical and medical cases in the hospitals, and staff organization. It was necessary for such standards to be put into effect. Some hospitals which have been in existence for many years had adopted certain standards. Many of the smaller institutions, however, had never adopted these standards and have not been in financial condition to equip the hospitals sufficiently to meet the demand made upon them by the community in which they serve.

An illustration will suffice to show the plan as it is worked.

A hospital of eighty beds had been operating for a period of ten years without an organized staff and without any laboratory equipment of any kind. The patients were admitted by the physician or surgeon really as "boarding house patients." No means of diagnosing the disease of the patients was furnished and there was no opportunity for checking up to find out whether or not the patient was properly treated. The finances of the hospital were in such bad condition, as to be at the point of throwing the hospital into a state of bankruptcy. The Board of Directors represented a very small self-perpetuating constituency which had no responsibility to the Methodist Episcopal Church or even to the Annual Conference within whose bounds the hospital was located. The Board of Hospitals and Homes took this hospital under its advisory relationship and upon request of the local Board of Directors, spent a considerable period of time in its Departments of Finance and Standardization in a reorganization of the entire program. This hospital was entirely reorganized under the auspices of the Annual Conference with a Board of Directors elected by the Annual Conference. The departments of the Board were properly organized. The Board of Directors then proceeded to refinance the institution and put it upon a sound financial policy, which saved the hospital from bankruptcy. Pathological and X-ray laboratories were installed with up-to-date equipment, so that the hospital could make proper diagnosis of all patients entering it. A technician for the departments was elected and operates under the supervision of the superintendent of the hospital. A medical and surgical staff was organized with proper officers and all departments and committees working. The effect on the hospital was very marked, so also was the effect on the community when it was announced that this hospital would be completely standardized. The financial responsibility of the community to this hospital has been very marked. The hospital now has the recommendation from the American College of Surgeons and the standard of its work is not excelled by any in the city where it is located.

This is but one of many other instances where the hospital has been saved to the church by the direct service of the Board of Hospitals and Homes. Had this not been done, the local Board would have sold the property to another denomination.

1. When the Board of Hospitals and Homes was organized in 1920, there were only four Methodist Episcopal Hospitals which had qualified and received the Grade-A classification from the American College of Surgeons. Through the efforts of the Board during the quadrennium, there are 23 additional hospitals which have received their Grade-A from the American College of Surgeons, making a total of 27 hospitals which have been examined and approved by the College. However, there are 27 more hospitals of 65-bed capacity and less, which have met all the requirements of the Minimum Standards and are ready for classification, but have not yet been surveyed by the American College of Surgeons. It will thus be seen that the work done by the Board of Hospitals and Homes has brought very fine results.

2. At the beginning of the quadrennium, not many of the Homes for Children of the Methodist Episcopal Church had measured up to the standards adopted in relation to organization, personnel, sanitation, education, religious services and training, child welfare and health conditions. The conclusion of the Survey of 1923 shows 39 Homes for Children have met these standards. Several institutions have been entirely reorganized in order to thus qualify.

3. Thirty-four Homes for the Aged of the Methodist Episcopal Church have met the standards in relation to organization, management, food, cleanliness, health conditions, including wards for sick persons with physicians in charge or with a competent graduate or practical nurse, and also religious services. Much attention has also been given to the financial development of Homes for the Aged and Homes for Children. The result of the increased financial needs of the Homes have been very materially bettered in every way.

4. In the institutions classed as Other Institutions, including Homes for Working Girls and Young Men, and similar institutions, the standards for organization, finance, health, sanitation and food, and religious environment, have also been met.

5. This Department has made surveys of practically 100 cities and hospitals through the quadrennium and on which negative reports have been made, inasmuch as it was not thought feasible to establish the institutions at this time. The work of eliminating institutions is as important as the work of establishing them, in view of the fact that there would be institutions overlapping in the same territory and proper conditions could not be developed for financing new institutions so closely related. With the development of the standards there has come a consequent raising of the general morale of hospitals and homes. Especially has this been true in the hospitals. Many physicians and surgeons and nurses, as well as executives who have through many years of service felt that there were no particular standards to reach, have now, in consequence of the demands made upon them, improved themselves and become more capable in their respective lines. The reflex action of this upon the community has been very marked. This has brought about an increase of patronage to the institutions and has added very materially to the financial income and general standing in the community where it is located.

II. DEPARTMENT OF EXPERTS

The development of the proper kind of personnel for hospital and home positions has been an important feature of the work of the Board of Hospitals and Home during this quadrennium. The first survey in 1920 revealed the need of an increase of efficiency on the part of hospital superintendents, supervisors, anæsthetists, dietitians, instructresses of nurses, laboratory technicians, matrons of homes and other people in connection with hospitals and homes. Much emphasis has been placed by this Department upon the need of training of experts in all lines of hospital and home development. Hundreds of applications have been received at the office of the Board of Hospitals and Homes from which number there have been chosen those people who were most efficient and best qualified to hold executive positions. The Board, through this Department, has the past history of many applicants and satisfies itself that they are sufficiently qualified to be recommended for positions. Recommendations have been made to many applicants to enter one of the large hospitals and homes where they could have actual experience and learn the new and up-to-date methods of handling business administration and technical work. This has been of great value to those who in previous years had not been able fully to meet the educational requirements and expert service in large or well established institutions. Not less than fifty hospitals and homes have benefited by this Department of Service, while many recommendations have been made from which report has never been made to the office of the Board. The development of this Department is of extreme importance to the Church at large. Too much emphasis cannot be placed upon this item.

III. DEPARTMENT OF PUBLICITY

1. A hospital or home cannot secure the confidence and co-operation of the community in which it is located without letting the community know something about its affairs. The merits and quality of its service must be common knowledge. In this respect philanthropic institutions bear the same relationship to the community as does a business house. Our local Methodist Episcopal hospitals and homes have put forth desultory efforts to do this in the past. But not until the organization of the Department of Publicity of the Board of Hospitals and Homes of the Methodist Episcopal Church was there any concentrated effort made to insure such a high standard of publicity for these institutions as would insure the largest results in money or the confidence and patronage of the public.

The Department has made every effort possible to help the existing publicity situation. This was done by the writing of booklets and leaflets dealing with matters of vital interest to both hospitals and homes. This work has produced unusual results and has been of inestimable value to the local institutions. The quality of hospital and homes publicity has been carefully studied and suggestions as to content, style, paper, typography, forms of publicity, the taking of pictures and the use of illustrations and other of the details of publicity work have been made. As a result of this study, and the information and attention given to this Department by the Counsellor in Publicity, the general literature of our hospitals and homes is of a higher grade than that being used when the Board of Hospitals and Homes came into existence. Because of this publicity work the church at large and the communities in which our institutions are located have become better acquainted with our philanthropic institutions.

2. A type of general publicity has been prepared by the Board in order to set before the church at large the wealth of its institutions and their place in the community as well as the general bearing of the philanthropic institutions upon the progress of the Kingdom of God in the world. All forms of publicity have been used in order to cover this phase of the work. Booklets and leaflets based upon specific departments of hospital and home activity have been published. Statistical reports have been printed in readable form. Annual reports have embodied a summary of the general hospital and home work throughout the church. Hospital and Home News-Letters have been sent to a large part of the constituency of Methodism. Illustrated lectures, using stereopticon slides, hymns and graphs, have been prepared. Suitable ritual services have been prepared for cornerstone laying and dedicatory services of hospitals and homes. These have been very generally used. The Church Advocates have been extensively used and have given very generously of their space in order to set forth the philanthropic interests. This Department has also prepared a specific type of campaign publicity for local hospitals and homes, by the use of which these institutions have been "sold" to their communities. This has been one of the very important features of its work. The Board has used every legitimate means for setting forth the value of the institutions in public gatherings and private interviews. A motion picture film, representing the work of the hospitals, has been prepared and used with great effectiveness. Several of the hospitals and homes have used radio-broadcasting stations and achieved very remarkable results. It will thus be seen that the work under this Department has made rapid progress with great profit both to the Church and the local institutions.

IV. DEPARTMENT OF ARCHITECTURE

Until the Board of Hospitals and Homes organized a Department of Architecture for hospitals and homes, there was no central agency through which architectural data could be secured for the building of hospitals and homes and the preparation of building plans and specifications with a general line of equipment. Through this Department all of this data is now available for local hospitals and homes. Through the Counsellor of this Department forty-eight of our hospitals and homes have received direct aid in consultation and architectural supervision, while plans have been drawn for institutions which when completed will cost approximately $10,000,000. The principle on which the architectural work has been based is that a modern hospital is different from various types of commercial institutions, and, therefore should have the very best of architectural supervision. This can be furnished only by securing high grade personnel. The Board has placed emphasis upon this point, and has been able to render to the church very valuable service. Through this Department, a large sum of money has been saved for local hospitals and homes in the preparing of plans. The Board has had the plans and specifications prepared at actual cost and delivered to the institutions without any profit. If this method were to be carried out throughout the church building program, the Methodist Episcopal Church at large would save vast sums of money each year.

V. DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

1. This Department of the Board has had for its objective the preparation of the budgets of the Board and the plans for furnishing expert financial campaign directors to local hospitals and homes for the securing of money for building, endowment and maintenance of local institutions. Several well equipped finance and publicity men have been furnished for this purpose. Many hospitals and homes have availed themselves of the work of this Department. A large sum of money has been raised through this Department. Special emphasis has also been laid upon the preparation of the legal papers for wills, annuities, bonds, estate notes and memorials.

2. In connection with this Department there has also been developed The American White Cross. This organization was established by Mr. L. O. Jones in 1917. It was chartered under the laws of the State of Iowa, and Bishop Homer C. Stuntz was elected as the first President. At the time of the organization of the National Methodist Hospitals and Homes Association, recommendation was made of The American White Cross as a means for publicity and securing funds for local institutions. When the Board of Hospitals and Homes was organized in 1920, the parent organization tendered the use of The American White Cross to the Board of Hospitals and Homes and it was accepted by the Board. General publicity covering the work of The American White Cross was sent throughout the church with the result that Annual Conferences representing fourteen Areas adopted this organization as an official means for publicity and securing of funds. This work has been extensively carried on through public and church press. The objective of The American White Cross is to secure a large number of annual individual subscriptions reaching from twenty-five cents to larger amounts. The results of this organization have been very gratifying. The Council of Boards of Benevolence of the Methodist Episcopal Church has given general sanction to the development of this organization with the result that special periods of the year have been set aside at which time the annual roll call is taken. The American White Cross has been adopted by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, with a change in the name to the Golden Cross. It has been adopted by the General Conference of that church and is being extensively promoted throughout the denomination. Other Protestant churches have also adopted The American White Cross for various kinds of work. It has all proved of great value to the church at large. Money secured through The American White Cross is used for free service in our hospitals.

VI. DEPARTMENT OF HOMES FOR THE AGED

Through this Department special study has been made of the needs of Homes for Aged people. The standards have been adopted and much emphasis has been placed upon the necessity for the proper care of the finances of the institution as well as the finances of the guests in the Home. The development of the religious atmosphere of the institutions and the social welfare of the guests have been studied. The discussions carried on at the National Hospitals and Homes Association Meetings, as the result of the work of this Department, have been very beneficial.

VII. DEPARTMENT OF HOMES FOR CHILDREN

The standards for this Department have been set forth in the Department of Survey and Standardization. This Department has given careful study of the child life of the church and local communities. The matter of child welfare has had special attention through the representatives of the institutions who have been studying the relation of the local institutions to the communities in which they are situated, and how best they could function to conserve the life of the unprivileged children of the church and those who have no relation to it, but who are in need of care and the very best supervision. Consideration has been given to mental hygiene as well as to careful study of the physical aspects of the home life of the children. This Department has been able to do a very constructive piece of work for the church.

RELATIONSHIP OF THE BOARD OF HOSPITALS AND HOMES TO OTHER ORGANIZATIONS

1. The Council of Boards of Benevolence. The Board of Hospitals and Homes maintains the same relationship to the Council of Boards of Benevolence of the Methodist Episcopal Church as do the other Boards of the church. Two representatives of the Board have been members of the Council and the Committee on Conservation and Advance. All orders of the Council have been carried out by the Board of Hospitals and Homes.

2. The Board of Hospitals and Homes has had an advisory relationship to the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church through the vote of the Board of Trustees of the National Woman's Home Missionary Society. This action included the standardization of hospitals and homes and such other service as the Board of Hospitals and Homes could render through its various Departments to the institutions which have been owned and operated by the Woman's Home Missionary Society. The spirit of cooperation has been very fine and the results achieved have been satisfactory.

3. The Board of Hospitals and Homes has maintained a representative on the Staff of the General Conference Commission on Life Service. Active cooperation has been maintained at all times relative to the promoting of life service among undergraduate nurses and also the enlisting of graduate nurses for special work in foreign and home fields.

4. The Epworth League. Through the request of the Board of The Epworth League of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Board of Hospitals and Homes has had special relationship to the work of the Epworth League Summer Institutes in the way of furnishing hospital service through a nurse and proper hospital equipment at the place of meeting of the Epworth League Institutes. Valuable service has thus been rendered to those attending the Institutes. Much valuable work by way of information and publicity has been done in the effort to enlist nurses from among the Epworth Leaguers.

5. The General Deaconess Board. Through the action of the General Deaconess Board and the Board of Hospitals and Homes, a Committee on Comity has discussed the relationship which should exist between these two Boards. The Committee agreed that where the work of the two Boards seemingly overlapped in the administration of hospitals and homes, the General Deaconess Board should give supervision to the deaconesses and all problems relating to the personnel of the institution and that the Board of Hospitals and Homes should take up all items relating to standardization, finance, architecture and other departmental work. Through this arrangement the very finest spirit of cooperation prevailed throughout the quadrennium.

6. Methodist Child Welfare. By vote of last General Conference all items relative to Methodist Child Welfare were referred to the Board of Hospitals and Homes for consideration. In August, 1921, the Board of Hospitals and Homes took over the activities that had been carried on under the auspices of the Methodist Child Welfare Society, New York City, and special attention has been given to this Department in connection with the Committee on Homes for Children. Much progress has been made in this field.

7. National Methodist Hospitals and Homes Association. In Chicago, during February, 1918, the National Methodist Hospitals and Homes Association was organized, having as its purpose the coordination of Methodist Episcopal Hospital and Home work in the United States. Annual meetings have been held with programs covering items of interest to the institutions working under its supervision. This open forum has been of great value to the entire philanthropic program of the church. The Board of Hospitals and Homes has had an advisory relationship to this Association through its officers and committees.

8. American College of Surgeons. The Board of Hospitals and Homes has sustained an advisory relationship to the American College of Surgeons at the request of the College for representatives of the Board of Hospitals and Homes to speak on the State and National Programs of the College. The Minimum Standard of the American College of Surgeons has been adopted as the Minimum Standard for the operation of Methodist Episcopal hospitals, this being the highest accredited standard for diagnosis and treatment which has been presented to the American public for the conduct of such work in hospitals.

9. American Hospital Association. The American Hospital Association represents hospitals of all types operating in America. The Board of Hospitals and Homes has been an associate member of this Association with such privileges as are accorded by the Association. The Board of Hospitals and Homes has co-operated with the American Hospital Association in improving conditions of all our Methodist Episcopal hospitals according to the standards adopted by the American Medical Association for the conduct of various departments of hospitals.

10. American Medical Association. Active cooperation has been maintained with the American Medical Association relative to the standards adopted for the admitting of internes from accredited colleges and the rules and regulations established for the conducting of dispensaries and general medical work in the hospital.

11. American Protestant Hospital Association. This Association has grown out of the result of cooperation secured from the Inter-Church World Movement. The value of this Association has been apparent to all those closely identified with hospital work throughout the United States. The Board of Hospitals and Homes has also been an associate member of this Association and has given much time and thought to the working out of the plans for the spirit of cooperation among the various Protestant Hospitals in the United States.

12. Hospital Library and Service Bureau. The Board of Hospitals and Homes has maintained a relationship to the Hospital Library and Service Bureau. Much valuable information has been secured for our hospitals from this source.

COUNSELLORS TO DEPARTMENTS

The Board of Hospitals and Homes has, during the quadrennium, seen fit to elect several persons as counsellors in the various departments.

Dr. John W. Hancher, Counsellor of Finance of the Board of Education, was elected as Counsellor of Finance for the Board of Hospitals and Homes. Much valuable information has been given through this arrangement.

Rev. J. B. Jones was elected Counsellor in the Department of Homes for Children and Child Welfare. This arrangement has proven very satisfactory.

Mr. C. W. Williams was elected Counsellor in the Department of Architecture. Service of great value has been rendered by this arrangement to the hospitals and homes relative to all the building plans and other architectural data.

Dr. Ralph Welles Keeler was elected Counsellor in the Department of Publicity. Through this arrangement valuable service has been rendered to the local hospitals and homes, as well as in the general publicity throughout the church.

POLICY OF ORGANIZING HOSPITALS AND HOMES UNDER ANNUAL CONFERENCE

The Board of Hospitals and Homes in making its first survey discovered that many hospitals and homes which had been previously organized did not have any trust clause and in some instances did not have any responsibility to the church. The Board, therefore, in setting up the new organizations has advised that in all instances the Annual Conference should take the initiative and vote upon the organization, elect the officers and become responsible for the new hospital or home. This plan has found universal favor throughout the church. Many of the older institutions have been reorganized under this new plan.

ORGANIZING NEW HOSPITALS OR HOMES

The method of procedure for the establishment of a new Methodist Episcopal hospital or home is as follows: Where there is determination to start a new Methodist Episcopal hospital or home, action should be taken by the local Quarterly Conference of the church where it is contemplated to establish the institution. This request, signed by the District Superintendent and having the sanction of the Resident Bishop, should be forwarded to the Board of Hospitals and Homes of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 740 Rush Street, Chicago, Illinois. A copy of this action should also be forwarded to the Secretary of the Board of Hospitals and Homes of the Annual Conference within whose bounds this hospital or home is to be established. The Board of Hospitals and Homes at Chicago will refer the communication to the Department of Standardization for survey and consideration. After this has been done, the whole procedure will be reported to the Annual Conference for final consideration and vote. All new hospitals and homes should be under the auspices of the Annual Conference so that they have the legal sanction of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the financial support of the Annual Conference.

The following brief historical statement covers a few of the important points in the development of philanthropic institutions:

HOSPITALS

1. Origin of Methodist Episcopal Hospitals in the United States

The first Methodist Episcopal Hospital in the United States was the Methodist Episcopal Hospital of Brooklyn, New York. It came into being as a result of an editorial by Dr. James Monroe Buckley in The Christian Advocate of January 27, 1881, in which he said:

"The Methodist Episcopal Church is today, so far as we can learn, without a hospital, a dispensary, industrial school, or, except in mission fields, an orphan asylum under her control. We do not believe for one moment that this is the outcome of unfriendly conviction. It is the outcome of preoccupation; but now, is it not time that somewhere we build a hospital?"

Mr. George I. Seney, a prominent New York layman, read the editorial. It stirred him. He sought an interview with Dr. Buckley. The latter told him of how the organist of the Stamford, Connecticut, Methodist Episcopal Church met with an accident in New York City which necessitated the amputation of an arm. He lay for an hour on the sidewalk before an ambulance came, and later died in surroundings which were far from being Christian. Dr. Buckley also told Mr. Seney that his investigations had revealed the fact that many poor Methodists were being treated in New York hospitals as charity patients, that apparently Methodism was unconcerned about her suffering sick.

This all resulted in Mr. Seney's saying: "I offer you sixteen eligible lots, valued at $40,000, as a site, and $100,000 in cash toward the erection of a Methodist Episcopal hospital, which shall be open to Jew and Gentile, Protestant and Catholic, heathen and infidel, on the same terms." Mr. Seney later increased his gifts for this hospital until they totaled $410,000. This hospital today is one of the finest hospitals in the country.

2. Growth in Hospitals from 1883 to 1920

Following the organization of the Mother Hospital in Brooklyn, and almost coincident therewith, the Methodist Episcopal Hospital was organized in Philadelphia and had as the guiding hand Bishop Matthew Simpson. Sibley Memorial Hospital, at Washington, D. C., was established in 1882 under the auspices of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church. This was followed in 1887 by the establishment of the Missouri Methodist Hospital, St. Joseph, Missouri, which organization took over the Ensworth Hospital, as a basis for its hospital work.

From the year 1883 until 1920, there were 59 Methodist Episcopal hospitals established, with property, endowment, and equipment in the value of about $20,000,000. There are no statistics to indicate the number of patients who were treated in our hospitals during that period, as no national statistics were gathered and it has been impossible to go through the records of the hospitals to secure this data, in view of the fact that many of the hospitals did not keep permanent patient records.

Twenty-two new hospitals have been organized during the past quadrennium, these being at Cedar Rapids, Iowa; Sioux City, Iowa; Kenmare, North Dakota; Belleville, Kansas; Goodland, Kansas; Norton, Kansas; Salina, Kansas; Hays, Kansas; Pikeville, Kentucky; Roxbury, Massachusetts; Windom, Minnesota; Wadena, Minnesota; Joplin, Missouri; Forsyth, Montana; Freeport, Illinois; Lincoln, Nebraska; Scottsbluff, Nebraska; Madison, Wisconsin; Rice Lake, Wisconsin; Centralia, Washington; and Marshfield, Oregon. A large number of the older institutions have been entirely reorganized.

There were only four standardized hospitals with Grade-A classification from the American College of Surgeons, under date of June 1, 1920. Many of the hospitals were not under the direct supervision of the Annual Conference within whose bounds they were located and many of them did not have distinct relationship to the Methodist Episcopal Church except by name.

Twenty-seven hospitals have reached the standards as adopted by the America College of Surgeons and have been awarded the Grade-A rating. Also twenty-seven additional hospitals have met the standards relative to equipment, records, etc., but have not yet received the Grade-A rating from the American College of Surgeons, owing to the lack of survey and the further fact that some of these hospitals have less than fifty beds.

Since the organization of the Board of Hospitals and Homes in 1920, the Board has given its attention to many problems in connection with the hospitals:

The summary of Methodist Episcopal hospital statistics of 1919-1920 is as follows:

Number of hospitals, January, 1920.....	66
Value of property.....	$18,395,035
Amount of endowment.....	2,902,640
Receipts for the year.....	5,841,562
Expenditures for the year.....	5,886,462
Value of free and part pay service.....	422,510
Number of beds.....	6,192

The record of progress in the three and one-half years during the quadrennium has been very marked, as the following figures show:

Number of hospitals, January, 1924.....	82
Value of property.....	$23,370,929
Amount of endowment.....	4,639,389
Receipts for the year.....	6,467,324
Expenditures for the year.....	6,412,873
Value of free and part pay service.....	944,345
Number of beds.....	6,770

The Board of Hospitals and Homes, through its departmental program, has given direction to the following items:

(a) Organization of finances, bookkeeping and financial campaigns for local hospitals has been under the direction of the Department of Finance of The American White Cross. Building plans have been prepared for hospitals. The Board through this Department has also given special attention to the task of securing the very best equipment for new hospitals and homes by advising the local Boards of Directors the type of equipment to be purchased and giving assistance in securing the very best prices.

(b) A great deal of attention has been given to the matter of selecting personnel for hospitals, such as superintendents, members of medical staffs and persons needed in the organization of hospitals. The personnel needs are of the greatest importance and at present the greatest problem in hospital administration. Much time and thought has been given to the improving of hospital administration through the Boards of Directors and the proper setting forth of all the items for the conduct of hospitals in the best manner.

(c) The Board has given much attention to the raising of standards of the hospitals in order to meet the requirements of the American College of Surgeons for classification. A Grade-A hospital is one that meets the minimum requirements of the American College of Surgeons, relative to staff organization, diagnosis of disease, pathological, X-ray and laboratory equipment, with technician in charge of these items; all cases entering the hospital being properly diagnosed and case records made of same. This requirement is the highest standard set forth by any medical organization in the world.

Methodist Episcopal hospitals have for their objective the giving of the best medical and surgical care to the sick and afflicted, as well as teaching prevention of disease. Hospitals are also educational institutions inasfar as they train physicians and surgeons and nurses for their future work. Every Methodist Episcopal hospital is a mission center which takes care of the poor and needy who are unable to pay for their service. Every hospital is a community center to which people from all classes and professions come for service. The hospitals in large cities which maintain out-patient or dispensary departments are rendering valuable assistance to the community in the prevention of disease, giving the very highest type of medical and surgical treatment to those who would otherwise be debarred on account of their finances from having this type of service rendered to them. Some of the large dispensaries like Methodist Episcopal Hospital, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; St. Luke's Hospital, Cleveland, Ohio; Wesley Memorial Hospital, Chicago, Illinois; Bethany Methodist Hospital, Kansas City, Kansas, are rendering a large amount of service to multitudes of people each year. These people come as did the halt, maimed, blind and sick, in the days when Christ walked among men. Each hospital is an evangelistic center which ministers to the spiritual needs of the patient as they do to the physical needs.

It will thus be seen from the above statement that the hospitals have made very rapid progress during the years and have sought to do everything within their power to minister to the largest number of people in the most efficient manner.

The National Methodist Episcopal Sanatorium for Tuberculosis, Colorado Springs, Colorado, has been organized to meet the long felt need relative to the care and treatment of tubercular patients who come from all parts of the United States and locate in the favorable climates of the West and Southwest. Beth-El Hospital, located at Colorado Springs, Colorado, of which the Sanatorium will be a part, has maintained a small ward which has been giving excellent service to those who have come. The citizens of Colorado Springs, in 1923, made a gift of twenty-one acres of land in the eastern part of the city of Colorado Springs to the Board of Hospitals and Homes of the Methodist Episcopal Church, with the understanding that in due time a Sanatorium for Tuberculosis would be build thereon. Much progress has been made in promoting this institution throughout the United States. A Board of Directors has been elected from among leading members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in various parts of the country, and they are planning to build an institution which will be a credit to the entire church and of great help to those suffering from the White Plague.

The National Hospital Day is held during the second week of May and has for its objective the acquainting of local communities with the work done by the local hospitals. The Board of Hospitals and Homes has put much emphasis on this Day in the preparation of literature for the hospitals and publication of statements which have been sent throughout the church and secular press. This has proved of great value to local institutions as well as to the church at large.

HOMES FOR THE AGED

1. The first Home for the Aged was The Methodist Episcopal Home for the Aged, located on Amsterdam Avenue and 93d Street, New York City, New York, established in 1850. It was started in a hired house but in 1857 moved into the larger building. This Home has a capacity of sixty-five beds and its property is valued at $120,000. This, the Mother Home for the aged of Methodism in the United States, has given inspiration to many other Conferences to establish similar Homes. The next Home to be established was the Home for the Aged at Baltimore, Maryland, in 1868. The Methodist Episcopal Home for the Aged, Baltimore, Maryland, a Home for Aged Negroes, was established in 1870.

There are at the present time thirty-nine Homes for the Aged. Thirty-five Homes were established between the years of 1850 and 1920. Four Homes have been established since 1920 and several rebuilt.

SIGNIFICANCE OF HOMES FOR THE AGED

2. Homes for the Aged are an essential part of the philanthropic program of the church. The Christian care of the aged is enjoined upon the church by Jesus and was practiced by the early church and especially commended by St. Paul, as he took offerings for the aged poor in the various churches. Wesley gave much attention to the needs of the worthy aged poor among the membership of the early Methodist societies.

The Methodist Episcopal Church at large has been slow to develop this form of philanthropy. There should be many more Homes of this type in order to give proper care to the many aged people who continually ask for a place in a church Home, where sympathetic Christian care may be given to them in the days of their weakness and need.

A DAY IN A HOME FOR THE AGED

3. Morning comes in the Home for the Aged with all its possibilities and problems just the same as in any other home. But it is a Christian home and the atmosphere is such as to encourage the very best use of the hours. Breakfast brings our aged guests to a moment of prayer and song. Those able to do so participate in the work of the dining-room. All give attention to the care of their room. Then comes the reading of their letters and the church paper. A walk into town may occupy a part of the morning or afternoon. Lunch brings them together again. Friends sometimes call in the afternoon to vary the hours of reading or sewing. And then comes twilight, wooer of thoughts of other days. The Home for the Aged becomes so many individual homes peopled with the loved ones gone before. What a blessing that these men and women have a home like this in which to dream over the bygone days and to watch the vision of that final glorious sunrise! After supper there may be prayer meeting (there usually is family prayers) or a group of young people from some nearby church may come in to help while away the hours. Or perhaps the radio is tuned in and the wide world brought into the gathering. It is like any Christian home, and those who live here have the joy of realizing that the day well spent brings an evening of joyous reflection. And most of our old people retire at the evening's end with happy hearts though lonely for the voices of those whom they brought into the world.

4. The Board of Hospitals and Homes has endeavored to give the best of advice to our Homes for the Aged in matters of administration, organization, finance and standards. Several Homes have been reorganized and campaigns conducted for funds. The general standards relative to organization, health, food, sanitation, religious service and social life have been considered and everything possible done to help the Homes to give the very best of service to their aged guests.

5. During the quadrennium four new Homes for the Aged have been established. At Fort Edward, New York, a property was given to the Troy Annual Conference, known as the Frederick D. Hodgman Memorial Home. This Home was dedicated by Bishop William Burt, in April, 1923. A Home for Negro People has been organized at Lawnside, New Jersey, within the bounds of the Delaware Conference. A new organization has been set up within the bounds of the Savannah Conference and the Board of Directors elected by that Conference. This Board has taken over the Centenary Home for Aged, formerly owned by the Centenary Methodist Episcopal Church at Charleston, South Carolina, and are developing the Home under the Annual Conference. Another Home for the Aged has been organized at Lexington, Illinois, within the bounds of the Central Illinois Conference. A new Board of Directors was organized at the last session of the Conference.

HOMES FOR CHILDREN

1. The first Home for Children of the Methodist Episcopal Church was established by John Wesley in the year 1742 at Newcastle, England. This was in part a school but became a Home in fact in later years. Mr. Wesley believed that orphaned boys and girls should have the care of the church and proceeded to establish such Homes as a part of the program of the Methodist movement.

2. The first Home for Children in the United States was established near Savannah, Georgia, by George Whitefield, called the Georgia Orphan Home, during the term of Governor Oglethorpe. Then there was established a Home for Girls at Savannah, and also at Ebenezer, Georgia, in 1739. The buildings were completed in 1741, and called the Bethesda Orphan House. They included a course of academic learning. Buildings burned in 1773 and the school was abandoned. Property was confiscated in 1782 by the Americans. It is a sad commentary on American Methodism that following the establishment of this Home, there should have been such a long period of time during which there was no particular attention given to the conserving of the orphaned youth for which the church was responsible.

3. The responsibility for giving care to the orphans and homeless was committed to the church by Jesus and has been accepted throughout the centuries as an integral part of the program of the church. The policy of the Board of Hospitals and Homes has been to place children in Christian homes wherever it is possible to do so. There are, however, children who cannot be placed and are, therefore, kept in the homes for an indefinite period of time. The Church Home which has in it Christian matrons and teachers who give the best of motherly care with moral religious teachings to a child, is the nearest substitute for a real home that the church can provide.

4. The children come from all kinds of homes and conditions. Many are sent by the Judges of the Juvenile Courts and committed to the Home for the best of care they can have given to them.

Other children come from the very best of conditions but owing to misfortune, they are placed in the Home. A few Homes have children who come for school privileges such as the Montana Deaconess School, Helena, Montana.

A DAY IN A HOME FOR CHILDREN

5. A day in a Home for Children would cheer the heart of the most pessimistic. Laughter and the confusion of many childish voices welcome in the day. The splashing at the washbowls and the rush to get dressed for breakfast sounds very homelike. Grace before breakfast reminds each boy and girl of their Heavenly Father's care. Sometimes dishes must be washed by the girls and chores done by the boys. Then off to school. And as they mingle in the crowd of children waiting for the entrance lines to form, who could tell our boys and girls from the others? There are no "institution earmarks" to distinguish them. Sometimes home for lunch, sometimes it must be carried. After school in the afternoon possibly some chores by the boys and sewing by the girls. Then a period of good hard play before supper. And after a supper a family gathering for devotions and perhaps a few minutes play. Then studies for the morrow, and finally bedtime. Many an evening is brightened by some form of wholesome entertainment, but the children are trained to use the time of life's preparation for fitting themselves for tomorrow's tasks, responsibilities and problems. And they are brought in contact with the Christ in order that they may have his help along the way.

6. The Board of Hospitals and Homes has given attention to the various problems arising in the Homes for Children throughout the church and through the Department of Children's Homes, has made a study of child welfare and related problems. The general standards have been raised and the Homes placed in much better condition before the church.

7. In view of the fact that all states have laws regarding child welfare and educational standards for children, it is necessary for each Home to meet these standards in order to continue to function.

8. The statistics reveal the fact that from the year 1864 to 1920, there were forty-two Methodist Episcopal Homes for Children established. Two new Homes have been established during the quadrennium, namely: The Sager-Brown Orphanage at Baldwin, Louisiana, the Ruth M. Smith Children's Home at Sheffield, Pennsylvania. These were organized under the Children's Bureau of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

OTHER INSTITUTIONS

Under this title are found a number of Homes such as the following:

(a) Homes for Working Girls, of which there are eight in number; the first one, the Deaconess and Woman's Home, was established in 1910 in Chicago, Illinois.

(b) There are two Homes for Young Men, the first of which was established in Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1912. The other is the Luccock Home at St. Louis, Missouri, in connection with the Union Methodist Episcopal Church of that city.

(c) The Home for Retired Ministers at Eustis, Florida, was established in 1921 and is now being reorganized and relocated.

At the beginning of the quadrennium, June, 1920, there were two or three institutions in process of organization which had for their objective the providing of homes under church auspices for young men and young women coming into the cities. No statistics on these homes have been available previous to that time. The development of these institutions through the quadrennium has been gradual. However, owing to the fact that

THE SCOPE OF THE ACTIVITIES OF THE BOARD

In addition to the work of the Board of Hospitals and Homes of the Methodist Episcopal Church as here outlined, the Board has maintained an office at Room 301, 740 Rush Street, Chicago, Illinois. The various departments of the work of the Board have here been classified and put in order. Statistics, graphs, charts and stereopticon slides have been assembled and made available for use. A study has been made of hospital and home organizations and the data classified and filed. Pictorial exhibits have been assembled, making visible the work and activities of the various institutions. A complete index and file of all hospital equipment has been made. And there is now being compiled a complete history of each institution from its beginning to the present time.

The Corresponding Secretary and the other officers of the Board have given themselves unreservedly to the task of carrying out the orders and program of the Board. All of this work has been done in harmony with the general policy of the Council of Boards of Benevolence of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and with the realization that after all, the work of the Board of Hospitals and Homes of the Methodist Episcopal Church is but a section of the work of the church, and that the total church program must at all times be the goal toward which all activities must tend.

REPORT OF THE TRUSTEES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH

To the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in session at Springfield, Massachusetts, May, 1924.

The Trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church respectfully submit their report for the four years, from December 31, 1919, to December 31, 1923.

DEATH OF MR. J. R. CLARK

On September the twenty-fifth, 1921, in Petoskey, Michigan, Mr. J. R. Clark went to his eternal reward. Mr. Clark was a member of the Book Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church and had served gratuitously a period of more than eight years as Treasurer of the Trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church, preceding January, 1920, when he presented his resignation from the Board. No layman in Cincinnati was more vitally interested in the things of the Kingdom nor more loyal to his own denomination than was Mr. Clark, and his passing was the occasion for sincere grief not only by the Christian forces of the city but by all the allied organizations laboring for the upbuilding of mankind in righteousness and truth.

RESIGNATIONS AND NEW MEMBERS

Midway in the quadrennium two valued members of the Board of Trustees found it necessary to present their resignations, Mr. H. A. Winans, who had been elected Treasurer to succeed Mr. J. R. Clark, and Mr. F. L. Cook. Both, during their membership on the Board, gave good service and the resignations were accepted with great regret. By appointment of the Bishops at their meeting in June, 1922, Mr. J. R. Edwards, head of the Bond Department of the Fifty-third National Bank, Cincinnati, Ohio, was made the successor of Mr. H. A. Winans, and Mr. W. M. Green, Secretary of the Fay & Egan Company, Cincinnati, Ohio, was made the successor of Mr. F. L. Cook.

NEW BEQUESTS AND TRUSTS

The new bequests and trusts as named in the report of the Treasurer amount to $21,601.30. To this should be added $15,348.76, amount of increase in old trusts and $13,439.49, the amount of income added to principal, making a total of $50,389.55. The bequests withdrawn during the quadrennium amounted to $2,884.75, making a net gain in bequests and trusts of $47,504.80.

The largest new bequest for the quadrennium is the Lemuel Dwelle Bequest, the income of which is to be divided equally between the Board of Foreign Missions and the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension.

TERMS OF TRUSTEES

The terms of the following Trustees expire at this session of your body:

Ministers: Bishop William F. Anderson, C. E. Schenk, J. B. Ascham.

Laymen: M. C. Slutes, W. M. Green, W. A. R. Bruehl.

Of the class whose term expires in 1928 the appointment to be made by this General Conference is to fill the place made vacant by the resignation of H. A. Winans, in whose stead, by the appointment of the Bishops, Mr. J. R. Edwards is now serving.

The other members whose terms expire in 1928 are as follows:

Ministers: Frank G. Mitchell, A. M. Courtenay, L. C. Bentley.

Laymen: James N. Gamble, E. I. Antrim.

In addition to the report as above given the Treasurer presents the following supplementary report which reveals items of interest. The commission charged by the Trustees to cover expense items was changed in 1920 from three-fourths of one per cent annually on the face of each trust to one-half of one per cent. Other precautions were taken to cut down all expense items to the minimum in order to give the largest possible income to beneficiaries. The result of three years of operation under the revised plan of administration and of reduced commission is as follows:

TOTAL ADMINISTRATION EXPENSES

Average for five years, 1916 to 1920 inclusive, $3,468.26.

Average for three years, 1921 to 1923 inclusive (under new plan), $1,928.57.

This reduction in the administration expense was brought about by the elimination of all office expense and a reduction in rate of commission paid to the Union Trust Company.

UNION TRUST COMPANY COMMISSIONS

Average for five years, 1916 to 1920 inclusive, $1,763.27.

Average for three years, 1921 to 1923 inclusive, $1,056.68.

TRUSTEES COMMISSION

Average for five years, 1916 to 1920 inclusive, $4,039.42.

Average for three years, 1921 to 1923 inclusive, $2,859.20.

INVESTMENTS

$214,000 United States Fourth Liberty Loan Bonds at 85.68 cost $183,369.40. At the date of this report these bonds were selling at 98.50, making them worth $210,790, or a gain in value of $27,420.60.

$5,000 Pennsylvania Railroad 6 1/2 per cent Bonds were bought at 97 7/8, selling at the time of this report at 108 1/4, making a gain in value of $518.75. Other investments, all of which have been made conservatively, give evidence of profit as well as certainty as to safety of principal. There was no interest in default, all interest due to January 1, 1924, having been paid in full.

CONTINGENT FUND

This Fund has been increased, through the transfer of income and of unexpended Expense Fund to Principal, to $18,033.02. The increase in this Fund in the last three years is $5,608.81.

The foregoing report is respectfully submitted by order of the Board of Trustees.

JAMES N. GAMBLE, President

CHARLES E. SCHENK, Secretary.

REPORT OF THE TRUSTEES OF JOHN STREET CHURCH

TO THE GENERAL CONFERENCE OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH:

John Street Church, New York City, through its trustees appointed by the General Conference, presents the following report:

The nine trustees appointed by the General Conference in 1920 have lost by death during the quadrennium, one of their number, Mr. James S. Coward, for years an active member of the church and trustee board. His place has been filled by the formal election of Mr. J. F. Shera.

By the will of Mr. Coward, a bequest of $5,000 was left to the church to be a part of its endowment fund.

In 1920 the General Conference passed the following resolution referring to John Street:

RESOLVED: That this General Conference, in accordance with the policy expressed at the 1916 session, give renewed assurance of deep interest in this historic property, in the development of its future usefulness, as well as in the preservation of its unique character for historic and sentimental reasons.

That the authority heretofore granted to the trustees at the 1916 session of the General Conference, respecting the erection of a new building and the securing of funds therefor, be continued; and to that end the Board of Bishops be authorized to appoint a commission of nine members to confer and cooperate with the trustees of the church in the formation and the execution of plans for the improvement of this cherished property; such commission to serve without expense.

That the General Conference commends the claims of John Street Church to the affectionate concern and generosity of the members at large of our denomination and connection.

In harmony with the spirit of these resolutions the trustees have been alert to every indication and suggestion of opportunity for larger work on the old historic spot. They have recognized the unique position held by this church, referred to by John Wesley as "the first Methodist preaching house in America"—the unrivalled opportunity afforded the church for a daily ministry to thousands who throng past its doors, the enlarging future of its life on the spot where American Methodism had its birth, as well as the ennobling past.

The trustees, therefore, urge that the resolutions passed in 1916, and reaffirmed in 1920, receive once again the formal expression of the General Conference, trusting that during this quadrennium conditions may warrant the action desired by every board of trustees since 1840, when in report to the General Conference the trustees offered the property as an "eligible" and beautiful location for a "Centenary building" for the Missionary Society, and said:

"Permit the trustees of the John Street Church in the City of New York to address (you) on a subject which to them is a matter of deep interest and concern. It is the site on which John Street Church now stands. This spot of ground—as many of you are aware—is the first on which a church was erected by us in the United States of America, to do which Mr. Wesley sent over to aid the few and feeble, fifty pounds.

"This spot of ground is greatly endeared to us, not on this account only, but as being in a sense THE BIRTHPLACE OF METHODISM IN THIS COUNTRY—the place where God has specially manifested his salvation to favored thousands; a place which has been visited by strangers for scores of years, when coming to this city for business or other purposes, as their place of worship, and in this way has become sacred in the annals of Methodism both here and abroad." (Capitals ours.)

Respectfully submitted,

H. K. CARROLL,
For Trustees.

REPORT OF THE JOHN STREET TRUST FUND SOCIETY

To the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church:

DEAR FATHERS AND BRETHREN:

The John Street Trust Fund Society, incorporated by the New York legislature in 1873, would respectfully report to your body as to its activities during the past quadrennium. We would say:

(1) We have constantly borne in mind that the purpose of our incorporation is the accumulation and investment of a trust fund for the benefit of the mother church of American Methodism, located in the city of New York.

(2) Our sources of revenue during the quadrennium have been the same as were reported to the General Conference of 1920. We hold in trust the building at 48 John Street, east of the church, and receive a rental therefor from a commercial firm. We are, besides, the holders of a few small investments which return a modest revenue. And our total income is sacredly devoted to the benefit of the historic church.

(3) In the four years from January, 1920, to January, 1924, our receipts and disbursements have been as follows:

INCOME

Balance on hand, January 1, 1920.....	$741.67
Interest, etc.....	4,447.77
Rents	21,000.00
Cash—part payment on 73 Willow Street, Brooklyn	5,676.20
Totals	$31,865.64

EXPENDITURES

Paid Church, Trustees and Pastor.....	$13,990.00
Taxes	8,827.93
Insurance, Water Rates and Miscellaneous Expense	2,435.63
Bonds purchased	6,459.54
Totals	$31,713.10
Balance on hand, January 1, 1924.....	152.54

(4) We are glad to know that through our assistance the ancient church has been able to carry on its varied activities for another quadrennium. With the removal of the residential population from that section of the city, the greater ministrations of the church come upon the week days rather than upon the Sabbath. A swarming polyglot population walk the streets of lower Manhattan in the 'secular days, and to "save some" the church provides a daily religious service, as well as upon Sunday. Nor has the old Society in recent years been more zealous in good works than at the present.

(5) Our report four years since as to need of rebuilding can only be repeated. There should be erected upon the sacred spot a modern Methodist building where all the activities of our denomination in New York may be gathered. No situation in the city is more central for such a purpose; and in the raising of such an edifice, where religious work should also continue, the activity of the mother church would take on new life and vigor.

We thus submit our quadrennial report to the General Conference of 1924, adding the statement that as a Trust Fund Society we are to our utmost guarding the important interests which center around the historic shrine of American Methodism in New York.

Our membership consists of the following twelve Trustees: G. D. Beattys, W. A. Bentley, J. W. Crawford, F. W. Hannan, G. S. Ingraham, J. B. Morrell, W. T. Palmer, Omar Powell, C. F. Price, Henry Wade Rogers, A. B. Sanford, G. C. Teller.

For the Board,

A. B. SANFORD, President,

W. A. BENTLEY, Secretary,

OMAR POWELL, Treasurer.

REPORT OF THE FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

PRESENTED BY REV. CHARLES S. MACFARLAND, GENERAL SECRETARY, TO THE GENERAL CONFERENCE, ON MAY 12.

The development of the Federal Council of the Churches since the last meeting of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church presents to the Conference a question of great moment to the future of Christian cooperation. At the Quadrennial Meeting of the Federal Council in Boston, in December, 1920, the members of the Council voted unanimously that the constituent bodies should be requested to assume, at the earliest possible date, the full financial responsibility for the Council. This decision was only part of a general policy looking toward a more direct and complete oversight of all the work of the Council by the denominations whose servant it was created to be, and was the outcome of the progress made by the Council under the leadership of Dr. Frank Mason North during the previous quadrennium.

The Federal Council is the direct creation of the evangelical denominations for cooperative work, and is based upon a Constitution officially adopted by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the highest governing bodies of twenty-eight other denominations. The program of the Council is directed by the official representatives designated by the denominations themselves, thus giving authoritative sanction of a plan of common action. The tasks which the Churches have undertaken together through this agency have demonstrated that cooperation is a thoroughly practicable program and have led us to see that far larger cooperation is possible than we have yet undertaken.

The solid development of the Federal Council and the significance of its activities for the life and the work of all the constituent denominations to-day may be suggested in some slight measure by the following very brief summary of the last report of the Executive Committee, which is submitted herewith.

THE SPIRIT OF EVANGELISM

There is special satisfaction in the distinctly spiritual emphasis given to the Council's work by the Commission on Evangelism. Other phases of work may have received more publicity; none is of such indispensable value. The central place of evangelism in the life of the Church has been emphasized. Dr.

Charles L. Goodell, the Secretary of the Commission, has proclaimed the Gospel with winning power in scores of communities, coming to them not in the name of any single denomination, but in the various denominations which have joined in the Council. Teams made up of the secretaries in charge of evangelism in the various denominations have jointly visited many of the larger cities, bringing all the pastors together to plan a year's evangelistic program for the city as a whole, in which each church and its pastor has its part. By such concerted effort the imagination of a city has been captured as it could not be by isolated denominational activities; a publicity has been secured that no church could secure alone; an atmosphere has been created that makes the subject of religion an important and vital interest of the community as a whole.

The Council has given its attention, even more than in other years, to the development of the devotional life. The general observance of the Universal Week of Prayer and of a special Easter Period of Prayer and Evangelism was carefully planned. The "Fellowship of Prayer," prepared for use in all denominations throughout Lent, had a circulation of over 350,000.

CARRYING THE GOSPEL INTO SOCIAL LIFE

In accordance with the original purpose of the Council "to secure larger combined influence for the Churches of Christ in all matters affecting the moral and social condition of the people so as to promote the application of the law of Christ in every relation of human life," the Council has been helping the Churches to deal more effectively with urgent issues that have to do with the building of a Christian society. In the notable Citizenship Conference held in Washington in October, and followed by a series of similar conferences throughout the country, in support of the Eighteenth Amendment and Law Enforcement, the staff of the Commission on Councils of Churches played the central part. It has initiated and carried forward this movement for public righteousness, enlisting the cooperation of a host of good agencies without any attempt to claim the credit for the Council itself.

Noteworthy progress has been made during the year by the Commission on the Church and Social Service, under the leadership of Dr. Worth M. Tippy, in bringing the Churches into cooperative service in behalf of prisoners in county jails, a better recreational life in communities, the abolition of child-labor, and better industrial relations. An outstanding illustration of the way in which the united action of the churches on social questions secures results that no denomination can achieve independently was the vigorous and successful effort to create public opinion against the twelve-hour day in industry. The facts in the case were brought together and published in a bulletin by the Research Department, which is an excellent concrete example of the point of view of the Council in such matters. It made no pretense of being warranted in speaking on the technical side of the issues involved, but it declared that a twelve-hour day, by depriving men of their rightful opportunities for leisure, for education, for family life, for spiritual interests, commits a moral trespass and challenges the Churches in their own field. Within a few months the greatest steel organization in the world announced that in response to the demand of public opinion, immediate steps were being taken toward the abolition of the twelve-hour day.

The development of the Department of Research, under the direction of Rev. F. Ernest Johnson, including the weekly publication of Information Service, and the constant preparation of special bulletins on social and industrial themes, has rendered a unique service to every denomination, providing materials which every church needs in its dealing with the urgent social issues of the day.

BREAKING DOWN WALLS OF PARTITION

The year's work in developing more Christian relations between the white and the Negro races has been a clear justification of the venture of faith begun two years ago when the Commission on the Church and Race Relations was created. Among its special efforts has been a campaign to mobilize united Christian sentiment against the lynching evil. The increased interest throughout the Churches has been, in the judgment of close observers, no small factor in reducing the appalling lynching record of America to by far the lowest figure of recent years. The development of inter-racial committees in the more important cities, with white and Negro churches taking the lead, has been persistently carried on. The home mission text book, The Trend of the Races, prepared by Dr. George E. Haynes, one of the Council's secretaries, has had a circulation of 75,000 copies. In all this inter-racial work the cooperation of Rev. W. W. Alexander of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has been invaluable.

WORKING FOR A CHRISTIAN INTERNATIONAL LIFE

In no way has the Federal Council been of greater service to the Churches than in its work in behalf of a more Christian international life. A world shattered by war and yet carrying on its international life in a way from which war will come just as surely as fever comes from an undrained swamp, looks to the Church for moral and spiritual leadership in finding a better way. In the Commission on International Justice and Goodwill, the Churches have had an indispensable agency through which to voice in a vigorous and united way the Christian ideal for the nations. The program for developing intelligent support of the Permanent Court of International Justice is only one of many illustrations that might be given of the Council's work in this field. A pamphlet prepared in conference, both with church leaders and with expert authorities on international law, entitled, "The Churches and the International Court of Justice," reached practically every pastor in the twenty-nine denominations that comprise the Council. In November, special conferences were held with the President of the United States and the Secretary of State at which representatives of the many denominations that had taken official action in support of the World Court presented their denominational resolutions, thus making a most convincing demonstration that the concern for the World Court was not simply that of a single agency but permeated the life of the Churches.

The International Ideals of the Churches, drafted by the Council after long study and designed to crystallize the sentiment of the churches against war and in support of constructive agencies of international cooperation, have been officially adopted by many of the denominations and promise to be as notable a platform of the Churches as "The Social Creed of the Churches" has been for more than a decade.

The development of friendship with the Orient, which has a vital bearing on the foreign missionary movement in every denomination, has been a matter of special concern. Through the Council, clear and united expression has recently been given to the conviction of the Churches that in dealing with the restriction of immigration from Japan methods of friendly conference should be followed rather than the proposed method of abruptly abrogating the present treaty agreement with Japan.

The appeal for the suffering children in Germany, made by the Council's Committee on Mercy and Relief, directed by Rev. Ernest Lyman Mills, released by the Methodist Episcopal Board of Sunday Schools for this purpose, has resulted in a strong testimony of Christian love from the Churches of America and has gone far to serve as a ministry of reconciliation with those with whom we were lately at war. It has been especially valuable to churches like the Methodist Episcopal that have work of their own in Germany.

ASSISTING THE EVANGELICAL CHURCHES OF EUROPE

At a time when in large areas of Central Europe, as a result of the shattered economic life, Protestantism is face to face with the greatest crisis of its history, the united support of American evangelical forces is of cardinal importance. Through the Council, $1,500,000 has been contributed to the rebuilding and strengthening of devastated French Protestant Churches, in addition to the large amounts forwarded directly by the denominations themselves. The program of assistance to the French Churches has been completed during the last past year, but a far vaster task of support for the Churches of Central Europe is now being carried forward. Two steps taken during the year by the Federal Council are of great significance. The first is the appointment of Rev. Chauncey W. Goodrich, the honored pastor of the American Church in Paris, to serve in America as the representative of the Central Bureau of Relief for the Evangelical Churches of Europe, which came into being overseas chiefly as the result of initiative taken by the Federal Council and with special assistance from Bishop John L. Nuelsen. The second step is the appointment of Dr. Adolf Keller, of Zurich, Switzerland, one of the great Protestant leaders of the Continent, to serve American Protestantism as its representative in Europe. The organization for carrying on an effective mission of help to our fellow-Christians in Europe is now provided.

Of unique interest are the influences that have lately been bringing American Christianity into a new fellowship with the Churches of the Orthodox Eastern faith. The experience of confusion and suffering through which the Greek, the Russian and the Armenian Churches have been passing has led them to turn more naturally to the Christian forces of the west and has caused the hearts of the latter to expand in sympathy. In the new relations thus established each has been coming to appreciate the other and to desire a deepened fellowship. To increase this fellowship and establish contacts of mutual helpfulness a Committee on Relations with the Eastern Churches, under the Chairmanship of Rt. Rev. Charles H. Brent, has been appointed by authorization of the last meeting of the Executive Committee of the Council.

A WIDE RANGE OF SERVICE

Undergirding the whole program, which the Federal Council as a national agency of cooperation carries on, is the work of the Commission on Councils of Churches, which is engaged in the task of developing the spirit of cooperation, and agencies for the effective expression of that spirit, in local communities. To the nearly fifty City and State federations or councils of Churches thus developed throughout the country, in recent years, have now been added the new councils: Wilmington, Del.; Omaha, Neb.; and San Francisco, Cal.

Limits of space forbid a discussion of many other important phases of the year's activities in carrying on educational efforts, in supporting the Union Churches on the Canal Zone, in reenforcing the work of the chaplains in army and navy, in securing publicity in the daily press for the common interests of Protestantism, in developing a better appreciation of European Protestantism through the Huguenot-Walloon New Netherland Tercentenary, in maintaining in Washington an office for the United Protestant forces under the chairmanship of Bishop McDowell, and in constant attention to many other cooperative tasks that arise from day to day.

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THE COUNCIL

Reviewing this work of the year, we would summarize the service of the Council under five heads, in addition to the central task of promoting the spirit of unity throughout the Churches. The Council is seen to be:

1. A greatly needed clearing house of information and conference on matters of vital common interest;
2. An indispensable center of coordination in fields where the denominations are at work;
3. A pioneer agency in carrying on, in behalf of the denominations, new types of work for which they have as yet no special agencies of their own;
4. An agency for developing organized cooperation among the Churches of local communities throughout the country;
5. An organ of communication and cooperation with other important agencies—national and international, including the Churches of other lands.

RELATIONS WITH THE CONSTITUENT DENOMINATIONS

In an organization which has a directly representative character and is the official agent of the denominations for their cooperative work, the maintenance of the closest contact with the denominational life is of cardinal importance. To maintain such contacts with twenty-nine national bodies, differing widely in organization and in point of view, and to secure sufficient agreement to make a working program possible, is no easy task. But the attempt to do so is being made constantly and honestly, and, we believe, with an increasing measure of success. In addition to the monthly meetings of the Administrative Committee, including one official representative of each denomination, groups of denominational leaders are brought together, often almost daily, for consultation and conference on special phases of the work.

The work of the Council is not an outside or independent work, but the work of the denominations that compose it. Its achievements are their achievements, its failures their failures. It is not a super-organization. It has no life but a derived life, no authority but a delegated authority. It exists to serve the common needs of the denominations that called it into being. It desires above all things that they shall constantly exercise the control and assume the full responsibility that is rightfully theirs.

A NEW FINANCIAL POLICY

During the three years that have elapsed since the policy of looking to the denominations themselves, rather than to individuals, for the financial support of the Council was definitely adopted, solid progress has been made in carrying it out. The appropriations from the denominations for the support of the Council have more than trebled within the three years.

In this forward step of the present quadrennium of the Council the Methodist Episcopal Church has not yet had a part, as there has been no meeting of the General Conference, which alone could give the needed official sanction. Indeed, the further development of the new policy, even as concerns the other denominations, has been waiting upon the present meeting of the General Conference. The Northern Baptist Convention and the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., for example, having annual meetings of the denominations, were able to act promptly and to include the Federal Council in their official budget on the same basis as their denominational boards. Now, however, they are saying that they ought not to be expected to develop the policy of securing the Council's budget directly from the denominations unless the largest and strongest denomination of all is to lead the way.

It is to be earnestly hoped therefore that the present General Conference, instead of making a small appropriation to the Federal Council of the Churches out of the General Conference fund, will include the work of the Federal Council as one of the regular benevolent objects of the denomination, as is already done by several of the more important denominations. That there is abundant ground for doing so is found in the direct reenforcement of the work of the Methodist boards provided by the work of the Federal Council's Commissions in the various fields. For the Methodist Episcopal Church to assume at this time its full equitable share of the Council's budget would clearly establish the policy of denominational responsibility for the Council and have far-reaching effect in the future development of the cooperative movement.

The budget for the year 1924, as determined by the Executive Committee of the Federal Council at its meeting last December, is $258,800. There has been a general conviction that the budget ought not to be less than $300,000, the amount approved by the last quadrennial meeting, and the reductions that have been forced upon the Council through the exigencies of the last three years ought to be regarded as temporary only.

REPORT OF COMMISSION ON AREAS AND DISTRICTS

The General Conference of 1920 authorized the Bishops to appoint a Commission consisting of one Bishop, three ministers and three laymen to study our ecclesiastical geography and the changes that would be involved in the organization of the various Boards of the Church and of the General Conference Committees on the principle of the area system rather than of the General Conference District, said Commission to make its report on the second day of the General Conference of 1924.

In accordance with this action of the General Conference, the Bishops appointed the following Commission:

Bishop E. G. Richardson, 63 Ponce de Leon Avenue, Atlanta, Ga.
M. N. Wehrly, 420 Plum Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

I. F. Roach, Long Beach, California.

J. C. Nicholson, 3620 Connecticut Avenue, Washington, D. C.

Frank C. Dunn, Gardner, Mass.

Frank A. Horne, 161 Chambers Street, New York City.

Henry S. Henschen, 108 S. LaSalle Street, Chicago, Illinois.

The Commission submits the following recommendations:

I. That General Conference Districts be abolished and that representation be made on the area principle, so that Paragraph 74, Section 2, shall read as follows:

"Paragraph 74, Section 2. For the purpose of representation on the Book Committee, the Administrative Boards and Committees in the General Conference, the Annual Conferences shall be grouped into as many areas as the General Conference from time to time shall determine."

II. The following Boards and Committees have representation from General Conference Districts:

Book Committee
Board of Foreign Missions
Board of Home Missions and Church Extension
Board of Education
University Senate
Board of Sunday Schools
Board of Epworth League
Deaconess Board
Committee on Judiciary
Committee on Revision
Committee on Deaconess Work

The Commission acting under the direction of the General Conference to show the changes involved in the organization of these Boards and Committees under the area system, makes the following recommendations:-

The Book Committee. (See Paragraph 380, Section 1 of the Discipline of 1920. Also Paragraph 387, Section 3.)

The Commission recommends that there be one representative on the Book Committee from each area in the United States instead of one from each General Conference District. Substitute in the said paragraph and section the words "area" or "areas" for "General Conference District" or "General Conference Districts." Also in Paragraph 387, Section 3, substitute "areas" for "General Conference Districts." The paragraphs will then read as follows:

"Paragraph 380, Section 1. Beginning with 1900 A. D., the General Conference shall elect quadrennially a Book Committee consisting of one member from each of the areas in the United States into which the Annual Conferences are distributed, and ten members constituting the Local Committees as defined in Section 2 hereof. Those elected from the areas designated by odd numbers shall be elected for a term of eight years, and those from the areas designated by even numbers for a term of four years; and hereafter each General Conference shall elect for a term of eight years one member for each area in the United States, who shall be nominated by the delegations representing that area, to take the place of the member whose term is then expiring, or to fill any vacancy in the Committee for the unexpired term; provided, that in any such case the person elected to fill such vacancy in an area membership shall be from the Annual Conference to which the retiring member belonged, or within the bounds of which he resided. Any vacancy occurring in the area membership of the Book Committee, by a member's removal from the area from which he was elected, or by any cause whatsoever, shall be filled by the Book Committee until the next session of the General Conference."

"Paragraph 387, Section 3. This investigation shall be before the members of the Book Committee elected from the areas, who by a two-thirds vote may remove from office said Publishing Agent or Editor, between the sessions of the General Conference."

Board of Foreign Missions. (See Paragraph 414, Section 2, of Discipline of 1920.)

The Commission recommends that the representatives on the Board of Foreign Missions be one representative from each area in the United States and one from each major subdivision as shown in Paragraph 575, Discipline 1920, viz.: Africa, Eastern Asia, Southern Asia, Southeastern Asia, Europe, Latin-America.

The said section will then read, beginning at line 7 of said section, page 275:

"In constituting the Board of Managers, the Bishops shall nominate one representative from each area in the United States and one from each of the major subdivisions of the foreign field, as shown in paragraph 575, Discipline 1920."

Board of Home Missions and Church Extension. (See Paragraph 432, Section 1, of Discipline of 1920.)

The Commission recommends that there be one ministerial and one lay representative from each area in the United States. The paragraph will then read:

"Paragraph 432, Section 1. The Board of Home Missions and Church Extension of the Methodist Episcopal Church shall be composed of the Bishop resident at Philadelphia, the corresponding secretary elected by the General Conference, who shall be ex officio members, twenty-five Ministers and twenty-eight Laymen nominated by the Board of Bishops and elected by the General Conference. There shall be included in the foregoing numbers at least one Minister and one Layman from each area in the United States. All of the other effective Bishops resident in the United States shall be ex officio members without a vote. The superintendents of the five departments shall be advisory members. The terms of office shall begin at the adjournment of the General Conference and continue for one quadrennium or until their successors are chosen."

Board of Education. (See Paragraph 457, Section 1, of the Discipline of 1920.)

The Commission recommends that there shall be at least one area representative from each area in the United States. The paragraph will then read:

"Paragraph 457, Section 1. The management of the affairs and properties of the Board of Education shall rest in a Board of Trustees consisting of thirty-six members, of whom one-half shall be Laymen and at least three shall be Bishops, with at least one member resident in each area in the United States. The said Board of Trustees shall constitute the Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, a corporation existing under the laws of the State of New York. One third of the Board shall be elected at each General Conference on the nomination of the Board of Bishops, to serve for a term of twelve years."

University Senate. (See Paragraph 464, Section 1, of the Discipline of 1920.)

The Commission recommends that the University Senate be selected without any reference to areas or districts. The paragraph will then read:

"Paragraph 464, Section 1. The University Senate of the Methodist Episcopal Church shall be appointed quadrennially by the Bishops, and shall be composed of twenty-one persons actively engaged in the work of education. If, in consequence of the retirement of a member from educational work, or from any other cause, a vacancy occur in the body during the quadrennium, it shall be the duty of the Bishops at their next semiannual meeting to fill such vacancy."

Board of Sunday Schools. (See Paragraph 468, Section 2, of the Discipline of 1920.)

The Commission recommends that there be one representative from each area in the United States. The paragraph will then read:

"Paragraph 468, Section 2. The Board of Sunday Schools shall be composed of the Corresponding Secretary of said Board and the Editor of Sunday School Publications, who shall be ex officio members thereof; three effective Bishops, one member from each area in the United States, who shall reside therein, and a sufficient number of members at large to make up the number of twenty-nine as the entire membership of said Board. There shall be both lay and clerical members, such as are expert in Sunday school work. All the members of said Board except the two ex officio members shall be elected by the General Conference upon nomination of the Board of Bishops."

Board of Epworth League. (See Paragraph 484, Section 4, Article IV.)

The Commission recommends that there be one representative from each area in the United States, and that the provision calling for the election of five members at large be abolished. The paragraph will then read:

"Paragraph 484, Section 4, Article IV. Government. The management of the Board of the Epworth League shall be vested in a Board which shall consist of a Bishop, General Secretary, the Editor of the Epworth Herald, and one member from each area in the United States, the area representatives to be nominated by the Board of Bishops and elected by the General Conference."

Deaconess Board. (See Paragraph 491, Section 1.)

The Commission recommends that there be one representative from each area in the United States and that the provision calling for three representatives at large be abolished. The paragraph will then read:

"Paragraph 491. Incorporation and Functions. Section 1. For the promotion of Deaconess work throughout the Church there shall be a Board known as the General Deaconess Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church. This Board, duly incorporated under the laws of the State of New York and having its headquarters in the city of Buffalo, shall have general supervision of all Deaconess work in the Church and control of all the Deaconesses. The General Deaconess Board shall be composed of twenty-seven members, and the Corresponding Secretary, who shall be a member ex officio without vote. The elective members, nominated by the Boards of Bishops and elected by the General Conference, shall be three Bishops, three Deaconesses, and one representative from each area in the United States. Any vacancy in the Board which may occur during the quadrennium shall be filled by the Board of Bishops."

Committee on Judiciary and Committee on Revision. (See Paragraph 567, Rule 36.)

The Commission recommends that the word "area" be substituted for "General Conference District" in Rule 36, and that changes be made in the rule so that it will read as follows:

"Paragraph 567, Rule 36. For the Committee on Judiciary and the Committee on Revision the delegates of each area in the United States shall nominate from their number one member, the delegates from each of the following major divisions of the foreign field as found in Paragraph 575 of the Discipline of 1920, viz.: Europe, Asia, and Latin-America, shall nominate from their number one member, and the Bishops shall nominate three, making the total number twenty-seven. These Committees shall meet at such times as they may elect, or as may be ordered by the General Conference."

Committee on Deaconess Work. (See Paragraph 567, Rule 37.)

The Commission recommends the substitution of "area" for "General Conference District" and the number "three" for "nine" in said rule, so that it shall read:

"Paragraph 567, Rule 37. For the Committee on Deaconess Work the delegates of each area shall nominate from their number one Layman and one Minister and the Board of Bishops shall nominate three, making a total of forty-five. The committee shall meet as it may elect."

BISHOP E. G. RICHARDSON,
Chairman.

J. C. NICHOLSON,
Secretary.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON CHAPLAINS IN U. S. ARMY AND NAVY

There were, during the world war, 2,216 Chaplains in the Army and 157 in the Navy. The quota of the Methodist Episcopal Church was:

DURING THE WAR

	Army	Navy
Actual number appointed.....	261	27
Percentage of number appointed	.11	.17

At present there are 125 Chaplains in the Regular Army and 84 in the Navy. The quota of the Methodist Episcopal Church is as follows:

AT PRESENT—1924

	Army	Navy
M. E. quota of Chaplains appointed15	.14
Number now commissioned.....	19	9—a deficit of 5

The matters now immediately before the General Committee on Army and Navy Chaplains with reference to Chaplain matters are, first, an increase in the personnel of Chaplains of the Army, by increasing the ratio from one chaplain to 1,200 to one chaplain to 800, which would give about 46 additional chaplains; second, the removal of discriminations with reference to rank, so that Chaplains will be eligible to promotion to the different grades in the same number of years as other non-combatant officers, and adding to the grades to which Chaplains are eligible that of colonel. A Chaplain now ceases to advance beyond lieutenant-colonel, except in the case of the Chief Chaplain, who becomes colonel; third, that the Chief Chaplain may have the rank of brigadier general. Bills have been introduced both into the Senate and into the House to amend the National Defense Act passed in 1920, to accomplish the different objects.

With reference to the Navy, there is a reorganization bill known as H.R. 4444, which provides all that is desired for Chaplains in the matter of promotion. The law already provides for the number of Chaplains needed, but appropriations have not been made to carry more than 83 until recently when an increase of 17 was authorized. The General Committee on Army and Navy Chaplains reports that it is having great difficulty in finding these 17 men, 12 or 13 of whom should be Protestants. No quotas are being especially considered. It is seeking for this, the best equipped men under 31½ years who have both college and seminary training, and who, of course, are of unquestioned character and ability, and have the endorsement of their denominational committee.

It is particularly desired that Annual Conferences shall keep up a close contact with the men in the service from their membership.

WILLIAM F. McDOWELL,

Chairman of Committee on Chaplains and Chairman of the General Committee on Army and Navy Chaplains.

REPORT OF COMMISSION ON COMITY AND COOPERATION

The following recommendations were adopted by the Joint Commission on Comity representing the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at a meeting held in Cincinnati, Ohio, February 14, 1923.

In beginning these negotiations, we desire to emphasize the fact that no step should be taken in the interest of either Church that may be a detriment to American Methodism.

During the progress of the negotiations of the Joint Commission on Unification of the two Churches we recommend:

1. That no plans looking to the exchange of territory in the home field be attempted by this Commission.

2. That there shall be the largest possible cooperation in all the connectional enterprises of the two Churches.

3. That to this end, the Executive Committee of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension, and the Board of Sunday Schools of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and of the Board of Missions and the Sunday School Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, or such sub-committee from the same as the bodies involved may mutually agree upon and appoint, shall meet in joint session with a view to reaching such agreements in regard to cooperation and the occupation of unoccupied territory as may seem wise.

4. That neither Church shall organize a new society in any community in which the other Church has a duly organized society, except by the consent of the Quarterly Conference of the existing society.

5. That we deem it wise to call attention to the fact that in certain portions of the field where both our Churches are now actively at work, marked and rapid developments are taking place which are constantly opening up new opportunities. We recommend that our administrators, and especially those of them who by our Church laws are made more or less directly responsible for the occupancy of such fields, use special care to observe comity, to avoid even the appearance of competition and overlapping, and to cooperate in such a way and to such degrees as that all the doors shall be entered and all needy fields occupied without duplication or overlapping.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION ON CORRELATION

TO THE GENERAL CONFERENCE OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, HELD AT SPRINGFIELD, MASS., MAY, 1924.

DEAR FATHERS AND BRETHREN: The report which is herewith submitted on behalf of the Commission on Correlation consists of two parts. Part I has to do with the plan which the Commission believes complies with every instruction contained in ¶ 572. Part II is a series of cross-section studies of childhood and adolescence. It will be observed that Part II is decidedly technical and it may appear to many as a very elaborate document.

PART I

Your Commission on Correlation, consisting of one Bishop, three nominated by the Board of Sunday Schools, three by the Board of the Epworth League, one by the Board of Foreign Missions, one by the Board of Home Missions, one by the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, one by the Woman's Home Missionary Society, as appointed at the General Conference of 1916 and continued by the General Conference of 1920, has through the quadrennium carefully studied the religious education needs of children, young people and adults, and the various agencies of the Church existing and meeting these needs, and the means and methods whereby thorough coordination and correlation of the organizations within the local church may be secured in the interest of efficiency—the purpose being to promote thorough connectional interest and correlation without disturbing the autonomy of existing organizations.

The Commission has held frequent meetings during the quadrennium, has provided for surveys and specific studies of the interests committed to it, and reports as follows:

The Commission recommends to the General Conference that the various Boards and agencies of the Church responsible for promoting various phases of a comprehensive program of religious education in the local church shall constitute an Inter-Board Curriculum Commission to operate throughout the quadrennium, the members of said Commission to be appointed by the respective board or agencies whose programs center in the local church, the functions of this Commission to be the correlation of the various elements of educational material provided by the respective boards and to make available to a proposed Commission on Religious Education in the local church a unified comprehensive program of religious education.

The Boards and Agencies now responsible for the promotion of religious education having membership on this Curriculum Commission are:

Board of Sunday Schools.

Board of Epworth League.

Woman's Foreign Missionary Society.

Woman's Home Missionary Society.

Director of Religious Education of the Quarterly Conference.

The larger Inter-Board Curriculum Correlation Commission recommended in this report shall be composed of:

One Bishop.

Three representatives of the Board of Sunday Schools.

The Commission recommends that materials contained in Part II of this report be used by the Inter-Board Commission on Correlation and the local Church Commission on Religious Education, as hereinafter provided, as guiding principles in their work.

The Commission recommends that there be constituted in the local church by the Quarterly Conference a Commission on Religious Education to take the place of the present Committee on Religious Instruction, this Commission to be responsible for the organization and administration of a comprehensive and correlated program of religious education in the local church. The personnel of this Commission shall consist of one representative each from the Sunday School, the Epworth League, Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, Woman's Home Missionary Society, and the Committee on Apportioned Benevolences, the pastor and director of religious education being ex-officio members.

It is the opinion of your Commission on Correlation that this involves a modification or a restatement of the committees of the local church as enumerated in § 12, ¶ 107 of the Discipline.

Part II was prepared by a sub-committee of which Professor Norman E. Richardson of Northwestern University was the chairman, and represents eight years of painstaking study and thought concerning this most important question.

One of the most important tasks committed by the 1920

General Conference to any of its Commissions was that of making "a careful study of the religious educational needs of children, young people and adults." The purpose of this study was to help all educational agencies in the Church to arrive at a common understanding and agreement concerning a unified and correlated program of religious education.

If the Board of Sunday Schools, the Epworth League, the Missionary Societies and other educational agencies are to work together harmoniously and without competition, they and all their representatives in the local churches must come to a common understanding concerning the process whereby the divine grace is personally appropriated in each of the developmental stages of life. There must be common agreement, likewise, with respect to what constitutes the Christian life in all its fullness for children, for young people and for adults.

Cross-Section Studies of Childhood and Adolescence, which is Part II of the Report of the Commission on Correlation, contains a detailed list of educational needs and limitations at each of the age levels now universally recognized in the general field of education. It is composed of six distinct studies, including the following year groupings: 4-5, 6-8, 9-11, 12-14, 15-17, and 18-24. In each study the physical, mental, social and religious characteristics are briefly summarized. Then follows in each instance a list of the training centers or points of contact with the respective age group.

It is these spontaneous interests that have to be reckoned with if the educational program, whether it is training the devotional life, missionary education, Bible study or avocational training, is to be spiritually vital and permanently effective.

But this significant study does not stop here. Perhaps its greatest practical value lies in the fact that it defines the aim or purpose of religious education—Christian character—in such a way as to suggest clearly what constitutes a comprehensive program of training. Christianity is seen to be both thoroughly ethical and spiritually dynamic. Christian character here set forth consists of ten major, essential elements:

1. Physical health and fitness.
2. Mental efficiency and soundness.
3. The ability and disposition to make all kinds of social contacts properly.
4. The power to maintain right economic or business relationships.
5. Vocational efficiency.
6. The disposition and ability through wholesome avocational pursuits to conserve leisure time, surplus energy, spare money and non-vocational talents.
7. The ability to maintain right family relationships.

8. The ability to carry one's share of the large social and civic responsibilities.

9. The ability and passion to build society on a world basis.

10. The active personal appropriation of the grace of God, through Jesus Christ our Lord, and the maintenance of a warm, living religious experience.

Here is a study that can become the rallying point for constructive thinking and experimentation during the coming quadrennium. If it brings about correlation in the views held by the workers in our local churches concerning what a program of religious education really is and what it ought to accomplish, it will render a monumental service. The Church will discover in this report the outlines of a system of training that conserves the evangelistic passion as well as the determination to build a new social, political and industrial order. Delegates will help our educational agencies materially by stimulating discussion along lines indicated in this document. Ours is a democratic Church. Correlation can be realized ultimately only in so far as our people arrive at a common agreement concerning points of emphasis and final outcome. The Commission has pointed out the direction in which progress can be made.

If this report commends itself to this Conference we would respectfully suggest the advisability of taking some steps in perfecting the Cross-Section studies and in making them available to local church Commissions.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION ON COURSES OF STUDY

To the General Conference of 1924:

With this report the Commission on Courses of Study completes the first eight years of its work. It presents this statement with a deep sense of the importance of the interests entrusted to it. Our church has nearly seventeen thousand pastoral charges in this country. In the end every form of her work depends for its success upon the efficient leadership given by its preachers in charge. It has, therefore, no more important task than the training of these men. And the problem becomes more urgent when we consider the rising standards of education and the increasing demands made for this and other reasons upon our ministry. In the last three decades, for example, college enrollment has increased fourfold in this country and high-school enrollment tenfold.

CONDITIONS AND NEEDS

As the result of a most thorough and valuable study made by the Commission on Life Service we have for the first time exact knowledge of the actual situation in our church as regards the training of our ministry. The facts are not encouraging. Only 20 per cent of our Conference members have both college and seminary training. The proportion of those who have not even completed high school is almost as great, namely, 18 per cent, and this at a time when high school enrollment in this country has reached two and a half millions. Over a fourth of our Conference members have never gone beyond the high school.

This situation becomes even more serious when we take into account the supply pastors. About one fourth of our churches to-day are left to be supplied. Over one half of these supplies have not even graduated from high school, over one third have had but an eighth grade education or less. If we add the supply pastors to the others, then over one fourth of our churches are being led by men who have not even completed a high school course.

It is commonly supposed that this condition, though serious, is improving. The facts do not bear this out. In the last twenty years the number of men received into the Conferences with high school training or less has increased from about twenty to twenty-seven per cent. At the same time the number with college training has decreased in about the same proportion.

Even these figures do not show the situation as bad as it really is, for during this same period there has been a large increase both actual and proportionate of the number of supplies. From 1900 to 1920 the churches left to be supplied increased from 2,682 to 4,321, or sixty per cent. Bearing in mind the much lower educational standards of our supply pastors, this increase indicates a still greater lowering of the educational qualifications of our ministry.

THE CONFERENCE COURSE OF STUDY

The church has had two agencies for meeting this situation, first its colleges and theological schools, and second the Conference Course of Study. In the Methodist theological schools of this country there were something over a thousand regular students last year. A considerable proportion of these, however, were taken by mission work, educational work, or kindred fields outside the regular pastorate. At the same time about 2,500 men were enrolled in the four-year Conference Course of Study. The standard of training, upon which we should more and more insist, is that of the schools. But it is clear that for many years to come, as in the past, a large majority of our men will depend upon the Conference Course for their theological training. Only about a fifth of the men now entering our regular ministry have taken both college and seminary courses and so are entitled to be excused from the Course as a whole. And to the 2,500 noted above must be added the local preachers who are giving full time as supply pastors.

In view of this situation it is surprising that the church for long years gave so little attention to the possibilities of training that lay in the Conference Course. As a matter of fact it was thought of less as a course of training than as a series of examinations. At one end was a committee of the bishops which once in four years recommended to that body a list of books to be adopted by them. At the other end were the Conference Boards of Examiners, whose title suggested their chief duty, namely, the setting of examinations.

Eight years ago the General Conference passed legislation looking to a change in this situation. For the first time the Conference Course of Study was regarded not simply as a list of books and a scheme of examinations but as an educational institution for the training of our ministry. A permanent Commission of seven members was appointed to give continuous supervision to this work and to make this educational agency effective. During the first four years the Commission had no financial resources and had to depend entirely upon the volunteer service of its members. Four years ago the membership of the Commission was enlarged to ten, and it is now composed of three bishops, three educators, three other ministers, and the book editor ex officio. All but the last are elected by the bishops, the three educators being nominated by the Board of Education. The last General Conference also authorized a modest budget for the work of the Commission and this made possible the securing three years ago of Dr. Allan MacRossie as educational director and the important enlargement of its sphere of service which has marked the work of this quadrennium.

PLANNING A COURSE

In the arrangement of the Course of Study the same general lines were followed as in the previous quadrennium. The general effort has been to simplify the course, to reduce still further the number of books, but to make more thorough the work in the course. Including the studies for Admission on Trial, there are six books each in the fields of theology, of practical theology, and of history and biography, with seven books on biblical subjects. Three books are devoted to religious education; sociology, social service, and moral reform have all together three books. With the addition of the two volumes of Wesley's sermons, as directed by the last General Conference, the Course now includes ten books in the field of Methodist history, doctrine, and polity.

Remembering that the students in the course are at the same time men in active pastoral work, the course is arranged to have each year some biblical study which will bear fruitfully upon the minister's preaching, and some study of a practical character that will relate itself to the problems of the parish. At the same time attention has been paid to the order of studies so that the more difficult subjects would come later in the course.

There is still great need of texts especially adapted to men who are deficient in preparation and who must study by themselves. Three volumes were prepared for the present Course at the request of the Commission: Hannan's Evangelism, Soper's Religions of Mankind, and Langdale's Citizenship and Moral Reform. Other books are needed and in them the experience of the best of our modern correspondence schools should be taken into account.

The courses for the foreign-speaking Conferences in this country have been brought more closely into line with the regular course. A very considerable proportion of the books in these courses are now in English and are the same as the books in the regular course, while others are retained in the foreign tongue so as to give training in the language in which the work is to be done.

HANDBOOKS FOR STUDENTS AND EXAMINERS

The arrangement of the Course of Study is only the beginning of the work of the Commission. A far more difficult task is that of providing students and examiners with plans and helps to make of this course a real school and an effective means of training. Three special means have been employed to this end and their development constitutes the distinctive elements in the new plan of training through the Course of Study.

The first of these is the series of handbooks prepared by the Commission. The most important of these handbooks are the five volumes of Directions and Helps, one for the studies for Admission on Trial, and one for each year of the Course. These handbooks aim to give the help of a teacher to the student who must carry on this work by himself, often in some remote field. Each book in the course has a section devoted to it. The purpose of the book is indicated, interest is enlisted for it, difficult parts are explained, suggestive questions are proposed, and specific directions given as to its study. An introductory section gives general suggestions to the student concerning personal and practical problems. Spiritual values are pointed out and practical needs kept in mind. The student is taught by constant suggestion to relate his studies to his work as preacher and pastor. A special section is devoted to homiletic suggestions in which the pulpit values of these studies are brought out. These handbooks are indispensable to the work of the examiners and each examiner is furnished with the portions dealing with the books that are assigned to him by his Board. In addition a special handbook is issued for the examiners themselves explaining the present plan and discussing important problems. Finally there has been issued a volume of Directions and Helps to accompany the Local Preachers' Course:

REQUIRED WRITTEN WORK

The second important element in the present plan for the training of the student preacher is that of the required written work. This plan tends to eliminate mere cramming for examination, to promote active and independent thought on the part of the student, while at the same time training him in clear thinking and exact expression as only writing can. The written work is not so much a matter of formal composition as a method of study and a means of constant self-expression, thus taking the place in a measure of the discussion of the school room.

MAKING A CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL

It is the ideal of the Commission to embody in its plans the best methods that have been developed in correspondence schools and in the extension departments of our universities. This means something more than a set of books or even of written exercises. It involves at least two other items: a definite plan of work with definite tasks marked out week by week, and an instructor to whom the written work is sent and from whom help is received.

Along both lines plans have been worked out and recommended to the Boards of Examiners, and the more progressive of these Boards have already taken these up. The work is mapped out for students by weeks or months or quarters. The written work on a given text is sent to the examiner, who becomes now an adviser and instructor, and returns it with comment and criticism. This gives the best of opportunities for the establishment of a helpful personal relation between examiner and student.

SUMMER SCHOOLS OF THEOLOGY

The third element in the new plan is that of the summer schools. Such schools have been held in certain Conferences for a number of years, but with a few notable exceptions they were held for but a few days and were little more than a matter of coaching classes which enabled men to cram for examination, often thus defeating the more valuable plan of regular study throughout the year. Few of these schools could bring in the necessary lecturers to give inspiration and scholarly standing. There were but thirteen of these schools as late as 1921. Then came the advance. In 1922 there were 35 schools. In 1923 there were 42, with 71 Conferences participating and over 2,000 in attendance. The large majority were students in the Conference Course and examiners, but there were also many other ministers taking advantage of the opportunities offered and some schools, such as Michigan, Northwest Kansas, Kansas, and Genesee, provided special courses for these.

Several items help to explain this remarkable development: the interest and intelligent leadership of the Boards of Examiners; the provision of the General Conference by which the Commission has had the service of an Educational Director to promote such work; the legislation of the last General Conference, enacted at the request of the Commission, making it possible for each Conference to require the attendance of its students at these schools. Further, the modest budget of the Commission has been drawn upon to aid each one of these schools.

For the last four years there has been held each winter a conference of the chairmen of the Boards and the heads of these summer schools in order to plan and promote this work. Sixty men were in attendance upon the conference this winter. The result has been an establishment of standards and development in the quality of the work even more significant than the growth in numbers. The normal school of this kind is now held for ten days and is attended by all the men in the Course of Study and a large proportion of the examiners. Classes are conducted in the subjects of the Course. Special lecturers of high rank are brought in, usually professors from our colleges and seminaries and men of high achievement in the pastorate. Most of these schools are held at the seat of some one of our colleges.

In a growing number of instances a group of Conferences, a State, or an area unites in such a school. This is true in Ohio, Michigan, Minnesota, Montana, Wisconsin, Illinois, in the Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Atlanta, New Orleans, and Indiana Areas, and the schools at Athens and Princess Anne.

The importance of these schools cannot be overestimated. It is not easy for the student to prosecute his work in some remote field far from libraries and the stimulus of contact with teachers and fellow students. Through these schools every year for four years such contact is afforded him. He listens to the ablest men whom the church can provide. He shares experiences with other students and gets stimulus from contact with them. He receives light on his problems and the chance to bring all his questions. The examiner has an ideal opportunity to establish relations with the men whose work he is supervising during the year. The majority of the students in the Course are already in these schools. There is no reason why in the near future their number should not be practically one hundred per cent.

THE CONFERENCE BOARDS OF EXAMINERS

As the pastor is the applied end of all our church work, so the Board of Examiners in this training of the men in the Course of Study. There are now 1,642 examiners on the various Conference Boards in this country. No more important service is being rendered the church than that of this body of men whose work is now coming to be more fully appreciated. The new plans for the Course have added materially to the labors of these men. Many of them take from their vacation time to serve at the summer schools. Uniformly the Boards have co-operated heartily with the Commission. It is a pleasure to note the increasing care which the bishops are taking in the appointment of these men, insisting that in personal adaptation, in devotion, and in scholastic training they shall be fitted for their task. In most Conferences these Boards are constituted of the very choicest men available, which goes far to explain the progress now being made.

The Commission through its Educational Director is in constant touch with these Boards and with the individual examiners through correspondence. In addition the Director has been able to make large personal contact through visitation of Conferences and summer schools, as well as in special conferences, including the winter conferences, at which some sixty representatives of about that many Boards were in attendance this year. The Commission supplies the Boards with the necessary volumes of Directions and Helps and furnishes each member the Examiner's Handbook. It has prepared a Registrar's Loose Leaf Record Book, whose increasing use is securing much more accurate and complete records. Through the courtesy of the Book Concern an attractive diploma is furnished to the Boards for all graduates from the Course.

The larger function of the Board of Examiners should be more clearly recognized. Its name is misleading; it is a board for ministerial education and not a mere committee to conduct examinations. There should be in each Conference an agency that would have charge of the whole matter of the enlistment of candidates for the ministry and the supervision of their training. This agency should look up the men of promise and then follow them with friendly interest and help through their whole course of preparation. Not the least task here would be that of encouraging these candidates to secure the best possible training of the schools. The Board of Examiners is the agency for this work. Has not the time come when its name should be changed to correspond with its function?

POST GRADUATE COURSES

The Conference Course, like the college and seminary course, should be considered not as the end but as the beginning of a man's studies. An increasing number of our ministers recognize the need of carrying on systematic courses of study and are asking for aid in this matter. So far the Commission has issued three courses: one on the Gospel of John prepared by Professor Rollin H. Walker of Ohio Wesleyan, one on Jeremiah prepared by Professor Lindsay B. Longacre of Iliff School of Theology, and the third by Mr. Paul Hutchinson. The last named is on World Citizenship and Christian Service, and is peculiarly timely and valuable. It uses the World Service volume of the Methodist Episcopal Church, supplemented by several other valuable books, and introduces the student alike to the general world situation and the world-wide work of our own church. A number of other courses are now in preparation. It is the plan of the Commission to issue these courses at regular intervals, to enroll for this work all the men as they graduate from the Course, and to offer them a choice of courses covering all the significant fields of study for the minister. The student enrolling in these courses is provided with specific directions, including a plan of written work. For each course an instructor is secured, usually a professor in one of our institutions, and the work done by the student is under his direct supervision.

THE SUPPLY PASTOR

One of the most difficult tasks in the whole field is that of the training of the supply pastor. The importance of this matter has already been suggested. In 1922 there were marked as left to be supplied 4,323 of our charges in this country. Some of these were not supplied, some had pastors giving but part time, some were cared for by students or superannuates. But when all deductions are made it appears that sixty per cent of the supplies give full time to their work and that at least two thirds of these are local preachers. It is a fair estimate that we have over 2,000 local preachers who are giving practically full time as supply pastors. It is true, these men are not serving our largest churches, yet in these very charges the need is often the greatest, and in very many cases they are the only centers of religious work and community service which the people have.

In the past practically no attention was given to the training of these men, despite the fact that their lack of education made the need even more pressing. We have found that over one half of the supplies have not even completed a high school course, the proportion being three times as large as with the Conference members. It is true a local preachers' course was provided, but the matter was left to the uncertain care of Quarterly and District Conferences, there was no close supervision, and no special help was offered to the student. Upon request of the Commission the last General Conference provided that the Conference Boards of Examiners should have charge of the studies of all local preachers who were full-time supplies. The further provision should be made that only such should be engaged by superintendents as are meeting the requirements of their Course. During the quadrennium the Commission issued a volume of Directions and Helps for the local preachers. A careful revision of the Local Preachers' Course is called for, to be made with the needs of these men in mind. The requirement of attendance upon the summer schools should be extended to these men, with financial aid, if it be necessary, to make this possible. To secure the right results the closest possible cooperation will be needed between the district superintendents and the Board of Examiners.

THE CONFERENCE COURSE AND THE SCHOOLS

The question has sometimes been raised whether, in making the Conference Course so effective educationally, the result might not be that men would content themselves with the Course instead of going to college and seminary, and thus the good become the enemy of the best. It may be replied in brief that the actual result has been just the opposite. The Commission has clearly recognized that the Conference Course can never take the place of the training of the schools. It has urged the fuller training upon the students and has pointed out to the Boards of Examiners that it was one of their prime duties to advise with all those looking to the ministry or already in it as to their education in college and seminary. Further, the higher standards set by the Commission have introduced the young men to the educational ideal and have made many of them see the larger opportunities and needs. The summer schools, held most commonly at the seat of some college, have worked in the same direction. The more thorough and exacting the Conference Course is made, the more ready the young men will be to take their work in our schools.

Our standard must remain that of the college and seminary training and this ideal must be kept constantly before us. At two main points this ideal could be greatly advanced: first, by interesting and enlisting young men for the ministry at an earlier age; second, by urging the need of training upon these young people from the first. A study of those who have failed to get the proper training will show the importance of these points. In many cases they are men who came into the ministry in later years when the education of the schools no longer seemed feasible. In many other instances there has been a failure on the part of the church to advise them rightly. Some district superintendent, hard pressed for men, has urged upon them the taking of an appointment, in not a few cases has taken them out of the schools where they were studying. More often the church has been simply indifferent and neglectful, failing rightly to impress upon young men the need of the highest degree of training for their high calling and receiving untrained men without protest. It is not enough for our colleges and seminaries to do this work of urging upon young men the need of training. This is first of all the concern of the Conferences. In recent years in many Conferences, including not a few of the older and stronger, the standards of admission have actually been lowered. But more than this, the Conferences must systematically urge upon the young men the higher standards, encouraging, advising, and aiding them. The college-medical course is a longer and more expensive course than the college-seminary course. Are our young men deficient in devotion or intelligence that they cannot meet this demand? As a matter of fact hundreds of them do this every year. Any young man with health, and that vigor of mind and will without which he has no place in the ministry, can secure a college and seminary training, provided he gets started in time and does not burden himself too soon with the cares of a family. And many have done it even with these handicaps.

THE WORK OF THE EDUCATIONAL DIRECTOR

Four years ago it was reported: "Your Commission is conscious of having simply made a beginning in this work." At that time the Commission had worked out the plans that are now being followed, but it lacked the leadership and the means to make possible the full carrying out of these ideals. The action of the last General Conference paved the way for the change. The budget provided for the last three years, though modest, has made it possible to secure the services of an Educational Director, Dr. Allan MacRossie, and to put our plans increasingly into effect. The expenditure would have been justified by the single item of the development of the summer schools, which now include some three fourths of our Conferences. But this is only one item in the work. The office of the Commission is in touch not only with the officers of all Conference Boards of Examiners, but with every individual examiner and with each student, as well as with those enrolled in the graduate courses of study. With large numbers of these the Director has made personal contact through Annual Conference visitation, meetings with Boards and with students, and the inspection of summer schools, all but one or two of which have been visited by him. To all this must be added obvious and important items such as the preparation of the various courses, the publication of the six volumes of Directions and Helps and the Examiner's Handbook, besides various other aids, the development of the post graduate courses and the enlistment of students for these, and the constant correspondence called for in the supervision of a great educational institution.

THE RESPONSE

The final test of the value of this work is to be found in the student. In order to apply this test and to secure suggestions for the improvement of its work, a letter was sent to the students in the Course covering the whole area of the church in this country. The questions proposed were definite. They concerned the matter of practical plans like the Directions and Helps and the Required Written Work. They asked for opinions on relations to examiners and the value of summer schools. Suggestions and criticisms were invited. Finally, students were asked to state the effect of the Course upon them in their thinking, their work as pastors, and their personal life and faith. Follow-up letters were sent and large numbers of replies were received from all over the church.

There was general and generous appreciation of the efforts made by the Commission to aid the student through such means as the Directions and Helps and the Homiletical Suggestions. The present plan makes much larger demand upon the student for time and work, especially in the required written work, yet only a small proportion of students raised objection at this point. Individual books were occasionally criticized—in scarcely any instances from the standpoint of doctrinal teaching, sometimes because a book seemed to the student too large, or too heavy, or too remote from his practical interests. Thoughtful students constantly recognized the value of the written work, though the question of time was raised by some at this point. The summer schools were enthusiastically appreciated. Strong and constant appreciation was given to the Course as a whole.

More interesting were the replies as to the effect of these studies upon the student and his work. "It has cleared doubts, removed difficulties." "It has put me on a sure basis—I was born in a peculiar cradle, Baptist and Adventist. Thank God for the Course." Another receives "additional knowledge of the Bible, better understanding of the evangelical appeal and its application, stronger confidence in the Church, and a faith born of the spiritual nature of man and the ever present supernatural character of Christianity." "I have been greatly strengthened in my spiritual and intellectual life." There is frequent reference to the way in which the course has removed misconceptions, answered questions, and given a broader and surer basis for faith. "The Course has proved a great help, especially in work on the circuit." It would not be a surprise in a Course like this, which seeks honestly and frankly to face the problems that arise in biblical, doctrinal, and philosophical study, if some of these students meeting these questions for the first time should for a while be disturbed in mind. Yet the striking fact is that the correspondents raise no objections on this score.

The members of the Boards of Examiners are of all men in best position to judge the working of the Course. The Commission is deeply appreciative of the fact that it has had through these two quadrenniums the constant and undivided support of the Conference Boards of Examiners throughout the church and their approval of its plans. The approval has been voiced in many resolutions as well as by the action taken by the conference of the chairmen of the Boards and leaders of summer schools held each winter, at which a majority of the Boards has been represented. This winter's conference, in which sixty Conference Boards were represented, among other things declared:

We, the representatives of the various Conference Boards of Examiners and officers of the Summer Schools of Theology of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in conference assembled at Evanston, Illinois, January 2-4, 1924, desire to express our deep conviction on some matters relative to the Conference Courses of Study and the Commission administering the same.

1. We who have been examiners and teachers in the Course of Study have found it universally profitable and helpful to the minds, lives and ministry of the men received into the Annual Conferences. It has greatly strengthened faith and the spiritual power of the men, and has widely increased their efficiency for soul-winning and for the total pastoral office.

2. The Commission on Courses of Study has shown in every action an earnest and unselfish desire to be of the largest possible service to the undergraduates and to the Boards of Examiners. We especially appreciate the spirit of the Commission in bringing every important step before this and similar groups of examiners for free discussion and the fact that the suggestions and advice of the men who have been dealing at first hand with the undergraduates have been consistently followed.

3. We call attention to the fact that pastors, for the most part, carry on this work for men in the pastorate, and it is adapted to the daily needs of the men on the field in the various Conferences. The Courses of Study have grown out of the best interpretations of those needs by the pastors themselves in the various Conferences.

4. We are entirely convinced that the selection and the actual use of the Course of Study under direction of this Commission has brought to us the very best service from the Courses of Study in the history of the church. The present plan for Summer Schools of Theology under immediate direction of the Conference Boards of Examiners supported and partly financed by the Commission is of inestimable value. The spiritual, intellectual, and general efficiency value is increasingly in evidence in the Conferences. We urge that as soon as it is at all possible this work be extended until the undergraduates, local preachers, and others, in every Conference in Methodism are served by these schools.

5. Because of these facts we urge the General Conference of 1924 to continue this Commission form of direction of the Courses of Study as at present, that it may devote itself freely and uninterruptedly to a better trained ministry. We insist that the Commission be given the freest and fullest chance to do its work, and that it be supported with sufficient funds and upheld by the complete confidence of the church. It has proven its reason for being, and the wisdom of this method of directing the Course of Study.

The Commission itself can only speak in highest terms of the way in which these Boards have met with intelligent devotion the increasing burdens imposed by the new plan.

LOOKING FORWARD

The awakening of the church as to this central problem of its leadership is one of the most encouraging signs in our situation. In recent years we have been stressing the need of more recruits. We are now coming to see that it is not more recruits that we need so much as better men, secured at an earlier age, and more thoroughly trained. To the latter end our schools should have even greater support than in the past, but the fact remains that we must still depend upon the Conference Course for the training of the majority of our preachers. We are in the process of making a real school out of this Course, indeed, the largest school in this country for the training of ministers of the gospel. Including those in postgraduate courses, this school now has over three thousand students actively at work, with over 1,600 members of Boards of Examiners to constitute the faculty. Over two thousand were in attendance at summer schools, in whose faculties were some of the strongest pastors and teachers in our church. For the supervision of this work, the preparation of necessary texts, handbooks, and other literature, and the needed subvention of the summer schools, the church provided last year a budget of $40,000. That was an average of about $13 per student, as compared with the annual expense of the church of anywhere from $200 to $600 per student in our schools. We believe that the results have abundantly justified this expenditure.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION ON FAITH AND ORDER

The Commission on Faith and Order has met and organized pursuant to the action of the General Conference in May, 1920. It will present its report directly to the General Conference at Springfield, Mass.

BISHOP LUTHER B. WILSON, Chairman.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF SIX ON FOREIGN LANGUAGE PUBLICATIONS

DEAR FATHERS AND BRETHREN:

In presenting this report covering the work of four years, the Committee of Six on Foreign Language Publications desires to acknowledge its indebtedness of its predecessor, the Inter-Board Conference, which during the last year of the preceding quadrennium (1919) collected much valuable and authentic information relating to the existing needs for religious literature among non-English-speaking groups in the United States.

To the Inter-Board Conference also belongs the credit for having formulated the principles of procedure adopted for the guidance of this Committee of Six by the General Conference of 1920, as follows:

(a) No publication in a foreign language shall be authorized without investigation of the actual needs of the field in which it is intended that the publication shall be used.

(b) Publications in foreign languages shall be authorized only for missionary and evangelistic purposes.

(c) Such publications shall in each case contribute to the development and strengthening of American ideals.

The work of the Committee has been conducted in strict accordance with these principles, the number and variety of the publications authorized being the absolute minimum consistent with the responsibility of the Church for the evangelization of foreign-born peoples within our borders.

The Committee is likewise indebted to the three cooperating agencies, the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension, the Board of Sunday Schools, and The Methodist Book Concern, for the unfailing cordiality and unanimity of purpose with which these agencies have supported the work of this Committee. Without the prior investigations of the Inter-Board Conference and the continued and generous support of the cooperating boards, the results achieved during the quadrennium would have been impossible.

The personnel of the Committee of Six as appointed by the cooperating boards for the quadrennium is as follows:

For the Board of Home Missions

David D. Forsyth, Corresponding Secretary
Bishop William Burt

For The Methodist Book Concern

John H. Race, Publishing Agent

James E. Holmes, member of the Book Committee

For the Board of Sunday Schools

William S. Bovard, Corresponding Secretary

Henry H. Meyer, Editor of Sunday School Publications

Throughout the quadrennium the Committee has been assisted in the detailed conduct of its work by Amy Blanche Green for the Board of Home Missions and Eric M. North for The Methodist Book Concern. The officers of the Committee have been: Chairman, John H. Race; Secretary, Henry H. Meyer.

The Committee has met whenever the exigencies of its work required. Meetings were held as follows: 1920: Atlantic City, July 12; 1921: New York City, February 18; March 30, Chicago, May 5; New York City, July 8 and October 22; 1922: New York City, May 26 and October 28; 1923: New York City, March 20, May 23, and October 23; in 1924: New York City, March 3. The printed minutes of all meetings, with a detailed record of the transactions of each meeting, comprising 115 printed pages, are incorporated in the proceedings of the Book Committee and of the Board of Home Missions for the quadrennium.

Each year the Committee has submitted a full record of its work to each of the cooperating Boards, which have approved the work of the Committee and borne the expenses in accordance with the proportionate assessments recommended by the Committee. The Methodist Book Concern has served the Committee in all matters of financial accounting, paying all bills on proper vouchers and collecting the prorated assessments from the cooperating Boards.

FIELDS AND NEEDS

Starting with the information already in hand as a result of the work of the Inter-Board Conference, the Board of Home Missions, at the request of the Committee of Six, prepared tables showing (1) the extent of organized Protestant work among foreign-language-speaking peoples in the United States, and (2) periodical literature, both secular and religious, circulating among foreign-language groups in the United States.

The data contained in the foregoing table were compiled from statistics obtained from Home-Missions boards of the various Protestant denominations in the United States and Canada. They represent for the most part only such projects as receive appropriations from these boards. Three hundred and forty-nine polyglot churches of the Methodist Episcopal Church, not reported by languages, were not included in the tabulation, from which were also necessarily omitted many projects among foreign-speaking groups carried on by English-speaking churches. Statistics from Lutheran sources had not been received at the time the table was compiled (March, 1921).

METHODIST PUBLICATIONS ALREADY IN THE FIELD

Upon assuming responsibility, your Committee found the following Methodist publications in the field:

1. Der Christliche Apologete und Haus und Herd (German), a regular weekly publication of The Methodist Book Concern, established by authority of the General Conference and therefore not coming within the province of the supervision of this Committee.

2. Hymnals, Disciplines, and other books and pamphlet publications in German, Swedish, and Norwegian-Danish.

3. Periodicals subsidized by The Methodist Book Concern:

Enlightenment (Russian), New York

Sandebudet (Swedish), Chicago

Hydre Stemmen (Swedish, for young people), Chicago

Der Kristliche Talsmand (Norwegian-Danish), Chicago

Ostens Missioner (Norwegian-Danish), New York

Vidnesbyrdet (Norwegian-Danish), Seattle

Hawaiian-Korean Christian Advocate, Honolulu

Japan Methodist (Hawaiian), Honolulu

Ang Mabuting Balita (Filipino), Honolulu

Lecciones Demonicales Explicades (Spanish lesson quarterly), Albuquerque.

4. Periodicals subsidized by the Board of Home Missions:

Aurora (Portuguese), Boston

Krestan (Slovak), Pittsburgh

5. Periodical subsidized jointly by the Board of Home Missions and the Methodist Book Concern:

La Fiaccola (Italian), New York

In order not to disturb any worthy enterprise already under way, the Committee gave tentative authorization for the continuance of these publications for one year with the exception of Enlightenment (Russian), which was discontinued at the first meeting of the Committee in July, 1920. At the same time the Board of Home Missions was requested to secure for the Committee full information concerning the editorial policy and general usefulness of each publication. Subsequent action of the Committee with regard to the above named publications, based on fuller knowledge concerning the general character, cost and actual service value of each, was as follows:

The Italian weekly, La Fiaccola, was first made a monthly and then discontinued.

The Swedish weekly, Sandebudet (Chicago), was recommended for continuance as the only Swedish Methodist periodical, The Methodist Book Concern assuming responsibility for its publication.

Three Norwegian-Danish periodicals, all subsidized by The Methodist Book Concern, Ostens Missioner, Den Kristelige Talsmand, and Vidnesbyrdet, were recommended for consolidation, which recommendation was approved by the Book Committee. The new consolidated weekly, Evangelisk Tidende, is published by The Methodist Book Concern at Chicago.

The publications issued by the Methodist Mission in Hawaii, the Korean-Hawaiian Christian Advocate and Japan Methodist and also Ang Mabuting Balita, previously subsidized by General Conference action, were continued.

The Portuguese monthly, Aurora, published by the Morgan Memorial Church, Boston, was continued, The Methodist Book Concern and Board of Home Missions and Church Extension sharing equally in the expense.

The Slovak monthly, Krestan, edited and published by a Slovak Methodist minister, has been taken over and is being published jointly by the Congregational and Methodist Episcopal Churches, the Board of Home Missions and Methodist Book Concern sharing equally in the Methodist part of the total expense.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

During the quadrennium your Committee has been instrumental in producing the following new publications:

Racconti per i Fanciulli (Italian-English story leaf): During two years of the quadrennium there was published an Italian-English story leaf, the story in which was based on the International Improved Uniform Lesson as treated in the Primary Quarterly. This leaflet was intended to be taken home by children in Italian Sunday schools in order that parents who are not familiar with the English language might see what their children were studying in Sunday school. The publication met with great favor in many quarters and was used not only for the purposes indicated, but also as a tract. Later, however, it was consolidated with the new Italian weekly publication, the lesson continuing to appear as a Children's Department in that weekly.

Bilingual Lesson Quarterlies: With the approval of the Committee of Six on behalf of the Methodist Episcopal Church, a plan was devolved by the Sunday School Council Standing Advisory Committee to meet the needs of the foreign-speaking adults who might be reached by our Protestant churches with suitable literature for Bible study. In accordance with this plan Bible study courses covering two years have been issued in undated forty-eight-page quarterlies having six bilingual editions and entitled in English "Bible Lessons for Adults in Home and School." The courses include the Life of Christ, Studies in the Christian Life, The Early Christian Churches, and Songs and Prayers in the Old Testament. A third year is under consideration. Each number contains thirteen Bible lessons and a small amount of magazine matter, the Bible lessons and part of the magazine matter being printed bilingually. The six language groups thus supplied are Czech (Bohemian), Italian, Magyar (Hungarian), Polish, Russian and Spanish. Six denominational printing houses have entered into the plan, each publishing house publishing one of the editions under a common imprint title, "The United Religious Press." Under this arrangement the Czech-English edition is printed by The Methodist Book Concern. The English material is substantially the same in all of the six quarterlies and is prepared under the direction of an interdenominational editorial committee on which the Committee of Six is represented.

Tracts—Forty-one tracts have been prepared and distributed in thirteen languages, from one to seven in each language. These have been furnished to workers among foreign-language groups for free distribution in quantities sufficiently limited to guarantee their profitable use. The total number thus circulated has been a little in excess of 500,000. The "Social Creed of the Churches" and "Facts and Figures concerning the Methodist Episcopal Church," a brief statement of what the church is doing, where it is working, how it began and what it believes in terms of life and experience, have each been issued in eleven languages. Another leaflet, "The Church and the Workingman," issued in Italian and Russian, is meeting with large favor.

The leaflet "Prohibition of Alcohol in the United States" was prepared by an American of foreign birth in an effort to present to non-English people the truth regarding the agencies which brought about the prohibition of the liquor traffic. It is a statement of fact and not propaganda.

La Voce: Following the discontinuance of the Italian paper, La Fiaccola, negotiations were entered into with other denominations looking toward the publication of an interdenominational Protestant Italian weekly. Considerable interest was manifested on the part of the Baptist, Congregational and Presbyterian Boards and efforts were made to secure the hearty cooperative support of the Italian membership of these churches. In the end, however, the negotiations failed. Thereupon the Italian Methodist pastors in conference assembled expressed a desire to reestablish a Methodist Italian periodical, preferably weekly. The Committee of Six conferred with representatives of the Italian ministers and upon receiving assurance from the Italian ministers of their united cordial support of such an undertaking, the Committee recommended to the Board of Home Missions and The Methodist Book Concern the experimental publication of a new Italian weekly and appointed an Editorial and Publication Committee to supervise the enterprise. Under this arrangement and with the approval of the cooperating agencies, La Voce, an Italian weekly, was launched, January 1, 1923. The excellent showing made by the publication at the end of the first year, especially in regard to the total support received from Italian sources, including the number of paid subscriptions, induced the Committee to approve the continuance of the publication of La Voce during 1924, "subject to the action of the General Conference or such supervisory body as the General Conference may appoint."

Lithuanian Ritual: A booklet has been prepared in the Lithuanian language containing the Lord's Prayer, the Ten Commandments, the Apostles' Creed, six selected hymns with responsive readings and sections of the ritual, including the services for baptism, the Lord's Supper, marriage and reception into membership in the Church. Of this booklet three thousand copies have been printed and distributed.

Lithuanian Hymnal: A small Lithuanian hymnal containing twenty-five selected hymns, chiefly from our Methodist hymnal, has been prepared and published.

Norwegian-Danish Hymnal: The Committee has cooperated with the Methodist Book Concern in producing a revised church hymnal for our Norwegian-Danish constituency.

Committee of Six on Foreign-Language Publications Statement of Financial Cooperation

The following does not include foreign-language publications subsidized by the Book Concern alone under General Conference authorization or action of the Committee of Six and the Book Committee. Nor does it include the subsidies and settlement of deficit on La Fiaccola which were shared by the Methodist Book Concern and the Board of Home Missions.

METHODISM'S RESPONSIBILITY

Encouraging as is this record of work for the quadrennium, it can be considered only as a small beginning of the work of the Methodist Episcopal Church in literature production for foreign-language groups in the United States. Both the historic traditions of Methodism and its numerical strength in the United States point to the proportionally large measure of responsibility resting upon our Church for the evangelization of the strangers within our gates. Christian literature is an effective tool of evangelism. When printed in the languages spoken by those seeking the blessings of freedom and protection under the American flag, such evangelistic and missionary literature brings to the emigrant groups their first understanding of the Protestant Christian principles upon which the American republic is founded, and without an understanding of which alien groups in the United States are likely to become a menace rather than a source of renewed strength to our free Christian institutions.

The Church should, therefore, look forward to a very large extension of the work of producing evangelistic and missionary literature for foreign-language groups. The initial systematic organization and prosecution of this work constitutes the record of this committee for the past quadrennium. It is the judgment of your Committee that this type of service should be continued under such auspices as will insure its independent and rapid development.

Respectfully submitted,

INTRODUCTION

1. GENESIS OF THE COMMISSION: The General Conference of 1920 had presented to it various memorials dealing with the question of Foreign-Language Conferences in the United States. These memorials were referred to the Committee on Itinerancy. This Committee brought out a report which as amended was adopted as follows:

Your Standing Committee on Itinerancy, to which were referred various memorials from Wisconsin, New York East, Eastern Swedish, Rock River, Detroit, and other Conferences touching the subject "Foreign-Speaking Conferences in America," reports thereon as follows:

We recommend that a Commission of Seven be appointed by the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension to report to the General Conference of 1924:

First, Concerning the work among foreign-speaking people in our midst; what has been done in the past, what the present situation and needs are; and,

Second, As to the best and most effective methods of promoting and organizing the work of our Church among foreign-speaking people, and,

Third, What changes, if any, may be needed by our foreign-language Conference in America.—(General Conference Journal, 1920, Page 508.)

2. APPOINTMENT AND ORGANIZATION: In accordance with this resolution, the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension in its meeting on Friday, December 2, 1921, appointed a Commission of Seven, as follows: O. W. Auman, F. C. Eiselen, W. H. G. Gould, E. J. Helms, C. O. Holmes, E. J. Lockwood and A. P. Sloan.

The following organization was effected: O. W. Auman, Chairman; E. J. Lockwood, Vice-Chairman; W. M. Gilbert (at that time Secretary of the Bureau of Foreign-Speaking Work of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension), was made Recording Secretary; and C. W. Blanpied was elected Director of Surveys to the Commission. The Executive Committee of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension was requested "To make available the services of F. W. Mueller for such service as the Commission may desire of him."

The Commission as thus organized, set about its task with the purpose of gathering information on which to base its findings.

3. METHOD AND SCOPE OF THE INVESTIGATION: Something of the great amount of work that has been given to this study is suggested by the scope of the investigation. A vast correspondence has been had from many sources, especially with pastors and laymen and other leaders from both the foreign-language and English-speaking Conferences. An extensive personal visitation has been made both by the Director and by members of the Commission. A complete card file of foreign language churches and missions has been assembled; church records, Conference minutes and other reports have been searched; Government documents and the findings of other organizations and research agencies have been analyzed and finally, many conferences have been held with individuals and groups, laymen, staff workers, ministers and supervising leadership.

4. SEVEN CARDINAL TASKS: The seven cardinal tasks which the Commission faced in determining its policy with reference to the work among foreign language peoples in America, may be stated as follows:

1. To justify evangelical responsibility for work among each nationality group of foreign language peoples in the United States.

2. To ascertain the needs of those nationality groups for which evangelical responsibility exists.

3. To justify and show extent of Methodist Episcopal responsibility for work among these various nationality groups.

4. To determine the best method of approach to be used in work among each nationality group for which Methodist Episcopal responsibility exists.

5. To determine the form of organization best adapted to these various nationality groups.

6. To determine the program of work needed by, and best suited for each nationality group.

7. To determine the type of leadership best suited for work among the various nationality groups and ascertain how it may best be recruited and where and how trained.

5. THE CONTROLLING PURPOSE: The controlling purpose in the mind of the Commission as it set about its task was to bring about and facilitate those conditions under which foreign-language and English-speaking peoples may cooperate for the formation of Christian character, the building of a Christian community life and the constructing of a Christian social order.

6. NATIONALITY GROUPS: Realizing that no study could be made of foreign-language work without taking into account the various racial and nationality backgrounds, and knowing that a common program would not be possible, treating all nationality groups alike, the Commission has made its study, using the following national or language units: Albanian, Armenian, Assyrian, Bulgarian, Czecho-Slovak, Chinese, Danish, Dutch, Filipino, Finnish, Flemish, French, French-Canadian, German, Austrian, Greek, Hebrew, Hindu, Italian, Japanese, Jugo-Slav, Lett, Lithuanian, Magyar, Norwegian, Polish, Portuguese, Roumanian, Russian, Spanish and Mexican, Swedish, Syrian and Turkish.

7. RESULTS OF SURVEYS: The Commission cannot escape the feeling of tremendous responsibility resting upon the Church at this period in the history of the world. It believes that the subject of relationship existing between the foreign language populations of America and the Nation itself is of prime importance. To the end that this national relationship may become more and more productive of results, it bespeaks a close study on the part of all upon the subject of national immigration legislation, so that a wide use of the ballot may bring about proper immigration policies, both foreign and domestic.

As to the Church which is interested primarily in domestic relationships and policies, we cannot escape the conviction that upon the proper working out of its responsibility to that one-third of the population of America which has an immediate foreign stock background, will depend its future progress along lines of brotherhood and such other Kingdom attributes as peace and good will among our own peoples, as well as to those throughout the world.

The Kingdom of God cannot come on earth, nor can it be approached in America on any basis that will leave out of account these multitudes of foreign-born and foreign-thinking peoples.

The Church of John Wesley, who held the world to be his parish, we are convinced, must recognize its full share of responsibility in working out a policy and in promoting a program that will meet its full share of responsibility for evangelizing and for implanting in these new peoples the true spirit of American institutions.

II. HISTORY OF THE IMMIGRATION MOVEMENT

1. HISTORICAL RÉSUMÉ: The history of immigration may be roughly divided into the following periods:

a. Prior to the Revolutionary War. Inasmuch as one cannot speak of immigrants coming into a country until that country has been formed, the peoples who came to America prior to the Revolutionary War were colonists, not immigrants, and should be thought of as such. These colonists were mostly from Great Britain and Ireland. Others came from Holland and the German Palatinate; a few were Swedish and a few others were French Huguenots driven from France by Louis the Fourteenth.

b. Immigration between the establishment of the Federal Government, 1789 to 1819. There is no record kept of the number of immigrants arriving in the country during this period. The estimate secured from ship records of arrivals from the close of the Revolutionary War to 1820, is placed at 250,000. The immigration was mostly from Great Britain.

c. Immigration between 1819 and 1882. The first immigration records were kept by the Collectors of Customs at ports of entry. In the year 1820 the total immigration was only 8,385. Of this the United Kingdom furnished 6,024; 968 were German; 371 French; 139 Spanish and 387 came from other parts of North and South America. From 1827 on there was a steady increase up to 1850, when the number reached 310,000. The most rapid advance was made between 1845 and 1847, when the number increased from 114,371 to 234,968. The chief cause of this sudden movement was economic disturbances in Europe. This was especially true of Ireland. The revolution of 1848 in Germany caused even faster advance until in 1854 a total of 427,833 was received. This was the high point in the movement of immigration until 1873, the number falling off to 72,183 in 1862.

After the Civil War there was another steady advance, up to 1873, the number reaching that year 459,803, the highest peak up to that time since the beginning of immigration, but only 32,000 more than the number in 1854. The financial crisis of 1873 brought commercial and industrial depression in both America and Europe and caused immigration to decline, reaching the low mark of 138,469 in 1878.

d. Immigration between 1882 and 1920, or the period of national control. The first national immigration law was passed in 1882. It excluded convicts except for political offenses, lunatics, idiots and "persons likely to become a public charge." The Act of 1885 forbade the importation of contract labor. That of 1891 further excluded polygamists and persons suffering from loathsome, dangerous diseases and strengthened the Contract Labor Law. In 1903 anarchists and prostitutes were excluded. The Act of 1906 added to the excluded classes "unaccompanied children under seventeen years of age" and mentally or physically defective. The Act of 1910 forbade the white slave traffic.

The highest immigration mark yet attained was reached in 1882, the number being 788,992. One of the causes for this sudden rise was no doubt the "May Laws" of Russia which caused the migration of many Hebrews. The number coming from Russia this year was four times as great as it had been in 1881, and grew to seven times as great in 1890. After the operation of the Act of 1882 began to take effect, the number again declined followed by an increase. After 1892 an industrial depression caused another decline in immigration until in 1898 the lowest point was reached since 1879. From 1899 the number again increased rapidly, passing all previous records in 1903 and reaching in 1907 the highest point in the history of the immigration movement, the number being 1,285,349. Another industrial depression caused the number to decrease to 751,786 in 1909, then steadily increase until in 1914 it reached a number within 64,000 of the high immigration of 1907. The number in 1915 was only 326,700, falling in 1918 to 110,618, the lowest point since the Civil War.

e. Immigration under the Restrictive Three Per Cent Act of 1920. Immediately upon the signing of the Armistice and the opening of the lines of travel, immigration began to show an increase. The year 1920 brought in 430,001, almost doubling in 1921, reaching the high figure of 805,228. During this year, however, the operation of the Restrictive Three Per Cent Immigration Act including the Literacy Test, caused the total immigration to fall to 309,556. Industrial depression following the War, however, contributed to this low figure as certain of the countries did not fill their quotas of those permitted to come in.

The operation of the Three Per Cent Restrictive Act is as follows: An annual quota is fixed, based on three per cent of the number resident in the United States in 1910 born in any given country. This quota is divided into five equal parts; one of which is made the maximum monthly quota. In other words, during the first five months if the maximum monthly quota is filled each month, the full annual quota may be exhausted, which means that no more immigrants from that country can be admitted to the United States during the remaining months of the year.

2. RECENT IMMIGRATION: During the first six months of the immigration year 1923-1924, according to the report for the week ending January 9, 1924, the following countries had exhausted their full annual quotas: Belgium, Bulgaria, Finland, Great Britain and Ireland, Greece, Italy, Lithuania, Netherlands, Poland, Portugal, Roumania, Russia, Spain, Switzerland and Syria.

We had received from Czecho-Slovakia 97 per cent of her annual quota; from Germany 96 per cent; from Turkey 92 per cent; from Hungary 91 per cent; from Sweden 90 per cent; from Austria 85 per cent; from Norway 83 per cent; from Jugo Slavia 77 per cent and from Denmark 64 per cent.

Of the total annual quota of 357,803, already 342,446 or 96 per cent had been admitted, which left only 4 per cent of the annual permissible quota that could be admitted between January 9 and July 1, 1924.

3. EMIGRATION: The fact that so many return to the "old country" makes the net increase very slight. During the year ending June 30, 1922, the net increase was only 87,000; while the previous year before the operation of the Three Per cent Act, the net increase had been 552,000. Emigration since 1908 has ranged in different years from 32 per cent in 1910 to 91 per cent in 1917 of the immigration, the average being 45 per cent.

In 1921-1922, 50.3 per cent of the emigrants were laborers; while only 10.6 per cent of the immigrants arriving were laborers. On the other hand, 16.7 per cent of the immigrants were skilled laborers, against only 9 per cent of the emigrants. It is evident, then, that under the new Act the character of immigration has changed. Fewer laborers are arriving, and a larger proportion of women and children and non-wage earners is observed. Because of the large emigration of laborers, however, there is a net decrease of this class.

4. IMMIGRATION ANALYSIS OVER 100 YEARS: Since 1820, 35,000,000 immigrants have come to the United States from foreign countries. Of this number, 20,200,000 arrived during the first 82 years (1820-1902) while 14,800,000 have arrived during the past twenty years (1902-1922).

In order to understand the change in the type of immigration, it will be necessary to analyze the above immigration figures under three general classifications:

First. Immigration from English-speaking countries, such as: Great Britain, Ireland, Canada (other than French), Australia, etc.

Second. Older immigration, such as: Germany, Scandinavian countries, France, Switzerland, Belgium, Netherlands and Canadian French.

Third. The new immigration from Southern and Eastern Europe, Asia Minor and Spanish-speaking American countries.

During the first 82 years, 37 per cent of the immigrants came from English-speaking countries; 39 per cent from the older immigration countries, and only 22 per cent from the newer immigration countries; 2 per cent were others not in the above classification.

During the last twenty years only 13 per cent of the immigrants have come from English-speaking countries; 14 per cent from the older immigration countries; while 70 per cent have come from the newer immigration nations.

By combining the two periods, we find that during the 102 years, of the 35,000,000 arrivals, 27 per cent came from English-speaking countries; 29 per cent from the older immigration group; while 42 per cent represents the newer immigration.

5. IMMIGRATION SINCE 1899: Again, if we take the immigration that has come into the United States since 1899, it will serve to emphasize this shift in type of immigrant.

The total number of immigrant aliens admitted during this period was 16,406,268 or 164 hundred-thousandths. Keeping to this "hundred-thousandths" comparison, we find that 23 of the 164 were English-speaking by birth and that 21 came from foreign language countries of the older immigration group; (1 from France; 3 Canadian French; 1 each from Switzerland, Belgium and The Netherlands; 6 from Germany; and 8 from Scandinavian countries); while 117 represent the newer immigration peoples divided as follows: 36 from Italy; 35 from Austria-Hungary and 28 from Russia before the divisions of these territories into Poland, Czecho-Slovakia, Jugo-Slavia, Finland, Lithuania and Roumania, etc., by the Treaty of Versailles; 4 were Greeks; 7 Spanish, including Mexican; 2 from Portugal; 3 from Bulgaria, Turkey and Asia Minor; and 2 miscellaneous white; China and Japan furnished 3.

Recapitulated, we have the following foreign language arrivals from 1899 to 1923:

Total New Immigration.....	11,691,691
Total Old Immigration.....	2,070,522
Excess of New over Old.....	9,621,169

6. RATE OF INCREASE DURING DECADE 1910-1920: In this connection it will be of interest to note the rate of increase of the various foreign language groups during the decade from 1910 to 1920. French immigration was practically negligible during this decade. From the older immigration countries there was an increase as follows: Norway, 4.5 per cent; Germany, 5.6 per cent; Sweden, 6.5 per cent, and Denmark, 13.8 per cent.

On the other hand, the countries of the newer immigration showed an enormous percentage of increase. Immigration from Montenegro, Slovenia and Bohemia increased from 14 per cent to 17 per cent; Bulgaria 25 per cent; Finland 34 per cent; Dalmatia 42 per cent; Poland 48 per cent; Hungary 50 per cent; Croatia 52 per cent; Italy 58 per cent; Lithuania 62 per cent; Armenia 98 per cent; Serbia 91 per cent; Slovakia 120 per cent; Albania 173 per cent; Ruthenia 174 per cent, and from Russia 701 per cent.

III. PRESENT COMPOSITION OF POPULATION

If we take the present composition of the population in the United States, that is, according to the latest Government census (1920), we find the following facts:

1. FOREIGN-BORN AND FOREIGN PARENTAGE ANALYSIS: The total population of continental United States in 1920 was 105,710,620. Of this number 34.7 per cent were either born in a foreign country or were children of foreign or mixed parents.

Of this number 21.6 per cent were the children of foreign parents (14.9 per cent both parents foreign-born and 6.7 per cent one parent foreign-born), and 13.2 per cent were born in a foreign country.

2. FOREIGN-WHITE STOCK: Separating the foreign-white stock from the total, we find that 36,398,958, or 34.4 per cent of the population, were of foreign-born white stock; 21.4 per cent or 22,686,204 of which were children of foreign-white parents; with 13 per cent or 13,712,754 foreign-born white.

Thus, more than one-third of our population is under direct foreign influence, not taking into account the grandchildren and ancestry further removed.

3. MOTHER TONGUE: Analyzing this foreign-white stock further by dividing it according to "mother tongue" spoken, we find that of every 1,000 persons in the United States, 364 were either born abroad or are the children of foreign-born parents.

If these 364 people of foreign tongue were marching in procession, grouped according to language, past a reviewing stand, of every 364, 97 would speak English, 82 German, 34 Italian, 24 Polish, 20 Jewish, 15 Swedish, 13 French, 12 Czecho-Slovak, 10 Norwegian, 9 Spanish, 8 Russian, 5 Danish, 5 Magyar, 4 Jugo-Slav, 4 Dutch and Flemish, 3 Finnish, 3 Lithuanian, 2 Portuguese, 2 Greek, 1 Roumanian, 1 miscellaneous, 8 of mixed mother tongue, while 2 would speak the language of either Armenia, Syria, Arabia, Bulgaria, Turkey or Albania.

Or again of the 364, 97 would be English-speaking by birth; 129 would be German, Scandinavian and French, etc., representing the older immigration to America; and 130 would come from Southern and Eastern Europe, Asia minor and Spanish America representing the newer immigration while 8 would be of mixed mother tongue.

4. FOREIGN-BORN POPULATION IN 1920: The largest number of any nationality group living in the United States in 1920 who were born abroad was that of the German, the number being 1,686,102.

The Italian-born rank next highest with 1,610,109. Foreign-born from Russia and Poland are third and fourth, those from Russia numbering 1,409,498 and Poland 1,139,978. These two groups included the Hebrew, which makes it impossible to get at the exact number of Russians and Poles, which was more accurately given under the "mother tongue" study.

Speaking in terms of "hundred-thousands," there were 17 German foreign-born in 1920. For each 17 Germans there were 16 Italians; 14 from Russia; 11 from Poland; 10 Irish; 8 English; 8 Canadians (other than French); 6 Swedes; 6 Austrians; 5 Mexicans; 4 Hungarians; 4 Norwegians; 4 Czecho-Slovakians; 3 French Canadians; 3 Scots; 2 Danes; 2 Greeks; 2 Jugo-Slavs; 1 Finn; 1 Lithuanian; 1 Netherlander; 1 Roumanian; 1 Swiss; 1 Frenchman; 1 Spanish; 1 Portuguese, and 4 miscellaneous, including 81,500 Japanese, 43,600 Chinese, and 5,000 from India.

Thus, of the total foreign-born white population (13,712,754), thinking in terms of hundred-thousands, of the 137 units 29 came from English-speaking countries; 35 from the older immigration foreign language countries; and 71 from the newer immigration foreign language countries.

IV. OTHER POPULATION FACTORS

1. SEX: A study of immigration according to sex by nationality reveals the fact that a great many more men come to America than do women. During the decade ending in 1909 which furnished the largest volume in history, 69.5 per cent of the immigrants were males. The Irish were the only nationality furnishing a larger number of females than males, the percentage of females being 52.1 per cent. The Hebrew ranked next highest with 43.4 per cent females; the Czechs furnished only 43 per cent female; French 42 per cent; Portuguese 40.5 per cent. The countries furnishing a percentage of females between 30 per cent and 40 per cent were: Dutch, Finnish, Mexican, Polish, Scandinavian, Scotch, Spanish-American, Syrian and Welsh. Those countries which showed a female immigration of between 20 per cent and 30 per cent were: Italian, Lithuanian, Magyar, Ruthenian and Slovak; those between 10 per cent and 20 per cent were Croatian, Slovenian, Japanese and Russian. The lowest female immigration came from Turkey, being 3.7 per cent; the Chinese 4 per cent; Bulgaria, Serbia and Montenegro 4.3 per cent; Greece 4.9 per cent; and Dalmatia and Herzegovinia 7.7 per cent.

Of the total population in the United States, to every 100 females there are 104 males; for the native-born of native parents, there are 103 males for every 100 females; while for foreign-born white, there are 122 males for every 100 females. For every 100 Japanese females, there are 190 males; while for the Chinese, there is only 1 woman for every 7 men. There are 142 foreign-born males for every 100 females in rural districts and only 116 in the city to every 100 females.

2. SEPARATION OF FAMILIES: It is also revealed by a study of immigration data that it is the practice of men to come to the United States leaving their wives in the "old country." Sometimes they send for them, but more often they come to America to earn money with which to return. Out of a total number of 145,354 husbands for which data is available, 23 per cent had left their wives in the mother country. By nationalities, we find that 97 per cent of Macedonian Greeks had left their wives abroad; Bulgarians, 90 per cent; Turks, 84 per cent; Montenegrins, 76 per cent; Greeks, 75 per cent; Roumanians, 74 per cent; and Servians, 65 per cent. At least one half of the husbands of all other nationalities brought their wives with them, the Scandinavian, German, Spanish, Mexican and Portuguese rating the highest, having less than 10 per cent of wives left at home.

3. BIRTH RATE AND RACIAL STOCK: Another matter of interest has to do with the birth rate of foreign-born mothers as compared with native born. A recent census based on birth registration area in the United States, which takes into account 65 per cent of the population in 27 states, shows the following facts:

The birth rate in 1921 was 24.3 per thousand. White mothers born in the United States average 3 children; white mothers foreign-born average 4 children. English immigrant stock mothers average 3 children; Austrian and German, 4.3; Italian, 4.4; and Polish, 4.6.

4. AGE GROUPS: Foreign born white population and children of foreign-born parents in the United States distributed according to age groups are as follows:

Age Period	Foreign Born	Children of Foreign Parents
Under 1 year.....	5,000	560,000
Between 1 and 7 years.....	85,000	3,640,000
7 to 13 years, inclusive.....	380,000	3,800,000
15 to 19 years, inclusive.....	740,000	3,050,000
20 to 44 years, inclusive.....	7,000,000	8,000,000
45 years and over.....	5,400,000	3,750,000
21 years and over.....	12,500,000	11,600,000

Of the total foreign-born population, 91 per cent are over 21 years of age, and 54 per cent are between 18 and 44 years of age. Of the native-born of foreign parentage, 51.2 per cent are over 21 years of age, and 40 per cent are between 18 and 44 years of age. Only 10 per cent of the foreign-born and 5 per cent of the children of foreign parents are over 65 years of age.

5. PUBLIC SCHOOL ATTENDANCE: It is interesting to note that during the primary and grammar school years a greater percentage of children of foreign-born parents attend school than do the native children of native parents. Thus, in the 5 and 6 years age group, 47 per cent foreign parents' children attend school, as against 41 per cent native parents' children. In the 7 to 13 years, inclusive, age group, the percentage is 94.1 per cent foreign parents' children as against 92.2 per cent native parents' children. This percentage is reversed in favor of the native parents' children for the older age groups, the gap growing wider in proportion to age. In the 14 to 15 years age group, 84 per cent of the native parents' children attend school, as against 78 per cent foreign parents' children. In the 16 to 17 age group, the percentages are 49 per cent and 35 per cent respectively, while in the 18 to 20 age group, they are 18 per cent and 12 per cent respectively. The general average, however, for school attendance between 5 and 20 years shows only 1.1 per cent in favor of the native children of native parents.

6. PAROCHIAL SCHOOL ATTENDANCE: The United States Immigration Commission of 1907 found in twenty-four cities of the United States a parochial school enrollment of 221,159; of this number, 64 per cent were either foreign-born or the children of foreign-born fathers. In six of the cities the number of children of foreign-born fathers exceeded 80 per cent of the enrollment, and in only two was the percentage lower than 40 per cent. The enrollment by nationality was as follows: Irish, 59,500; German, 21,400; Polish, 15,700; Italian, 15,400; French Canadian, 10,000; Czech, 2,400; Magyar, 1,900; French, 1,500, and Slovaks, 1,200.

7. ILLITERACY: The total illiteracy in the United States for ages of 10 years and over in 1920 equalled 4,900,000 or 6 per cent of population over that age. Of this number, 2.5 per cent of native white parentage were illiterate; while only 0.8 per cent of children of foreign-born white parents were illiterate. Foreign-born whites showed an illiteracy of 13 per cent. A greater percentage of males than females of native-white parents were illiterate; while 3.1 per cent more females than males of foreign-born whites were illiterate.

The per cent of illiteracy according to nationality for foreign-born whites was as follows:

The Portuguese rank highest, with 54 per cent illiterate. Those between 30 per cent and 40 per cent illiterate were: Ruthenians, Italians South, Albanians, Macedonians and Jugo-Slavs. Those between 20 per cent and 30 per cent illiterate were: Russians, Lithuanians, Polish, Greeks and Mexicans. Those between 10 per cent and 20 per cent illiterate were: Roumanian, Italian North, Slovak, Austrian, French Canadian and Magyar.

The foreign-language countries having the lowest per cent of illiteracy were the Scandinavians, Japanese, Germans, Finns and Czechs.

8. ABILITY TO SPEAK ENGLISH: From a study made by the Immigration Commission among industrial employees, the following percentages, by nationalities, were obtained of those who were able to speak English. In every case the males have a higher percentage than the females. The totals are as follows:

Scandinavian countries, 94 to 97 per cent; German, 87 per cent; Hebrew, 75 per cent; French Canadian, 67 per cent; Czech, 65 per cent; Mexican, 59 per cent; Italian North, 56 per cent; Italian South, 44 per cent; Slovak, 55 per cent; Jugo Slav States, 40 per cent to 55 per cent; Russian, 44 per cent;

Polish, 39 per cent; Portuguese, 38 per cent; Rumanian, 34 per cent; Greek, 31 per cent; and Bulgarian, 21 per cent.

9. CITIZENSHIP: A study showing the naturalized and those holding "first citizenship papers" shows the Germans leading all other nationalities of the older immigration foreign language group with 85 per cent. Danish and Swedish rank second with 84 per cent; then follow the Norwegians with 83 per cent; while French Canadians are the lowest with only 63 per cent.

Of the newer immigration groups, which, of course, have not been in the country for so long a period of time, the percentage of naturalized citizens and those holding "first papers" is, for the most part, lower. The Czecho-Slovaks lead in this division with 70 per cent; Roumanians are next with 63 per cent; Finns follow with 61 per cent; Russians, 60 per cent; Magyars, 64 per cent; Syrians, 51 per cent; Italians, 48 per cent; Jugoslavs and Armenians, 47 per cent each; Lithuanians, 46 per cent; Polish, 35 per cent; Greeks, 32 per cent; Portuguese, 24 per cent; Spanish, 16 per cent, and Mexicans only 5 per cent.

V. FOREIGN LANGUAGE DISTRIBUTION

1. CITIES: Of the city population, 45.2 per cent are native-born white; 20.9 per cent foreign parentage; and 19.1 per cent foreign-born white, making a total of 40 per cent foreign stock either foreign-born or first generation of foreign parents.

2. RURAL: Of the rural population, that is, towns less than 2,500 and open country territory, 65.9 per cent of the population is native white of native parents. 13.5 per cent are children of foreign-born parents, and 6.5 per cent are foreign-born whites, making a total of 20 per cent of the rural population foreign-born and their children.

3. BY STATES: If we add to the foreign-born the children of foreign-born parents, we have the following distribution by states: New York takes first rank with 6,503,761; Pennsylvania ranks second with 3,682,655; Illinois has 3,232,770; Massachusetts, 2,572,751. Michigan, Ohio, New Jersey, California, Wisconsin and Minnesota each has between 1,500,000 and 2,000,000 foreign-born and their children. The following states have between 500,000 and 1,000,000: Connecticut, Iowa, Texas, Missouri, Washington, Nebraska and Indiana. In eighteen other states there are between 100,000 and 500,000 people of foreign birth and their children. Of the remaining thirteen states, all are in the South, except Nevada and New Mexico. Their foreign stock population ranks from 83,000 in Virginia to 18,000 in North Carolina.

4. COUNTY, CITY AND WARD FOREIGN-BORN NATIONALITY

COLONIES: Inasmuch as the Census gives no county, city or ward analysis of the children of foreign-born parents, the following figures will represent foreign-born distribution only. This is a perfectly safe method, inasmuch as the children will be found relatively in the same location as are the parents. If anyone wishes to obtain an idea of the total foreign stock population under any given heading, it will be necessary only to multiply the foreign-born population by 3 for the English-speaking immigration, 3.7 for the older immigration groups and 4.3 for the newer immigration groups. For the German multiply by 4.3; for the Italian, 4.4; and for the Polish, 4.6.

We have taken the county, city and ward territorial units of the United States and worked out the foreign-born distribution by nationality. The Commission is, therefore, in possession of detailed facts regarding the distribution of all nationality groups, but it is evident that only some general totals can be printed in this abstract.

a. County Foreign-Born Nationality Colonies.—There are 9,775 county groups containing over 100 foreign-born people of a given nationality. The following table will show the number and size of these county colonies:

VII. EXTENT OF METHODIST EPISCOPAL WORK

The territorial scope of the study ordered by the General Conference has been taken to be that territory under the jurisdiction of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension. Thus, Porto Rico, Hawaii and Alaska are included in the survey. Within this territory the Methodist Episcopal Church has work among foreign language peoples as follows:

1. ORGANIZED WORK:

a. Annual Conferences:

Ten German, designated as follows: East, Central, Chicago, Northwestern, Northern, Saint Louis, Southern, Western, Pacific, and California.

Four Swedish, as follows: Eastern, Central, Northern, and Western.

Two Norwegian-Danish, as follows: Norwegian and Danish, and Western Norwegian-Danish.

b. Mission Conferences:

Two Swedish, as follows: Southern and Pacific and Porto Rico.

c. Missions:

Five, as follows: Hawaii, Pacific Chinese, Pacific Japanese, Latin America and Southwest Spanish.

EPISCOPAL AREAS: These Conferences and Missions are assigned to the following areas for Episcopal supervision:

New York Area: East German and Eastern Swedish Conferences.

Pittsburgh Area: Porto Rico Mission Conference.

Detroit Area: Central German, Norwegian and Danish, and Northern Swedish Conferences.

Chicago Area: Chicago German and Central Swedish Conferences.

Saint Paul Area: Northern German Conference.

Saint Louis Area: Saint Louis German Conference.

Omaha Area: Northwest German Conference.

Wichita Area: Southern German Conference and Southern Swedish Mission Conference.

Denver Area: West German and Western Swedish Conferences, and Southwest Spanish Mission.

Portland Area: Pacific German and Western Norwegian-Danish Conferences and Pacific Swedish Mission Conference.

San Francisco Area: California German Conference and Pacific Chinese, Pacific Japanese, Latin American and Hawaii Missions.

2. UNORGANIZED WORK:

a. Regular English-speaking Church Program:

There are 303 churches in English-speaking Conferences working with a greater or less degree of success some definite program among foreign language peoples. Some are working through the regular activities of the Church, while others have departmentalized the activity, and are giving more specialized attention to it.

b. Foreign Language Churches and Mission Centers:

In the unorganized work (that is, where a foreign language church or mission center is attached to an English-speaking Conference) there are 136 definitely organized churches and mission centers. In 91 of these projects, a pastor speaking the language of his people is at work; while in the remaining places the work is carried on by English-speaking pastors and workers.

The following table will show the details of this unorganized work:

Nationality	Number of Churches and Mission Centers	Number of Language Pastors
Norwegian-Danish (Eastern Group)	13	12
Italian	45	45
Czecho-Slovak	13	10
Polish	7	5
Other Slav	14	4
Finnish	12	3
Spanish and Portuguese.....	8	5
French	6	3
Armenian	3	2
Miscellaneous	5	4
Polyglot	9	7
Totals	136	91

c. Episcopal and District Supervision:

This unorganized work is spread over most of the United States, but by far the greatest amount of the work is in the Northeast section (east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio Rivers). These 136 charges are under the Episcopal Supervision of 18 Bishops, and are located in 41 different English-speaking Conferences and 68 districts.

The following table will show the extent of the work in relation to our various areas, Conferences and districts:

	Areas	Conferences	Districts
Eastern Norwegian-Danish Group	5	8	10
Italian	11	23	36
Czecho-Slovak	7	12	12
Polish	8	8	9
Other Slav	7	7	10
Spanish and Portuguese.....	4	6	8
Finnish	5	6	9
French	4	6	6

Chinese, Hebrew, Japanese, Magyar, Lithuanian and Armenian are in from 1 to 3 areas, Conferences and districts each.

3. ANNUAL CONFERENCE REPORTS FOR 1922: The Southwest Spanish Mission had 15 effective pastors and 7 supplies. There were 21 pastoral charges, 9 of which were circuits, making 30 preaching points, 972 members and 1,401 enrolled in the Sunday School. There were 16 church buildings and 10 parsonages.

The Pacific Japanese Mission had 31 preaching points and 22 charges. There were 15 effective ministers, 1,629 full members, 1,594 enrolled in the Sunday School, 16 church buildings, 11 parsonages, and a total property value of $181,975.

The Pacific Japanese Mission has made a distinct advance along all lines during the past twenty years. It increased in full membership from 923 in 1904 to 1,696 in 1923. During this same period the Sunday School enrollment has increased from 305 to 1,933; benevolences from $419 to $5,236; ministerial support paid locally, from $2,899 to $14,205; property valuation from $36,250 to $186,475. The indebtedness has been decreased from $9,117 to $900. The per capita giving for ministerial support and benevolences in the quadrennium ending 1907 was less than $6; while the average for the present quadrennium is more than $12 per capita.

The Pacific Chinese Mission had 18 preaching places, 7 charges, 7 effective pastors and 7 church buildings. The total full membership was 498, and the Sunday School enrollment 707.

The Latin American Mission had 21 effective pastors; 4 bilingual, 2 Portuguese, 1 Italian and the rest Mexican. There were besides these, seven supplies. There were 28 appointments and 60 points where preaching, Sunday School or social work was maintained. There were 820 members, 1,931 enrolled in Sunday Schools, 11 church buildings and 6 parsonages.

The Hawaii Mission has work among three nationalities: Japanese, Korean and Filipino. There were 11 Japanese charges with 5 effective pastors; 9 Korean charges with 8 effective pastors; and 11 Filipino charges with 4 effective pastors. The Mission had 1,238 full members, 1,875 enrolled in Sunday School, 8 church buildings, 5 parsonages, and a total property value of $220,000.

The Porto Rico Mission Conference had 35 preaching points, 39 charges and 15 effective pastors. There were 2,908 full church members, 7,180 enrolled in the Sunday School, 50 church buildings, 17 parsonages, and a total property value of $161,450.

In the two Norwegian-Danish Conferences there were 114 preaching points, 89 charges. Of the 89 charges, 64 were filled by Episcopal appointment, 7 of whom were "in the studies"; 25 were "left to be supplied." There were 6,180 full members and 6,428 enrolled in 83 Sunday Schools. There were 108 church buildings and 62 parsonages, with a total property value of $940,250.

In the four Swedish Conferences and two Mission Conferences, there were 233 preaching points and 184 charges. Of the 184 charges, 128 were filled by Episcopal appointment, 19 of whom were "in the studies"; 56 were "left to be supplied." There were 19,301 full members and 20,192 enrolled in 185 Sunday Schools. There were 217 church buildings and 141 parsonages, with a total property value of $2,876,850.

In the ten German Conferences there were 544 preaching points and 454 charges. Of the 454 charges, 375 were filled by

Foreign Language Commission Abstract of Findings 1661

Episcopal appointment, 25 of whom were "in the studies." This left 79 "to be supplied." There were 58,240 full members and 71,130 enrolled in 574 Sunday Schools. There were 614 church buildings and 446 parsonages, with a total property value of $6,363,020.

For the eighteen foreign language Conferences and Mission Conferences of the older immigration groups there were 37 districts and 772 charges. 567 of these were filled by Episcopal appointment, 51 of whom were "in the studies," and 160 were "left to be supplied." There were 60 special appointments, and 17 left without appointment to attend school.

4. LEADERSHIP:

a. Effective language ministry.

The following table will show the number of charges and effective ministers listed by language groups. It will also show the number of charges and preaching points:

	Number of Charges	Number of Effective Ministers

Newer immigration groups	123	71	1
Total	136	83	2
Grand Total	1,023	740	80

Analyzing in further detail, in the 10 German Conferences we find that there were 50 more charges left "to be supplied" in 1922 than in 1900 when there were actually 101 less charges.

In 1890 there were in the 10 Conferences 108 men in the studies, while there were in 1922 only 26.

The reports show an ever-increasing number of transfers from foreign-language Conferences to English-speaking Conferences during the thirteen year period from 1910-1922 inclusive, in which time 64 were transferred from German to English-speaking Conferences, and 70 from Scandinavian into English-speaking Conferences.

The number received on trial in the 10 German Conferences steadily increased until 1890 when 32 were received. Since that point, there has been a steady decline, until there were only 5 in 1922.

Ministers received annually in full connection steadily increased up to 1890, when 30 were received. From that time there was a steady decline, only 3 being received in 1922.

In the 8 Scandinavian conferences the number received on trial declined steadily during the past ten years, decreasing from 16 in 1911 to 4 in 1917, but increasing again to 15 in 1922. There was also the same decline as to full Conference members received, the number being 17 in 1912, 3 in 1919, but increasing to 11 in 1922. Of the 15 Scandinavians received on trial in 1922, 7 were Norwegian-Danish. Of the 11 full Conference members received, 5 were Norwegian-Danish.

e. Training: The educational preparation of ministers in charge of churches in foreign-language Conferences was studied by the Commission on Life Service. The following results were obtained:

Of 441 foreign-language ministers from whom data was secured, 51 had completed both college and theological courses; 78 others were college graduates; 94 others had attended college; and 140 had completed theological diploma courses without completing college work. Of the 78 remaining, 27 had finished high school; 29 others had attended but not completed high school work, and 22 had only 8th grade training or less.

Comparing the training of these foreign-language ministers with those in the white English-speaking Conferences, we find that 11.5 per cent of the foreign-language ministers are below high school grade, as compared with 16.8 per cent of the white English Conference ministers; 59.1 per cent of the foreign-language ministers are below college grade, while only 36.7 per cent of the English Conference ministers are below college grade. Only 29.4 per cent of the foreign-language ministers are college and theological seminary trained against 46.5 per cent of the white English-speaking ministers. Only 11.6 per cent of the foreign-language ministers have complete seminary training, as against 20 per cent for the English-speaking ministers.

f. New Immigration Leadership: Two phases of the problem of leadership for the new immigration groups present themselves:

First, by far the greatest number of language pastors are those who have been trained in the country of their birth, oftentimes for the Roman Catholic and Greek Orthodox priesthood or the Lutheran or other indigenous Protestant ministry. This type has not usually learned to handle the English language very well, and in many cases has failed to adapt itself to American customs. There are some notable exceptions to this tendency. The lack of organized supervision and the sporadic attention given to examination of candidates, has resulted in many cases in accepting into Conference relations men not properly qualified.

Second, the training of bi-lingual leadership. One of the great needs of the Church is that for properly trained ministers and lay workers who have an understanding of the background and language of the various nationality groups, and who are also able to use the English language and are in thorough sympathy with American institutions. This field of training has almost wholly been neglected by the regular educational institutions of the Church. Some attention has been given to it during recent years by the Woman's Home Missionary Society in their Training Schools and by the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension, cooperating with some of our educational centers, but the quality and quantity of this leadership is in general far behind the need.

VIII. HISTORICAL DATA

1. OLDER IMMIGRATION; GERMAN, SWEDISH AND NORWEGIAN-DANISH CONFERENCE—A STATISTICAL SURVEY:

In a series of charts based on statistical information taken from the Annual Conference Minutes for ten items of report, certain tendencies of growth and decline are noticeable. The ten items for which information is tabulated are:

- | | |
|------------------------------|-------------------------------|
| 1. Ministerial support | 6. Junior League membership |
| 2. Membership (full members) | 7. Number of church buildings |
| 3. Number of Sunday Schools | 8. Number of parsonages |
| 4. Sunday School enrollment | 9. Property value |
| 5. Epworth League membership | 10. Total benevolences |

Information concerning these ten counts was gathered for the following items:

1. Beginning date
2. Number on beginning date
3. Peak date; that is, date at which number reached its highest point
4. Number on peak date
5. Number in 1921
6. Comparison of number in 1921 with previous date before peak was reached, when number reported was the same as 1921
7. Loss or gain from peak date

This study was made for all the foreign-language annual Conferences and missions from the date of organization. "Beginning date" refers to the date statistics were first reported. Prior to the organization of Conferences there were many districts in English-speaking Conferences. These were also segregated and studied for the same counts as noted above. This Conference and district information was charted so as to give the trend of growth or decline.

a. District Growth: All the district charts for the ten counts, for the period from 1837 to the organization of annual Conferences and missions, show a growth all along the line. Furthermore, the growth is rapid and in some cases precipitous. The only exception is that of benevolences, which show a more steady and at first almost imperceptible increase.

b. Early Conference Growth: The same rapid increase on all counts, with a more rapid upgrade for benevolences, is shown during the early years of the separate work of the various annual Conferences.

c. Checking Period and Decline: We find further that there is a distinct checking period, during which time the data holds about level, after which there is a period of decline, in some cases almost as precipitous as the advance during the earlier years.

It is a factor worth recording that these advances, periods of checking and decline, follow closely the immigration movements of the various nationality groups under observation. For example, the German immigration came first, and in the largest numbers. The next largest wave was from Sweden, and third, came the Norwegians and Danes. These correlations lead one to the conclusion that the progress of the Church in a foreign language has some relation to the tide of the immigration.

d. Peak Date Analysis: Analyzing these reports in more detail, we find that the date at which the peak was reached can be tabulated so as to give some correlation with immigration data for the various nationalities, and also to show at what period in the development in the various Conferences certain items of report reached their fullest strength.

For the Ten German Conferences, an analysis of these peak dates shows out of the 100 possible dates,

- 18 were still going up in 1921
- 13 reached the peak in 1920
- 35 reached the peak between 1910-1920
- 17 reached the peak between 1900-1910
- 14 reached the peak between 1890-1900
- and 3 reached the peak below 1890

For the Norwegian Conferences, out of 20 possible dates,

- 9 were still going up in 1921
- 3 reached the peak in 1920
- 4 reached the peak between 1910-1920
- 1 reached the peak between 1900-1910
- and 3 reached the peak between 1890-1900

For the Swedish Conferences, out of 60 possible dates,

- 17 were still going up in 1921
- 5 reached the peak in 1920
- 35 reached the peak between 1910-1920
- and 3 reached the peak between 1900-1910

Of the 18 Conferences, out of the possible 180 dates,
 43 were still advancing in 1921
 21 reached the peak in 1920
 71 reached the peak between 1910-1920
 21 reached the peak between 1900-1910
 17 reached the peak between 1890-1900
 and 3 reached the peak below 1890

The above figures are for the nationality groups in general. It will be well to notice the variation within the nationality groups.

For the East German Conference an analysis of the peak dates shows that out of the 10 possible dates only 1 was still advancing in 1920, the other 9 items showing a loss since the peak date. In the Central German Conference 4 of the 10 items had advanced since the peak date. In the Saint Louis German Conference 3 had advanced; Chicago German, 2; West German, 2; California German, 1; while no advance had been made in the Northern, Northwestern and Pacific German Conferences.

In the Swedish Conferences, the Eastern Swedish showed a gain for 3 of the 10 items of report; the Northern Swedish, 2; Western Swedish, 2; Southern Swedish, 5; and Pacific Swedish, 3.

The Norwegian-Danish and Western Norwegian-Danish Conferences showed advance in 4 and 5 counts respectively.

e. Summary: Taking those items which showed decline since the peak date as "minus," and those that were still increasing in 1922 as "plus," we have the following:

The German—87 minus, and 13 plus, or a loss on 87 per cent of 100 counts.

The Swedish—48 minus and 12 plus, or a loss on 80 per cent of the 60 counts.

The Norwegian-Danish—15 minus, and 5 plus, or a loss on 75 per cent of the 20 counts.

Of the total 180 counts for the 3 groups of Conferences, 150 were minus and 30 plus, or a loss of 83 1/3 per cent.

Of the 30 points gained, five were for benevolences, 9 ministerial support, 6 property value, 5 Sunday school enrollment, 3 membership, 1 Junior League and 1 Epworth League.

Analyzing still further these gains on the 30 points, the 5 Conferences showing gains in benevolences in 1922 are, of course, accounted for by the general gain. In comparing the pro rata giving of the foreign-language Conferences which will be noted in a different connection, you will find that these Conferences have made enviable records in stewardship giving, and that losses on benevolences are to be explained largely in the light of the general Centenary sag. If, however, we take the pre-Centenary figures, we find that only 3 of the 18 Conferences had a gain in 1918 over their previous records—15 showing decrease from peak dates.

The nine Conferences which show ministerial support still on the increase, are accounted for in the general up-trend of the payment of better salaries all over the Church. The six Conferences increasing in property value are accounted for in the building of better properties and the general increased valuation. Only one Conference shows increase in Epworth League and one for Junior League—all other Conferences decreasing in both these counts since two years after the beginning of the organizations in 1909. There are 5 Conferences where Sunday School enrollment and 3 where membership are still advancing.

We must, however, go a little deeper into this membership and Sunday School enrollment data if we wish to take into account all of the factors.

For 10 German Conferences, while the membership total for 1922 shows an increase over the previous two years, the peak was reached in 1917 with a total of 60,544 full members. In 1908, however, there were 60,076 members reported giving for the 9 years to the peak an increase of only 468 members. There were as far back as 1898, 58,125 members or within 74 members of the report of 1921. A report for German Sunday School scholars in 1896 shows only 240 less than in 1922, and 782 more than in 1921. This same general trend is true for the Swedish and Norwegian-Danish Conferences only the dates do not go back quite so far, although the Norwegian-Danish enrollment in 1895 was only 406 less than in 1922, a net increase of only 15 per year.

2. PERCENTAGE STUDY: The following study of percentages of increase or decrease by periods of 25 years will be of interest. The study covers the total German, Swedish and Norwegian-Danish reports for church membership and Sunday School enrollment:

a. Church Membership:

German: The gain in full membership for the German work during the first decade of report; that is, 1840–1850, was 171.2 per cent. During the decade between 1850 and 1860, an increase of 183.2 per cent. During the decade 1860–1870 when immigration fell off materially, there was a decrease in the rate of percentage, this decade only showing 48.2 per cent gain in full membership. During the period 1870–1880, a slight increase was shown, the gain being 52.1 per cent. From that time on, the drop was quite precipitous. For the 25 year period beginning 1847 and ending 1872, the German work gained in full membership 521 per cent. For the 25 years beginning 1872 and ending 1897, 102.5 per cent gain, and for the 25 years beginning 1897 and ending 1922, only 1.8 per cent gain. Or, if the last decade only is considered (1912-1922), a loss of 2 per cent.

Swedish: Of the Swedish work, the gain in full membership during the first decade of reports; that is, from 1860-1870, was 103.8 per cent. 1870-1880 there was a gain of 172 per cent. Over the 25 years beginning 1872 and ending 1897 there was a gain of 347.7 per cent. During the 25 years ending 1922, the gain is only 84.1 per cent. If we take the decade 1912-1922, the gain is only 4.3 per cent.

Norwegian-Danish: In the Norwegian-Danish work the gain in full membership during the first decade of report, 1860-1870, was 480 per cent. During the next 10 years, 1870-1880, the work remained almost stationary, showing a gain of only 3 per cent. Another large gain was reported in the decade 1880-1890 of 235.6 per cent. During the 25 years beginning 1872 and ending 1897, there was a gain of 240.6 per cent; while the last 25 years ending in 1922 shows a gain of only 16.2 per cent. Or, if we take the last decade by itself; that is, 1912-1922, there is a gain of only 0.8 per cent.

b. Sunday School Enrollment:

German Sunday-school enrollment: During the 15 years beginning 1857 and ending 1872, the gain in Sunday-school enrollment was 148.2 per cent. During the 25 years beginning in 1872 and ending 1897, the Sunday School enrollment increased 100.3 per cent, and during the 25 years beginning 1897 and ending 1922 the increase was only 0.6 per cent. If the increase over the last decade is considered, 1912-1922, the increase is 4.3 per cent. The report of the last decade which shows recent increase in Sunday-school enrollment is directly related to the opportunity for serving a larger constituency that has opened up in the foreign language work because of the increased use of English in the Sunday School.

Swedish: The gain in Sunday School enrollment for Swedish work during the 15 years beginning 1847 and ending 1872 was 715.6 per cent. For the 25 year period beginning 1872 and ending 1897, the gain in Sunday School enrollment was 758 per cent. For the 25 years beginning 1897 and ending 1922, the gain was 71 per cent. Or, if we take the last decade alone, 1912-1922, the gain was only 0.9 per cent.

Norwegian-Danish: For the first 10 years of report, 1862-1872, the Norwegian-Danish Sunday School enrollment gained 643.7 per cent. For the 25 years, 1872-1897, the gain was 310.7 per cent; for the 25 years beginning 1897 and ending 1922, the gain was only 0.4 per cent. If we take the last decade, 1912-1922, we find a gain of 11.7 per cent.

3. COMPARATIVE STUDY WITH GENERAL CHURCH: In order to compare the figures here given showing such great decrease with the increase or decrease for the general Church, we have secured the data giving the increase and decrease for all Methodist Episcopal work in United States, as a basis of such comparison. On the one hand, therefore, we have combined the percentages for the three older immigration groups comprising the eighteen Conferences of Norwegian-Danish, German and Swedish work, and, on the other hand, the English-speaking Conferences (including Negro work) of continental United States. The period covered is for 25 years, beginning 1896 and ending 1921.

4. HOME MISSION AND CHURCH EXTENSION AID: The ten German Conferences since the time of their organization have received $1,241,315 Home Mission and Church Extension aid; $471,156 Home Missions, and $770,159 Church Extension.

Swedish Conferences and Missions have received $431,816, $298,778 being Home Missions, and $133,038 Church Extension. Norwegian and Danish Conferences have received $185,049, of which $127,417 is Home Missions and $57,632 is Church Extension.

This makes a total of $1,858,180 for these eighteen Conferences, $897,351 for Home Missions, and $960,829 for Church Extension.

5. HOME MISSION AND CHURCH EXTENSION COLLECTIONS: The organized work from its beginning has given a grand total of $2,153,488 to Home Missions and Church Extension. The Swedish work has contributed $340,765, and the Norwegian-Danish work has contributed $134,605. The German work has, therefore, contributed $912,173 more than it has received. The Swedish work has received $91,051 more than it has contributed, and the Norwegian-Danish work has received $50,584 more than it has given. The total German, Swedish and Norwegian-Danish gift to Home Missions and Church Extension has been $2,628,858, which is $770,678 more than has been received.

6. BENEVOLENT GIVING: The German, Swedish and Norwegian-Danish organized Conferences and missions since their organization have contributed to the total benevolences of the Church $6,353,994. This is an annual payment of $148,065, or $1.94 per capita. Of this amount the ten German Conferences contributed $5,085,372, or $102,105 per annum, making a per capita gift of $1.90. The total Swedish contribution was $912,341; $37,468 annually, or $2.09 per capita. The two Norwegian-Danish Conferences contributed $59,142, which is $1,739 per annum, or $2.34 per capita.

The following list shows the annual per capita giving of the foreign-language Conferences and missions from their organization to the present time in order of their rank:

7. EUROPEAN RELIEF AND RECONSTRUCTION: A great deal of interest is attached to the question of the relationship existing between foreign-language work in the United States and the work of the Church in the mother country; especially is this true as regards work in Germany, Norway, Sweden and Denmark.

At the beginning of the Centenary period, which was coincident with the signing of the Armistice, there was a natural desire on the part of the nationals in America to send relief to their stricken compatriots in Europe. In this connection it must be remembered that while the Scandinavian countries had remained neutral, the economic troubles had so spread all over Europe that they were also very much in need of assistance, especially the work of the Church. The Board of Foreign Missions was among the first agents to send relief and constructive assistance to the stricken people all over Europe.

The area including Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Finland received in the five years 1919-1923 inclusive, $647,727. The area including Germany, Switzerland, and the former territory comprising Austria Hungary and Russia received $707,408. Of this $481,502 went into Germany. To this must be added the more than $400,000 spent in relief during the years of the war and immediately thereafter.

During the first two years of the Centenary money for relief in Europe was given Centenary credit. Because of this, the German people felt free to send their relief money through the regular agencies of the church. At the beginning of the third year, however, the Council of Boards of Benevolence made a ruling that thereafter such moneys designated for relief purposes only could not be given Centenary credit. This caused a great deal of hardship in the German Conferences, inasmuch as they felt the pull of relief need in Germany, and at the same time wanted to pay their regular benevolent quota in full.

There have been vast amounts of relief sent to Germany without Centenary credit. Some has been handled through the Board of Foreign Missions, but more has been sent direct or through other relief agencies.

8. CENTENARY RECORD: Notwithstanding the diversion of these amounts, the foreign-language Conferences have made a notable record during the Centenary years. From the report of Centenary receipts to November 30, 1923, which represents a period of four and one-half of the five Centenary years, we find the following percentage paid of amount due on that date. They are recorded in order of their rank with annual per capita:

Conferences	Pct. Paid Of Amount Due to Date	Paid Annually Per Capita
Northwest German	122%	$8.53
Pacific Swedish	112	7.29
West German	93	6.40
Western Swedish	89	6.21
Central German	88	5.85
California German	84	6.32
Northern German	81	6.44
Pacific German	74	6.16
Southern German	73	4.73
Western Norwegian-Danish	72	4.49
Central Swedish	70	4.88
East German	70	8.10
Southern Swedish	65	3.63
St. Louis German	64	4.18
Northern Swedish	57	3.99
Norwegian-Danish	57	3.98
Chicago German	55	4.01
Eastern Swedish	47	3.29

The eighteen foreign-language Conferences paid in during this period $2,022,980, which was 75 per cent of their quota, and represented $5.38 per capita.

Of this total amount, $1,509,595 was contributed by the ten German Conferences, which was 70 per cent of the amount due, and which represented an annual per capita gift of $5.76.

The six Swedish Conferences contributed $402,188, which was 68 per cent of the amount due, and which represented an annual per capita gift of $4.62.

The two Norwegian-Danish Conferences contributed $111,197, which was 59 per cent of the amount due, and represented an annual per capita gift of $4.07.

Some note should be made of the large giving of certain churches in some of these Conferences; for example, in the Northwest German Conference thirteen charges oversubscribed their quotas by more than $1,000. For these thirteen charges, the oversubscription is 153 per cent.

In the Pacific Swedish Conference one charge alone, Kingsburg, California, paid in more than one-half of the amount of the entire Conference. The payment for Kingsburg amounted to 221 per cent of its quota. If we subtract this church from the Conference, the remaining charges paid in only 85 per cent of their quota. The five churches in California paid 167 per cent of their quota; while the ten churches in Oregon and Washington paid in only 76 per cent.

Three churches in the Southern German Conference paid 173 per cent of their quota. If we subtract the large amount paid in by these three from the remaining charges of the Conference, it is reduced from 73 per cent to 53 per cent. In all, 115 German, 20 Swedish, and 5 Norwegian-Danish churches over-paid their Centenary quotas.

IX. INSTITUTIONS

The organized foreign-language work among the German, Swedish, and Norwegian-Danish peoples has, during the history of the work, been productive of results other than in the formation of church societies. As fast as a need arose for supplementing the specialized work which these Conferences undertook to do, there was organized the institution which would take care of the need. The following institutions should be taken into account in making a study of these groups.

1. EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS:

a. German.—The German Conferences formerly controlled a number of educational institutions of both academic and college rank. Many adjustments have been made, however, during recent years. The Charles City College of the Northwest German Conference, formerly located at Charles City, Iowa, was merged about 1914 with Morningside College, Sioux City, Iowa. The Northwest German Conference is represented on the faculty by the Vice-President of Morningside College and a collection is taken in both Conferences for the institution.

The Pacific German Conference formerly had representation on the faculty of Willamette University at Salem, Oregon. This relationship has been discontinued. Saint Paul's College of the Northern German Conference, organized in 1889 and afterwards reduced to preparatory school rank, did excellent work for more than 20 years, the enrollment at one time reaching 175. In 1917 with an enrollment of only twenty students, the institution was closed, and the school building finally sold to the "Church of God," the students being sent to Parker College at Winnebago, Minnesota.

The German Wallace College at Berea, Ohio, whose constituency was represented in the Central, Chicago and East German Conferences, formed a union with Baldwin College of the East Ohio Conference. This joint institution is now known as the Baldwin-Wallace College.

The combined value of real property, including equipment, is $694,125, with an endowment of $706,254. The number of faculty members is 81, and the students in 1922 numbered 695.

Nast Theological Seminary, a Department of Baldwin-Wallace College, has a special endowment of $131,500; six members on the faculty and 17 students enrolled. The alumni of this Department numbers 242 men.

Central Wesleyan College at Warrenton, Missouri, is the only remaining educational institution of college rank entirely under the jurisdiction of the German work. The constituent Conferences—Saint Louis German and West German—have recently had conferences with members of the Saint Louis Conference, looking toward making this college the joint institution of the English and German work in that section of the country. The total value of property, including equipment, is $206,000. There is an endowment of $350,998. The total number of faculty members is 44; the number of students 252.

The Theological Department of Central Missouri Wesleyan has a value of real property of $72,000, and endowment of $65,000. The number of faculty members is 5, and the students 40.

The Central Wesleyan College has always made a specialty of training ministers for the German Conferences in America. Among the 921 alumni there are at present 163 in German Conferences, 84 in English Conferences; 12 in other than Methodist Churches; besides 32 in foreign fields and in detached church service. There are 228 in the teaching profession. At present no class in theology is taught in German.

Blynn Memorial College, a secondary school at Brenham, Texas, is under the constituent control of the Southern German Conference. A professional school known as the Cleveland Law School, has some slight affiliation with Baldwin-Wallace College.

Dorcas Institutē, Cincinnati, Ohio, under the German Central Deaconess Board, is an educational center for the training of specialized woman workers, including deaconesses. There is also a Nurses' Training School in connection with the Bethesda Hospital work in Cincinnati.

b. Swedish Educational Institutions: Swedish Conferences have just two educational institutions; one a very small College at Austin, Texas, with a property valuation of perhaps $75,000. The Swedish Theological Seminary at Evanston, Illinois, has a total property valuation, including equipment, of $136,000, and an endowment of $50,000. There were 5 members on the faculty and 20 students enrolled in 1922. The Seminary has a working agreement with Garrett Biblical Institute whereby its students are admitted to the classes of this latter institution for most of their work. A diploma is issued upon completion of the course.

c. Norwegian-Danish Educational Institutions: The Norwegian-Danish Theological Seminary at Evanston, Illinois, is the only institution for educational work sponsored by Norwegian-Danish Methodism. They report a total property value, including equipment, of $32,000, and an endowment of $10,000.

The Norwegian-Danish Seminary was organized in 1882. The course of study extended at first over three years, and is now increased to a four-year course, which includes a theological as well as a preparatory course for students not having a high school training.

In 1890 there were 13 students; in 1900 there were only 12; and in 1910 there were 18. There was a great slump up to 1919, but in 1922 the number had risen to 28, and there is an increase in 1923 over this figure.

Most of the theological courses are taken at Garrett Biblical Institute nearby. At the completion of the course a diploma is given.

The following excerpt which is taken from the report of the Principal, gives some idea of the type of leadership desired at the present time:

"The type of leadership desired at the present time is somewhat different from what was needed some years ago. Conditions have changed somewhat in certain sections of the country. It is very essential that we have men who are able to use both the Norwegian (or Danish) and the English language without any difficulty. More than that, they must be both Americans and Norwegian-Danish in spirit; otherwise, they cannot serve as a connecting link between the two groups.

"It is also essential that our future leadership is better trained and better equipped all around than has been the case in the past."

2. HOSPITALS AND HOMES:

a. German Hospitals and Homes: German Methodism has developed a unique series of hospitals and homes. The German Central Deaconess Board organized in 1897 has grown to embrace the group known as "The Bethesda Institutions," of which the following are in the city of Cincinnati:

Deaconess Motherhouse	Bethesda School for Nurses
Bethesda Hospital	Bethesda Home for the Aged
Maternity Hospital	Louise Golder Deaconess Home
Scarlet Oaks Hospital	and Fanny Nast Gamble Memorial Chapel
Scarlet Oaks Annex for Convalescents	Nurses' Home
Children's Hospital	Gertrude Kolbe Deaconess Rest Home
Dorcas Institute	Epworth Heights Vacation Cottage

There are also branch homes in Chicago, Kansas City and Milwaukee and stations in Detroit, Michigan; Terre Haute, Indiana; Los Angeles, California, and Akron, Ohio. Other hospitals under this board are:

The Bethany Deaconess Hospital, located in Brooklyn, New York and the Deaconess Hospital in Louisville, Kentucky.

A hospital owned by the First German Church of Los Angeles, California, valued at $500,000, is operated under lease by outside agencies.

The following Old People's Homes are under German control:

Bethany, Brooklyn, New York
 Bethesda, Cincinnati, Ohio
 Old Peoples' Home, Quincy, Ohio
 Pacific Old People's Home at Los Angeles, California

The following children's homes are operated:

German Methodist Orphan Asylum, Berea, Ohio
 Central Wesleyan Orphans' Home, Warrenton, Missouri
 The William Nast Christian Home for Young Men, Cincinnati, Ohio

The total property value for the above institutions in 1922 was $2,063,613, with an endowment of $498,000. The capacity of Homes was 424, the number cared for being 377.

The German Central Deaconess Board has under its supervision 81 deaconesses and 10 probationers. Fourteen of the 30 students at Dorcas Institute are training for deaconess work.

b. Swedish Homes: The following homes for the aged are under the jurisdiction of Swedish Methodism:

Bethel Swedish Home, Ossining, New York
 Bethany Home, Chicago, Illinois
 Emmanuel Home, Clay Center, Kansas.

The total property value of the above institutions is $434,000. The capacity of Homes is 171 and the number of occupants in Homes in 1922 was 155.

Other work carried on by Swedish Methodism:

Immigrant and Port Mission, Brooklyn, N. Y.
 Swedish Epworth Home for Employed Young Women, New York City
 Susanna Wesley Home for Employed Young Women, Chicago, Illinois
 City and Immigrant Mission, Chicago, Illinois
 Scandinavian Home of Shelter for Fallen Women, Minneapolis, Minnesota
 Adone Seaman's Bethel Home, Galveston, Texas
 Swedish National Sanatorium for Consumptives, Denver, Colorado

c. Norwegian-Danish Homes: The following institutions are under the jurisdiction of Norwegian-Danish Methodism:

Elim Old People's Home, Minneapolis, Minnesota
 Bethany Old People's Home, Stockton, California
 Deaconess and Woman's Home, Chicago, Illinois
 Lyng Home for Girls, Seattle, Washington (Property rented) Norwegian-Danish Girls Home, Los Angeles, California

d. Miscellaneous Institutions: Institutions among other groups that have been developed are as follows: the Japanese Ellen Stark Ford Home for Children, San Francisco, California; the Susanna Wesley Home at Honolulu, Hawaii; the Spanish American Institute for Children at Gardena, California, and the Harwood Boys Spanish School at Albuquerque, New Mexico.

X. FOREIGN LANGUAGE LITERATURE

The matter of foreign language literature is another important item in the program of work among any foreign-language peoples. Among the assets of the older immigration work are "Der Christliche Apologete," "Sandebudet" and "Evangelisk Tidende."

1. GERMAN: "Der Christliche Apologete" is a union of the former "Apologist" and the "House and Hearth." It is published by the Methodist Book Concern, being one of the family of official Advocates. It has 10,568 paid subscribers, 1,300 of whom are in German-speaking Europe. It was founded in 1839 by William Nast. It is not only the recognized official organ of the German Conferences in America, but it is highly esteemed by leaders both at home and abroad. There is no question but that it serves a very real constituency, and that its work should be maintained as long as there is need for interpretation in the German language.

2. SCANDINAVIAN: "Sandebudet" (Swedish) and "Evangelisk Tidende" (Norwegian-Danish) are published by the Methodist Book Concern and are under its direction semi-officially. In each case these papers are a union of two or more former Conference publications. Sandebudet was established in 1862, and has a present circulation of about 4,000. Evangelisk Tidende was established in 1922, being a consolidation of "Den Kristelige Talsmand" (1870), "Vidnesbyrdet" (1888), and "Ostends Missionær" (1910). The present circulation is about 3,900.

3. ORIENTAL: "The Hawaiian-Korean Christian Advocate," the "Japanese Methodist" and "Ang Mabuting Balita" are monthly publications under the direction of the Hawaiian Methodist Episcopal Mission, Hawaii. These publications were established in 1914, 1919 and 1920, respectively.

"The Japanese-American Christian Advocate" is the official organ of the Pacific Japanese Mission; established in 1917.

4. NEWER IMMIGRATION PUBLICATIONS: The papers for the newer immigration groups are as follows: "La Voce," published by the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension, and established in 1923, having a present circulation of 1,300.

"Krestan," a Slovak monthly published jointly by the home missionary agencies of the Congregational and Methodist Episcopal Churches; established in October, 1912, but recognized by the Committee of Six on Foreign Language Publications, September, 1922; circulation, about 1,000. "Aurora," a Portuguese monthly published by the Methodist Book Concern and the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension at Morgan Memorial, Boston, Mass. It was established in 1917, and has a present circulation of about 1,000. "Zivot," an independent monthly, published by the Zivot Publishing Company, Oklahoma City. It was established in 1910, and is edited by a Czech (Bohemian) Methodist minister.

XI. CONFERENCE CLAIMANTS

1. INCOME: The total income for the 18 German, Swedish, and Norwegian-Danish Conferences for 1921 was $96,795, of which $75,500 belonged to the German, $14,600 to the Swedish, and $6,700 to the Norwegian-Danish Conferences.

Of the total amount, $96,795, $41,668 was raised by the churches, $16,591 from investments, $13,514 from the Book Concern, $5,800 from the Board of Conference Claimants, $754 from other sources, and $18,468 reported as separate funds.

The total resources represented by investments for the 18 Conferences amounted to $664,378; of which $560,737 are German, $67,841 Swedish, and $15,800 Norwegian-Danish.

2. CLAIMS: The Disciplinary annuity claim ranges from $20 in the Chicago German to $10 in the Norwegian-Danish Conference. The average for the general Church is $16.97.

The total years of service for the 18 Conferences is 9,527, of which 7,477 are in the German Conferences, 1,305 in the Swedish and 745 Norwegian and Danish.

The total annuity claim for the 18 Conferences was $133,177. For the German Conferences, $108,809; Swedish, $16,668; and Norwegian-Danish, $7,700.

3. CLAIMS PAID: Less than one-half of these claims were paid. The annuity rate paid ranges from $14 in the Central Swedish Conferences, which is 100 per cent of the claim, down to $1.95 in the Saint Louis German, and $2 in the Chicago German Conferences. A total of $19,247 necessitous money was paid. The total paid out in the 18 Conferences was $81,773; $62,206 German, $14,380 Swedish, and $5,137 Norwegian-Danish.

The Southern, Central and Eastern Swedish paid 100 per cent of their claims. The Western Norwegian-Danish paid 79 per cent; Pacific German, 77 per cent; Pacific Swedish, 70 per cent; East German, 70 per cent; and the Central German, 69 per cent. All others are below the general average for the Church, which is 64 per cent. Western Swedish paid 60 per cent; Northwest German, 58 per cent; Southern German, 48 per cent; Norwegian-Danish, 35 per cent; California German, 27 per cent; Saint Louis German, 28 per cent; West German, 20 per cent; and Chicago German, 10 per cent.

There were 417 claimants in the 18 Conferences; 313 were German; 75 Swedish; and 29 Norwegian and Danish. Of the total, 189 were preachers; 192 widows; and 36 children. (One hundred and forty-five preachers were German; 28 Swedish; and 16 Norwegian and Danish.) Nine preachers and 5 widows relinquished their claims.

Of the retired ministers, 6 were paid less than $50; 28 were paid between $50 and $100; 29 between $100 and $200; 40 between $200 and $300; 68 between $300 and $500; and 12 between $500 and $700. Of the widows and children, 44 were paid less than $50; 37 between $50 and $100; 57 between $100 and $200; 63 between $200 and $300; 32 between $300 and $500; and 2 between $500 and $700. In the general Church 1,469 preachers received more than $500; of this number 424 received between $700 and $1,000, and 25 above $1,000. By comparison only 12 of the preachers in foreign-language Conferences received above $500.

4. AVERAGE SALARY: The highest average Conference salary is the Chicago German, $1,407. Northwest German, $1,310; Northern German, $1,200; West German, Central and East German all are between $1,000 and $1,100; California German and Southern German are above $900; Northern and Western Swedish are between $900 and $1,000; Pacific German, Pacific Swedish and Western Norwegian and Danish are between $800 and $900; Norwegian and Danish, Southern Swedish, and Eastern Swedish between $700 and $800. The Saint Louis German is the lowest, or $517 average salary.

XII. WOMEN'S WORK

I. WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY:

The first auxiliary of the Society in German-speaking Conferences was organized at the Old Rosabel Avenue Church in Saint Paul in 1872. The work of this Society has gone on uninterrupted although the Church has now been transferred to the Minnesota Conference. In 1883 the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society reported 4 branches, 16 auxiliaries and a membership of 325. At the present time there are in the German Conferences 314 auxiliaries with 10,290 members, 102 young people's societies, with 3,183 members, and 192 children's bands with 4,003 members, a total of 608 organizations and 17,476 members. The receipts to the Society from these organizations for the year 1922 totaled $58,285. Three young women went out during the year to the foreign field and others are preparing for the work.

The work of the Swedish Conferences was organized in 1897 at Red Wing, Minnesota. In the six Conferences there are today 130 auxiliaries with a membership of 5,209. These women raised and remitted to the Society last year the sum of $12,796.

The first auxiliary in any of the Norwegian-Danish churches was organized in 1902 in Minneapolis. The work is not reported apart from the English Conferences.

2. WOMAN'S HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY:

The work of the Woman's Home Missionary Society is organized in the following foreign-language Conferences: Central German, Chicago German, Saint Louis German and Southern German. Work is carried on at ports of entry, including Ellis Island, New York; Boston, and Angel Island, San Francisco. There are eleven employed workers. Three immigrant homes are maintained, one at each port, with a total property valuation of $84,500.

The McCrum Slavonic Training School at Uniontown, Pennsylvania, has been set apart for the training of specialized bi-lingual workers. There are three industrial schools for Spanish and Mexican girls as follows: The Frances DePauw School, Los Angeles, California; Harwood, at Albuquerque, New Mexico; and The Mary J. Platte School, Tucson, Arizona. The Rose Gregory Houchen Settlement is located in the Mexican section of El Paso, Texas. Homes and schools are also maintained for Oriental people in California and Hawaii.

XIII. TRANSITION PERIOD COMMON TO FOREIGN LANGUAGE WORK IN AMERICA

1. LANGUAGE: If we assume the necessity of providing language services for those foreign-born elements in our country, either newly arrived or such older groups as have not learned to use the English language, we must acknowledge the inevitable corollary to this language work, that is, the period of transition which takes place as the immigrants learn the use of the English language, and especially as the second and third generations of children come to know the English language much better than they do the language of their sires.

2. CUSTOM: It is also necessary to understand that this transition period is not influenced wholly by the matter of language, for custom—the mode of living of the migrated peoples —has fully as much weight as that of language. If it is natural on the part of the church to minister to peoples of different customs by methods and leadership that will appeal to them and to their way of doing things, it is just as natural to change the method of approach and type of program when dealing with their children and grandchildren, born in this country, who partake more and more of the customs and education of the country of their birth.

3. CONSCIOUSNESS OF KIND: In a word, the principle of "the consciousness of kind," which causes us to set apart certain church machinery, and certain church leadership to perform a certain task, inevitably compels us to change the methods of ministering in order to permit the same "consciousness of kind" principle to operate at its best among the generations now completely a part of America.

4. MIXED LANGUAGE AND CUSTOM CONSTITUENCY: It is understood that while this change takes place in a complete manner, if given a long enough period for its operation, it does not occur at any given time. We will therefore have in the same neighborhood, and therefore in the same constituency: strangers newly arrived; older people who have been in America, in some cases many years, among whom there has taken place varied degrees of assimilation into the language and customs of America; and the children and grandchildren of foreign-language parents who have taken on or thrown off the language and customs of their parents in varying degrees.

In America, among newly arrived immigrants one will find those who make it their first business and passion to learn the English language and the customs of America, and those who do not. We find among the adults who have been in the country a long time, those who have learned the English language perfectly and who take their part in the normal life of the community and those who do not. Among the children of foreign parentage we find those who have retained the language and customs of their parents to a greater degree than those of their surroundings, and those who have, to the exclusion of all others, adopted the English language and made themselves a part of their surrounding American environment.

5. METHODISM'S FAILURE TO ADOPT POLICY: In the first place, the Methodist Episcopal Church has never developed a policy in regard to its responsibility for work among foreign-language peoples in America. All of this work has sprung up in sporadic manner, with little or no regard for guiding principles.

6. DEVELOPMENT OF LANGUAGE WORK IN THE CHURCH: Over against this opportunism is an accomplishment among certain nationality groups of the older immigration that has all the earmarks of a providential movement. One of the outstanding, if not the most outstanding, pieces of missionary work by any denomination is that of Methodism's work among the German, Swedish and Norwegian-Danish peoples, the spirit of which development in America leaped the ocean and planted in the mother countries the Methodist fires that have in recent years become a most noticeable conflagration.

When we study the beginnings of this movement, however, we cannot give credit to the mother church for either vision or conscious nurture of this work. Doctor Nast and Pastor Hedstrom at first worked in local projects much the same as other language pastors are working among twenty-one nationality groups today. The mission, district and Conference development came along in natural course, but not in line with any worked-out policy or conscious vision.

On the other hand, it is patent knowledge that if Methodist Episcopal leadership had been aware of its opportunities and had established work twenty years sooner, at least two denominations among the German and one among the Swedish, all akin to Methodism in doctrines and beliefs, would not have been formed.

Coming down to the present time we do not find that the Church has advanced very far in its relationship to the newer immigration groups. Our methods of approach, policy for recruiting and training leadership as well as our program, are all in the experimental stage, and organizations of every type have been allowed to grow up without reference to a positive plan of development.

The older immigration groups therefore formed their organization and policy on the side lines rather than as a conscious part of the program of the Mother Church. Doctor Nast and his associates soon found that the meeting of the English Annual Conference took little cognizance of their problem. It was natural for them to begin to hold group meetings which soon led to missions within the English-speaking districts, then to separate missions within the Conference, finally to foreign-language districts in the various Conferences, and as a last phase the organization of separate foreign-language Conferences after the Civil War.

Pastor Hedstrom for the Swedish work, and leaders of the Norwegian-Danish groups, went through the same experiences and the same organizations resulted. We have this process taking place at the present time in the Eastern sections of the United States, among thirteen Norwegian-Danish churches.

The Methodist Episcopal Church not only did not consciously recognize the great need of reaching people of foreign tongue, but it held these various off-shoot organizations to the same rigid accountability as its English Conferences and churches, as far as annual reports were concerned, showing conclusively that it did not recognize the type of the new mission growing up within its ranks. Furthermore, there was no planning or looking forward to the time when results of the inevitable transition period would bring its fruitage.

7. TWO OPPOSING FORCES: There are two subconscious principles in operation in every organization; one may be called the centripetal force, which in its movement gathers into a single center all elements. The other is the centrifugal force, which begins with an unwieldy mass, and throws out from its center the elements as fast as they are naturally separated from the whole.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, in its organization, naturally operates under the centripetal principle. Every year the foreign-language pastor has had to report the number of full members, the enrollment in the Sunday School, the amount of money received for ministerial support and benevolences. This has caused him, quite naturally, when the tug of the centrifugal force began to operate, under pressure of the transition factor, to want to hold within his church membership all of the varying degrees of constituency, regardless of their transitional development. He needed them, first to keep his membership report up, and second in order to report the finances of the church both as to his salary and benevolences—"Paid in full," for it is on the basis of these two counts, primarily, that his rating as a member of the Conference is determined.

The District Superintendent of the foreign-language district has had, for the same reason, to hold on to the various churches within his district, even though he comes into violent clash with the centrifugal force of the transition period, which tends to wean away influential members and even entire churches into the regular English Conference organization.

The same principle would operate if foreign-language work were thrown into a single area. The centripetal principle for church, district and area would tend toward solidarity. This would be ideal in a foreign field, but in America with the centrifugal principle in full operation over the transition period, it becomes the chief stumbling block over which we have forced our language Conferences, causing them great hardships and in some cases unnecessary strife within the church.

XIV. EFFECT OF TRANSITION PERIOD ON WORK OF THE CHURCH

1. BASIC POLICY: We assume acceptance of the thesis that every church has a continued right to life and usefulness, and indeed we must accept this principle, or accept its alternative; that is, that the foreign-language church should survive only so long as it serves a definite constituency in that language, and then die. We shall assume, therefore, in this report that the church wants to accept the first alternative—that of continued life and usefulness.

2. ADAPTATION NEED: If, however, we accept this as a principle, the factor of location, language and program adaptation must be taken into account. Let us notice how these have operated in the older organized foreign-language work of the Church:

a. Location Adaptation: The Commission has information locating the communities where there are two Methodist Episcopal Churches, one in an English-speaking and the other in a foreign-language Conference. We have taken as a measurement of distance a radius of five blocks in the city and a radius of five miles in rural districts from each of the two churches involved. The unit taken has been the preaching point rather than the charge: inasmuch as one of the points on a given circuit may be alone in the field and the other near an English-speaking Methodist church. (The Southern German and Southern Swedish Conferences are not included in this list, since the overlapping constituencies are more with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. There are, however, some few projects in these two Conferences where the Methodist Episcopal churches are in the same community, but the number is negligible.)

OVERLAPPING METHODIST PARISHES: Data has been gathered for 794 foreign-language Conference parishes or preaching points. Of these, 534 are in the same parish with an English-speaking church, giving a total overlapping percentage of 67.3. Of the total number, 470 are German; 209 Swedish; and 115 Norwegian-Danish. Of the Germans, 295, or 62.7 per cent overlap English-speaking parishes. The number of the Swedish is 154, or 73.7 per cent; for the Norwegian-Danish, 85, or 73.9 per cent.

The following table will show the details by Conferences:

The low percentage of the St. Louis German Conference is accounted for because in Missouri there is not so great overlapping of the English work of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The important question of overlapping with other denominations is not touched upon here, although we have the data fairly complete. This will be an interesting and important study, especially when these other denominations are Lutheran, Evangelical or of the Swedish Mission type.

We found in our study of individual projects that not all of the English Conference churches were the stronger. We therefore compared 120 of the German, 47 of the Swedish and 24 of the Norwegian and Danish, or 191 churches in all. In 75 per cent of the German cases the English church was stronger, 9 per cent were of equal strength, and 16 per cent of the German churches were stronger. Of the Scandinavian 83 per cent of the English churches were stronger, 15 per cent of the Language Churches were stronger, and in 2 per cent of the cases the strength was about equal.

b. Language Adaptation: If the foreign-language church is properly located, it need only adapt its program and policy in order to continue its life and usefulness. One of the serious problems for adaptation has been that of language. It is logical to use a foreign tongue when a mission is begun among a racial group who have recently emigrated to America. As long as the church group is made up of adults of this type, no problem arises: The problem comes:

First, when the children are not taught the mother tongue.

Second, when even though they are taught the mother tongue in the home, they use English in the public schools and in the natural associations of life.

Third, when either the husband or wife cannot understand the language.

Fourth, when adults have been in the country long enough to have acquired a thorough knowledge of English, although for purposes of worship they may prefer their native tongue.

It should be understood that even though a person may become proficient in the use of English in business and social matters, when it comes to matters of the heart and the sacred relationships of life, the use of the mother tongue is most natural and is the better medium for the emotions and feelings that relate themselves to these things.

As these various factors begin to enter into the situation of the foreign-language church, the transition period begins. This, we think, is one of the most delicate periods in the life of any church. To adapt the program so as to hold the various younger elements, and, at the same time, to minister to the older people, is a very serious problem. There has been no general policy worked out in the foreign-language Conferences in regard to this question. Until comparatively recently it was quite customary in certain sections of the country to have all services in the church in a foreign tongue. Aside from the natural desire to have church services in their mother tongue, the Sunday School and young people's societies were often used openly as a means to keep the children and young people efficient in the language in order that they might worship with their parents. Even today, we have churches where this is the practice. It is largely found in certain rural sections where the entire family attend church together, remaining for all services.

In spite of this, however, the process naturally began to work out where certain services were held in English as a concession to these various groups.

The following are some of the means employed to bridge over the transition period:

First, part English in the Sunday School and Young People's Societies.

Second, an occasional English service in the evening.

Third, language service in the morning with all other services in English with the exception of Prayer Meeting and Adult Bible Class in the Sunday school.

Fourth, everything English except language service in the evening in order to provide an English service for Sunday-School children in the morning.

Fifth, alternate language services in the morning, or, in some cases, two services Sunday morning—one language and one English—often merging into each other.

Sixth, everything English, except ministry to older people through pastoral work and special services.

Upon careful analysis of the projects, one finds that aside from those churches where "everything" is foreign, which presupposes a new immigration constituency, the general statement can be made that where "all foreign" is used the Church either is only ministering to a few older people, or it has ignored pretty generally the needs of the younger people, and failed to make the proper adjustment. •

There are some good cases of adaptation where one service in a foreign tongue is still used. In these cases the younger and older groups understand each other's needs and are cooperating. The large number of cases representing all English or mostly English, together with some of the morning service groups represent the strong, virile organizations with but few exceptions.

It will be of interest to study in greater detail these phases of adaptation to see what has happened working through the eighteen foreign-language Conferences. In order to measure in some accurate manner the various degrees of transition which these churches have made from the use of the foreign language to that of the English, we have arranged the following key:

1. Means foreign language used in all services.

NOTE.—This may permit partial use of English in Sunday School or Young People's Society.

Where there is not English of any kind in any part of any service the designation will be minus 1.

2. Means foreign language used in most of the services of the church. The Sunday school and Epworth League are in English, or mostly so, and there is an occasional English sermon; perhaps once a month or alternating in the evening service.

3. Means all services are in English with the exception of the morning preaching or evening preaching, for instance, one-half of the preaching services. The prayer meeting may or may not be in a foreign language and there is likelihood of adult Bible class in Sunday School probably in a foreign language.

4. Means all services are mostly in English. It means that the morning service is not always in a foreign language but alternates, or perhaps once a month in English. All other services are in English. Adult Bible class in Sunday School may be in foreign language.

5. Means all services in English. This would permit an adult class in Sunday School and parts of prayer meeting in a foreign tongue. Pastoral visitation to a few older people may make use of language medium.

THE METHOD: We have computed percentages by counting "1" and "2" predominately foreign, and "4" and "5" predominately English, the language used in the former two and the latter two balancing. Column "3" has to do with churches whose services are about two-thirds in the English language. One-third of the column, therefore, is placed under the predominately foreign and two-thirds under predominately English.

The following table will give the analysis by Conferences under this principle:

LANGUAGE USED BY GERMAN, SWEDISH, AND NORWEGIAN-DANISH CHURCHES

c. Program Adaptation: There are four general types of problem facing the language church in the process of adaptation of its program to the changing needs of its constituency. They are as follows:

First. Providing for needs of new immigrants from mother country.

Second. Reaching of kindred language groups, such as work among Germans, Russians, Austrians, Hungarians, and even such nationalities as the Roumanian, Polish, Ruthenian, Lithuanian, and to a limited degree, the Czecho-Slovaks, the Jugo-Slavs and the Finns.

Third. Reaching all the English-speaking constituency not being cared for by other Methodist Episcopal Churches.

Fourth. By putting on a seven-day-a-week service program in addition to the regular program of worship, mid-week prayer meeting, and socials for young people.

Space does not permit the insertion of the vast material gathered—some of it encouraging, as showing the splendid results of adaptation, and some as truly revealing the disintegrating effects of failure to make the location, language or program adaptation.

XV. OPINION REGARDING ORGANIZATION STATUS

We now come to the third phase of the commission given by the General Conference: that is, to ascertain "what changes, if any, may be needed by our foreign-language Conferences in America." We have fallen heir, among other things, to a vast amount of correspondence, resolutions and memorials touching upon the question. The official memorials coming from various annual Conferences will be available in other reports. It will only be necessary here in this abstract to point out the general trend of sentiment.

There is the extreme right position; that is, those who want matters left exactly as they are. The reasons given for maintaining Conferences just as they are, may be generally summed up under the following headings: conservation of language constituency, increased new immigration, cooperation with Europe, care for institutions, foreign-language ministry—effective and superannuate—General Conference representation, and more economical administration.

There is still another group which takes the extreme left position; that is, they feel that the time has come for immediate dissolution of all foreign-language work, merging it into the English Conferences. This extreme position is held by very few among the language constituencies. This is accounted for largely because those who have in times past come up to the point where they believe in the immediate dissolution of Conferences, have gone over into the English church, and have thus taken themselves out of the debate.

Many have remained with the work, however, and are outspoken in their demand for immediate merger. They take the stand that English is almost universally used, and that provision can be made where it is yet needed by the older people. They admit that there may be some loss to these older people, but that the present loss of younger people more than out-balances this probability. This group does not believe that the present foreign-language churches adequately take care of the new immigration; first, because of the slight probability of many of the new arrivals locating near our churches; and, second, they contend that even if they do, they will find the churches so Anglicized that they will not be able to feel at home.

These immediate merger advocates insist that the Church should get behind a program that would reach new arrivals regardless of Conference relationship and assist in building up the work in European nations. They contend also that the overlapping of effort in the present administration is very expensive, both in money and in ministerial supply. They show the advanced average age of the foreign-language ministry, the inadequate group coming on to take their place and point to an inevitable wasting away of Conference life.

In between these two extreme positions falls the larger amount of opinion—those leaders who feel, first, that the present organization should remain, and that provision should be made for self-determination; that is, they feel that the Conferences and churches themselves should determine when the time has come for their merging with English work. Some of these contend that the time is not yet ripe for merger, that there is still much strength in the work and that time is needed to properly pass through the transition period.

XVI. RECOMMENDATIONS

The report of the Commission will be printed in pamphlet form for the convenience of General Conference delegates. The foregoing abstract of its principal fields of investigation and study is printed in the Handbook for preliminary reading.

The entire body of findings represents original sources that will be available on call and will no doubt later be printed in book form for the use of all interested in a better understanding of what we believe to be America's most important, though vexing, problem and the Church's richest opportunity.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION ON FEDERATION OF COLORED CHURCHES

DEAR BRETHREN: The Commission on Federation of Colored Churches, appointed by the General Conference, at its session held at Des Moines, Iowa, begs leave to make its report.

As a matter of history, the African Methodist Episcopal Church; the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church; and the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church of America, projected for themselves the question of Federation at the Ecumenical Conference of Methodisms, held in the city of Washington, D. C., 1891. The report of this action to the Ecumenical Conference was received with general satisfaction and created a profound impression of the unity of all Methodisms in matters fundamental and evangelical. We believe and hope that that action had in it the elements of permanence and prophecy.

When we consider the strength of these three great denominations representing a membership as follows; namely, The African Methodist Episcopal Church, 551,776; The African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, 460,280; and the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church of America, 336,313, making a total of 1,378,369; we see readily the tremendous possibilities of these communions in a federated whole for world conquest.

With these facts in our mind, we respectfully request our General Conference to adopt the following:

First, That our Commission on Federation of Colored Churches be continued.

Second, That we respectfully request the General Conference of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, now in session at Louisville, Ky.; the General Conference of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church now in session in Indianapolis, Indiana; and the Bishops of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church of America to appoint similar Commissions for conference during the ensuing quadrennium upon questions such as comity and federation, and the education and preparation of an adequate ministry; upon evangelism and any other questions for the progress of our Christianity, and we would also suggest to the Commission appointed by the General Conference and the Commissions appointed by those respective denominations to undertake a full, frank and broad discussion of work in Liberia, that there may be avoided duplication of work and that there may be a more aggressive movement towards the establishment of Christ's Kingdom.

Thus, with these dominating ideas we shall show our less fortunate brethren in heathendom how beautifully the sons of Wesley may dwell and work together.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION ON CENTRAL CONFERENCES

To The General Conference.

DEAR FATHERS AND BRETHREN: The General Conference of 1920 adopted the following:

Resolved, That the General Conference request the appointment of a Commission on Central Conferences, which shall consist of the Bishops in charge of Foreign fields and nine others to be appointed by the Board of Bishops. The Commission is asked to study the whole question and report its recommendations to the next General Conference.

The Commission has held several meetings, especially during the months of April and May of this year when the Bishops resident in the Foreign field were available, and begs leave to make the following report:

Your Commission recommends the following as a substitute for Chapter IV in the 1920 Discipline:

CHAPTER IV.

CENTRAL CONFERENCES

I. Organization

¶ 95, § 1. In the interest of larger self direction in the affairs of the Methodist Episcopal Church in countries other than the United States, there shall be such Central Conferences as have heretofore been authorized, or shall hereafter be authorized by the General Conference, with the privilege and powers hereinafter provided.

§ 2. The Central Conferences shall be composed of ministerial and lay members in equal numbers, chosen in such manner and numbers, and with such qualifications as the Central Conference shall itself determine. The Bishops resident within the territory of any Central Conference shall be advisory members of the same. Each Annual Conference, Mission Conference and Mission within the bounds of a Central Conference shall be entitled to at least one ministerial and one lay representative in such Central Conference. The Central Conference shall be the sole judge of the character, election and qualifications of its own members.

§ 3. Each Central Conference shall meet quadrennially at such time and place as it may elect. The sessions of said Conference shall be presided over by Bishops in attendance in such order as they may determine. In case no Bishop is present, the Central Conference shall elect a temporary president from among its own members. The resident Bishops, or a majority of them, with the consent of a majority of the constituent bodies concerned, shall have the authority to call an extra session of the Central Conference, such session to be held at the time and place designated by its Executive Board or other authorized committee.

II. Powers

¶ 96, § 1. To a Central Conference shall be committed for supervision, in harmony with the Book of Discipline and interdenominational contractual agreements, the educational, industrial, publishing, medical and other connectional interests of the Annual Conferences, Mission Conferences and Missions within its territory, and such other matters as may be referred to it by the Annual Conferences, Mission Conferences and Missions concerned, or by order of the General Conference.

§ 2. Subject to the approval of the Resident Bishops, it shall have the power to prescribe Courses of Study, including those in the vernaculars, for its Ministry, both foreign and indigenous, including Local Preachers, Exhorters, Bible Women, Deaconesses, Teachers, both male and female, and all other workers whatsoever, ordained or lay. It shall also make rules and regulations for examinations in these Courses.

§ 3. A Central Conference shall have power to make such adaptations regarding membership, special advices, worship, the local Ministry, and the official status and ordination of women, not contrary to the Book of Discipline, as the peculiar conditions on the fields concerned require.

§ 4. A Central Conference shall have the power to establish detailed rules, rites and ceremonies for the solemnization of marriage not contrary to the statute laws of the country or countries within its jurisdiction.

§ 5. A Central Conference is authorized to prepare and translate simplified or adapted forms of such parts of the Ritual as it may deem necessary.

§ 6. A Central Conference shall have authority to edit and publish abridged editions of the Discipline, omitting such sections as refer exclusively to activities in America.

§ 7. A Central Conference shall supervise the missionary work and policy of the indigenous Church and provide suitable organization for such work.

§ 8. A Central Conference, where the laws of the country permit, shall have the power to incorporate one or more Executive Boards or Committees with such membership and powers as may be determined by the Central Conference, for the purpose of transacting any necessary business that may arise in the interval between the sessions of the Central Conference, or that may be committed to it by the Central Conference.

§ 9. A Central Conference is authorized to interpret Article XXIII of the Articles of Religion to meet the governmental conditions existing within its territory.

§ 10. A Central Conference shall have the authority to make such modifications of the rules concerning the temporal economy of the local church as to adapt those rules to the conditions existing in the fields concerned.

§ 11. The Central Conference, with the concurrence of the Resident Bishop or Bishops concerned, shall have authority to supervise the institutions, interests and properties of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the territory within its jurisdiction (and to make rules and regulations concerning them); it shall have power to make rules and regulations for the purchase, holding and transfer of any property or institution secured or established from resources raised within its jurisdiction, and of such other properties as may be transferred to it by the organizations, local or general, holding the same; provided, however—(1) that all procedure shall be subject to the laws of the several countries concerned; (2) that no transfer of property shall be made from one country to another without the consent of the responsible authorities of the Church in the country wherein such property is held; (3) that the existing legal status of properties shall be recognized. But the Central Conference shall not alienate any property or institution, or the proceeds derived from the sale or transfer thereof, from the Methodist Episcopal Church, nor shall the Central Conference involve the Board of Foreign Missions or any other organization of the Church in any financial obligation without the official approval of such Board or organization.

§ 12. A Central Conference may fix the boundaries of the Annual Conferences, Mission Conferences and Missions within its bounds, proposals for changes first having been submitted to the Annual Conferences concerned as prescribed in the Book of Discipline, ¶¶ 511-513, provided, however, that the number of Annual Conferences which may be organized within the bounds of a Central Conference shall first have been determined by the General Conference, and provided, further, that no Annual Conference shall be organized with less than twenty-five members.

§ 13. A Central Conference shall have power to fix orders of business suitable for the District and Quarterly Conferences within its territory.

¶ 97. When a Central Conference has been duly organized, it shall not be discontinued except by order or consent of the General Conference.

¶ 98. The Journal of the proceedings of a Central Conference, duly signed by the President and Secretary, shall be sent for examination to the General Conference.

Regarding the Memorials concerning the nomination and election of Bishops by the Central Conferences, we recommend that since the Central Conferences are only in the beginning of their development, and in further view of the fact that certain major reconstructions, at home and overseas, are under consideration, we believe that the time is ripe for the nomination or election of Bishops by the Central Conferences.

We further recommend that this report, together with all Memorials now in our keeping, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Missions for further consideration and final report to this Conference.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION ON LICENSING AND ORDAINING WOMEN

On May 25, 1920, the General Conference of that year adopted a report of the Committee on Itinerancy, referring to a commission of seven, the expediency of granting to women ordination and admission to the Annual Conference. After careful individual study and common discussion, your Commission found itself with three definite convictions:

First—That the validity of a woman's call to preach is not involved in any action which the General Conference may take in respect of the ordination of women and their admission into the Annual Conference;

Second—That, inasmuch as the ordination of women and their admission into the Annual Conference would inaugurate far-reaching social and spiritual issues, such action ought not to be undertaken either as an administrative expedient to meet the emergency created by a temporary decrease in ministerial supply, or as an economic expedient to adjust ministerial supply to inadequate financial support;

Third—That in the connectional polity of Methodism, the ordination of women and their admission to the Annual Conference would introduce peculiar and embarrassing difficulties. In non-connectional churches, in which, alone, ordained women have been admitted to settled pastorates, the relation can be terminated at will by either party to the contract. In Methodism our connectional polity guarantees to every effective minister a church and to every self-supporting church a minister; and the pastoral relation is established by appointment of constituted authority, and properly terminated only with the consent of constituted authority.

Your Commission, also, after wise and careful exploration of both the mind of our own Church and the experiences of other Churches, has been led to conclude that the indifference of the Church at large to the matter of the ordination of women and their admission to the Annual Conference, is in itself evidence that no imperative demand for such ordination and admission exists; that Methodism had had altogether too limited experience in licensing of women as preachers to provide a basis upon which a final decision ought to be reached, and furthermore, that the knowledge and experience of other churches, in which women have served and are still serving as settled pastors, are too fragmentary and insufficient to justify the Commission in offering a final decision.

However, the very evident and acute need for an effective sacramental ministry on the part of women, in certain home and particularly in the foreign fields, has seemed to your commission to indicate clearly an expansion of service which the Church, with reason and propriety, can open to them.

Your Commission, accordingly, taking into consideration these and other factors of significance, unanimously recommends that the General Conference enact such measures as shall provide for the ordination of women as local preachers under the conditions and satisfactory to the requirements which the Discipline has determined and maintains for ordained local preachers.

COMMITTEE ON POLICY AND WORK OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN EUROPE

DEAR FATHERS AND BRETHREN: Pursuant to action of the General Conference of 1916 a Commission on Methodist Work in Europe presented to the General Conference of 1920 a full report on the European situation which was carefully considered by a special committee of the General Conference. In the furtherance of the thinking of the Church upon these matters, the Board of Foreign Missions at its last Annual Meeting directed its own Committee on Policy and Work in Europe in collaboration with the Executive officers of the Board to present an additional statement to the General Conference for such consideration as may seem desirable.

First of all we would request your attention to the important statements and reports made to you by the three Bishops resident in Europe. They have been in intimate touch with all the problems of a quadrennium beset with many critical situations—political, economic, and religious. In their reports will be found records of advances made, difficulties overcome or on the way to solution, permanent foundations built for Christ's Kingdom. Other records and statements in the possession of or available to the General Conference are the Journal of the Europe Central Conference and the Northern Europe Central Conference, the Annual Reports of the Board of Foreign Missions, the statement prepared by Dr. George M. Fowles, Treasurer of the Board, as a result of his personal study of the larger part of the work, and sections in the Report of the Board to the General Conference. In them all will be found evidence not simply of the contribution which the Church in America has made through the Board of Foreign Missions, but of the strength and earnestness with which the work has been presented and achievement secured by the forces on the field in the face of obstacles hardly comprehended in this country. To all these this statement is in the nature of a supplement.

CHURCH GROWTH BEFORE THE CENTENARY

It is well in any consideration of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Europe to be reminded that Europe not only is not a unit nor even three units, but that the historical origins of our work, the diverse political and religious conditions surrounding it, and the developments of the decades have produced as great a variety in our Methodist work there as may be found on any continent.

Five of the European Fields in which the Methodists have been at work forty years or more stand out as distinctive in achievement—Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Germany, Switzerland. Each of these is larger in number of members and probationers than any other European Conference or mission, ranging as they do from 4,380 in Denmark to 34,323 in Germany. They are also markedly above the rest in the ratio of amounts raised on the field in comparison to amounts expended by the Board, all of them showing an average ratio over the 25 years preceding the Centenary of 7 to 3 or better. All the others except Finland show an average ratio less than 2 to 8. Furthermore each of these Conferences shows from the beginning to the end of the forty years, 1880-1920, a steady improvement in this respect. In some cases, for example Sweden, this is in spite of the decrease in actual church membership due to much emigration. It is also worth noting that in the forty years prior to the Centenary the Board's annual disbursements to each of these six Conferences rarely exceeded $20,000, recurring and non-recurring.

The success of these Conferences is no doubt due first of all to the common Protestant heritage which provided soil prepared for the quickening influences of Methodism's evangelistic spirit. To this must be added the contrast of this characteristic spirit with the more formal nature of the state churches. The approach to these countries was also fortunate in that it was made not by foreigners but by nationals and that the missionary work has been carried on by them.

Finland stands between these six Conferences and the other European Conferences in that though it shows the same general characteristics it does not possess them to the same degree as the other six. Yet it seems undoubted that in the course of a few years it will take its place with the six. Though only twenty years old as a separate unit, the ratio of growth of its membership and the increasing ratio of field contributions to Board disbursements are indications of this, which is supported by the similarity in the general conditions surrounding the work.

In considering the present situation in these northern Conferences, the fact of their success must not be permitted to obscure the distressing situation in which the churches in Germany in particular find themselves as a result of post-war conditions. This fact separates Germany for the present from this group in any true analysis of our European work.

In all the other European fields, with the exception of Hungary (in part) and of Esthonia and Latvia (in part), the Methodist Church has been at work among peoples where the predominant religious tradition is not Protestant, but Roman Catholic, Eastern Orthodox, National Orthodox, or Mohammedan, or a mixture. This fact is of major significance. In these fields, which lie chiefly in Southern and Eastern Europe, the traditional basis of intellectual and spiritual approach to religion has elements so incompatible with the evangelical point of view, that the opening of mind and heart of both devotee and scoffer to the new light requires time, patience, and varying methods of work. All progress that is registered in these fields represents gain in the face of peculiar difficulties. Rapid numerical growth is not found nor should it be too eagerly expected.

In two of these fields, Italy and Bulgaria, the work is as old, or nearly as old, as the work in the northern fields. The progress in Bulgaria has been made very uneven because of the interruptions of frequent wars, of the wavering judgment of the Missionary Committee in the early days in reference to supporting the Bulgarian work, and of the frequent lack of missionaries and supervision. In spite of this, the Bulgarian pastors and people have held on and made steady increase in the ratio of amount raised on the field to the Board disbursements. Between 1880 and 1900 the Board's annual disbursements averaged about $15,000 and between 1900 and 1920 about $10,000. In a field such as this a steadier policy and more generous investment of personnel and money would be required to show larger results. It often happens in the development of work that growth is made very slowly for a period and then a breakdown of barriers takes place and the work goes more rapidly. There are indications that encouragement and steadiness just now should enable us to take advantage of the beginning of such a break.

In Italy although the membership has increased to about four times that of Bulgaria, the ratio of amount raised on the field to the Board's disbursements has not shown as much increase as might be expected. The annual disbursements of the Board to Italy during the period 1880-1920 have been markedly larger than to any other European field, averaging nearly $50,000.

Leaving aside the institutional and benevolent aspects of the work in France, and looking only at the condition of the organized church work, conclusions as to tendencies are difficult to draw as the work has been in progress only since 1907, and the war caused devious interruption of work. Prior to the Centenary the Board's annual disbursement averaged about $10,000. Deductions as to the trend of ratios of field contributions to Board disbursements are impracticable as data are incomplete.

Austria, Hungary, and Jugo-Slavia have been operating as separate Mission units only since 1920, having been a single Mission Conference before that; the break-up was caused by the division of the Austrian-Hungarian monarchy after the war. It is thus impossible to draw for each field separately sound conclusions as to trend from this brief period under post-war conditions. Taking the work in the three countries as a unit, however, for the short period 1910-1923 a marked increase in membership is shown. Trend of ratio of amounts raised on the field to the Board's disbursements is impossible to judge. The Board's annual disbursements prior to the Centenary averaged less than $5,000. Part of the strength of this work in the face of an unsympathetic environment has no doubt been due to the influence of the strong Germany and Switzerland Conferences to which the work has been to some degree linguistically related. It should be noted that Austria is predominantly Roman Catholic, Hungary half Protestant, Jugo-Slavia predominantly Greek Orthodox and Roman Catholic with a large proportion of Mohammedans.

Data are too incomplete and the enterprises in Russia and the Baltic States too recent to permit clear conclusions as to the trend of the work justifying comparison with the other European fields. The work in Spain dates only from 1920.

North Africa is a distinct mission field in which comparison with other parts of the European field cannot be made because of distinct difference in type due to the overwhelmingly Moslem character of the population. The methods here are for this reason more like those in Arabia, Persia, or Southeastern Asia, and the results must be looked at from that point of view with recognition of the fact that the approach to Moslems is generally recognized to be slower and harder than that to any other people. For this reason the growth in membership and in the ratio of field contributions to Board's disbursements is exceedingly slow. It is clear, however, that steady progress is being made. Dr. S. M. Zwemer, whose own experience and wide travels make him a good judge, regards the work here as successful as any he has seen. The Board's annual disbursements prior to the Centenary averaged less than $15,000.

In the summary form part of these data may be thus expressed:

1. Duration of Work:

Established forty years or more: Bulgaria, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Italy, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland.

Established nearly thirty years ago: Austria, Hungary, Jugo-Slavia.

Established about eighteen years ago: France, North Africa.

Established about ten years ago: Russia.

Established in last five years: Baltic Provinces; Spain.

2. Membership (members and probationers):

Over 30,000: Germany, 34,323; Scandinavia, 30,664.

From 15,000 to 20,000: Sweden, 17,095.

From 10,000 to 15,000: Switzerland, 11,285.

About 7,000: Norway, 7,061.

About 4,000: Denmark, 4,381; Italy, 4,301.

About 2,000: Finland, 2,127.

One thousand and under: Austria; Bulgaria; France; Hungary; Jugo-Slavia; North Africa.

3. Rate of Growth in Six Years, 1916-1922:

Not quite as fast as the Conferences in the United States (4.4 per cent): Italy, Sweden.

Faster than the United States Conferences (4.4) but not as fast as entire Church (11.0 per cent): Denmark, Switzerland.

Faster than the entire Church (11.0) but not so fast as the Church in foreign lands outside of Europe (41.0 per cent): Bulgaria; Finland; Germany; Norway.

Faster than the Church in non-European foreign lands (41.0): Austria; Hungary; Jugo-Slavia; North Africa; Russia and the Baltic.

NOTE: These are all new units; in such the rate of growth at the beginning is always high.

IN THE CENTENARY PERIOD

These facts, sketched so briefly and into the interpretation of all of which many other considerations must be brought, serve to indicate the pre-Centenary tendencies in the growth and establishment of the Church as an institution.

We are not sufficiently out of the Centenary period for a similar appraisal of the events of that period. For such an appraisal more data and more perspective are needed for a full comparison. In the matter of support war conditions and war consequences have made it impossible for the contributions of the fields to keep pace with the investments of the Centenary, though it is clear that the giving has been costing more in sacrifice and that greater generosity is therein manifested. The fruit of the Centenary investments lies in the future growth which these investments have made possible, both by saving from destruction foundations already laid, and in extending them beyond the old lines.

In the matter of increase in membership, the crowding of churches and chapels and of state churches loaned for our use in the Central and Northern countries is a promise of ingathering in the months and years to come already beginning to appear in the records. As the historian Green judged of the Wesleyan Revival in England, it may be that the Methodists themselves will be the least result of the heart stirrings to which they are contributing so largely. The demonstration of the power of a free evangelical Church to meet the spiritual hunger, formerly numbed by materialism in life and formalism in faith but now made acute by the realism of economic, political and spiritual chaos, will be priceless at this moment in the history of Europe. Such a service as this European Methodism can render if America will aid in prayer and will bring new assurances of love and confidence to those weighed down by burdens that seem at times too heavy to be borne, and if American support can continue to help in training evangelical leadership and in setting it free to face its amazing opportunity.

METHODIST WORK FOR CHILDREN IN EUROPE

The ministry of Methodism to Europe does not lie solely in the increase of local churches, but in the number of their members and the enlarging of their spiritual power. Humanitarian and educational endeavor are, as in all lands, a mark of our church life. In Europe our service of the needs of children is striking, whether developed and supported purely by local initiative, by the generosity of American givers or fostered by the Centenary and its program of relief and reconstruction. Out of the fountains of Danish generosity inspired by the remarkable Central Mission in Copenhagen are supported in whole or in part eleven homes for destitute or orphaned children as well as two fresh air colonies. Here also is the Bible Normal School at Aarhus providing special training for young Methodists for Christian service. Similarly in Sweden there are eight children's homes. In Norway there are two with more in prospect. Here is also a hostel for Methodist young people studying in Christiania. In Finland there are two homes for children. With Centenary aid added to a courageous investment of local resources, personal and financial, the Methodist work for children in Germany has reached the stage of Government recognition as a welfare foundation and in five homes for longer and shorter periods have ministered to the bodies and souls of some 3,500 children. The story of the leadership of our Methodist workers in the superb activities of Switzerland in caring for children from famine-stricken areas is well known. In France are homes for children—"Foyer Retrouve" is the proper term—at La Tronche, Poissy, and Charvieu, the last including the farm school. As a community center the Chateau Thierry Memorial ministers largely to children and youth. The gracious ministry of the Casa Materna in its splendid property at Portici is known to many visitors in Naples. There is also a student hostel for girls at Modica. In North Africa homes for boys and for girls are maintained in Algiers, Constantine and Tunis, and a student hostel in Algiers. Four homes are supported in Jugo-Slavia.

In most of the homes referred to in the preceding paragraph the children attend the public schools for their education. In some of them school work is given in the home. In addition there is another entire range of institutions for children and young people that are more exclusively educational. Such is the Collegio Internazionale Monte Mario, at Rome, a well known school having Italians, Albanians, Montenegrins and Russians among its student population. Others in Italy are the Industrial Institute, Venice; the Institute "Cesar Battise" in Trent, and the Girls' Professional Schools at Florence. In Jugo-Slavia are the Girls' Training School at Novi Sad and the American School for Girls at Monastir. In Spain are two notable schools at Alicante and Seville. In addition the Children's homes in North Africa are the Carpet School at Il Maten, the Agricultural School at Sidi Aich, and at Fort National the Ouadhia Girls' Day School under special government approval. To these must be added the important schools of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society at Lovetch, Bulgaria; Crandon Hall in Rome; The Foyer Retrouve at Grenoble, France; and two girls' homes in Constantine and Algiers. All this is surely of great significance in the interpretation of the purpose of the Gospel in relation to young life.

The quadrennium shows two items of importance in the training of the ministry for our churches. One is the marked increase in the enrollment of the Theological School at Frankfort serving many nationalities. The other is the establishment of a theological school of advanced grade at Goteborg, Sweden, to serve all Scandinavia.

SPECIAL ITEMS OF NOTE

Among the many individual matters of significance in the European work of the Church to which the thought of the General Conference might profitably be turned, upon three in particular, a statement is here presented.

First: It has for several years been the hope that within a brief time much of the work in Europe would become entirely self-supporting. Though economic consequences of the war have deferred the realization of this for an indeterminate period, nevertheless the Joint Council of the Scandinavian Conferences presented a program on this matter to the annual meeting of the Board of Foreign Missions in November, 1923. After expressing appreciation of the support given by the Church in the United States through the Board of Foreign Missions and showing the present need for its continuance their statement expresses earnest desire to contribute personnel and support missionary work in non-Christian lands and concludes with the following recommendations:

1. We recommend to our Annual Conferences to create, eventually to increase the Home Mission Fund, so that this fund can take over the responsibility for financial help to weak churches and for the extension of the evangelistic work.

2. We recommend again the plan, to its principles proposed by the Jubilee-Committee of Sweden and approved by Dr. F. M. North, to pay back to a common Loan and Help fund the money which has been given to local churches, to make it possible that a greater number of churches may receive help to solve their property problems.

3. We respectfully ask the Board of Foreign Missions to make appropriation once for all to strengthen the Home Mission Fund, and large enough to avoid the ruin of our weakest churches.

4. Furthermore we recommend that the Board of Foreign Missions may in principle approve the following plan for the reduction of the appropriation to the Scandinavian countries:

(1) The appropriation shall be continued as it now is until the end of 1924.

(2) Thereafter the appropriation shall annually be reduced with 5 per cent during 20 years, and at the end of that time every appropriation to current objects will be discontinued.

(3) After 1924 we assume that our work in the Scandinavian countries shall be fully self-supporting, and only depending upon help for special enterprises, which may be considered on its own merits.

(Signed) J. P. LIE, Chairman,
T. H. ARVIDSON, Secretary.

Upon this the Board took action as follows:

We have considered Item II on page 14 of the Report of the Corresponding Secretaries relating to work in the Copenhagen Area, and recommend the approval of this item in the following form:

First: After considering the action of the Council of the Copenhagen Area which passed a resolution that all the Conferences of that Area, except Finland, undertake a reduction of five per cent a year on grants from the Board for maintenance expenses beginning in 1925, we recommend that this plan be accepted as a working basis, with the understanding, however, that provision must be made for a considerable period to render wherever possible aid in the program of the Area for building and equipment.

Second: At the Annual Meeting of 1923 Bishop Nuelsen presented to the Board a full statement of the condition of our work in Russia and its opportunities and problems. Without taking up in extended statement these matters it is our thought that the action of the Board should be here quoted and in the hands of the members of the General Conference.

"The Board is strengthened in its conviction that the religious needs of Russia constitute an outstanding appeal for the missionary service of the Church, and that the opportunities reported to us by Bishop Nuelsen in his comprehensive statement which has been in the hands of the members of this Board for weeks, call for new measures and larger resources.

"The Board directs its Committee on Appropriations to provide, if possible, an increased appropriation for Russia with a view (1) to strengthening our regular work centering in Petrograd and (2) to establishing a new center in Moscow.

"The Board heartily endorses the proposal of Bishop Nuelson that two men be selected for this work centering in Moscow, the one an outstanding preacher and religious instructor, the other his companion and interpreter, both sent out from the United States. Services in English would be maintained in Moscow, and other opportunities for teaching and the circulation of religious literature, it is believed would be afforded. The Board further desires that in addition to the personal expenses of those appointed, the appropriation should cover travel costs in Russia, and the production of the necessary literature. The Board urges, further, that if any proper way can be found for securing additional funds for expansion, should the plans now proposed be carried into effect, such action be taken as may provide for a larger program.

"The Board recognizes the understanding between the Missionary Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and itself, whereby the former is interested in Southern Russia and advises conference and cooperation between the two agencies in their association in the common approach to Russia.

"To avoid at once confusion of thought as to the ideals of the Methodist Episcopal Church and its policies, and to prevent embarrassment in its world service we agree that as a Board, except in such union educational or other projects as are or shall be formally and authoritatively approved, we recognize the necessity of working through the agencies which are subject to and controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, and we hold ourselves responsible for these only in conduct and support. In the case of Russia, here under consideration, it is to be noted that the Board is acting in harmony with the principles here stated.

"This Board will gladly cooperate with other religious organizations, within the limitations imposed upon it, in developing the deeper spiritual life and the better practice of the faith among all the multitudes of that great nation. Its present action has in view at once the integrity of the organization of the Methodist Church in Russia, and the expression of fellowship with all forms of religious organization which holds the essentials of evangelical truth."

Third: The response of the Church to the need of those close to the line of starvation has been in the past few months, as so often in the last few years, clear and generous. The Annual Meeting of the Board of Foreign Missions last November authorized special measures for securing $50,000 to meet the needs in Germany. For this purpose the Treasurer has up to the writing of this statement received $37,819.41.

SOME GENERAL CONCLUSIONS

In conclusion, it seems inadvisable at this time to propose a greatly modified program for Methodist work in Europe. The disturbance, political, economic, social, religious, is so profound and so extended that a comprehensive policy true to the facts of to-morrow cannot with assurance of permanence be framed to-day. This is a time for holding steady. Now we must help. To-morrow or the day after we can construct. The Church is touching with its spirit and its ministries many centers of influence in European lands. The Methodist Nationals in a dozen countries are examples of fidelity and stalwarts for a true order and a better Europe. In them glow the fires not alone of patriotism but of spiritual purpose. Even where they are weak in numbers, their force is dynamic. They move in the affairs of common life, but their true realm is the world of the spirit. War, hatred, selfishness, personal or national, will yield only to the spirit. It is the highest present task of the Church here to increase by sympathy, by the contacts of friendship, by the fellowship of prayer, by material resources the volume of spiritual power there.

It may well be that in the zeal of Centenary upbuilding in the sadly inadequate material equipment of the work in Europe the cry of the people for spiritual strengthening has aroused too little attention. One feels the significance of the evangelistic efforts in Scandinavia, notably in Finland on the border of Karelia; in Germany, where the power of the state church has weakened and the opportunity for free access to the people has come; in Czecho-Slovakia, where the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has promoted fruitful evangelism; in other lands where the social disorders have shocked into new sensibility the dormant faith of believers. The channels for influencing the confused mind and for touching the broken heart of many of the peoples of Europe are open. To keep them full to overflowing with the healing streams of spiritual power is the supreme task set for the Church of the present.

And yet certain obvious requirements for the successful prosecution of the work may be briefly set down here. -

First: Careful avoidance of complications with government must be steadily maintained. Governments in contiguous lands are interrelated either sympathetically or otherwise whether we will or not. We and our workers have definite convictions touching forms of government. We work under those forms—not against them nor for them. We must be loyal to them. This does not mean that we adopt as our own their principles. If to be loyal to the monarchy in Denmark we are forced to adopt as ours the principles of monarchical government, our mission to Denmark would need to be withdrawn. If in Italy or in any other land we should be forced to accept the theory that a democracy and a dictatorship are identical we might need to surrender our task to others. If to maintain our work in Russia it should become necessary for our people not only to obey the Soviet government but, against conscience, to adopt or advocate its principles, our energy and our resources would need to be invested elsewhere. As Americans we work in association with the citizens of the various lands under such governments as may exist. We avoid, always, entangling alliances with government and if we must on principle rebel, we also must withdraw. Extraordinary care must now be exercised, in Europe as in every other land, to be discreet in our relations to Cæsar—or any other “powers that be.”

Second: Utmost attention must be given to the conservation of existing Christian forces in the various fields and to right relations with other organized forms of Christian faith. Wherever possible we should seek cooperation with those whose essential ideals and interpretation of the Gospel harmonize with our own. We seek unoccupied fields and unevangelized people, and everywhere urge new processes and more effective methods. We can do no less. But we can do much more. There is most urgent need to-day of a Protestant Europe. The forces working toward it should have our sympathy and our help. Not without careful discrimination but with a definite purpose of cooperation should we put ourselves alongside of these agencies, denominational or interdenominational, European or American, which are enlisted in the enterprise of establishing in Europe a vital and permanent Protestantism.

Third: We should war against war and earnestly promote both in Europe and America the international spirit. This enterprise belongs in the list of the Church's tasks. No one yet knows all that happened during the great war and few if any understand what has taken place since. It is, however, perfectly clear that there is no cure for the present world distemper but the spirit of Christ. It has not been left to ardent Christians to discover or assert it. Our program everywhere throughout Europe should reach and promote the essential principles of the Gospel as the one power that can heal the hurt of the people.

COMMITTEE OF NINE ON ORGANIC UNION

APPOINTED BY THE GENERAL CONFERENCE OF 1920
REPORT TO THE GENERAL CONFERENCE, MAY, 1924

One of the most insistent notes in the life of the world to-day is the call for the unity of the Church of Jesus Christ. It is felt in the insistent character of the needs of men everywhere, needs which are beyond the powers of any one denomination to meet, and which are so urgent that they forbid competition between denominations, and demand cooperation. It is felt in the groping of all the churches for some sort of a basis of cooperation or union. Surely it is the echo of the prayer of the Master that "they all may be one in us."

This call is finding expression in two ways. 1. In the growing cooperation of the churches in many fields of Christian work. 2. In the development of the actual movement for organic union.

Through recent years the various denominations have been learning to work together in such organizations as the Young Men's Christian Association, the Young Women's Christian Association, the Red Cross, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Anti-Saloon League, and more recently, the Near East Relief. This has accomplished two things. It has resulted in incalculable good, and it has helped the various churches to learn that their members could work together. In none of these movements did the churches come together as churches.

A distinct advance was made when we began to work together as churches, the outstanding instances of which are the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, the Conference of the Boards of Foreign Missions, and the Conference of the Boards of Home Missions.

THE FEDERAL COUNCIL

The Methodist Episcopal Church has been represented in the Federal Council since its inception in 1906. The Council has been the voice and active agency of thirty denominations in moral reform and evangelistic movements. Its influence was very great during the war period, and is now very powerful in the fight against war. No voice has been more potent in the industrial struggle through which we are now passing. The Federal Council is handicapped by the fact that its voice is not fully authoritative; no church is bound by it. And by the constant fear that many of its constituent denominations have of anything that looks towards organic union. The Federal Council in its present form may represent a stage of development toward organic union, or if organic union remains impracticable, the Federal Council may itself develop into a supreme Council of the Evangelical Churches with a real authority to speak and act for them. In any such movement the Methodist Episcopal Church must take its full share of responsibility.

THE CONFERENCE OF THE MISSION BOARDS

No movement in the administration of missions, either Home or Foreign, has been so significant as the inauguration of the Conference of the Boards of Foreign Missions of North America and the Conference of the Boards of Home Missions. These conferences have contributed in a marked degree to a better understanding and fuller cooperation; particularly they have removed causes of misunderstanding and have prevented competition. They have been limited, however, by the restricted powers granted them by the several denominations.

ORGANIC UNION

During the same period that the various denominations have been seeking ways of cooperation with each other there has also been a pronounced movement towards organic union. This has found expression, in a number of instances, in the actual union of several denominations, the Presbyterian Church and the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, the reunion of the Evangelical Churches and of the Lutheran Churches, and most signally of all, the consolidation of the Methodist, Presbyterian, and Congregational Churches of Canada now in process.

The unification of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is one of the greatest questions before this General Conference. We believe the adoption of the report of the Commission on Unification to be the supreme achievement of the hour. Coming together and as the plan becomes operative we will see more clearly what adjustments as to detail ought to be made and shall be able to make them.

WIDER MOVEMENTS

There have been several efforts on a wider scale to bring the Christian bodies together in some kind of organic union. The most notable being "The World Conference on Faith and Order," and "The American Council on Organic Union."

This Committee of Nine on Organic Union was authorized by the last General Conference, at the request of the American Council on Organic Union.

At the last General Conference Dr. George W. Richards, in behalf of the Council, presented a plan for a federated union of the Evangelical Churches of the United States. This plan was presented to a number of the Protestant denominations of the country. The results of that presentation are given in the Second Declaration of the Ad Interim Committee of the Council, herewith enclosed.

A number of meetings of the Executive Committee of the Ad Interim Committee was held at which the Committee of Nine of the Methodist Episcopal Church was represented. This Executive Committee promoted during the quadrennium a campaign of education, and proposes to hold within a period of twelve months another interdenominational council on organic union.

Your Committee expresses the following convictions and makes the following recommendations:

1. We believe that the dangers, responsibilities and opportunities of this age are such as to challenge and require the fulfillment of the Master's prayer for the unity of His followers. We believe that the attitude of the Methodist Episcopal Church must be one of active cooperation with every other church in everything that makes for the advancement of the Kingdom of God.

2. We believe that the question of the extent to which organic union shall be carried must be left for the illumination of the Spirit of God as events develop. But we also believe that such measure of organic union or federation must be speedily reached as shall give the united authority necessary to deal with the question of over-churched and under-churched communities, and all other problems and opportunities requiring the authoritative action of a United Christianity. All recent surveys indicate the fact that we are seriously handicapped in the village and small town because of deadly competition between the churches. The Community Church, which is an effort to reach this situation, must no longer be a denominational orphan.

3. The time has come for a greater catholicity in the recognition of church membership and orders. On the latter the Methodist Episcopal Church occupies a broad position, but on the former some radical changes are needed.

- (1) We ought to simplify our vows of church membership so that anyone who is willing to accept Jesus Christ as Saviour and acknowledge Him as Lord and Master can be received without further question.

- (2) We ought to accept the certificate of membership from any evangelical church upon its presentation without further question.

4. We recommend the authorization by the General Conference of the appointment of a Commission of Twenty-five, composed of five Bishops, ten Ministers and ten Laymen, by the Bishop, whose duty it shall be—

- (1) To make a thorough study of the whole question of organic union and present a report to the next General Conference. Such report should present a statement of the doctrines and phases of government deemed essential to the consideration of any proposal of union.

(2) This Commission should act for the Methodist Episcopal Church in the discussion of all questions of organic union with other evangelical churches.

(3) It should be authorized to consider and report upon proposals of union submitted by any of the several denominations approaching our own in doctrine and discipline.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION ON UNIFICATION

To the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church:

The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in session at Des Moines, Iowa, in May, 1920, created the following Commission on Unification:

Bishops: William Fraser McDowell, Edwin Holt Hughes, William Franklin Anderson, Francis John McConnell, Wilbur Patterson Thirkield.

Representing General Conference Districts: I. Abram Winegardner Harris, II. Reverend David George Downey, III. William Arthur Elliott, IV. Reverend Archibald Moore, V. Ernest Hurst Cherrington, VI. Reverend James Melville Melear, VII. P. W. Kinchen, VIII. Reverend Josiah W. Abel, IX. Albert N. Jarvis, X. Reverend Joseph William Van Cleve, XI. Luren Dudley Dickinson, XII. Reverend Edward Delor Kohlstedt, XIII. Charles E. Allinger, XIV. Reverend Edward Power Dennett, XV. C. H. White.

Members at large: Reverend Frank Mason North, Reverend David Dryden Forsyth, Reverend John H. Race, Alexander Simpson, Jr., I. Garland Penn.

Your Commission held its first meeting at Detroit, November 11-12, 1921, and effected its organization by the election of Bishop William F. McDowell as Chairman, and Abram W. Harris as Secretary. These officers, with Bishop William F. Anderson, David G. Downey and John H. Race, were elected as the Executive Committee.

In November, 1922, Alexander Simpson, Jr., presented his resignation as a Commissioner; the Board of Bishops filled the vacancy by the appointment of Dr. James R. Joy. In July, 1923, P. W. Kinchen presented his resignation.

The General Conference directed this Commission to communicate the action taken in May, 1920, to the Commission on Unification of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Your Commission performed this duty, and indicated its readiness to consider any proposal from the Commission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, looking toward the resumption of negotiations for the reunion of the two Churches. The Southern Commission received the communication from your Commission with great courtesy but reported that it regarded its authority as exhausted with the adoption of the report at Louisville, Kentucky, January 20, 1920.

Your Commission at the Detroit meeting drafted a formal report of the action taken by the General Conference at Des Moines, which was duly communicated to the Commission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, together with an accompanying letter setting forth the careful consideration given to unification by the General Conference at Des Moines and the circumstances under which action thereon was taken.

The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in May, 1922, appointed a Commission on Unification "for the continuance of negotiations looking toward unification in harmony with the basic principles already agreed upon by the Joint Commission as feasible and desirable, or upon such other basis" as the Commission might determine. The action further provided that when a plan of unification was endorsed by a two-thirds vote of each Commission and approved by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, then the College of Bishops was empowered and instructed to call a special session of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

The two Commissions have held two joint meetings; the first at Cincinnati, Ohio, January 18, 19, 1923, and the second at Cleveland, Ohio, July 24, 25, 1923.

At Cincinnati the Joint Commission approved a statement of principles and committed the statement for purposes of further consideration and development to a joint committee composed as follows:

From the Methodist Episcopal Church, South: John M. Moore, Edwin D. Mouzon, Stonewall Anderson, T. D. Ellis, Paul H. Linn, J. S. Candler, R. S. Hyer, H. H. White.

From the Methodist Episcopal Church: William F. Anderson, William F. McDowell, David G. Downey, Archibald Moore, Frank M. North, Ernest H. Cherrington, William A. Elliott, Abram W. Harris.

This Joint Committee of Reference met in Saint Louis, March 27-29, 1923, held six sessions, and adopted a report.

The Joint Commission, at its second meeting held in Cleveland, received the report of the Joint Committee of a Reference and after consideration approved the document which your Commission has now the honor to present to the General Conference. This report was adopted by the following vote:

Methodist Episcopal Church, South: Commissioners present, 23; absent, 2.

Aye: Mouzon, Cannon, McMurry, Moore; Anderson, Arnold, Aston, Culver, Ellis, Elrod, Linn, Sherman, Watson; Blackwell, Candler, Hyer, Reynolds, Snyder, Stockham, White, 20.

No: Denny, Leggett, Rodgers, 3.

Methodist Episcopal Church: Commissioners present, 19; absent, 6.

REPORT OF THE JOINT COMMISSION ON WEEK DAY RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

"The discussion of religious topics is now as common in the corridors as natural history or other topics were before our Week Day Church Schools opened."—Public School Principal.

It is clear that a new phase of religious education is actually upon us. It has expressed itself in the merging of denominational and other religious educational interests for the purpose of reaching the largest possible number of unchurched persons and the development of a more wholesome religious life in the entire nation. "We have made the discovery that unless children are taught religion, they will not be religious. We have also discovered that children can be scientifically taught religion in such a way that the course of their entire lives is changed."—Athearn.

It is clear also that the work of religious education must be co-extensive with the work of the public schools. The Kingdom of God can never fully come until that objective is accomplished. The Church which will take seriously the task of working toward this end will ultimately achieve a leadership which in the long run will be far more to its personal advantage than as though it had operated on a lower plane. Methodism has fine educational traditions and ought to take a place of leadership in this new day.

The secularization of public school education in America has issued in a situation fraught with danger.

1. Because children inevitably sense the discrepancy between the elaborate provision which we make through the public schools for their education in everything else than religion and the poverty of the provision which we make for their education in religion.

2. Because a system of public education that gives no place to religion is not in reality neutral but exerts an influence against religion.—Weigle.

The primary responsibility for religious education rests upon the home. The secondary responsibility rests upon the Church. The Church may not release her responsibility to the State without the greatest danger. Former United States Commissioner of Education, William T. Harris, declared that any religious instruction under the supervision and authority of the State must inevitably descend into a system of mere deism.

Certain religious communions have long contended that religion is a part of the complete education of the child, and in order to secure opportunity therefor, have provided a system of parochial schools giving more or less basis for their contention that out of public funds payment should be made to them for the instruction in general educational subjects which they necessarily must offer in a parochial school program.

The separation of the Church and the State in a Republic such as ours must never be set aside. The cooperation of home and church and school for the purpose of religious instruction must be developed. This is accomplished when the citizenry of a community instructs the public school board so to adjust the time schedule for their children that religion may have its place in the same manner as the subjects in the field of general education. It is clear that the Sunday session of the Church School is now, and probably will be for some time, the strongest arm of the Church in its religious educational activity. The Week Day Church School meeting, before, after, or preferably during school hours and the Daily Vacation Church School carrying on during the summer vacation for periods of three, five or even eight weeks are supplemental agencies.

Beginning with the pastor's or confirmation class idea, the need for more time for religious instruction has developed into a movement for a truly articulated system of instruction. Such instruction is to be offered during the week days to all the children of all the people, in order that the civilization of this and other lands may be undergirded with righteousness and truth and so become infused with the great Christian master motive.

A system of Week Day Religious Schools must become a vital and permanent part of the activities of the Church. In this manner it is possible for Protestant, Catholic, Hebrew or any other communion to have their children in their own Church or other building for purposes of such religious instruction as they may choose to provide. And we must make this provision without adding to the already over-crowded daily public school schedule of the children.

If this work is to be what it ought to be, pastors, special workers, the whole leadership of the whole Church must become thoroughly acquainted with the principles, the methods and the activities involved in this type of religious educational work.

It is increasingly clear that if the fundamental loyalties of our children and youth are to be centered in the Church, the Church must provide a unified and correlated program of instruction in religion. The child ought not to be the subject of challenges by different agencies for his loyalty, for his time, for his funds. For each age group there is now being provided through denominational and interdenominational agencies, a unified system of instruction that operates on Sunday—on week-days during the school year, and during the free vacation hours, so that the child does not know when he is outside the range of religious instruction; and religion takes its rightful place in the whole scheme of his child or youthful world.

The remarkable growth of the idea of the Week Day School of Religious Education, in recent years, is familiar to all.

A record of more than 800 communities which are now carrying on some form of week-day instruction during the school year has been made. Upwards of 7,000 Daily Vacation Church Schools were held in 1923. Many of these are in foreign lands, where the Daily Vacation Church School idea has caught the imagination of the young men and women in our Christian schools and colleges, and bids fair to become one of the most effective means of spreading the Christian message to home and village which has been developed.

In our own land, public school teachers, college men and women, pastors, social workers have turned to this method with enthusiasm. The teacher of a small grade school in the open country of Illinois twice a week, at the close of the school day, turns the school into a week-day school of religion. This she is doing at the express request and with the full concurrence of all the parents, of the school board, and with the hearty enthusiasm of the children—some fifty in number. A far-sighted pastor in Wisconsin has so aroused the interest of the farmer parents of his community that even in the midst of the busy summer season they take time daily to gather together the children of the community for the Daily Vacation Church School. A northern New York community has every child of the public school, Hebrew, Catholic and Protestant, enrolled in week-day and vacation Church school activities. The community acts as a unit in all matters except instruction. In this, the Protestants are grouped together while the Hebrews and Catholics each carry on their own work; the former in a private home—the latter in the hall of the Knights of Columbus.

A single system of transportation—a community approach to the Public School Board—a fine spirit of appreciation has developed out of this wholesome program.

A Joint Commission on "Religious Day Schools" appointed by the last General Conference in their studies during the quadrennium have brought to light many interesting facts.

The pastor is the person who is most deeply interested and largely responsible for the development of these schools. Public school grades, three to seven inclusive, are the great fields of enrollment. In both the week-day and vacation school projects, the three types of schools most prevalent are the denominational, in which a single Church carries out its own program; the inter-denominational, in which two or more denominations of a community operate the schools in common; and the community school, in which all the denominations of the community carry on the school work in one or more centers. Nearly three fourths of our schools are of the denominational type.

As a missionary project for the extension of the influence of the Church these schools can scarcely be surpassed. Approximately one fourth of those in the week-day schools and two fifths of those in the vacation schools have no other contact with the Church. Most of the week-day schools have one period of approximately one hour per week, and the vast majority of week-day and vacation Church schools meet in the churches. The cost per pupil, per year, ranges from fifty cents to $20. The majority of the schools cost $3 per year per pupil for the week-day work. The vacation schools range in cost from nothing per pupil to $10. The majority cost from $1 to $3 per pupil, per year.

The local problems in connection with the week-day work center around leadership—including teachers, curriculum material and finance.

The Commission believes that our Board of Sunday Schools is to be commended for its far-sightedness in entering this field as early as 1914 for the development of material, methods and effective plans for the use of pastors and other leaders in our churches.

The Abingdon Press, through our own Methodist Book Concern, has rendered a signal service in the whole movement in providing curricula materials. The scope, the mechanical excellence, the high educational standards of this material and the adaptation to both Church and public school conditions are worthy of our high commendation.

We must look to our Church educational institutions for the necessary training and equipment of leaders and teachers. Readjustments are being made in a number of the universities, colleges, seminaries, training and secondary schools to meet this challenge.

It is necessary, if this work is to take its place among the activities of our Church, that we challenge our young men and women with this form of full-time life service. The opportunity to minister to our foreign-speaking population, to minister to rural life, to minister to the child in the congested sections of our large cities, challenges our imagination and thrills our hearts. But it must be done on a worthy educational plane. The teacher, the methods, and the equipment for this work are not at all unlike those used in the regular public school field. The educative process is the same in the one field as in the other. But the teaching in the church schools must be done in an atmosphere of spiritual vitality that can lift materials and methods to the plane on which alone they may be considered as religious. This is the outstanding difference—aside from materials—between the work of the Church school and the work of the public school, and it is the point on which the chief emphasis and the chief test of the schools are to be made.

If Methodism faces this opportunity in the way in which she has always made her challenges, it will be possible for her to continue to lead in the development of attitudes, the setting of standards, and the typing of the work that is to be carried on in this, as yet, scarcely touched field. If she succeeds in steadying this educational movement that is also exceedingly popular she will render a signal service to the progress of the Kingdom of God.

10. MEMOIR OF THE REVEREND JOHN FRANKLIN GOUCHER

BY JOHN R. EDWARDS

John Franklin Goucher was born into a cultured Methodist home in Waynesburg, Pa., June 7, 1845, and died at Alta Dale, Pikesville, Maryland, July 19, 1922. He was graduated from Dickinson College in 1868, and entered the Baltimore Conference in 1869.

In 1877 Doctor Goucher was united in marriage with Mary Cecilia Fisher, daughter of Dr. John Fisher and niece of William Fisher, prominent and wealthy citizens of Cecil County, Maryland. Miss Fisher had been an earnest and devoted member of a church of which Doctor Goucher was pastor, and here the acquaintance began which eventuated in the founding of a home and family of rare felicity and grace. By this union it was made possible for Doctor and Mrs. Goucher to express in so large and substantial a manner their joint interest in the missionary enterprise. For twenty-five years the wife continued to be her husband's loving co-trustee in a stewardship of life and service ever wisely and unselfishly administered for the extension of the Kingdom of God, which they alike "made subject to themselves by comprehending it and their own by love." It is an incident worth noting that in the incidental spot where the two first met their mortal bodies were committed to rest.

Leaving an active pastorate after twenty-one years of successful ministry, Doctor Goucher devoted himself to that educational and missionary work with which his name and memory will ever be notably identified. Out of a broad estimation of the value of the Christian education came the founding of the Woman's College of Baltimore, in 1889, of which Doctor Goucher was President until 1908, when he became President-emeritus, the trustees changing its name to Goucher College, by which title it is now known among the best of America's institutions of higher learning. Upon the college, and the First Methodist Episcopal Church located within the city campus, Doctor Goucher lavished the wealth of his affectionate care, building for himself unconsciously a worthy and enduring monument.

In 1884, Doctor Goucher became a member of the Board of Foreign Missions and at the time of his death was its senior member. Here his service was constant and zealous and his counsel of recognized value and influence. Of the Centenary Movement he was an early advocate and leader. Not only did he share in the prophet's vision, but labored without question or hesitation for the realization of its high purpose and worldwide aim. He brought to the solution of all problems the light of a wide experience, the knowledge of a full mind, the wisdom of a ripe judgment, and the achieving power of a consecrated will. What he wrought for the cause of missions is written in the history of the continents of the earth and of the isles of the seas. Numerous primary and secondary schools, theological seminaries, and colleges and universities in China, India, Japan, Korea, in Africa, and in Europe, and in the Americas, owe their existence, and in large measure their maintenance, to the forethought, princely giving and fostering care of Doctor Goucher. The records of the East African Mission show that it was Doctor Goucher who urged the beginning there of Bishop Taylor's work, the members of the Conference recognizing him as their "unofficial parent." Morgan College, among other helpful institutions that he made possible for negroes of the United States, indicates the catholicity of his mind and heart.

Doctor Goucher was a prominent figure in the Edinburgh Conference of 1910; was a member of its Continuation Committee and chairman of the American Section on Education in the Mission Field. He was president of the American Methodist Historical Society for over twenty years; president of the Maryland Bible Society for thirteen years; was a member of a number of Oriental Societies, and orders were conferred upon him, by the governments of China and Japan.

Doctor Goucher did not worship "the God of things as they are." He was a tireless worker for the better and the best. The powers of a cultivated mind and the ceaseless, even passion of a burning heart were devoted to the worship of the God of things as they should be. A loyal churchman—no narrow denominationalism restricted his vision or limited the scope of his service. In the broadest way he interpreted the spirit of the founder of Methodism in desiring "a league offensive and defensive with every soldier of Jesus Christ," and he was always found in the van of every wise cooperation for the spread of Christianity.

Twenty-five times across the Atlantic; eight times across the Pacific, twice over the line of the Trans-Asiatic railway; the railways and routes of travel of his own land and familiar foot-paths; author of half dozen or more volumes, and of numberless monographs—all these travels and writings having to do with the advocacy of worldwide Christianity, are the mere outlines of his labors. Nine times member of General Conference, five times the head of his delegation, three times Chairman of the Committee on Missions, a member from the first of the Commission on Unification—fairly it may be said of him that so far as the Church and its work were concerned, "there was no phase that he did not touch, and he touched nothing that he did not adorn."

MISCELLANEOUS

PROPOSED AMENDMENT CONCERNING THE ELECTION OF DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENTS

Resolved: That ¶ 46, § 3, of the Discipline of 1920, be amended by adding at the end of the section a semicolon and these words: "and shall have power to legislate on all matters concerning Presiding Elders or District Superintendents, including their appointment or election," so that the paragraph as amended shall read:

"¶ 46, § 3. The General Conference shall not change nor alter any part or rule of our government so as to do away Episcopacy, nor destroy the plan of our itinerant General Superintendency; but may elect a Missionary Bishop or Superintendent for any of our Foreign Missions, limiting his Episcopal jurisdiction to the same respectively; and shall have power to legislate on all matters concerning Presiding Elders or District Superintendents, including their appointment or election."

CENTENARY REPORTS AND HISTORICAL DATA

I. A WORLD PROGRAM—REPORT OF THE WORLD PROGRAM COMMITTEE

By action of the last General Conference, the Board of Foreign Missions was instructed to celebrate the Centenary of the organization of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The General Conference set apart the years 1918 and 1919 for this purpose; and in this connection directed the Board of Foreign Missions to formulate a World Program.

Pursuant to these instructions, the Board of Foreign Missions appointed a Commission to arrange for the Centennial Celebration, and provided for a World Program Committee, and called this Committee to meet at Niagara Falls, September 17-19, 1917.

The Committee has been in session for two days, and has carefully gone over the estimates submitted from all the mission fields of the Church. These estimates have been secured by means of a comprehensive questionnaire, the results of which have been tabulated by the Finance Committees within the mission fields, and carefully reviewed and approved by the bishop in charge. The estimates then went before a country-wide committee composed of missionary leaders in each section of our world field, by which they were carefully reviewed for the purpose of eliminating any duplication or unnecessary items. They were then forwarded to the central office of the Board of Foreign Missions, where experts who have full knowledge of the particular fields have scrutinized every detail and summarized the revised estimates.

We are satisfied that the estimates thus submitted have been most carefully made, are conservative, and represent the actual minimum requirement of our foreign mission fields for the next five years.

We believe that the time has come when the Church should make a serious effort to meet her responsibility in an adequate way, in full cooperation with the other evangelical mission forces. We therefore record our conviction that the outlines of a World Program for our Board, as herewith submitted, should be supplemented by similar action to be taken by the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension, and also by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; and that when these outlines have been prepared, a joint meeting should be called for the purpose of preparing a World Program for American Methodism.

We also recommend that when this large program is prepared it shall be sent to the Committee of Reference and Counsel of the Mission Boards of North America, Home Missions Council of North America, Latin America Cooperation Committee, Standing Committee of the Missionary Societies of Great Britain and Ireland, in the hope that similar data may be secured and that a careful survey may be made of the entire home and foreign missionary work of evangelical Christianity; in order that lines of comity may be more fully established; union enterprises more definitely determined upon and denominational responsibilities agreed upon; and that, where necessary, exchange of territory be made to the end that the fullest possible coordination and cooperation be put in force in all the home and foreign missionary fields of the world.

This program should also be submitted to the Continuation Committee of the Edinburgh Conference as a matter of information, and to facilitate coordination and cooperation.

It is also recommended that in denominations where the work of the Women's Societies is not in organic relationship with the Boards of Home and Foreign Missions, estimates be secured from these societies in order that there may be a complete statement of the world's missionary forces.

We recognize the fact that the preparation of an adequate missionary program, which will affect all the peoples and languages of the world, is a gigantic task. It is the task which Jesus Christ committed to his Church when he commanded the disciples to "go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." In the nineteen centuries which have succeeded that command, the Church has made a great beginning; but the work of systematic extension and occupation is only just begun. The proportions of the task are so great that the human mind is unable to grasp all of the factors. It involves the overthrow of hoary religions, the intellectual quickening and development of half of the human race, the alleviation of suffering for hundreds of millions of people, the proclamation of the Gospel to the last man, woman and child of every tribe and people of the earth.

Merely from the standpoint of organization the task is stupendous. It involves the active enlistment of the millions of church members in the homeland, the raising and wise administration of huge sums of money, the enlistment and preparation of an army of missionaries, the transportation of these missionaries to and from distant stations; the building of homes in the midst of unfavorable environments, with the attendant problems of health and sanitation; the erection of churches, chapels, schools, hospitals; and the establishment of proper lines of communication, together with the furnishing of adequate supplies.

It involves the superhuman task of transforming human character from the depths of paganism and sin to the heights of spiritual blessing and attainment. Who is sufficient for these things? Were it not for the fact that Omnipotent Power is available, and that our Divine Master and Lord is the leader of the enterprise, we would pronounce the task impossible. But drawing nigh to God, with true heart and with great faith, we are led to believe that the Church of Jesus Christ can arise, even in the midst of the present world upheaval, and that it may indeed become a conquering missionary Church.

We, therefore, suggest the following points as the basis for a World Program, and refer the details to a committee of five with instructions to elaborate this report and to present the same in our behalf to the next annual meeting of the Board of Foreign Missions.

The Methodist Episcopal Church should take its full share of responsibility in the evangelization of the world.

1. CHINA

The political, educational, economic, domestic and commercial awakening of one fourth of the human race is one of the most stupendous facts of modern history. After seventy years of encouraging history, we have in China 3,000 native pastors, a force of more than 200 missionaries and foreign workers, and more than 23,000 students and pupils enrolled in our schools. All the workers from this vast field agree in the conviction that one million children could be enrolled in our schools in China, if we had the buildings and the teachers to care for them. We are also grateful that our Church has been a leader in the development of union missionary enterprises, and that we are cooperating with the other Christian forces in establishing great Interdenominational Universities in four of the great strategic centers. We believe that there ought to be a great development of primary and secondary education, and that the colleges, universities and technical schools ought to be adequately equipped and endowed. We also believe that the suffering millions of China ought to have the benefits of modern medical practice, surgery and hygiene, and that the hospitals which we now have should be reinforced and others established.

We view with satisfaction the development of self-support which has increased from $775 in 1885 to more than $30,000, and we note the proposal of the China Centenary Commission that self-support be increased in much larger measure during the Centenary period. With old customs and traditions being broken down, and with the minds and hearts of 430,000,000 people open to the Gospel to an unparalleled degree, we believe that the Methodist Episcopal Church should develop and train Chinese pastors and teachers in sufficient numbers to occupy with adequate and regular services all sections of our Methodist territory. We strongly endorse a proposition to raise speedily $1,000,000 for educational work in the lower and precollegiate grades. In addition large sums will be needed to care for our share of college and university work.

2. INDIA

We have a total staff of more than 9,000 missionaries, native preachers, workers and teachers in India. We have a church membership of more than 300,000 and with 39,000 students and pupils in our schools. We have property valued at $2,596,000; and the wonderful work of the missionaries and teachers has resulted in a spiritual awakening known as the Mass Movement. Fifty millions of people of depressed classes are moving in mass toward Christianity and threaten to overwhelm the limited evangelistic resources of the Church. Last year we refused to baptize 150,000 people because we could not take care of them.

The Methodist Episcopal Church should immediately plan to cooperate with the poverty stricken people of India in erecting churches and chapels in all of the areas where the Mass Movement has created new congregations. We should increase our foreign missionary staff to sufficient strength to provide an adequate foreign missionary leadership and to hold more strongly our great centers. Above all, we should plan at once for the thorough training of a native leadership which will provide pastors, teachers and Bible workers for the oncoming millions. Thirteen hundred teachers for primary schools are immediately demanded, and our colleges and theological seminaries ought to be greatly strengthened and adequately endowed. A permanent fund should be established for creating an adequate vernacular literature for the different language areas of India.

We strongly endorse the proposition of the India Mass Movement Commission that a million dollars be immediately raised to meet the emergency caused by the Mass Movement; and we believe that this should be supplemented at a later time by still larger amounts which will be needed to meet the unprecedented condition which threatens to overwhelm us in response to the prayers and labors of the Christian Church.

3. MEXICO

Mexico is our nearest foreign territory, and from the standpoint of our national life is our next-door neighbor. This country will be a source of ceaseless anxiety to the people of the United States until the national thinking, living and ideals be brought to higher levels. The country has been devastated by revolution, famine and disease. More than 80 per cent of the people are illiterate, and the prevailing form of religion is losing its hold on thinking people and is in marked disfavor with the present government. The Methodist Episcopal Church is strongly situated in the capital city and in some of the provincial capitals. The evangelistic work of our Church is greatly prospering. The largest public congregation in the City of Mexico, Protestant or Catholic, meets in our own Methodist Episcopal Church. In the country regions, notably in the Pueblo District, village after village is opening up to our work. In the larger centers, the earlier persecutions have given way to hearty appreciation and active cooperation on the part of the people. In two of our greatest provincial schools the governors of the Provinces are pleased to come each year at Commencement time to preside over the public exercises, and the children of governors and of people of the higher classes are coming to our schools in considerable numbers.

We have one hospital which is a center of healing, sanitation and social betterment for a wide area containing a million people. This hospital is located in the city where the population during the past two years has been reduced by war, disease or removals, from 40,000 to 16,000, because of the disturbances of the times. In one city of Mexico, which has never been occupied by more than two foreign missionaries, a thousand pupils have been enrolled in the schools of the Board of Foreign Missions and of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, and hundreds more could be enrolled if equipment and teachers were available.

We believe that the Methodist Episcopal Church could wisely spend a million dollars in the next few years in establishing schools, in raising the intellectual levels of the country, and in introducing the benefits of the pure Gospel of Jesus Christ. We note with surprise that the very modest estimates called for an increase of less than $200,000 a year for the next five years for property, equipment, maintenance and endowment, and that over one third of this amount is to be raised in Mexico itself. We believe that the Church should unhesitatingly supply the necessary resources for the evangelization of Mexico.

4. PANAMA AND SOUTH AMERICA

Panama is one of the two great cross-roads of the nations. Representative citizens are flocking thither from every land, and their life will affect the two Americas. From a commercial as well as from a religious standpoint, Panama is related to both North and South America, and we are pleased to note that the Bishops administering our work in Mexico and in South America have arranged to administer the work jointly and to cooperate in the administration of the work throughout Latin America.

At Panama we should establish a great industrial school and should strongly develop an evangelistic work.

On the mighty continent of South America we are responsible for one third of the people. We occupy large portions of Peru, Bolivia, Chile, the Argentine, and Uruguay, and we were once located in the capital of Ecuador, from which we were driven out by a fanatical people. We also occupied Paraguay, but have been compelled to withdraw. We believe that there should be the strongest possible concentration of our forces in South America, and we recommend that wherever possible union educational and publishing enterprises be developed.

We carry on an evangelistic work in eight of the twenty-one Republics of Latin America, working in a total population of 23,000,000. In four of these Republics we have the only mission work. We have planted sixteen high schools, and through these schools we are in contact with more than 10,000 of the people of the higher class. We have made a beginning in evangelizing the masses, with 150 preachers and with 8,000 members. We have two publishing houses, and ours is frequently the only literature in the homes of the people.

We regret to report that in the great Continent of South America as yet we have no medical work. We believe that the Methodist Episcopal Church ought to be in the rapidly developing portions of South America and prosecute work analogous to that done by the preachers of itinerant days in North America. We ought to occupy the rapidly growing cities of the territories which have been assigned to us. We ought to strengthen our existing educational institutions and secure proper endowments. We ought to cooperate with other Protestant bodies in developing the two great theological seminaries projected for the East Coast, and one for the West Coast. We ought to establish Bible schools and agricultural schools, and should cooperate in founding not less than two union universities, one to be located in Buenos Aires and the other in Santiago. We ought to enlarge our publishing houses and reinforce our present missionary staff. An especial effort should be made to raise up better prepared men for pastors and to provide evangelists for the occupation of new territory, and the creation of new churches. We ought to provide scholarships for the training of native pastors, which constitutes a strong factor in the development of our work in South America. We work in countries where from 40 per cent to 85 per cent of the people are illiterate, and we must provide elementary and primary schools in hundreds of centers, and must establish numerous high schools and sufficient normal training schools. We should also build representative Protestant churches in the great capital cities where we work, and should build these churches into the life of our schools.

In South America we must follow the frontiers in primitive Methodist fashion, and presently we must develop an organized church on a continent-wide scale.

5. AFRICA

The work in North Africa is now affiliated with the work in Europe, while geographically it is, of course, related to the great continent upon which it is located.

In North Africa we occupy a sector in the line of trenches thrown up by the Protestant missionaries to check the oncoming hordes of Mohammedanism. The Methodist Episcopal Church occupies Algeria and Tunisia. The United Presbyterian Church occupies the Valley of the Nile. The Presbyterian Church occupies Syria, with one of its great schools located in Beirut. The Congregational Church occupies Constantinople and Asia Minor, and the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Congregational Church share in the occupation of Bulgaria.

Under French occupation, our work in North Africa is most promising. We have the beginnings of Moslem congregations, with Sunday schools in five centers, but hold our services in rented halls, as we have no church property. We have churches, congregations and Sunday schools among French and Spanish people, and we are in position to work most effectively in staying the advance of forty millions of Mohammedans who are marching down upon Africa from the North.

In pagan Africa, we are wisely located in Liberia, in the Congo region, in Angola, and in Portuguese East Africa. The great need is for a powerful evangelistic movement among the native people of Africa, this to be supported and carried forward upon the basis of a people who are being elevated from their pagan surroundings by means of primary education, and especially by means of industrial schools. In Old Umtali, we have 3,000 acres of land with several buildings where training is given in agriculture, carpentry, printing, brick-making and other industries. In the Congo Mission we have been offered another great tract of land if we will occupy it with an industrial mission. In Africa we have the problem of taking raw blacks from the bush and teaching them everything that goes into the making of civilization.

There are over 800 languages and dialects in Africa, of which only 130 have been reduced to writing. In this land we must continue to do as our missionaries have already done, reduce languages to written form, create grammars and dictionaries, translate the Bible into these languages, teach the people to read, establish printing presses for the creation and circulation of a literature, build schools, hospitals, churches and, in short, we must create the entire fabric of civilized life.

A great foundation work has been done. Our fields of responsibility have been marked out, and are admirably chosen. We have established relationships with governments. The native chiefs are increasingly friendly, and the people are open-hearted and eager to learn. Before our missionaries went into the Congo region, it was found that a native who had gone back into the interior had been praying for two years that God would send a missionary; and the Springers, impelled to go, though without adequate resources, crossed the continent on foot until they found this lone Christian. Already a great mission has been founded, and a great evangelistic work has been done. We believe that the Church should fully occupy its portions of the Dark Continent.

6. JAPAN AND KOREA

In Japan we have the first indigenous Methodist Church, with its own General Conference, its own Bishop, the union of the work begun by the Canadian Church, the Methodist Church, South, and the Methodist Episcopal Church. When the Japan Methodist Church was formed in 1907, our Church had the privilege of contributing 45 churches and 5,500 members. In Japan we have a great school at Tokyo, which is admirably located and will doubtless contribute largely to the union educational enterprise to be supported by the Protestant forces of the country. We also have one of the most important theological schools, and a high school. Our work in Japan is that of hearty cooperation with the Japanese Methodist Church.

In Korea we have one of the most promising evangelistic fields in the world, with more than 20,000 full members and probationers and nearly 30,000 in Sunday schools. We have 150 elementary schools, four high schools, and share in the union college at the capital city. We have three hospitals, and we cooperate in the union medical college at Seoul, which is the only Christian medical college and nurse training school in all Korea. The work in Japan and in Korea has been understaffed and inadequately supported for the past ten years, and we believe that the proposition to establish 41 churches in Korea, and to send out during the next five years 19 new missionaries for Korea, and 17 missionaries for Japan, is the lowest possible estimate that can be considered of the reinforcement of our forces, because even in Japan there is unoccupied territory where more than a million people are without Christian preaching, and in Korea the evangelistic awakening has brought a condition which requires immediate and strong reinforcements of our staff.

We believe that our Church should perform its full part in establishing the union colleges in Seoul and the Interdenominational University in Tokyo, and that the secondary schools which are to be feeders for these should be thoroughly standardized and adequately supported. We would also urge the importance of endowments for colleges, which, as in the case of the college in Tokyo, are in competition with a National University which spends a million dollars a year on current expense alone, and is, in the very nature of the organization, lacking in Christian motives and ideals.

7. THE PHILIPPINES

This is our only foreign mission field under the American flag. Since the American occupation 50,000 Filipinos have been brought into our churches, and our missionaries are stationed in seven capital centers to supervise the work of 1,200 Filipino preachers. We believe that we ought to continue our evangelistic drive until we have reached the two million and a half people who are dependent upon Methodist preachers for the Gospel.

We believe that we ought to establish village schools, and one or more industrial schools, Christian dormitories in connection with the government schools, and ultimately that we ought to develop a great Christian college which will make Manila a radiating center for the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

We believe that the minimum requirement will be at least $100,000 a year for the next five years, in addition to the amounts already contributed and the amounts to be raised on the field.

8. MALAYSIA

In this wonderland of the tropics, which is the melting pot where Malaysian, Indian and Chinese meet and fuse, where there are now sixty millions of people, and two hundred and fifty thousand Chinese and sixty thousand India emigrants arrive annually. Methodism is the only American mission. It is warmly welcomed by both British and Dutch Governments. We have established the great Anglo-Chinese College at Singapore. We have a splendid publishing house at Singapore, wholly self-supporting, which supplies our schools and Sunday schools with textbooks, tracts, Bibles, and Christian literature in many languages.

We have a hospital for Java, an industrial mission among the Dyaks of Borneo, and we have scattered meager congregations bearing faithful witness, each in its own neighborhood, each congregation being closely affiliated with a school. It is proposed to develop self-supporting churches as rapidly as possible; to establish and endow a central university at Singapore; to increase the number and equipment of our schools throughout Malaysia; to provide a literature fund for widely spreading Gospel truth; and to establish a chain of hospitals throughout the Dutch possessions. We can do no less if we are to be faithful to the commission which has been given to us, and we believe that this island ought to become the center of one of our greatest Methodist constituencies. We strongly advocate its adequate support and equipment.

9. EUROPE

The estimates from Europe bear on the front page this single statement: "Owing to present conditions the full and detailed statement of proposals for our share of the work of rehabilitation is postponed." The rest of the page is blank. But the work in Europe goes forward.

We are located in France, Germany, Switzerland, Italy, Austria-Hungary, Bulgaria, Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Russia. We are the only evangelical church so related to all of the warring countries.

Our work in France is prospering, and we have an opportunity for gathering in the children, through industrial orphanages that will, please God, never again be presented to any church.

In Italy we are building a great college on one of the hills of Rome, and we have a fine opportunity for the erection of churches, and the development of our evangelistic work among the people who are increasingly accessible under the stress of the war.

In Austria-Hungary we are located in Vienna and Budapest, with fine properties in each of these capital cities, and with a growing work out among the villages.

In Bulgaria we are in Sofia, and have much village work and a splendid opportunity for linking up with the great chain of Congregational missions which stretches down through Asia Minor.

In Germany we have churches, hospitals and 900 trained nurses, a great publishing house, as fine a people, and as many capable and devoted pastors as it would be possible to meet anywhere.

In Denmark we have the greatest City Mission, with one possible exception, to be found anywhere in the Methodist Episcopal Church at home or abroad.

In Norway and Sweden our work is well established and is making steady progress.

In Russia we have a fine property in Petrograd, and a work which is extending out even into Siberia.

Only a Church like our own without national limitation will be in a position to lead the European nations in the period of reconstruction. God forbid that the rancors of war or the passion of international strife should weaken our bond of spiritual union with all Christians in Europe. We believe that the present work in Europe should not only be strengthened, but also that it should be extended to Belgium, Spain and Portugal.

The report of the Commission on work in Europe presented to the Committee urges the continuance of present annual support for the work in the ten countries of Europe and a generous provision in the Centenary Estimates for maintenance and promotion in the area of Europe.

A WORKING PLAN

For this great work we heartily approve the budget made up of detailed estimates from the field which total $21,425,591 in addition to present income, to be expended during the next five years. To this we would add the tentative budget for Europe of $2,000,000 as recommended by the General Conference Commission on work in Europe, a total of $23,425,591.

We recommend that there be secured $8,000,000 per year for the five-year period, to care for the following askings:

ASKINGS—WORLD SURVEY 1917

Askings from the Fields

(Including funds for the partial endowment of educational and other permanent institutions)..... $27,425,591.00

Additional gifts for the permanent funds of the Board for Central administration are approved and will be welcome.

Widows' and Orphans' Endowment Fund..... 1,000,000.00

Retired Missionaries Endowment Fund..... 1,500,000.00

Present Income (Two millions of dollars a year).. 10,000,000.00

Total $39,925,591.00

Amount pledged if forty millions be raised..... 74,409.00

Total $40,000,000.00

RESOLUTIONS

Resolved, That the outline of a World Program for our Board, as herewith submitted, should be supplemented by similar action to be taken by the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension, and also by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; and that when these outlines have been prepared, a joint meeting should be called for the purpose of preparing a World Program for American Methodism.

Resolved, That when this larger program is prepared it shall be sent to the Committee of Reference and Counsel of the Mission Boards of North America, Home Missions Council of North America, Latin America Co-operation Committee, Standing Committee of the Missionary Societies of Great Britain and Ireland, in the hope that similar data may be secured and that a careful survey may be made of the entire home and foreign missionary work of evangelical Christianity; in order that lines of comity may be more fully established; union enterprises more definitely determined upon and denominational responsibilities agreed upon; and that, where necessary, exchange of territory be made to the end that the fullest possible co-ordination and co-operation be put in force in all the home and foreign missionary fields of the world.

This program should also be submitted to the Continuation Committee of the Edinburgh Conference as a matter of information and to facilitate co-ordination and co-operation.

It is also recommended that in denominations where the work of the Women's Society are not in organic relationship with the Boards of Home and Foreign Missions, estimates be secured from these societies in order that there may be a complete statement of the world's missionary forces.

Resolved, That for this work we heartily approve the budget made up of detailed estimates from the field, which total $21,425,000 in addition to present incomes, to be expended during the next five years. To this we would add the tentative budget for Europe of $2,000,000, as recommended by the General Conference Commission on work in Europe, a total of $23,425,591.

We recommend that there be secured $8,000,000 per year for the five-year period, to care for the following askings:

Askings of Fields (World Survey, 1917)	$21,425,591
For Europe	2,000,000
Permanent Fund	4,000,000
(The income of which shall provide for overhead charges so that all money contributed by the Church shall go directly to the foreign field.)
Widows' and Orphans' Endowment Fund	1,000,000
Retired Missionaries' Endowment Fund	1,500,000
Present Income ($2,000,000 a year)	10,000,000
Total	$39,925,591

Resolved, That the Board of Foreign Missions and the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension begin a campaign not later than September 1, 1918, for the purpose of securing the funds needed. This campaign to be under the auspices of the Centenary Commission which has been created in accordance with the authorization of the General Conference.

Resolved, We suggest the following time schedule:

January 1, 1918, begin the Educational Campaign.

January 1, 1918, begin the Annual Conference District Campaigns with the proposed week's conference.

Summer of 1918, Training Conferences for leaders and conference with representatives of the Church, South, preferably in the South.

September 1, 1918, begin Public Financial Campaign.

June, 1919, have the Campaign culminate in a great Centenary Celebration.

October, November, 1919, hold echo meetings in the great centers.

December 31, 1919, bring the Centenary Celebration to a close.

January 1, 1920, establish a permanent department of the Boards to continue the enlarged plans for instruction and inspiration of the Church in order that the results of the Centenary Campaigns may be adequately conserved.

Resolved, That in connection with the Centenary arrangements there be a church-wide educational program which shall be of sufficient magnitude and power to result in the church-wide study of Christian missions; in the most thorough use of our Church press as a medium for communicating missionary information; in the supplementary use of the secular press; and in the very extensive use of maps, charts, cartoons, diagrams, and lantern slides.

Resolved, That there be an organized movement, the purpose of which shall be to carry a vital missionary organization down through Episcopal Areas, Annual Conferences, and Superintendents' Districts, to the last Church in Methodism, and that a special effort be made to enlist the active co-operation of our entire constituency.

Resolved, That the Centenary Commission keep constantly in mind as its goal, the local church, and that every effort be made to make each church in Methodism dominantly missionary—by which we mean, a church with a missionary passion which will make it evangelistic at home and truly missionary in its outreach to the ends of the earth, and to this end a church in which each member recognizes it as his sacred obligation to promote the world-wide plans of Jesus Christ.

Resolved, That the final triumph of this imperial program depends upon a new birth within the Church of New Testament teaching, as to the stewardship of life, and prayer and possessions. The first need of the hour is not money, but the consecration that lays money on the altar. We welcome, therefore, as fundamental to this entire campaign the proposal of the Centenary Commission that, in co-operation with other forces in the Church, it shall provide for a revival of study of the scriptural teaching of Christian stewardship, and its definite acknowledgment in the payment of the tithe. We believe that this proposal will result in the issuing of such a challenge to the children of our Methodist homes and to the students of our schools, colleges and theological seminaries, that an adequate number of young men and women will rise up to meet the increased demand of this program.

Resolved, That we approve the plans proposed for the development of the missionary prayer life of the Church, and we urge that an effort be made to enroll by name tens of thousands of Methodist pastors and people to meet daily at the Throne of Grace in intercessory prayer for the Centenary and its objects as represented in our World Program.

The names of those who attended the meeting of the World Program Committee at Niagara Falls, September 17-19, are as follows:

CENTENARY AGREEMENTS

Before making any comments on the Centenary receipts, a few general statements should be made:

The official Centenary year began June 1, 1919. Because some Districts and several Conferences had begun the payment of Centenary money on January 1, 1919, and there was no way of distinguishing between distinctly Centenary money and the regular income, it was decided to issue Centenary vouchers for all money received after January 1, 1919, with the understanding that Districts should determine the time of beginning their five-year period, provided it was prior to June 1, 1919.

A system of percentages was worked out for the Fall Conferences, whereby these Conferences were entitled to star credit if they paid the following percentage of their quota for the first year, by the time of their Conference session:

Conferences meeting in August.....	30 per cent
Conferences meeting in September.....	35 per cent
Conferences meeting in October.....	45 per cent
Conferences meeting in November.....	50 per cent
Conferences meeting in December.....	60 per cent

The following agreement was entered into with the Board of Education

Board of Sunday Schools
Board of Temperance
Freedmen's Aid Society
Deaconess Board
American Bible Society:

1. The Centenary would adjust with each of these Boards from January 1, 1919, to June 1, 1919, on the basis of their receipts for the same months of 1918, plus the average increase in receipts for these months for the previous three years.

2. After June 1, 1919, the Centenary guaranteed the full apportionment of each of these six Boards.

The arrangement with the Board of Foreign Missions and the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension was on the following basis:

1. From January 1, 1919, to June 1, 1919, each Board would receive the same amount as they had received for the identical months of the year 1918.

2. After June 1, 1919, they would share equally in all receipts, including designated and undesignated receipts for both Boards, less the amount of the full apportionments for the six smaller Boards, until the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension and the Board of Foreign Missions should have received one fifth of the total askings.

Any excess above this amount received between June 1, 1919, and June 1, 1920, would be divided among the following organizations in the ratios indicated:

Woman's Foreign Missionary Society.....	$2,000,000
Woman's Home Missionary Society.....	2,000,000
Freedmen's Aid Society.....	2,000,000
Board of Education.....	2,000,000
Board of Sunday Schools.....	2,000,000
Board of Conference Claimants.....	2,000,000
Deaconess Board	1,000,000
Church Temperance Society.....	1,000,000
American Bible Society.....	1,000,000
Special Missionary Education Fund.....	1,000,000
Methodist Hospital Work.....	2,000,000

CENTENARY SUBSCRIPTIONS

The Centenary subscriptions, as reported by the Area Secretaries, amount to about $112,000,000. This amount, however, in most cases includes the apportionments of the six smaller Boards. The total apportionments for these Boards for five years amount to $8,725,000. Adding this amount to the $105,000,000 of the Centenary askings makes a total of $113,725,000. This figure would indicate that the subscriptions at the present time fall short $1,725,000 of covering the Centenary askings and the benevolent apportionments for five years. This shortage, it is hoped, will be more than covered by the subscriptions raised by the six Boards in Areas where they were not included in the Centenary and by a further effort on the part of Areas which have not gone over the top. The Department of Finance, under the leadership of Dr. John W. Hancher, is taking energetic steps to secure these results.

RECEIPTS

Up to October 31, 1919, the Treasurer of the Centenary received the sum of $7,344,983.54. With the exception of some small amounts this money was received during the five months of the official Centenary year.

Under the agreement quoted above, this amount has been disbursed among the eight participating bodies according to the figures given in this report. To this should be added the moneys received by the eight participating Boards during the year, making a total of $10,950,936.63. The total receipts for these same Boards for the previous year amounted to $6,930,550.19, showing a net gain in receipts for the eight participating Boards of $4,020,386.44.

EXPENSES

The total expenses of the Joint Centenary up to October 31, 1919, are $3,932,879.72, exclusive of the expenses of the Columbus Celebration. This will not be the final figure. There are still a few unpaid bills awaiting adjustment. On the other hand, quite a substantial sum will come into the treasury for equipment which has been sold to the Interchurch World Movement but which has not yet been inventoried. The equipment consists of

1. Office furniture.
2. The Entire Lantern Slide Department.
3. World Outlook.

While it is impossible to estimate just what these figures will be, until the inventory is completed, in all probability the amount will be several hundred thousand dollars.

On the basis of total subscriptions of about \$112,000,000 the percentage of cost of the Joint Centenary before deducting the credits referred to (\$3,932,879.72) is $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. Adding the cost of the Foreign Board Centenary (\$515,233.08) and the Home Board Centenary (\$212,195.33) the cost is 4 per cent. Add the cost of the Columbus Celebration, without reference to the large credits which are certain, the total is 5 per cent.

CENTENARY CONSERVATION

The Centenary Conservation Committee is composed of the following persons:

From the Board of Home Missions—D. D. Forsyth, Chairman; L. C. Murdock, W. H. G. Gould, A. P. Sloan, W. L. McDowell, Frank C. Dunn.

From the Board of Foreign Missions—S. Earl Taylor, General Secretary; A. W. Harris, George M. Fowles, Treasurer; Frank L. Brown, Frank Mason North, John T. Stone, W. B. Millar.

Representing the District Superintendents—Frederick W. Mueller, F. H. Coman, E. R. Heckman.

Representing the Pastors—E. L. Waldorf, Benjamin Young, W. R. Wedderspoon.

Representing the Boards and Societies—Edgar Blake, General Secretary; J. B. Hingeley, Charles Guthrie.

The Committee authorized the following budget from October 1, 1919, to July 1, 1920:

General Conservation Program.....	$750,000
Special Evangelistic Campaign.....	125,000

It was voted that each organization participating in the proceeds of the Centenary funds should pay its proportionate part of these expenses.

THE COLUMBUS CELEBRATION

The total cost of the Columbus celebration to date is $1,300,804.16. The receipts were $299,857.36, leaving a deficit of $1,000,946.80. This, however, represents a very incomplete report as in the general expense account there still remain a few unpaid bills awaiting adjustment. On the other hand, there are very substantial assets, the value of which has not yet been determined. These assets consist of:

1. Equipment and curios of the general Exposition.
2. The pageant called "The Wayfarer."
3. The moving picture film of the pageant.
4. The organ which was sold but which has not yet been paid for.
5. Certain rebates from the State and from the railroad companies which have not yet been realized.

Any statement as to the value of these assets must, in the very nature of the case, be mere guess work. It is probable that these assets will care for half of the deficit and there is a possibility that they may provide for the entire amount.

WORLD OUTLOOK

The first number of World Outlook was issued in January, 1915. It was carried as a Foreign Board publication until the beginning of the Joint Centenary Campaign when it was transferred to the Centenary and became a Home and Foreign publication.

The Interchurch World Movement desired a publication of this general character and entered into negotiations with the Centenary looking toward the purchase of this magazine. Officers of both organizations agreed that there was neither room nor necessity for competing missionary magazines in this field and inasmuch as the character of the magazine readily lent itself to interdenominational publication the transfer was agreed to.

As shown in the statistical tables the net advances to World Outlook, the amount charged to Centenary publicity and the deficit total $77,841.25, or an average of $15,568.25 a year, which in the judgment of many is a meager sum when compared with the great educational value of World Outlook and the prestige which it has brought to the Church.

The amount advanced by the Joint Centenary Committee, $64,710.25, is included in the Joint Centenary expense account, and the amount received from the Interchurch World Movement will be credited to this account.

COLLECTIONS

The experience of this year in collecting and remitting large sums of money for the Benevolent Boards emphasizes the fact that the present system is antiquated and entirely inadequate to meet present-day conditions. Treasurers of some Conferences, held six weeks before the close of the fiscal year, had not remitted on October 31st, and it was only after sending many special delivery letters and telegrams that the reports were finally secured.

Some action should be taken by the next General Conference providing that funds for the Benevolent Boards, now being covered into one Centenary total, should be paid directly to a central receiving treasurer and under no circumstances should this money be held back until Conference sessions and much later. Such a plan would best be accomplished by having all churches remit directly to the receiving treasurer, or if some compromise measure should be thought best at this time, arrangements should be made for a representative of the receiving treasurer to be present at the session of each Annual Conference for the apportioned benevolences. In this way money could be banked immediately and interest on several millions of dollars would be saved.

Lybrand, Ross Bros. & Montgomery, Certified Accountants, of New York City, have been engaged to audit the books of each Area office and also the books of the Central office.

GEORGE M. FOWLES, Treasurer.

W. J. ELLIOTT, Associate Treasurer.

III. ADDRESS OF DOCTOR FORSYTH

D. D. Forsyth: Mr. Chairman and members of the General Conference, Dr. S. Earl Taylor will make the formal report of the Joint Centenary Committee. Doctor Blake will make the report for the Committee on Conservation. I will make an introductory statement covering the relation of our Home Missions and Church Extension Board to the Centenary, and some results of the Centenary in the life of that great board.

We are probably too near the Centenary itself to judge of its real meaning. Men in other days may think of it as the turning point in the life of our denomination. A great New York preacher said some months ago that the Centenary was the most gigantic achievement of any branch of the Christian Church in all modern times. There is no way to give proper recognition to all the human agencies involved in the Centenary campaign. The Church is greatly indebted to the Bishops of our Church, to the District Superintendents, to our Ministers and to many of our Laymen, for the type of leadership, the superb leadership which they gave to this, probably the most significant movement that has ever touched the life of our Church in our time—significant not chiefly because of its great financial goal, but because of its spiritual goal and meaning. You cannot bring before our Church, as was brought before our Church, the gospel of intercession and life service and stewardship and the gospel of world need, and not have a spiritual awakening. The thing that happened to the nation when the nation stood face to face with the world war happened to our church when it stood face to face with the challenge of the Centenary. The Church for the first time discovered herself and her mighty resources and responsibilities, and was willing to undertake the seemingly impossible. The Church in the great Centenary campaign was unified for a single task. You could have touched our Church at any point from Maine to California, and any group in our Church, foreign or American, white or black, on the frontier or in the great city, and have found that Church on tip-toe to undertake to do the thing that was an adequate thing. That was not all. The Church in the Centenary campaign came to life on the matter of its responsibility to its own neighborhood and to the world neighborhood. Why, the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension has been absolutely swamped with the applications coming to our office in every mail for assistance to complete some enterprise or initiate some enterprise that ought to be completed. We had applications for six million dollars out of the reconstruction fund for such enterprises, and we had only one and a half million dollars to distribute. The great majority of these askings were for projects where the people never knew they had a need until the educational Centenary program revealed that need. Livingstone used to say, "The end of the exploration is the beginning of the enterprise." The beginning of the enterprise is the administration of these funds. One New York layman said a year ago, when we were discussing with him a sensible program for conservation, "The most sensible program for conservation is a program of real administration." Our board, in laying the foundation or fixing the basis for the appropriation of the Centenary fund last year, sent its representatives to every district superintendent in American Methodism, that we might canvass with him his five-year program for the first year's Centenary fund. Then we placed those programs before the Conference boards in all the Conferences. These as finally fixed were printed in all details with a description of every appropriation large or small, and the appropriations recommended by our board. Our regular Centenary program is a very much enlarged program over that of former years. In addition to that program, out of "Reconstruction Funds" we have been able to undertake lines and types of work we have never undertaken before. For example our board has cooperated with our theological seminaries in seeking to have specialized men for special fields as the rural field, the down-town field, the foreign fields, etc. So to-day, with that cooperation, before the first year has closed we have from ten to sixty men in the various theological schools training themselves for special fields. But if the entire product of our theological seminaries were used in our home fields, we could not secure enough men in the next decade to meet the need. So we have seen the need to go out all over the land and make provision for shortened courses. Fifteen hundred men have taken training for rural work in these schools. We have made appropriations to some twenty-two centers of great student populations amounting to $284,000, in addition to $30,000 invested in Christian workers for those centers of student population. In addition to all this another type of work has been to furnish war scholarships to men and women whose education was interrupted by the war. We have appropriated a quarter of a million dollars for that purpose; and fifteen hundred war scholarships have been given to deserving men. Some of our colleges have reported to us that half of these men would never have returned to school without this assistance. So that appropriation tipped the scale to college.

When the war closed and the armistice was signed we began readjusting our war work program in America and Europe. But we discovered and came to realize that the only wise thing for the board to do was to make provision for an adequate ministry for men in the army and navy in all the years to come; so that we have gone forward, and in some instances have readjusted our program in military centers and in other instances have very much strengthened it. At Vallejo in California we are cooperating in the construction of an adequate plant. There are always ten thousand men on shore there, and fifteen thousand civilians in the shops. A similar situation exists in Bremerton, Washington, where from six to ten thousand marines are always on shore and ten to twelve thousand workmen are always in the shops. Bishop Hughes appointed one of the finest leaders in the Puget Sound Conference to become pastor of that great strategic naval center. Our church building there was simply a shack; but now we have a center of religious and social life of that entire naval plant. So that when the influenza scourge was upon us, in the basement of that church our ministry and membership ministered to one thousand marines. A very large per cent of our reconstruction money last year went into the development of our work in industrial centers growing largely out of the war. One illustration of this sort of enterprise is the Emergency Fleet Corporation in New Jersey, where of our First Church in Gloucester, New Jersey, we have developed a work and built three or four fine buildings and given to the pastor of the church assistance enough so that the whole program is being developed.

So at Firestone, one of the great rubber centers of this country, where there is a growing and rapidly developing building enterprise for the employees of this great industry. So at Flint, Michigan, where one of the great industries is concentrating one of its great enterprises. The authorities of that enterprise stated to Flint a year ago that if the city of Flint would take care of its public improvement they would see that the city should have four hundred thousand population in four years. Last fall in one section of the city they were completing thirty-seven homes every day. And we have a church there for that type of population.

Growing out of the war, and as a result of the war, was the migration of colored people to the North, coming into the great cities and into the congested centers of the great cities where we had no adequate provision for housing colored people in our churches. In New York City a year and half ago there were four hundred thousand colored people, and we had seven congregations among them, and only one church building for them. They were worshipping in private houses. Now in Brooklyn we have purchased out of this fund a magnificent church and transferred it to our colored congregation. In Youngstown, Ohio, we purchased a great plant and transferred it to our colored congregation. We have been doing similar work in Chicago where one of our colored churches now has two thousand members.

Our regular Centenary program is much enlarged. Our drafts that went out for the first quarter of 1920 were three times as large as the drafts for the corresponding quarter of the year before. We are cooperating in the support of pastors; of 596 pastors in the city, and 597 city workers, and 2,927 pastors in rural and frontier communities.

We have two or three principles which we try to follow in the matter of the administering of home mission funds. It is the conviction of the board that our major home mission appropriations should go to two types of communities—to the community, for instance, where we have the sole responsibility or a clear responsibility, where there is the possibility of a strong development and where with an adequate leadership we can come to self-support in from three to five years. The second type of neighborhood is where it is purely missionary and probably will never come to self-support but where with adequate leadership we can do the work properly. The fact concerning church extension funds is that in all the years of our history we have never had an adequate income to take care of church extension needs. Our income now for a decade has averaged perhaps $150,000 to $300,000 a year. We have distributed that over wide areas and broken it up into very small appropriations and invested it where a small amount of money would get some sort of return. We never have made large investments in great city centers. The administration of what we have been able to do has made clear what kind of results can be secured with large appropriations in the cities of this country. In 1916 we had $87,000 in our opportunity fund and made four appropriations. Out of this we got one million dollars' worth clear, of new property. This year out of the Centenary funds we are cooperating in the development of 484 enterprises in cities, and over 1,050 in rural and frontier communities. Our board appropriated in February twelve times as much money for church extension purposes as in any month in the life of the board. We have appropriated during the quadrennium for church extension purposes within five hundred thousand dollars of as much as was appropriated in fifty-two years prior to 1916.

The Bishop: According to the arrangement for the report of the Joint Centenary Commission, we will now hear from Dr. S. Earl Taylor, of Newark Conference.

DR. S. EARL TAYLOR PRESENTS THE REPORT OF THE CENTENARY COMMISSION

At the conclusion of Dr. Taylor's report, which was heard with great interest, and in the progress of which the Conference repeatedly burst into thankful song, Bishop Anderson said:

Verily it is worth while to be alive to see a day like this in Methodism. We have all felt the spontaneous impulse to praise. I feel that we ought to mingle prayer with praise. I will ask Mr. Frank C. Dunn, of New England Conference, Rev. E. S. Weaver, of West Ohio Conference, and Rev. Frank Mason North, of New York East Conference, to come to the platform and offer prayer.

PRAYER OF MR. FRANK C. DUNN

Our Heavenly Father, we ask that thy blessing may rest upon us, that we may not become stingy either in thought or in mind or in heart or in purse, but may really measure up to the great things and the great opportunity that are now before the church. We pray thee this morning for that blessing, for that direction, for that wisdom which we need personally and which we need as a General Conference. For Christ's sake, amen.

REPORT OF THE JOINT CENTENARY CONSERVATION COMMITTEE

Four years ago a paper was read to the General Conference at Saratoga Springs. The paper was entitled, "The World Situation." The statement began with this sentence:

"The Board of Foreign Missions, the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, and the bishops supervising the work of the Methodist Episcopal Church in foreign lands are constrained to depart from ordinary methods of procedure and unitedly to present to the General Conference a statement concerning an unprecedented world situation which calls for your most prayerful consideration."

After sketching the conditions in Africa as a result of the early days of the war; after touching upon the distressing conditions in Europe, and emphasizing the place of the church in any work of reconciliation and reconstruction; and after outlining the unprecedented conditions in South America, in Mexico, in China, in Korea, in Japan, in the Philippines, in Malaysia, and in India; and after describing the conditions of women throughout the world, the report concluded under the general caption, "The Need of An Awakened Church." May I quote the following sentences from this section of the report:

"Is it not evident that the task which we now present is colossal—that it challenges the church to an utterly new interpretation of its obligations in the dedication of life and property? On the one hand, we present to you a world need which seems to outreach all possible hope. And over against this need the Commission on Finance has told of our measureless treasures of wealth and of life such as only an omniscient God could have provided for a time like this.

"We face the tragedy of a dying world and the peril of a nation rich beyond all compare, called of God to service and hesitating in her choice between a life of selfish indulgence and a life of sacrificial endeavor. This constitutes an emergency unparalleled in all the Christian centuries.

"The time has come to face the fact that the Methodist Episcopal Church is not yet aroused to the emergency of this world crisis. The quadrennium through which we have just passed has been for the foreign missionary forces which we represent a quadrennium of achievement; but, measured by the standards of the present hour, and in the light of the day which is just dawning, the church seems to be standing still. Last year eighty Annual Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church actually decreased their foreign missionary offerings from regular sources, while the majority of our churches seemed to be content with the report "The same as last year."

"Notwithstanding our large increase in membership the church is increasing its offering through the Board of Foreign Missions from regular sources at a rate of about ten thousand dollars a year, which amount must be spread over all the fields of the world, so that the increase in appropriations by the general committee to a field like India measures a few hundred dollars.

"In some of our fields we are compelled to appropriate actually less than the salary of the missionaries in that field, and make no regular provision whatever through regular channels for evangelistic work, educational work, medical work, church erection, the efficiency of our Sunday schools, and the whole range of agencies which are essential to the development of church life. Our foreign fields have presented estimates which call for an annual expenditure of not less than five million dollars to meet the present irreducible minimum of need, and the available funds of both societies are less than half that amount.

"Burdened with the responsibilities imposed by the consideration set forth in this paper, we express our solemn conviction that the present situation on the foreign mission field is without parallel in all the Christian centuries and that the church must either order its foreign missionary forces to cease seed sowing and harvesting, or make more adequate provision. We will reach the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of our Methodist missionary work during this quadrennium. As we review the one hundred years of the apostolic labors of those who have preceded us, rejoicing over their glorious achievements, may the God of our fathers solemnize us with the thought that we live in an age enriched by their toil and sacrifice; that we possess unbelievably greater wealth than they controlled; that we are confronted by vastly greater opportunities for Christian service than they faced, and that these facts constitute God's challenge to us to dedicate our lives and our possessions, without reserve, to the supreme task of bringing the nations to Jesus Christ.

"In view of the conditions herein set forth, we respectfully suggest that the General Conference take such action as it may deem wise, whereby the whole situation may be carefully considered and a report made as to what steps the Methodist Episcopal Church should take more fully to meet its world-wide obligations."

The report was signed:

Luther B. Wilson, president of the Board of Foreign Missions.

S. Earl Taylor, William F. Oldham, Frank Mason North, corresponding secretaries of the Board of Foreign Missions.

Mrs. William Fraser McDowell, president of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society.

Mrs. A. W. Patten, Mrs. F. F. Lindsay, Mrs. F. H. Sheets, Miss Ella M. Watson, Committee on Consultation.

James W. Bashford, William F. Anderson, John L. Nuelsen, Wilson S. Lewis, Homer C. Stuntz, Francis J. McConnell, Joseph C. Hartzell, Frank W. Warne, Isaiah B. Scott, John E. Robinson, Merriman C. Harris, John W. Robinson, William P. Eveland.

As an outcome, the General Conference took the following action:

"The General Conference has heard with profound interest and concern the statement concerning the world situation as presented by the Board of Foreign Missions, the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, and the bishops supervising the work on the foreign fields.

"So deeply have we been moved by this compelling statement of facts that we have directed that it be printed and that a copy of it be sent to each pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church throughout the world. We have also ordered that additional copies be printed for circulation among the laymen of the church.

"Without attempting to enter into the details of so vast a program, we hereby instruct the Board of Foreign Missions to express to the missionary leaders of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, our appreciation of their proposal looking toward cooperation in the Centenary occasion, and in consultation with them to take such steps as may be necessary to prepare some adequate program of advance for each of our mission fields, and to announce to the church a united world program not later than January 1, 1918.

"We have directed that the years 1918-1919 be set aside for the Centenary celebration of the founding of our missionary work, and we would further direct that the Board of Foreign Missions be instructed to take such steps as may be necessary for the thorough organization and enlistment of every member and friend of our church in the more adequate support of the foreign missionary enterprise and especially in carrying out the features of the world program which is to be prepared under these instructions.

"The call of God is so unmistakably clear and so imperative that the only course for an obedient church is an immediate and sustained advance."

At the November meeting following the General Conference, the Board of Foreign Missions took this action:

"We recommend that this board authorize the executive committee to appoint a committee of one hundred to prepare for the next annual meeting of the board the world program which was called for by the action of the last General Conference."

The Committee of One Hundred met at Niagara Falls, September 17-19, 1917, under this authorization, and we place on file with the secretary of the General Conference a copy of the report of that committee.

In the meantime, the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension proceeded with its work of making surveys concerning the needs in America. The results indicated that something more than fifty millions of dollars were required to do the work necessary in the next five years. But under the advice of the bishops, this amount was cut to forty millions of dollars, the amount already fixed by the Board of Foreign Missions; and at a joint meeting of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension and of the Board of Foreign Missions held in Philadelphia, the total sum of eighty millions of dollars was fixed as the Centenary goal for these two great boards. Later, because of the entry of America into the war, the sum of twenty-five millions of dollars was fixed for war work and reconstruction, making a grand total of $105,000,000 to be raised by the Board of Foreign Missions and to cover a period of five years.

Centenary Commissions were elected by the Board of Foreign Missions and the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension, to carry on the Centenary duties of the respective boards. The Centenary Commission of the Board of Foreign Missions was composed of John T. Stone (chairman), Frank L. Brown, W. E. Doughty, George P. Eckman, F. M. North, George M. Fowles, John F. Goucher, L. O. Hartman, Frank H. Horne, A. W. Harris, James R. Joy, William B. Miller, John R. Mott, A. P. Nelson, Fred B. Fisher, H. Lester Smith, S. Earl Taylor, E. S. Tipple, R. B. Urmy, Bishop L. B. Wilson.

The Centenary Commission of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension was composed of Bishop Joseph F. Berry (chairman), D. D. Forsyth, Ralph E. Diffendorfer, Ralph Welles Keeler, Bishop Thomas Nicholson, Frank C. Dunn, W. H. G. Gould, Elmer E. Kidney, Leonard C. Murdock, William S. Pilling.

For conducting the campaign and as the responsible body for all matters having to do with the Centenary interests affecting both boards, each board elected representatives to a Joint Centenary Committee. The representatives of the Board of Foreign Missions were Frank Mason North, John T. Stone, George M. Fowles, Frank L. Brown, and of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension, D. D. Forsyth, W. H. G. Gould, Frank C. Dunn, Leonard C. Murdock.

The Joint Centenary Committee organized with D. D. Forsyth, chairman; S. Earl Taylor, executive secretary; Ralph A. Ward, associate executive secretary; George M. Fowles, treasurer.

Later, when the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, united in the Centenary plan with askings for $35,000,000, a Joint Centenary Commission of these two great branches of Methodism was organized with W. W. Pinson, chairman; John R. Pepper, vice-chairman; Ralph A. Ward, secretary. The representatives on this commission from the Methodist Episcopal Church were D. D. Forsyth, John F. Goucher, Leonard C. Murdock, John T. Stone, S. Earl Taylor, W. H. G. Gould, and from the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Bishop Atkins, W. B. Beauchamp, Miss Belle Bennett, E. B. Chappell, Bishop John M. Moore, John R. Pepper.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, proceeded similarly with its work. A Centenary Commission was created and a conference similar to the Niagara Falls Conference was held in Memphis; and, after mature deliberation, thirty-five millions of dollars were fixed as the Centenary goal for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Thus the two branches of Methodism fixed as a goal the sum of $140,000,000.

The financial achievement of the Centenary is known throughout the world and among all denominations, and is introduced here merely for the purposes of record. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, instead of raising $35,000,000, raised $53,000,000. The Methodist Episcopal Church, instead of raising $105,000,000, raised $112,000,000. Thus the two churches raised the grand total of $165,000,000. The contributions by areas are as follows:

Atlanta	$1,469,300
Boston	4,866,070
Buffalo	8,184,157
Chattanooga	1,216,244
Chicago	12,710,466
Cincinnati	15,264,106
Detroit	6,152,565
Denver	1,569,000
Helena	1,756,842
New Orleans	979,565
New York	6,453,210
Omaha	8,749,900
Philadelphia	7,342,015
Pittsburgh	7,220,389
Portland	2,300,319
San Francisco	4,646,660
Saint Louis	3,600,000
Saint Paul	5,420,000
Washington	6,901,530
Wichita	5,493,000

We quote from "The Address of the Bishops" as delivered by Bishop McDowell:

"We cannot adequately characterize the Centenary movement. Nothing else equal to it was ever planned or achieved by any denomination. In magnitude, scope, wisdom, spirit and success, it was a supreme achievement. Your bishops unite with you in devout thanksgiving to God for the glorious triumph of the movement."

The facts concerning the achievements of the Centenary are generally known to the church at this time. We know that 400,000 people are enlisted in the fellowship of intercession. We know that more than 200,000 tithing stewards are enrolled as a result of the campaign. We know that more than 20,000 young people have been enrolled as prospective candidates for life service. We know that the unit system has been set up and put in operation in about 15,000 churches. We know that the minute men responded to the Centenary call and that they delivered more than 400,000 addresses in churches, Sunday Schools, young people's societies, in schoolhouses, at commercial clubs and elsewhere. We know how the whole church was stirred and by what processes the gigantic educational campaign was carried forward. Our hearts rejoice over the report made on the opening day of this General Conference, that the evangelistic campaign with which the Centenary movement culminated, has already brought approximately half a million people into the kingdom of Jesus Christ.

This was not the work of a board or of any small group of men, but was the work of the whole church and was perhaps the most inspiring example in history of what a thoroughly aroused church can do by cooperation, by team work, under the blessing and direction of Almighty God.

The financial accounts of the Centenary movement proper were closed as of June 1, 1919. The treasurer of the Joint Centenary Committee will place on file with the secretary of the General Conference the report of the treasurer covering all matters of Centenary expense. The Centenary accounts of the central office have been audited by Lybrand, Ross Bros. & Montgomery, an accounting firm of national reputation, and the accounts of all of the area offices have likewise been audited. The general facts have been published by all of the church papers and the details are accessible to any who desire to know. With all the difficulties involved and the urgent necessity for great haste in pushing a campaign of such dimensions, the percentage of promotional expense has been less than in many other similar enterprises.

As a result of innumerable campaigns for funds for all sorts of religious and philanthropic purposes, as well as for governmental and war purposes, a science on campaigning has been quite definitely developed. There are probably twenty-five men in the United States who could be classed as financial campaign experts and who, within a few hours, could give a fairly accurate estimate of the cost of any proposed financial campaign, provided they were given data as to the amount of money to be raised, the number of people to be reached, the extent of territory to be covered, and the features other than that of mere money raising to be incorporated in the campaign. The per cent cost of campaigning is fairly well understood and can be reduced almost to the accuracy of actuarial tables. Before the war, the cost of campaigns for colleges, hospitals, etc., approximated two and one half per cent of the amount of money to be raised. Because of the enormous increase in the cost of everything that enters into a modern financial campaign, because of travel cost, of clerical hire, cost of print paper, cost of transportation, etc., it has been demonstrated that a campaign of any sort costs about twice the amount of the pre-war period. Those campaigns which are now being projected are estimated to cost something in the neighborhood of five per cent of the amount to be raised.

The strong business men of one of the leading denominations, in making out a denominational campaign budget, recently estimated the probable cost of their campaign at eight per cent in view of all of the uncertainties of rapidly mounting costs.

The total cost of the Centenary campaign will not exceed four per cent, and when the valuable Centenary assets are all disposed of, it is probable that the expense will be about three and one half per cent.

Undoubtedly, there was waste in connection with the Centenary movement. Undoubtedly, many items of expenditure could have been eliminated or reduced if more time had been available for the ordinary methods of detailed committee supervision. Undoubtedly, much more efficient leadership could have been provided from the top down if there had been time to select and train the type of leadership called for.

But when one remembers the parks of weather-beaten automobiles, the piles of junked aeroplanes, the mountains of rusting shell, the ninety-six or more investigations concerning expense which have been started in Washington as a result of the war, one simply comes back to the great central fact—that we won a great victory at a great price, and a part of that price was hurry, pressure, mistakes of judgment, and mistakes due to mistaken orders or sheer stupidity. But still—We Won the War.

Another outstanding fact which will interest our entire church is contained in the report of the Board of Foreign Missions as presented in the handbook to this General Conference. This statement shows that the Board of Foreign Missions' share of the entire Centenary expense was fully paid out of the first year's income, while at the same time it was possible to make the greatest appropriations for work in the field in the history of foreign missions.

In October of last year D. D. Forsyth, corresponding secretary of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension, wrote the following concerning the home board:

"Our board could pay its half of the entire Centenary expense, and with our cash balance, take care of the appropriations more liberally than we have ever done before and thus have our board on a cash basis. Our position would be entirely hopeless as we face the emergencies growing out of the war were it not for the Centenary."

In other words, the Centenary income for the first five months covered all Centenary expense, made possible much larger appropriations than ever before, and the only items to be charged up to the funds raised during the next five years are the ordinary administrative expenses of the boards, with the exception of whatever conservation program may be determined upon by this General Conference. Concerning the latter, it may be said that the conservation program from the close of the Centenary period to March 31, 1920, cost $660,363; and over against this item the finance department of the conservation program reports that during this period new Centenary subscriptions have been secured amounting to $3,000,000.

Dr. John W. Hancher is authority for the statement that after a college campaign is over it frequently happens that during the five succeeding years as much money comes in as was raised in the original campaign. This, as a result of an awakened interest, of amounts written in wills, of annuities, etc., and because of new givers who are discovered.

It is perfectly clear, therefore, that with more than $12,000,000 not yet pledged by the churches under the quotas assigned, and with a normal inflow of new funds, the conservation work of the quadrennium and all items of ordinary administrative expense may be much more than provided for by new subscriptions which will come in as a result of conservation work.

But the financial record of expenditures for the quadrennium is closed. Expenditures, whether wisely or unwisely made, have been made. The books have been balanced. The accounts have been audited, and the record is before this General Conference.

THE CENTENARY PROVIDENTIALLY TIMED

If only we would write the history of our time with God in it, how illuminating would be the page! Clearly the Centenary was a providential movement. No man timed it. It may have seemed almost by chance that a handful of men came together in New York City in April, 1818, to form the missionary society, but that fact, incidental as it may seem, fixed the date of the Centenary celebration for the spring of 1919 just at the close of the world war.

When the General Conference took action four years ago, we did not know that America would enter the world war. We could not dream of the astounding changes which were to take place throughout the earth in these four brief years. We did not know that at the very time when the armistice was being prepared and signed, the Boards of Foreign Missions and Home Missions would be meeting in New York to make final plans for the projection of the Centenary movement. We did not know that, suddenly, as a great light from heaven, the men on these boards should more fully realize that God had prepared the Methodist Episcopal Church for instant action at a time of world emergency, and, in his good providence, had placed her in the very forefront of the Christian armies of the world which were to march out in battle array to "carry on" the work of the boys who quietly sleep under the red poppies of Flanders Field.

What would have happened in the Methodist Episcopal Church had God not timed the Centenary for the spring of 1919? Let us read from the report prepared by Dr. North:

"The board was never in a more secure and sound condition than when it approached the hundredth anniversary of Methodist foreign missions. It had for six years created no deficit, had added somewhat each year to its appropriations to the fields, had kept its administrative and cultivation expenses at a low percentage of the total receipts, and at the end of that time had liquidated the debt of over $121,000 with which the period began.

"The missionaries on the field had been increased by 25 per cent, and the membership of the foreign churches had gained over 20 per cent.

"But, while Centenary enthusiasm was rising, exchange in India and China was falling. To-day it requires a dollar and thirty cents in India, and more than two dollars in China, to do what one dollar would do three years ago.

"Transportation costs are from one half to three fourths more and necessities of life in most of the fields have increased relatively more than in America, while the margin in missionary income is less than in the corresponding station here.

"We did not know it, but the Centenary was timed to meet the most serious financial crisis our missionary society and its successor, the Board of Foreign Missions, have ever known."

Next to the disaster of retrenchment would have been the disaster of allowing our great work to stand still. We quote again from Dr. North:

"The docket of the mission fields was crowded with unfinished business. Institutions had been projected, land bought and partly paid for, material gathered for foundations not yet laid, buildings planned and built but in part cooperation tentatively agreed to, but ineffective for lack of funds, work outlined and untouched because of inadequate staff, wide fields fenced, but fallow, awaiting the plow and the worker.

"Everywhere a vital, expectant, progressive company of devoted missionaries, steady at their posts, ready for advance, and waiting, waiting for supplies and reinforcements from the home base."

WHAT HAS THE CENTENARY MEANT TO THE MISSION FIELD?

"The Centenary is filling the channels, is pouring water on the wheels, is putting in the foundations and lifting the walls, and everywhere valiant, devoted, patient missionaries are finding their dreams coming true.

"The mission world is new because of the funds of the Centenary. Little ventures have developed into wide, wise, comprehensive programs. Expert study of China, India, Latin-America, Africa and Europe, stimulated and supported by the Centenary, for months has been going forward.

"We have had surveys, we are now getting blue prints. In the program placed so vividly before the church in the Centenary campaign were new orphanages, new services—literature, social influence, industrial training, physical betterment; a larger evangelism—better churches, Sunday school organization, a system of itinerating; in everything, a stronger staff, greater efficiency, higher ideals.

"The Centenary means prevention of disaster, completion of the existing enterprise, but, far beyond this, the new constructive program which will give among the peoples of the world a place of action for the gospel of our Lord for a thousand years."

It would be impossible in the brief space of this report to attempt to tell all that the Centenary has meant to the mission fields at home and abroad. The more complete statements can be found in the annual reports of the corresponding secretaries of these boards as printed in the General Conference handbook. But an idea of the astounding movement that is now going forward may be gained from facts like these:

EUROPE

The Centenary movement placed the Methodist Episcopal Church in a position for immediate and effective action in Europe. Along the battle lines in France, because we were prepared for immediate action, the government turned over to us five villages in the neighborhood of Chateau Thierry for reconstruction. Because of the efficiency of our work, this number was increased until now we have thirty-two.

In this region we have helped the people to live through the winter where they have been in dugouts and cellars with no coal and no light. We have provided food, clothing and place for entertainment, and have done all within our power to build up the morale of the people. At Chateau Thierry we have purchased a memorial to our heroic soldiers and marines who died in that district. This memorial is intended to commemorate the ideal for service for which they gave their lives, and it will become a permanent social settlement with clinic, kindergarten, classes for young people, and a place of wholesome recreation for the families of the people of Chateau Thierry.

We have also been called to the San Quentin area for special social service work under the immediate auspices of the government.

In some of the populous sections of France, from seventy to eighty per cent of the babies are dying, and we are establishing day nurseries, clinics, and at Chateau Thierry we have a specialist in dealing with problems relating to infant mortality.

We have purchased an orphanage of 225 acres, have remodeled the buildings, put up three cottages for family groups of children, a school building, a farmer's residence, a gymnasium, a playground, and a modern barn and stables with silo (probably the first silo in France).

At Grenoble, at Marseilles, at Toulon and other centers we have purchased properties for the purpose of helping folks educationally, of giving them facilities for recreation, and of providing the moral uplift which comes from the life of the church.

In Toulon, where it is said to be impossible for shop girls to live decent lives because of present living conditions, we are making it possible for some of them to enjoy the benefits of restaurant, housing, club and church life.

A grand total of $425,000 has been contributed to the various benevolent enterprises in France since the war, and all of this is a result of the Centenary.

In Italy we followed the battle line through Udine, Gorizia, Trent, Trieste; and we are now at work in Fiume. To help the farmers reclaim the devastated Venetian plains in the plateau district beyond Udine, we purchased 10,000 plows, and Dr. Tipple has recently written:

"These plows have been operating for some months, preparing the ground for the harvest that Italy so desperately needs. On my last trip into the north a short time before I sailed for New York, it would have rejoiced your heart to look out upon many fields green with the oncoming grain, many of them the very fields that a few months back were torn and desolate from the war."

Into the devastated region we sent clothing, shoes and food; and all along the battle line, by means of colporteurs and laymen, we have been distributing relief supplies.

In Trent we opened a dispensary for medicine for the poor people who were absolutely unable to get medical supplies but for our aid. We opened a big depot for condensed milk for the children, and have been distributing condensed milk for a year and a half in sections where the children would have had no milk at all.

For our pastors who are destitute of clothes, we have furnished a suit for the pastor, a dress for the wife, clothing, hats and shoes for the children.

We have helped feed and care for about 8,000 orphan children.

In the city of Rome we have loaned our property on Via Garibaldi to the government for the special care of underfed and sick children. On the main tram line between Naples and Pompeii we have bought a superb piece of property which is considered to be the second finest old palace and garden in the vicinity of Naples. It has a frontage of more than 600 feet on the Bay of Naples, and here we are developing an orphanage, a day nursery, a gymnasium, and a playground as well as a resting place for tired mothers.

At Genoa we have established a sanitarium for maimed and blind soldiers. At Pisa we have established a hostel for girls in connection with the University of Pisa. At Florence we have purchased a fine property for the girls' school, in addition to the church property which we have in that historic city of art.

At Venice we have a church just off the plaza of St. Mark's, and we have also an industrial institute where we are supporting one hundred orphans with Centenary money. The boys are taught wood carving, shoemaking, printing and other useful occupations.

On one of the seven hills of Rome, overlooking the Vatican, we have about thirty acres for a great college which will ultimately affect the whole Mediterranean Basin.

In the city of Fiume we have an ex-officer of the navy and his wife, two devoted Christian people, in charge of a day nursery and industrial school for girls, and a relief station. We are doing our best at that point to care for the needy poor, to help educate some of the young women for practical lines of work, and above all to disseminate the spirit of love and good will, which spirit alone will ever bring peace to the disturbed peoples of all this part of the world along the eastern shore of the Adriatic.

The Commission on Europe appointed by the last General Conference was represented in person on the field, and by rapid exchange of cablegrams, instant action was possible where relief and reinforcement were required.

In relief of human suffering, while the work was all too inadequate as any such work must be, it was a satisfaction to know that almost before the armistice was signed our relief supplies were under way. The first shipment included:

- 1,000 pounds of tea.
- 1,000 pounds of coffee.
- 1,500 pounds of cocoa.
- 16,200 pounds of corned beef.
- 21,600 pounds of bacon.
- 30,000 bars of soap.
- 7,200 cans of syrup.
- 600 cases of fats.
- 96,000 cans of evaporated milk.
- 48,000 cans of condensed milk.
- 1,000 women's coats.
- 2,520 suits of children's underwear.

Quantities of shoes, men's suits, stockings and overcoats.

Later forty-five cases of shoes and clothing were sent to Genoa, Italy; $20,000 worth of supplies were shipped to Roumania; $10,000 worth of supplies to Bulgaria. As far as possible the supplies were packed in standardized cases which were designed for kitchen cabinets, equipped with three shelves and hinge doors which could be used to great advantage by the refugee housewives. Six thousand underfed women and children from northern Germany and Austria were sent into Switzerland and Denmark for periods of from six weeks' to two months' rest and recuperation.

Much needed help was given to our churches in Denmark,

Norway, Sweden and Finland, in the countries which were not in the war, but which were sadly affected by the war.

As soon as it was possible to send supplies into Germany, the board cabled funds to Bishop Nuelsen, who was able to purchase supplies in Switzerland and to send the first relief train of three cars into Germany. One car load of supplies was directed to the seat of the South Germany Conference, and each minister, as he went back from the Conference, carried with him such supplies as it was possible for him to transport, and these he distributed through his people to the most needy families of the community. Other supplies have been sent in from the north. And all over central Europe the word has gone that the Methodist Episcopal Church, among all the church forces of the world, has been conspicuous by reason of the fact that it has done its utmost to help suffering women and dying children.

A prominent attorney, who is a member of this General Conference, told us the other day of a subscription of $5,000 which had been sent to his firm by a Jewish woman, to be administered in this country for relief of women and children who were in distress. The partner in the law firm raised with this attorney the question as to whether or not this fund might not be administered advantageously under the direction of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His colleague replied that he thought this would be an admirable agency for handling the fund; but inasmuch as he was a Methodist himself and the donor a Jew, it seemed wise to him for the partner to write to the Jewish woman stating the facts and asking for her advice. An immediate reply was received from this woman stating that she would be delighted to have the fund administered by the Methodist Episcopal Church, as she had heard of the work we were doing for the relief of human suffering in Europe, and she knew that our work was not narrow or sectarian, and she believed we were best qualified by organization and spirit to administer this fund.

When one remembers that five million children in Europe are now facing starvation; that multiplied millions more are so seriously underfed and so dwarfed in mind and body that they constitute a physical and moral menace to Europe for the next thirty years; and when one remembers that the matter of relief of human suffering is not a problem of the spring or the summer or of the year, but of the next five years; and when one recalls the facts that the lowest estimate made for relief for the year was $50,000,000, and that Mr. Hoover's original estimate was $100,000,000, it would seem as if the Methodist Episcopal Church ought to join hands with the other churches of North America in an earnest effort to cooperate with any agencies that are of a willing mind and heart in raising the funds necessary to help Europe to its feet. As David Livingstone said in another connection, "May God bless anyone—Christian, Jew or Turk—who will help to heal this open sore of the world."

EASTERN AND SOUTHERN ASIA

In eastern and southern Asia, as well as Latin America, Centenary secretaries have been at work. Men who were trained in the Centenary here went back to their mission fields to reproduce the major lines of Centenary activity as they had developed in this country, with such adaptations as would be required for the church in mission lands.

Programs of Christian stewardship, of intercession, and of evangelism have been developed rapidly, and in each of our principal mission fields a financial movement is in progress which will compare favorably with the Centenary movement in the home land when comparative numbers and wealth are taken into consideration.

In Japan it was proposed to raise 100,000 yen, but at the last Annual Conference a layman arose and proposed that the sum be fixed at 600,000 yen, and the movement for securing this amount is now in progress.

In India the "Lakh of Rupees" is the native expression for a fabulous sum of money, or $100,000 rupees of silver. The Centenary movement in India, in a land of low wages and of extreme poverty, such as we hardly imagine, has set as its goal fifty lakhs of rupees.

Not only are these major movements going forward, but the earlier dream of the development of a great national or continental program is becoming a reality.

Dr. Ralph Ward, who had charge of the foreign surveys during our Centenary movement, was made one of the associate secretaries of the Board of Foreign Missions and had charge of the Centenary movement there, in cooperation with the bishops in China. Several Chinese and China missionaries were given special opportunity to aid in the Centenary movement in America for the purpose of studying its methods and breathing its spirit.

For several months Chinese leaders worked in the Centenary offices at New York, and translated and prepared special literature for China, that the technique of the Centenary as well as its messages should become fully available to their people who speak or read Chinese.

The first Centenary task in China has been the discovery and statement by the people of China themselves of the program and objectives of China Methodism. Our Methodist Church in China is now experiencing the joy of stating for herself great objectives on a nation-wide scale.

One hundred of the best American missionary and Chinese leaders spent weeks of time during the fall of 1919 and the early winter of 1920 studying the responsibility of China Methodism for service.

Program statement meetings were held in each of the seven Annual Conferences. Laymen, missionaries, and all of the Chinese pastors for any given locality attended these meetings. All discussions were opened by the Chinese themselves, and every effort was made to generate an indigenous movement. Then, after each one of these Conferences, and in some cases even before the Conference had been held, a few picked Chinese and missionaries from that territory were asked to travel in some other Conference. A little company left Peking after the Annual Conference there in September, for the long journey to West China. Their number was gradually increased until, by the end of the series of Conferences, there were brought together in Peking in January over one hundred of the strongest Chinese and American leaders who had seen their own work in perspective by first-hand visitation of that of some other part of the country.

The days and weeks of travel together had produced an esprit de corps and a community of ideals on the part of the men living in widely separate parts of the country. They had tramped together. They had ridden in little native houseboats. They had traveled together on trains and steamers. They had slept together in Chinese inns; and in transit, they had gone over maps and charts especially made for the occasion, and as a result were prepared men with a full poised judgment for the great Conference held in Peking.

For two weeks the Peking Conference continued. All present were invited to bring up any question and all questions which had any bearing on the program of the church. These were taken up in orderly fashion and not a single one was in any sense sidestepped or ignored. So thorough had been the preparation of the thinking and the spirit of the Conference that not a single action was taken which did not receive either a unanimous vote or an overwhelming majority.

The national program that is prepared and announced in the March number of the China Christian Advocate is one of the most advanced pieces of program building in a mission field ever wrought out.

Experiments were made with the use of Centenary lantern slides in China. Meetings were held in the largest auditoriums available and in some instances as many as 5,000 people thronged the open courts to witness out-of-doors exhibitions of Centenary pictures.

Experiments were made with stereopticons in villages. As a single illustration, missionaries with stereopticons and slides similar to those used in the United States came to a village of 30,000 people. An idol theater was in process and was scheduled to continue until one o'clock in the morning. So friendly were the people to the proposal of the missionaries for a stereopticon address that the theater was abbreviated by two hours and the stereopticon pictures were put on before an audience of between two and three thousand people in the idol temple itself.

One of the greatest problems before China to-day is the rapid education of the masses of its people to participate in the republic. Stereopticon lectures have proved their very great value as a means of rapidly giving to the masses of China those great messages essential for their new life.

The following paragraph from the minutes of the Central Conference of Eastern Asia may well summarize the Centenary movement as it has thus far developed in China:

"A greater Methodism is coming forth from this program study Conference to face the clamant needs of China. The months of careful survey, personal study in every missionary center, which have culminated in these days of intensive scientific heroic planning at Peking insure that the Methodist Episcopal Church shall at last become a unified national body. Clearly, the hand of God has led us to this hour. China is desperately seeking some force that shall weld together her latent powers for the salvation of her national life. At this moment it is possible for Methodism to say that as a whole it is facing its whole task."

INDIA

In India a similar movement has been in progress. Dr. Brenton T. Badley went back from our Centenary movement as the Centenary secretary for India. The files of the India Witness will reveal how comprehensive and how aggressive have been the plans of the Centenary leaders in India. The following outline will illustrate the rapid development and the scope of the Centenary movement in that great land:

OBJECTIVES IN THE CENTENARY CAMPAIGN IN INDIA

1. Make intercession vital through the Church.
2. Make effective principle of Christian stewardship.
3. Secure financial quota.

6. Secure full sympathy and cooperation of young people in enterprises of the Church.
7. Educate Church on missionary obligations and opportunities.
8. Discover and prepare indigenous leadership.
9. Relate our English Churches more vitally to missionary work of field.
10. Reach certain definite goals in various departments of work.

If time and space of this report permitted, it would be possible to outline the development of similar movements in Mexico, in all Latin America, and in Africa. (Detailed information regarding these movements may be found in the reports of the Bishops of the various foreign fields.) But even a casual conversation with any of the missionary leaders from the foreign fields will demonstrate the fact that as a result of the Centenary movement, literally all things are becoming new in the foreign work of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Bishop Oldham has well summarized the situation in his inimitable way in his report on South America, where he says: "Our hearts are filled with gladness and our lips with blessings whenever we heard the words The Centenary. Surely it is of God. We have been so cramped and hindered, so loaded with debt and discouraged. And now, like a south wind blowing upon icy fetters, comes the word of the marvelous accomplishment of the Centenary program. The heart of South American Methodism is swept with gratitude. Our souls are uplifted, and we solemnly vow we will not merely receive, we will give—give ourselves to prayer and more earnestly than ever to evangelistic toil and sacrificial effort. We will call upon our sons and daughters to give their lives to the church, and we will give of our substance. We, too, will offer our tithes and offerings and with God's help we will try to prove ourselves worthy of the love and generosity that are being poured out upon us. The church can depend upon our doing our share and more. Already our First Church in Buenos Aires leads all Methodism in its per capita giving, subscribing over $100,000—with a membership of 200. The other churches will, according to their means, keep step with Methodism. Our area secretary, Dr. George A. Miller, who has already won our confidence, is already making plans for an aggressive spiritual movement. These plans are being cheerfully accepted, the tide begins to rise, hope everywhere brightens the horizon, the better day comes."

A very significant development in connection with our Sunday school and young people's work abroad is emphasized by Dr. L. O. Hartman as a result of his recent investigation in Europe. He says:

"The outstanding feature of the Centenary effect on the Sunday schools of Europe is the new opportunity for kingdom service it has brought to the youth in our Sunday schools. Here, especially in Scandinavia, we found many young people ready and willing to offer themselves for service in the mission fields of the church. When we remember that many of our very best missionaries came from these European countries, this new zeal for life surrender fanned by the Centenary hope is most significant. We dare not disappoint these hundreds of capable candidates for missionary service."

THE CENTENARY AND THE HOME BOARD—SO FAR

The first and most important effect of the Centenary at home has been the awakening of hundreds of churches that were asleep. The unprecedented campaign of education leading up to the subscription of $113,000,000 revealed to many congregations the fatal inadequacy of their plants and programs. The obligation to the unreached elements in the community loomed up as never before. Not long ago we heard from a little church in the far Southwest that it had bought a lot costing $750 and was erecting a chapel costing $1,350 more, for the benefit of the 1,800 Mexicans in that town. They simply asked to whom should the deed for the property be made out. Without any suggestion from outside they did this thing, because the Centenary had awakened them. Applications for aid from reconstruction funds last fall were six times as great as the funds available, and it is probable that the larger part of these came from churches, which when the original survey was made, honestly believed that they needed nothing.

A second effect of the Centenary is that it has enabled the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension of the Methodist Episcopal Church to relieve certain social and religious necessities growing out of the war or revealed more clearly by it.

WAR SCHOLARSHIPS

Nearly a quarter of a million of dollars is being given this year to the Methodist boys whose education was interrupted by military or naval service and who might not have been able to resume their school life without assistance. This phase of the board's activity has met with the universal gratitude of the boys themselves, their fathers and mothers, the college authorities and the preachers and quarterly Conferences of the churches from which they came.

One college president says: "We have a number of students in college this year who could not have been in college, and probably never would have been in college again, if it had not been for the encouragement of the Centenary scholarships. Some of the boys came back very much at sea as to what they would do, very downhearted and discouraged over the outlook, out of joint with affairs educational and otherwise, ready to drift into the first thing open, and yet entirely capable of taking and using the very best in a college course. I cannot conceive of a finer investment of the Centenary fund than in the rescuing of manhood in such potentiality and usefulness, and tying up for all time to the church men who certainly must be loyal, from the realization that in the time of their deepest need, they were thus so wisely served by their church. From a feeling of doubt at first, I have become enthusiastic over this method of investment. There may be some cases where it will seem to be wasted, some places where it will seem to have been unnecessary, and some cases where the future will show a lack of gratitude, but a certain amount of that is unavoidable in every proper enterprise, and I believe that the larger amount of the investment has been invested to the highest usefulness in this manner." And a student adds: "Returning to college almost immediately upon my discharge, only several months intervening, I received a Godsend, as it were, in this Centenary war scholarship. I have missed one entire year of college, but the scholarship fund is helping me to tide over another school year which started very gloomily for me. I was promised work upon returning to college, but this work was not forthcoming as expected. Hence, my embarrassment. I am hoping to be a help to some needy student in years to come in like manner as the Centenary scholarship was a decided and absolutely necessary help to me. With the aid of the allowance for the second semester, I hope to remain in college and do my best. I hope to enter the Christian ministry after completing my education and solicit your prayers in my behalf. I shall pray for your work likewise."

GOODWILL INDUSTRIES

An appropriation of $295,000 has been made to fifteen of these beneficent institutions in leading industrial and commercial centers all the way from Boston to Los Angeles and including Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Denver and San Francisco. In this work of double reconstruction, old material is made over to be used again and men and women who had dropped out of normal economic life are restored to productive pursuits under a process shot through and through under a Christian idealism. The rate of expansion in this line is limited now chiefly by the lack of properly trained men.

NEGROES IN THE NORTH

The hundreds of thousands of Negroes swarming up from the South to the congested quarters of Northern cities are now being cared for in some degree by that institution which traditionally lies closest to their life, the Christian Church. A community house has been built in Chester; two fine down-town churches in Chicago have been purchased and turned over to Negro congregations. One of these churches now has a membership of 2,000. A similar transfer is being effected in Youngstown, and also in Brooklyn. Over $700,000 this year is going to discharge the debt we owe (North and South) to this race whose needs so greatly exceed its resources.

THE MEN IN UNIFORM

Before the world war no man was so lonely or forgotten as the United States soldier, sailor or marine. That will never be true again. From Portsmouth and League Island on the Atlantic to Vallejo and Bremerton on the Pacific, the special attention given during the war to the social and religious life of the sons of Methodist homes, is being continued as required. Nearly $10,000 a year is going to Methodist Episcopal chaplains for incidentals, and at strategic places adequate plants are planned. At one of these points, where the church is only fairly strong, there are 11,000 mechanics permanently employed and there are 10,000 sailors and marines on shore constantly from ships that are being repaired or supplied. At Bremerton, Washington, the government has already completed three dry docks and is now building two more. The total cost of this development is $52,000,000. We are now in process of building an adequate plant there. Last year at Bremerton, in the basement of our old and very inadequate Methodist Episcopal Church, a thousand cases of the flu among marines were treated. In the same old church the public library has its quarters. Our church, as poor as it is, is in the center of the social and religious life of the great naval base. The Board of Home Missions and Church Extension is furnishing the pastor two helpers.

This caring for special classes has, in one instance, taken a unique direction. In the town of Rochester, Minnesota, where the celebrated Mayo Brothers' hospital is located, Methodist patrons from all parts of the country average one thousand a month. The local church has only five hundred members. The Board of Home Missions and Church Extension is paying the salary of a chaplain, who is averaging thirty calls a day on patients of Methodist preference and who have the fine cooperation of the hospital authorities.

INDUSTRIAL

The war shook up the whole economic structure of the country. Nearly all industrial towns are growing rapidly and face problems which exceed local ability to solve. A very large part of the $1,000,000 appropriated last fall for reconstruction purposes has gone for community centers in such towns. Well known instances are Gloucester, New Jersey, a ship building center; Firestone Park, Ohio, near the rubber tire center of the country; and Flint, Michigan, where the automobile industry is expanding with unbelievable rapidity. Rural community centers in irrigation and drainage districts have also been liberally assisted. Returned service men profit notably by these expenditures. In Flint, Michigan, we are just completing a temporary church building in a new Lansing section where thirty-seven new houses are finished every day.

CHRISTIAN AMERICANIZATION

At Honolulu, a ten-acre compound in a good location has been purchased and dormitories, for oriental students brought in from sugar plantations to attend public schools, will be erected, and all the resources of a social and community program will be applied to the most unique example of racial intermixture to be found under the flag. In Porto Rico, the work among the half million people assigned to our denomination is being prosecuted with an activity hitherto unknown, at a cost of $42,500. In Alaska and among the American Indians, where the growing relinquishment by the government of its over-lordship and the throwing of individuals on their own resources, makes the work of the church more than ever necessary, $35,000 is being expended.

Among the half million Mexicans of the far Southwest, many of them drawn here to do the work required by war and post-war conditions, the board is spending more than two hundred dollars a day for maintenance, in addition to nearly $175,000 for the acquisition of permanent property. All told there are one hundred and two English-speaking pastors to do work among foreign-speaking people; two hundred and eighty-three foreign language pastors; one hundred and two women workers; fifty-six directors of religious education; thirty-nine deaconesses and forty-six special nurses. The field of work includes eighteen different languages.

STUDENTS IN STATE INSTITUTIONS

Like Methodist soldiers, Methodist students in state institutions have been grievously neglected until quite recently. There are more than 25,000 of these in tax-sustained schools. This board is giving $30,000 this year for the maintenance of Methodist work in connection with such institutions, in addition to the $12,000 appropriated by the Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church for the same purpose. In addition, we are contributing $284,000 for property acquisition in twenty-two centers, including Columbus; Lansing, Urbana, Ames, Moscow, Corvallis, Hays, Stillwater and Seattle. In most places this results, with local aid, in securing for the church property worth a great deal more than the amount appropriated by the board. When we recall that up to the present time ninety per cent of our church leaders have been secured from those students who are in denominational schools, the importance of this venture in the unexploited field of the state school becomes apparent and the possibilities of securing Christian leadership here are beyond estimate.

Coincident with this movement the Centenary home survey revealed unmistakably that there is just as much opportunity for a career in home missions as there is in foreign missions. The board has, therefore, instituted a candidate department and one hundred and fifty men and women have so far been placed in specialized positions, and there are three hundred more names on file.

FINALLY

The regular channels of the board's activity are flowing bank full. The four frontier areas, for instance, receive this year more money than the entire church did one year ago. Checks sent out for maintenance for the first quarter in 1920 were three times as large as for the first quarter in 1919, and the Executive Committee at its February meeting granted more applications for church extension aid than in any twelve months in its past history.

In the city five hundred and ninety-six pastors are being aided in support, to the amount of $205,351; and five hundred and ninety-seven special workers have been employed at a cost of $697,418 (this item marks a tremendous advance); while in four hundred and eighty-four property projects more than three and a half millions of dollars are being contributed by this board to aid in the erection of plants in harmony with the needs of the time. A good example is the new parish house at Grant Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, Denver, erected at a cost of $80,000, which has already shown its value in providing for a program that insures the success of the institution. A combination of churches in connection with the State Street Methodist Episcopal Church, Troy, and the erection of a community house, is doing the same thing.

In the rural fields and on the frontier, 2,977 preachers are being aided at a cost of $695,859; and 1,054 churches, parsonages and parish houses are under construction and the contribution of this board to these missionary projects is a trifle less than one and a quarter million dollars. One of the interesting items in these departments is the appointment of a man to survey and open up work on the Colville Reservation in Washington. This man is well prepared for his work, receives a comfortable support and is provided with means of transportation which will enable him to lay out the work in such a way that the formation of future circuits among both whites and Indians will be greatly facilitated. As compared with the traditional method of giving a poorly trained man two hundred dollars of the board's money and sending him out without any particular program, this has much to commend it. Again, in Bingham Canyon, Utah, the Centenary permitted the employment of a first-class community man in one of the most acute industrial and foreign-speaking situations to be found in the entire country. As the result of a few months of intelligently directed and devoted work, a great revival broke out and an entirely different situation as to religion in the community was secured. This new man found in our church at Bingham Canyon when he arrived last fall the names of forty-six members on the roll and thirteen probationers. Thirty of the forty-six had moved from the community and half of the remainder disclaimed having any interest whatever in the church, so that the minister finally found four people in his church—one of whom was a cripple—vitaly interested in the matter of its development. However, with this small contingent, he began the program for the year and before his special meetings began, forty new people were added to the church. As the result of this entire campaign, there have been ninety accessions.

EVANGELISM

Under the department of evangelism twenty area retreats have been held through the entire country, with an attendance of ten thousand; thirty-five special workers are being employed at a cost of $28,802. A strong and effective literature has been created and the great evangelistic campaign culminating at Pentecost was under the general direction of this department.

The Department of Church Extension has not only to examine and approve finally an unprecedented number of applications for donations which the increased funds bring in, but it must also look after $900,000 worth of loans on churches and parsonages. During the past quadrennium practically all of the previously large number of delinquent loans have been paid. At the beginning of the quadrennium there were about two million dollars in the permanent fund of the board; to that has been added about eight hundred and fourteen thousand dollars during the quadrennium.

The new bureau of architecture, under this department, is meeting with the cordial approval of the whole denomination and is already passing on plans at the rate of sixty-five a month.

In response to a widespread and long continued demand, a department of designated gifts has been constituted. Those persons interested in a particular type of Home Mission work or in specific institutions may send in contributions for the same. Centenary credit will be given where the project is included in the Centenary Survey.

Practically the only embarrassing feature of the years' experience is in the general confusion between the Centenary organization and the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension. In not a few instances, Centenary representatives are understood to have given assurances to local churches that certain contributions to the Centenary would be followed by certain appropriations from this board. Sometimes it is said to an equal amount. In view of the survey widely published, which indicated the lines of the board's expenditure, it is obvious that these assurances did not possess a proper foundation. Moreover, the fact was overlooked that this board receives only forty-six per cent of Centenary contributions. For this board to make an appropriation to a local church equal to the amount of its Centenary contribution would mean the giving back of all it received from that church and in addition the payment of all the benevolences of that church for a period of five years—something that on any large scale is obviously impossible. The church would never have pledged $52,000,000 unless the needs of the field and the expenditures proposed had been carefully and graphically set forth in a survey. The board having raised the money by means of the survey is morally bound to disburse it in accordance with the survey. It is the trustee of its contributors. Moreover the demonstrated spiritual value of the Centenary movement lies in regarding it chiefly as a channel for outgoing beneficence. The acid test of the gospel is: "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

THE CENTENARY IMPACT OUTSIDE THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH

The coming year may demonstrate that the largest impact of the Centenary movement has not been within the church, but has been outside of the church.

Inspired in almost every instance by the achievements of the Centenary, and governed in large part by the plans which were developed during the Centenary, more than thirty great denominational movements of similar type have been projected, and there has come into being the federating movement for all of these denominational movements known as "The Inter-church World Movement of North America."

At the present time, a great financial campaign is in progress. A telegram received from Mr. Lyman L. Pierce, campaign director, reads as follows:

"Total all sources with very incomplete reports, $127,000,000. Denominations passed down to local churches in quotas $218,000,000 leaving balance to be secured from other sources. I predict when all reports are in that these quotas will be fully subscribed. Presbyterians and Congregationalists call for reports on May 10th so that finals will be delayed. But the following denominational notations are made:

The African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church first denomination over "top." Quota $212,000; subscribed, $300,000; Northern Baptists have passed $41,000,000; United Presbyterians have $14,000,000; Reformed in United States have passed $5,500,000.

From these facts and others in our possession, it appears that more than $400,000,000 will be available for the missionary and benevolent work of the Protestant churches in the United States during the next five years. And the Dominion of Canada, under this same general impulse, has completed a campaign with an objective of $11,000,000 and with subscriptions totalling more than $14,500,000.

This at once brings to the front the tremendously important problem of correlation. If thirty denominations are to spend $400,000,000 wisely in the next five years, there must be cooperation in spending this money. As wise administrators of funds of the church, we must recognize that it would be perfect folly for the Methodist Episcopal Church to go into a great home mission center like New York City, and to spend five or six million dollars; and for the Baptists to do the same, and for the Presbyterians to do the same, and for each of these programs to be worked out without reference to any order. And likewise in the foreign fields. If there are to be great nation-wide movements which are really to function in lifting the intellectual and physical and the spiritual life of the nations of the world so that democracy may be made safe, then that program must be laid out in such a way as that each branch of the Christian army may fit into a program which will be perfect because the parts fit into the whole.

LOOKING TO THE FUTURE

The Centenary is not the end of an age. It is the beginning of a new era. The best way to conserve what has been done is to have a larger program. A big, commanding, worth-while forward moving program will gather up the conservation work and will carry the church with it. If we try to "hold what we have" we will be defeated. The European war was won at the moment when Marshall Foch changed the slogan from "The Defense of Paris" to "On to Berlin."

The Centenary Movement has, from its inception, been a forward looking movement. And it behooves us now, in the light of the solemn words of the address of the bishops to consider well what plans are being laid to conserve and extend the results of the Centenary.

The conservation program as such will be dealt with by Dr. Edgar Blake as a separate part of this report. And it is only necessary at this point to touch upon one or two points of major emphasis.

It is probable that never in the history of the Methodist Episcopal Church there has stood out a more important parting of the ways.

Two possibilities are apparent to all who give consideration to the subject. The one possibility is that the Centenary Movement may become a point of departure for the next hundred years. Building upon this firm foundation the church may go forward strengthening and expanding her work in cooperation with the other forces of Christendom; so that the years ahead may witness the most marvelous manifestations of the outpouring of the power of God that this world has ever seen. A gigantic task is before us. A torn and bleeding and suffering and sorrowing world is at our feet. The door of opportunity swings wide open, and the call of God to advance is so unmistakable that even men of the world see and in some measure understand that the church is the only hope of the world in this tragic hour.

On the other hand, we may confess that we are tired of campaigning; that we have exhausted our resources; that we must hold our own; that we must cut down our forces; and our expenditures in every possible way; that we must as quickly as possible get back to what has been the normal basis of the past. And as surely as the sun will rise to-morrow morning, we may expect enthusiasm to die down, awakened interest to drop back into slumber; and after a period of brilliant expansion of our work in every one of our many fields, we may expect the next General Conference to face the necessity for retrenchment, for cuts in appropriations, and a cry of distress from every missionary and benevolent agency of the church.

What is the need of this great hour? Is it not some unifying influence in the church which, under authority of this General Conference and under instruction from it, can go forward and make a careful forecast of what will be the requirements of our home and foreign missionary work (including the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary societies), when this Centenary period is over, and to begin to make provision for them. To study our field of education, covering preparatory schools, colleges; our work in state universities and in theological seminaries; to find whether or not we are making adequate provision for the future leadership which will be called for in unprecedented numbers; to make a study of the whole field of religious education to find whether or not our church will in some adequate degree attempt to step forward into that widely open door so fully emphasized in the address of the bishops, and to ensure that we shall have no part in allowing a condition to continue which is bringing about a race of religious illiterates in the United States. Shall we not discover what ought to be done in the field of temperance, prohibition and public morals, and shall we not have some worthy part not only in ensuring the benefits and the perpetuity of prohibition in the United States but also in carrying forward that aggressive crusade on a world scale, which is absolutely necessary if the mission fields of the world are not to become a dumping ground for filth and deadly contagion of the liquor traffic of America?

Shall we not make some attempt to discover what the Methodist Episcopal Church ought to do in the larger ways in printing and circulating the word of life in an hour when literally millions of emaciated hands are stretched out in eager appeal for the bread of life?

Shall we not face up to the larger implications of that ministry of healing which was so characteristic a part of the program of Christ and shall we not see to it that every hospital, orphanage or home needed under the auspices of our church shall not only be well placed and well equipped, but shall be so related to the other hospitals and homes of the other churches as that Protestantism in the United States may have a fair share in providing that ministry of Christ which has too long been left in secular hands, or not infrequently in the hands of those who too often have used this influence for sinister purposes?

Shall the Methodist Episcopal Church not make a fresh study of her strategy of location of churches both rural and metropolitan? Shall we not in some way develop such wisdom in plan and in architecture as that adequate and well-adapted churches may be provided for all of our congregations, not only for the moment, but for the expanding future which lies just ahead?

Shall we not recognize the fact that the biggest economic blunder of the Church is the low salary scale to ministers and professors. And shall we not as a church so marshal our forces as that it may no longer be said that a large per cent of our pastors received less than the amount which the government estimates to be necessary for a living wage for a working man?

Shall we not in some way develop an executive leadership for our larger churches so that pastors will not continually be serving tables, but will be able to find well-trained men to take over the multitudinous business and secular affairs which crowd upon those in charge of any large church enterprise?

Shall we not make the stewardship and evangelistic features of the Centenary program prominent in the life of the Church, and especially shall we not see to it that Easter of 1920 or May 23 of 1920 are not the culmination of the evangelistic periods, but that the winning of men and women to Jesus Christ shall be with us, in this new century, as it was with our fathers—the primary business of the Church?

Is there any reason why Methodism cannot in some large and worthy way discover her whole task and so lay out her plans and programs as that at stated and not frequent periods of time, she may provide the necessary funds in an orderly way, so that a period of rest may then be given to the churches and to the overburdened pastors of the churches for the development of the work which these increased funds will make possible?

Can the Methodist Episcopal Church measure up to so vast a program? The Methodist Episcopal Church can do anything that God calls upon her to do. Those who are most familiar with the difficulties as well as the achievements of the Centenary have come to believe that under an orderly plan of development, with a wise scheme of connectional supervision, with a courageous and forward-moving policy, and a wise, progressive and economical method of administration, the Methodist Episcopal Church could as easily give $100,000,000 a year as we were able to give the Centenary quotas.

The Centenary has pointed the way. May God give the church wisdom and grace to follow in the way which he has so clearly marked out.

D. D. FORSYTH, Chairman.

ADDRESS OF EDGAR BLAKE

It is my desire and purpose, at the request of the Centenary Conservation Commission, to make a simple and direct statement of fact concerning the conservation work that this committee, since the Centenary campaign proper closed, has been supervising. Four years ago, when the Centenary was first proposed in this body, meeting then at Saratoga, the only sum that was mentioned to be raised during the Centenary movement, was the sum of five million dollars. Very happily, the General Conference did not have the faith or the courage to name so large a sum, and therefore they very judiciously left the matter to the boards involved. I think that is one instance at least in which the General Conference was divinely led. I need not tell you the results of the survey of the Board of Foreign Missions and the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension, and what those surveys show.

I need not tell you of the projects that developed with the close of the work, which have not been included in those surveys; until finally, when we got down to it, and went before the church in the interests of the Centenary, we went, not for the original five million dollars, but we started out for a hundred and five million. There were many people in our church at the time who said, "You will never raise it;" and it is not surprising that there were those among us who doubted. For since 1915—and you will do well to mark this fact—up to the time that we inaugurated our Centenary movement, the people of the United States in four years' time, with a single exception, had subscribed to philanthropic and patriotic enterprises thirty billion dollars. But the wonderful thing about it is, we never know what our people can do until we press them hard; and when the Centenary campaign of propaganda and of financial effort came to an end, we had signed up, not five million, nor one hundred five million, but a hundred and twelve and a half million dollars.

Now, speaking as one who did not have responsibility for that work in any major portion, I am bound to say this, that in the light of the whole situation, the success of the Centenary financial campaign is the most remarkable and striking financial achievement in the history of America, if not in the history of the world. When the Centenary campaign closed, we made a check up, and found naturally that many mistakes of duplication and error in transmission had been made. I regret to chill our enthusiasm with this announcement, that when we had finally checked up on all of our duplication and errors of transmission, we had to write off approximately two million dollars from the original $122,500,000. When we checked through we found that we had nearly one thousand charges that had made no financial canvass whatever, and the quotas of those charges amounted to about three million dollars, yet to be raised.

We found further that we had nearly 5,500 charges that had not raised their full quotas, and that the deficiencies in these charges amounted to twelve million dollars additional. So when the Centenary campaign closed we found ourselves confronted with the task of raising fifteen million dollars of quotas that had not been pledged. Dr. Taylor has already told you this morning that since the Centenary campaign closed, with no blare of bugles and no beat of drums and not much noise whatsoever we have underwritten about three million dollars in new pledges or additional subscriptions. That does not include the amount of money pledged within the last ten days through the interchurch effort. I gave it as my judgment, Mr. Chairman, as my deliberate expectation, that before this Centenary campaign of conservation for five years shall close the Methodist Episcopal Church will subscribe and pay to this Centenary fund not one dollar less than one hundred and twenty-five millions of dollars. Now I said, Mr. Chairman, that we had subscribed one hundred and twelve and a half millions. We shrunk it two millions. We added three. And we now have about a hundred and thirteen and a half millions.

An interesting thing about it is this, that for the most part the money was only subscribed. Senator Daniels, a very keen Yankee from Vermont, said in the last meeting of the Board of Foreign Missions, while discussing this matter, "Gentlemen, we are over the top but the load is still down the hill." The task immediately confronting this Centenary Conservation Committee is this task of so sustaining the interest of the people that have subscribed to the Centenary fund that every dollar, so far as possible, of the amount subscribed, shall be paid in. You can very readily see that if we shall have any very large shrinkage in this sum that has been pledged, every dollar of which was budgeted before the amount was pledged, it simply means that hundreds of enterprises that have been pledged cannot be undertaken. To show the size of the task of sustaining interest in this movement for five years, let me tell you that approximately one and one-half million of people subscribed to this Centenary fund. When you think of the task that confronts this committee of maintaining the interest of one and one-half million people in a movement covering five years, and until we secure from them every dollar that has been pledged, you will see something of the staggering size of the task that lies ahead.

However, I want to put my finger upon a task that is vastly more significant and more difficult. We are confronted not only with the task of securing the payment of these pledges that have been made, but with this much more difficult undertaking, with the task of lifting the standard of giving in the Methodist Episcopal Church to the Centenary level as a permanent standard for our denomination. For again, it must be very clear to every thoughtful man and woman here that if we proceed as we are proposing to do and spend about twenty-one million to twenty-three million dollars a year in a great Centenary program for five years, launching enterprise after enterprise on that basis, if we come to the end of that five-year period and then shrink back to our previous Centenary standards of giving we shall literally leave hundreds and thousands of our enterprises high and dry with no support underneath them, and we shall have a crash in our church that will amount to a catastrophe to the kingdom of God. Having put our hand to the plow we simply cannot turn back. Having moved out into a large place we cannot turn about. We must bear the burden we have assumed until, God helping us, the church measures up to the new responsibility that God has laid upon us. Now that is not going to be any light task. For mark you this, ladies and gentlemen of the General Conference, that is precisely that sort of shrinkage that may occur.

Dr. Taylor called your attention to that remarkable chart. We were observing the Centenary of the founding of American Methodism in America in 1866. We raised the sum of nearly nine million dollars, and lifted the standard of giving in our church at that time, for benevolences, to $11.06 per capita. I like to bear witness to the fathers, that they did a more magnificent thing, as measured by their numbers and resources, than we have done. They lifted the standard of giving in our church to $11.06 per member of benevolences. But herein lies the mistake of our fathers—they made no effort to lift the standard of giving in our church and maintain it on that level. No effort was made to conserve the interest then developed. Note the result. Inside of two years the per capita giving for benevolences in the Methodist Episcopal Church had shrunk from $11.06 per member to ninety cents. In fifteen years the per capita giving for benevolences had shrunk from $11.06 to forty cents. In 1916, when the Centenary was instituted, this is what we found: Out of our nearly seventeen thousand charges we had only seventy-three that were giving as much as a cent per day per member to the apportioned benevolences of our church. We had only twenty-seven charges that were giving a dime a week. We had only sixteen charges out of nearly 17,000 that were giving as much as fifty cents per month to the apportioned benevolences of the denomination. I am bound to say in the presence of this company that if anything of that kind be permitted to occur in this Centenary it spells the biggest catastrophe that ever struck our church or the kingdom of God as represented by our church from the beginning. The time has come when we must march out. God is showing us how we can do a big thing, and that big thing must be measured up to.

I do not believe that we are laying any unusual burden on our people in asking them to march out on this standard as a permanent standard. This is what our checking up shows, that eighty-seven per cent of the subscriptions made to the Centenary have been for less than fifty cents per week per member. As yet we have not touched the fringe of the resources of our people. America has been marvelously blessed of God in these recent years. When Mr. John Skelton Williams, the comptroller of the treasury, was addressing the American Bankers' Association at Atlantic City in 1918, he made this remarkable statement. He said: "Gentlemen, so great has been the financial prosperity of our country in the last three years that if we were now to withdraw the deposits of our American banks, an amount of money equal to the combined resources of the Bank of England, the Bank of France, the Bank of Spain, the Bank of Italy, the Bank of Norway, the Bank of Sweden, and the Imperial Bank of Japan, we would still have left on deposit in our American banks more money than we had in 1914." The most remarkable financial showing that has ever been made by a nation in the history of the world! The remarkably fine thing about it is that God seems to have passed the prosperity around, and we Methodists have shared in it. Listen, brethren, if we could get our Methodist constituency at the present time to give simply one cent out of every dollar of their income, we would have more money for the Centenary by twice than the Centenary is asking for.

And I would like to point out in passing, if I may, that there never was a time in the history of the world when so great a responsibility was laid upon America and upon our church as in this hour. I wonder if you have ever stopped to think of the financial condition that the rest of the world is in. Germany has a national wealth of about fifty billion dollars, and is faced by a debt of fifty-five billion. Austria's financial condition is worse than that of Germany. In the year 1919 the daily expenditures of Great Britain exceeded the daily revenues of Great Britain by ten million dollars per day. France has not yet attempted to pay off her war debt. Neither has Italy. The nations of Europe in a very large measure are on the verge of financial bankruptcy. There is only one nation on the face of the earth at this hour whose financial resources have been untapped and untouched, and that is America; and unless America shall come forward in this hour, when civilization is trembling in the balance, and with all her resources move forward to the plan of God, no one can tell what the future shall be. If there ever was an hour in the history of our church when we ought to put our resources at the disposal of Almighty God, that hour is now. We shall need the best wisdom that this General Conference can produce to devise some way by which these tremendous resources that have been awakened may be conserved, extended, and expanded for the glory of God.

I have not time to speak of our stewardship movement. When the Centenary closed, we had signed up about 204,000 tithing stewards, people who pledged themselves to tithe their income for the benefit of the kingdom of God. I do not like to discuss the subject of stewardship on a financial plane. That is too low a plane. But there are hard-headed business men here, and I would say to them that as a result of the stewardship movement of the Centenary we underwrote the tithing of an annual income of $100,000,000. That is to say, as the result of that movement in the Methodist Episcopal Church, we secured people commanding an income amounting to $100,000,000 who have agreed to tithe that income every year for the benefit of the kingdom of God. I submit that if we can carry this movement to a successful conclusion, until at the end of the Centenary period we shall have secured a million tithing stewards in the Methodist Episcopal Church who will agree to set apart a definite portion of their income for the sake of the church and the kingdom of God, we shall have done the most strategic financial thing in our history, and we shall have underwritten the financial future of the Methodist Episcopal Church for all time to come.

May I suggest, as an aside, that I trust that somehow or other, before this General Conference closes, there will come forth a deliverance from this body advising that our people set apart a definite time during the year when we shall make a great stewardship movement in Methodism to line up our people everywhere, to set apart a definite portion of their income for sake of the kingdom of God.

Bishop McDowell called attention to the lack of sufficient supply of our ministers. Let me make a single statement of fact bearing upon that. In the last twenty years the membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church has increased by forty per cent. And yet in 1916—and I select that year because it was normal; that is to say, we had not entered the war—in spite of the fact that our membership had increased by forty per cent in twenty years, the number of men who united with our Annual Conferences on trial was fewer than in 1900. One of the most delicate, and yet one of the most vital questions that we now face in the Methodist Episcopal Church is this question of ministerial leadership. When this Centenary closed we had signed up a little more than thirty thousand young people, who had pledged themselves to answer any call of God that might come to them. Let me call your attention to this, that in that great group of young men and women who thus pledged themselves, and in the great group who are yet to be reached, lies the future hope of our denomination for the carrying forward of the kingdom of God for which we are responsible. And if we do nothing else through the Centenary movement than merely to enlist, conserve, develop and direct this great body of young life, it would still be well worth while.

In a large measure the success of this conservation work depends upon our policy and program of education of our people. I have profound confidence in the facts. I have always believed that if we would give our people the facts, and let them know the deeds, and the achievements, we could trust our people to measure up to the demands of God. One of the difficulties in the past has been that we have lacked a sufficiently comprehensive program of education to meet the demands of the people. The Centenary Conservation Committee has now created a publicity department for the purpose of securing and disseminating information to our people and the public.

Let me say just a word with respect to the religious press. I believe I express the deliberate judgment of the Centenary Conservation Committee when I say that we believe that the most effective publicity and educational agency in our church for our people is our religious press. But we have got to have a wider circulation of our press. Since October, 1919, six months ago, the Centenary has been cooperating with publishing agents and editors to endeavor to extend the subscription list of our papers. For your information, in five months' time we added 64,146 new subscribers to the religious press of our denomination. We have increased their income from subscriptions alone by $126,000 and we are going on. We have added, as you will see, at least two hundred thousand new readers, of our Centenary propaganda. In my judgment, backed, as I believe it will be, by yours, the publicity department of the Centenary Conservation Committee is now disseminating to our religious press the finest and highest type of missionary information that our church has ever seen. If we can continue that for five years, we shall create a new mind and heart in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

A word about the secular press. We Methodists, together with many other Protestant people, have felt for a long time that the secular press was not as receptive of our propaganda as it might be. There had been those among us who have said that the secular press was too largely dominated by influences that were somewhat hostile to our propaganda. But we have demonstrated to the satisfaction of the Centenary Conservation Committee that the secular press of this country is wide open to religious propaganda, and our propaganda to-day, if the material is of sufficiently high standard to command the respect of the secular press. When our publicity department began its work we discovered that among the most influential publications in this country are those which are designed for special classes of people, and among those special class publications the most influential are the farm journals. We discovered that the farm journals of this country had a circulation of ten million copies, and that they reached in very large measure the constituency of the Methodist Episcopal Church. So we began to work accordingly.

Brethren, I want to say that the secular press of America is now wide open, thank God, to religious propaganda of every kind. Down deep in our hearts there ought to well up a spirit of gratitude to God, which we ought to voice with our lips in a hymn of appreciation, for the tremendous resources that have now been placed at the disposal of the Christian Church, by the interest of our secular press in the cause of religion. One of the most significant achievements of this whole movement, which would be alone worth every dollar that it has cost us, is the fact that we have now secured this great opening in the secular press of America.

Permit me to close with a personal word. There have been a lot of mistakes made. I have made my share of them. I simply say that you cannot dismantle your organizations and out of the material at hand create a new one, and reduce your expense by seventy-five per cent, and maintain it on an efficient basis without some mistakes. We have done the best we could. Twice I resigned this job, and now resign it again, this time for good when this General Conference ends.

At the close of Dr. Blake's report the Conference arose en masse and broke into prolonged applause.

Titus Lowe (Nebraska): I have a resolution of privilege, having to do with the report of the Centenary Commission.

APPRECIATION OF CENTENARY SECRETARIES

Resolved, That we have heard with great stirrings of mind and heart the report of the Centenary Commission.

Therefore, in this high moment we desire to render unmeasured thanksgiving to Almighty God, and we also desire to express our deep appreciation of the daring and successful leadership of Drs. S. Earl Taylor, D. D. Forsyth, Edgar Blake, Frank Mason North, and all others, whose sacrificial helpfulness made this unprecedented victory possible.

The Conference voiced its approval by arising en masse and breaking into spontaneous applause.

The Bishop: You have heard the resolution. It seems to be seconded.

(The resolution was unanimously adopted.)

PRIORITY IN AMERICAN METHODISM

The Quarterly Conference of the John Street Church, New York, hereby memorializes the General Conference of 1924, meeting in Springfield, Mass., on the subject of Priority in the origin of American Methodism, which has remained an unsettled question since the General Conference of 1912. Most briefly stated, the summary is as follows:

1. The General Conference of 1912, in response to a Memorial from the Baltimore Annual Conference, provided for the appointment of seven Commissioners—three from the vicinity of New York, three from the vicinity of Baltimore, and one at large—who are to sit with Commissioners from the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the Methodist Protestant Church; the purpose of this Joint Commission being to determine whether American Methodism had its beginnings in New York or Maryland.

2. In the autumn of 1914, before the Joint Commission had met, the Methodism of Baltimore and vicinity made a sesqui-centennial pilgrimage to Sam's Creek and its neighborhood, in the claim that the 150th anniversary of the founding of American Methodism occurred in 1914, and that therefore in 1764 our denomination had its origin under Robert Strawbridge in Maryland.

3. In the autumn of 1915 the Methodist Historical Society in the City of New York wrote the Board of Bishops, as the highest authority in the interval of the General Conference, charging undue bias on the part of the three Baltimore Commissioners for their active participation in this sesqui-centennial pilgrimage and for other specified acts; respectfully claiming that all American Methodisms, and not merely the three centering around Baltimore, should participate in an inquiry so vital as that of origin; and urging that our own seven Commissioners should postpone their consideration of the question involved since no interest would suffer till the General Conference of 1916. The Bishops received this communication, and recommended in an advisory capacity and only to our own Commissioners, that "said Commission defer further action in the matter committed to them until the approaching General Conference can clear up the legal and practical questions involved."

4. Notwithstanding this Episcopal recommendation, our seven Commissioners were summoned to the meeting of the Joint Commission at Baltimore, in January, 1916. From this gathering our three New York Commissioners formally withdrew, assigning as their reason the recommendation of the Board of Bishops, and later emphasizing this in their Minority Report to the General Conference of 1916. (See Journal of 1916, pp. 1506, 1507.) But the three Baltimore Commissioners remained in session with the Commissioners of the other two Methodisms concerned, and gave themselves to the consideration of the historic question assigned them.

5. This partial Joint Commission listened to a lengthy paper which set forth the claims of Maryland to Priority, and which assumedly omitted no possible item of evidence for that claim. Not a single one of the many New York proofs was considered in rejoinder. But, without this testimony, the partial Joint Commission proceeded immediately to ballot, and by the unanimous vote of fourteen members present decided that "to the work of Robert Strawbridge in Maryland belongs the distinction of priority." And, of the fourteen so voting, not less than ten were from Baltimore or its vicinity.

6. The General Conference of 1916, in response to several Memorials which went up from New York, appointed a Special Committee of fifteen, representing the several Districts, to consider "all papers concerning the question of priority." (Journal, 1916, pp. 119, 299, 300.) This Committee returned a lengthy report, filling nearly half a page in The Daily Christian Advocate and three and a half pages in the Journal of 1916 (pp. 692, 695). In this report they itemized the procedure of the previous quadrennium, and declared that the question could not be "finally determined by the methods thus far employed." Furthermore, they provided for a new Joint Commission, which should be composed of jurists from four branches of American Methodism, including the Canadian, with a fifth jurist who should not belong to any branch of Methodism. Or, in the case of the non-appointment of such a Joint Commission, the Board of Bishops was requested to designate three jurists of our own Church who should "constitute said Tribunal (in distinction from a Commission) on the Priority of American Methodism." (Journal, 1916, p. 695.)

7. In due time a report was officially made to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and to the Methodist Protestant Church—whose representatives had sat in the partial Joint Commission at Baltimore, in January, 1916—that the question of Priority had been unanimously decided in favor of the Maryland claim. But this report of the two Methodisms involved omitted all possible reference to the sequel, that our General Conference in May, 1916, had absolutely rejected the processes followed and the decision reached, and had provided for a new Joint Commission or a Tribunal as the alternative. Nor has this omission, to our knowledge, ever been rectified. But to this day these two Methodisms stand officially informed—and have entered it in their General Conference records—that the question of the Priority in the origin of American Methodism was finally decided by the Baltimore partial Joint Commission in January, 1916.

8. The provision of the General Conference of 1916 for the new Joint Commission was inadvertently overlooked by our Bishops, according to their own statement, within the time specified. At their autumn meeting in 1919 they, however, designated three jurists of our own Methodism to constitute the Tribunal provided for. The resignation of one of the judges brought the matter to the General Conference of 1920, and that Conference by vote continued the provision for the Tribunal into the quadrennium now closing.

9. During the present quadrennium, in 1923 our Maryland Methodism through its representatives refused to participate in a hearing before a Joint Commission, on the plea that the decision of January, 1916, had already been reported to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the Methodist Protestant Church, and had been accepted by them. Also, in the present year of 1924, our Maryland Methodism has declined to participate in a hearing before the Tribunal appointed by the Bishops and yet in existence, the refusal clearly stating their purpose not to take part.

10. That is to say, the Maryland Methodism of our Church, through its representative, has seemingly sought to justify its failure to recognize the action of 1916 and 1920, providing for the submission of the case to a court of decision.

11. More than this, there still continues to be the open declaration of the priority of the Strawbridge work on both sides of the ocean as can be formally shown.

12. Nor is the objective point of the present Memorial the mere gratification of a local pride, or even of the furtherance of plans we are cherishing for advanced work in the lower part of America's greatest metropolis. But the larger question of the accuracy of denominational history is involved. If the distinction which John Street has enjoyed for over a century and a half, as the cradle of American Methodism, can be shown to be undeserved by new proofs from Maryland, the interests of truth demand that this be done. Or, if the innumerable assertions in denominational history, that American Methodism began on Manhattan Island under Philip Embury may be more fully established by the new proofs we have gathered, accuracy demands that there shall be a final hearing. We petition that the General Conference in its wisdom shall make the right provision for the settlement of this great question which has been in the balance since the General Conference of 1912.

Having thus briefly outlined the steps in the discussion since 1912, we submit our case to the General Conference of 1924 for its adjustment. Whatever direction you may give we will obediently follow. But we must believe that you will grant relief to the ancient Church that since 1766 has been operative in New York for the helping of humanity, and that in all denominational history holds the proud title of the Mother of American Methodism.

SEATING OF THE DELEGATIONS

The delegates of the General Conference are seated according to the following schedule. The method employed in selecting the seats was that ordered by the General Conference. The committee in charge of the matter is composed of a Bishop, the Secretary of the General Conference and a representative of the Commission on the Entertainment of the General Conference. The plan is: "A plan of the audience room having been constructed, the names of the Annual Conferences should be placed in a box or other receptacle and after they have been thoroughly mixed the Secretary shall draw the same, and the delegations so drawn shall occupy contiguous seats beginning with the row nearest the chair of the presiding officer, and the seats shall be filled by lot in regular order, beginning at the left."

The seating—as the result of the drawing—is given herewith:

REPORT OF THE TREASURER OF THE EPISCOPAL FUND OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH FOR THE YEAR 1923

We desire to direct special attention to the following points:

First. Although we gained in total receipts $36,806.75 over the year 1922, we collected relatively 2.97 per cent less of the amount apportioned to the Conferences. This falling off we think may be accounted for because the church papers reported the action of the Book Committee taken at its April meeting reducing the rate of apportionment from 2¼% to 2%, but for the most part failed to mention that this reduction was not to take effect until January 1, 1924.

Second. The total cost of collecting and disbursing the $487,761.00 as reported, was $5,742.96, or 1.17 per cent of the amount collected. But within the year from call loans, $9,980.47 was earned in interest.

Third. The entire amount, $3,467,464.95, received during the past twelve years was administered at a cost of $47,880.92, or on an average of 1.38 per cent. In the same period $41,475.12 was earned in interest.

Fourth. The present method of apportionment is absolutely equitable. The method adjusts itself perfectly to the levels of all Conference grades of expense. It does not ask relatively more of one Conference than of another. The basis is now 2% on pastoral support, including rental value of parsonage.

Fifth. Commencing with page 16, there is indicated the amount apportioned to each district by the Bishop and his Cabinet; also the amount raised, the deficiency or excess and the per centage of the apportionment reported raised. We regard the function of the Bishop and his Cabinet at the Conference session in adjusting the apportionments as of exceeding importance. In the rush of other business it might be overlooked.

Sixth. Commencing with page 34, there is given the record of each Episcopal area. It is to be observed that with four exceptions these areas show a relative falling off in the per centages of apportionments collected. This decline is doubtless due to the same cause as indicated under No. 1.

Seventh. Commencing with page 39 there is given a statement of the receipts and disbursements for the four years 1920-21-22-23.

Elighth. The cash on hand, January 1, 1924, was.....	$180,662.84
Special reserve.....	150,000.00
	$330,662.84

The dropping of the basis from 2¼% to 2% calls for a lessening of income by the sum of.....	50,000.00
Transportation of our Bishops and their wives from the foreign fields to the General Conference, and other expenses, not including moving costs, will be about.....	45,000.00
January, February, and March disbursements will be about.....	105,000.00
	<hr/>
Total.....	$200,000.00

These items will more than exhaust our Special Reserve.

So far as this report itself is concerned, it has been the studious aim of the office to make it complete in information conveyed concerning the Episcopal Fund. We think anybody really desiring to know the details of Episcopal Fund transactions may be able herein to find very full and detailed information. The report is really an evolution which has grown out of many years of experience in handling the details of this fund.

The senior treasurer, in presenting this his twenty-eighth annual report in an unbroken succession of the years, may perhaps fittingly state some facts which would seem of general interest. During the seven quadrenniums of his trust there has been collected for the treasury the aggregate sum of $5,297,272.10. The total sum reported for the first year was $80,216.95. The sum now reported for the last year is $487,761.00.

As measured by quadrenniums, the increase of the last over the first quadrennium stands as 470 to 100 per cent.

During this entire period every Bishop and every Bishop's widow has received one hundred cents on every dollar of approved claims.

When this treasurer first assumed his duties, there were in all twenty Bishops in the Church, seventeen general superintendents, and three Missionary Bishops, now all dead with the single exception of Bishop Earl Cranston. We began the quadrennium now closing with thirty-seven active Bishops, four retired Bishops, and two Missionary Bishops, making forty-three in all.

In reviewing the Book Committee the name of not one of that distinguished original list which first greeted me as publisher elect now appears as a member of this official family. Of the twenty members of the Committee as I first knew it, fifteen at least have gone over to the silent majority. There is something in it all that lends the impression that our human lives are much as passing shadows. But whether the men are here or there, I count it a great asset in my life that I have been permitted so long and so well to know, and to be companioned with, so many men of elect character, of so fine spirit and of so trusted integrity, as those with whom I have been associated in the official life of the Church.

No person could be made responsible for administering a critical trust and be more fortunate in his office associates than has been this treasurer. Through all the years Mr. John R. Huff has been the cashier, the expert accountant, and the inventive promoter of the Episcopal Fund interests. He has given exceptional ability, loyalty, and enthusiasm to the duties of his office. He has received a nominal compensation for his work, but nothing commensurate with the valuable services which he has rendered. Of him, I can only justly say that he has literally identified himself with his work, and through all the years, in every trusted relation, he has proven himself a reliable and efficient servant of the Church.

The time has come for me to resign this work to other hands. I am glad to have lived and served. My evening hour is made cheerful by rich and grateful reminiscences. I am happy in my eventime retreat with children who love me. My faith for the future is serene and unclouded.

I go to prove my soul!

I see my way as birds their trackless way.

Report of the Treasurer of the Episcopal Fund 1871

I shall arrive! What time, what circuit first
I ask not: but unless God send his hail
Or blinding fireballs, sleet or stifling snow,
In some time, his good time, I shall arrive:
He guides me and the bird. In his good time.

All of which is respectfully submitted,

GEORGE P. MAINS, Treasurer,

JOHN H. RACE, Assistant Treasurer.

REPORT OF THE TREASURER OF THE GENERAL CONFERENCE EXPENSE FUND

I beg leave to submit herewith my sixth quadrennial report as Treasurer of the General Conference Expense Fund, covering receipts and disbursements for the 1924 quadrennium.

I have collected from Domestic Conferences $271,978.15, or a little more than 81 per cent of an apportionment of $335,588; from Foreign Conferences $5,227.47, a total of $277,205.62 from all Conferences. I have also received on account of interest on daily balances, certificates of deposit and government securities, $20,074.86, which is $6,362.98 more than the entire expense of the Treasurer's office.

The total receipts for the quadrennium to date, as shown by report, is $297,280.48, which with a balance on hand at the beginning of the quadrennium of $61,164.54, makes a total of $358,445.02. The amount of disbursements to date are $267,423.52, leaving a balance on hand July 7, 1924, of $91,021.50. In my report as published in the Discipline of 1924, the unpaid claims of foreign delegates was $9,304.49 and estimated unpaid claims of foreign delegates $630.33, a total of $9,934.82. To this amount should be added estimated unpaid claims, including expense of General Conference Journals, $9,725, leaving the estimated true balance on hand $71,361.68. This would make the total expenses of the quadrennium $287,083.34.

There is due and unpaid on the apportionment to the Fall and Spring Conferences, approximately $63,610. This should be collected and paid during this year, as provided by the Discipline. It is especially important that every dollar of this be collected and remitted to me, for the reason that there is a probability of an extra session of the General Conference, as provided by the General Conference held at Springfield, Massachusetts in May, 1924.

As heretofore, my books have been audited by Mr. Geo. D. Colter, annually.

Respectfully submitted,

OSCAR P. MILLER, Treasurer.
